This does not mean, however, that there are only seventy-one protected areas in the United States where the birds can find food, rest, and a safe place to breed. The growth of the bird clubs has been instrumental in the planning of thousands of bird refuges in all states, while the Audubon Society owns and leases islands and tracts of land in many Eastern states, particularly in New York and New England, where the birds are guarded by paid protectors. The Audubon Society has led every fight for bird conservation, and to this organization belongs the real credit for the protective work accomplished.

In addition to the various organizations of national character, several wealthy individuals have taken over great tracts of land which they use as private reservations. Commodore E. C. Benedict has converted his 300-acre estate at Greenwich, Conn., into a bird sanctuary, while the Mrs. Russell Sage estate and the Rockefeller Foundation own large and valuable tracts in Louisiana where the birds are guarded.

THE guarding of the birds on protected lands is an important part of the work of the Federal and Audubon authorities. Although state and national laws have been passed making it wrong to kill the birds for their plumage, plume-hunters are constantly raiding the nests of the waterfowl and killing them for the sake of the prices the wings will bring. Thus a constant watch is necessary. Patrol boats are constantly hovering along the shores of the reservations, and more than one pitched battle has been fought to save the egret or gulls from slaughter. In Florida, one of the best game wardens of the Audubon Society was killed by bird-butchers.

If those who call the robin the thief of their fruit, and hate him for his early morning raids on their berries, would realize that the little fruit spoiled is a light dessert for the huge quantity of insects killed before the fruit was touched, then their feelings would be more kindly. Cutworms and craneflies, which do great harm to grain crops, are favorite foods of robins, while leaf-beetles, vine-worms, etc., are eaten in great numbers.

It is a fact that if it were not for the bird life we would starve to death. The great natural enemy of man is any force that will destroy his foodstuffs. Every field is the home of thousands of insects, and agricultural reports will verify the fact that each year millions of dollars' worth of crops are destroyed by insects. And the birds are the natural enemies of the insect pest.

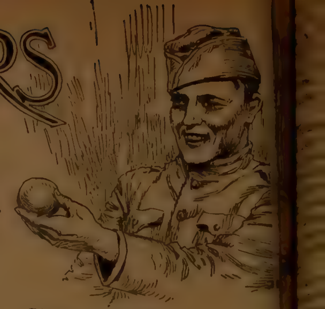
Many of the insects that injure the crops will multiply so fast in the course of a year that one pair will produce a thousand eggs during the summer months. Some insects, of course, are the prey of parasites that destroy them, but the most of the destruction of parasites is done by the birds who produce only a pair a season.

nesting egret, thousands of which e killed each year for plumes used in millinery

White pelicans and cormorants at a famous slaughter-ground in Oregon

Theodore Roosevelt, father of our bird conservation laws, looking into a nest

TWENTY-FOUR HOURS



During which I interview a doughboy, charter a taxi, and find Paris.

By Margaret E. Sangster

"BUT you mustn't go on to Paris alone." It was the Tall Boy speaking. "You mustn't go on alone—and at night. There'll be others from our boat leaving Bordeaux tomorrow morning. That will be time enough for you!"

I tried to explain.

"It takes ten hours to get to Paris from Bordeaux," I told him, "and so, if I leave tonight, I'll be arriving in Paris at about eight-thirty tomorrow morning. I haven't any room engaged, and if I get there in the morning I'll have all day to hunt for a hotel. Paris is very crowded, now, with the conferences——"

The Tall Boy interrupted.

"What if there's no one to meet you?" he questioned. "You've never been in Paris, and you don't speak French. What——"

"Don't be silly," I told him. And I'm afraid that my tone was a wee bit impatient. "I've telegraphed ahead to my brother. I've been writing to him, in Paris, for ever so long. And I've also telegraphed to an old friend of mine who is a newspaper correspondent. He will know Paris like a book. One of them, probably both of them, will meet me."

"But the trip down"—a worried frown had appeared on the Tall Boy's forehead—"your train doesn't leave until ten-ten. And that's pretty late for a girl to be out alone——"

"You put me on the train," I told him with all of the firmness I could command. "Stop worrying. I'll not be alone for a moment. There will be five others in the very same compartment with me. And I'll be met the second that I reach Paris. Everything will be all right!" (You see, I was quite sure!)

We were late, perhaps because of the argument, in getting to the station. It was just five minutes before train time that we reached the platform in front of the long line of box-like coaches that in Europe is called a train. Porters, standing at the entrance of each coach, told me blandly that every seat was "occupé." I turned despairingly to the Tall Boy.

"Can't you make them understand," I implored, "that I must get this train? And that I can't stand up all the way to Paris?"

"Say, lady!" It was a good American voice directly behind me. "You wait here. An' I'll get you a place—if I have ter throw somebody out!"

I turned quickly and saw a slim boy in an army uniform—a boy with the M. P. of the Military Police on his sleeve band. Before I could manage a "thank you" he was off and into one of the box-like coaches.

"Do you suppose he'll find anything?" I asked the Tall Boy nervously. "Do you think——"

It was the M. P.'s voice that answered my question.

"I got a seat for you, lady," he told me with a suddenness that made me jump. "It's th' only seat left in th' train, I reckon! You'd better hurry!" He had grasped one of my bags, as he spoke, in each hand. "No, don't thank me. Why, you're a girl from home!" He laughed and pushed me gently through the doorway of a narrow compartment. "Be nice to her," he warned the inmates of the compartments, and——

"Good luck!" he called to me.

I HAD just time to manage a hurried good-by to the Tall Boy, just time to cast a bewildered glance about me, when the train started to move. I saw the station crowds receding jerkily into the dark; I saw, at the last moment, the wildly waving hat of the Military Policeman. And then I sank back, half-frightened, into my place—conscious, for the first time, of a feeling of stage fright. It wasn't for several minutes that I was able to look around and notice my fellow travelers.

Four of them were French, and stolid. There was one woman and there were three men. One of the men wore a rubber coat and rubber boots—the other two were dressed in ordinary traveling suits. The woman had put her hair up for the night in curl papers, and she was eating an orange, I turned, half inquiringly, to the person sitting beside me, and saw, with a flash of joy, the olive drab of an American army uniform.

"Oh," I gasped. And then, although I had never seen the man before, "you!"

"Yep—me," responded the soldier. He grinned engagingly, boyishly. "Say, you was all fussed up when you got on the train, wasn't you? I could tell. Say, I'm glad that you're here!"

I laughed. It seemed too good to be true—the finding of some one, in my own compartment, who could speak my own language.

"I was scared, rather," I admitted. "And why are you glad to see me?"

"I've been in th' woods, fighting, for seven months," the soldier told me abruptly, "an' you're th' first English-speakin' young lady I've seen, in that time, t' talk to. When that M. P. poked his head in th' door and asked if there was room for an American girl, I told him, 'You bet there is!' If anybody'd said that there wasn't room I would've killed him!"

"Seven months!" I echoed. And then, because when you are a writer person you can't help reaching out after information, "You've seen a good deal of fighting, I suppose?"

"You're right I have," answered the soldier. "I was up in the Alsace-Lorraine sector, and at Verdun, an' the Argonne Woods. An' I never got wounded—not once. I've seen a lot of fightin'. But I was good at ducking shells—" he paused for a moment, and then, "You can duck shells, you know," he told me, "you can hear 'em comin', an' if you fall flat, an' quick, they'll miss you every time. There's one kind of a shell that goes Sh-h-h-h-h-. And there's another kind that goes Whiz—Bang! They're the easiest kind to duck—you can hear 'em comin' an awful long way."

I looked closely at the boy who was an expert in the fine, and necessary, art of ducking shells. He was blond and young, and his blue eyes were confiding. He was the sort of a boy that every woman, no matter how old she is, instinctively wants to mother—the sort of a boy who has gone out bravely from many a Christian Herald home—gone out gloriously to fight his nation's battles.

"Weren't you ever scared?" I questioned, and paused, abruptly, at the tactlessness of my question.

The American soldier laughed at my confusion.

"You bet I was," he told me—"I look back, now, an' wonder how I ever went through with it! But at th' time—well, it was up to me, that was all. I had t' make good!

"Th' first time we went over th' top—I guess I'll never forget it. We'd been marchin' all night an' we was hot an' muddy, an' dog tired. An' we wanted our breakfast. And we didn't know we was anywhere near th' first line. An' then—then th' order came ter go over. An' we was all surprised, at first, and then we was mad, clean through. Mad at th' Germans? Not a bit of it! We was mad at th' luck, mad because we wanted food. We went up over th' trench in double quick, an' across No Man's Land. Somebody yelled out fer us to sing something as we went, but we couldn't. We was too mad!

"We hadn't gone but a few hundred feet w enemy turned their guns onto us. I seen drop down; an' another guy right after him, a that had bunked with me. A piece of shell over th' eye and glanced off. I felt th' blood across my face. An' I got madder than ever. gan ter yell.

"Th' Germans met us wit' their bayonet They was pretty game, but they can't work b like we can. One jab an' they're through. on jabbin'. . . They met us—but they could us. We went on . . ." He paused sudden then, "Say," he chuckled, "it's funny t' be tell to a girl from home. I can't believe it's real!"

"So," I switched the subject back again, Germans are game fighters?"

"Game—yes," admitted the American s "but mean! D'you know the sort of thing th They paint their airplanes with French col fly over our trenches an' drop bombs on us. meal times they shell our cook wagons so as w get anything to eat. They're mean, they ar they're game. At least—" he added, "they wa until we began ter lick them. Towards th' end our fellers could go out an' bring in fifty prisone day. They wanted ter be taken.

"The French are good guys, but they're to Not enough pep. Why, when our division we th' Lorraine sector we found that things had ju hangin' fire fer months! There was a sort of between th' French an' German trenches, an' o th' Germans would go out for drinkin' water wash their clothes, an' th' next day th' French go. When we came up an' seen that, we co hardly believe our eyes. My lieutenant almo over, an', 'Can you beat it?' he says, 'Boys, we clean this tea party up?' And we did. We few shells over and they was through. It don' us long ter finish things!" Suddenly the soldie into his coat pocket— "Have an orange? questioned.

I declined the orange. "But," I asked, "you the French people, didn't you?"

"They've been fine to us," the soldier told me enthusiasm, "they'd do anything in th' world f American doughboy. Why, if a chap is in a U States uniform he can tour France—an' it won' him a cent. They'll give him food an' railroad t an' a bed any time. They'll give him clothes needs 'em. They'll learn him their language. T make him all th' French fried potatoes that he ca Oh, they're fine. But, won't I be glad ter get ho

"And won't you have a lot to tell them home?" I exclaimed. "Won't the girls come crow around?"

The American boy winked a roguish and young wink.

"Won't I—just!" he exclaimed, "Why, back they don't understand about war. You won't un stand, either, until you see what th' shells have to some town—or until you see the inside of hospital. Then you'll get it. Why, my mothe a softness grew in his wide blue eyes, "she d even know that I've seen action. I've never tol for fear that she'd worry. Th' day that th' armistice was signed she wrote me that she was it was over an' I hadn't been in it. That same was in a front line trench an' th' Huns was se over a shell a minute. But she didn't know. won't, either, until I get back!"

The three Frenchmen were nodding in their pl The French woman, her head upon her arm, sleeping heavily. The American soldier point their direction.

"I suppose that you're sleepy," he said at "I'm not. I couldn't go ter sleep while you're he talk to. I only wish I was goin' all th' way to P But I get off at Tours—that's half way. D' you if I keep on talkin'?"

"Not at all," I answered; "you just talk. I'm sleepy."

The boy was reaching into the inside pocket o coat. All at once he drew out a photograph. handed it to me.

"My family," he said proudly. "That's mother in th' middle—it looks just like her. And MARGARET SANGSTER is in France representing the Christian Herald Family. She went with broad instructions but was told also to follow her heart, to go where it led, and write as it dictated; for we knew that her unusually sympathetic insight into human joys and sorrows would lead her well.

This is the first of her stories from the capital of France. Next week's story will take her to Paris. After that will come a real surprise. Watch her articles. Nothing coming from abroad will be more vital, more human, more intensely interesting. Wait for that surprise.

on th' end is my dad. An' th' old lady is my dmother—she's th' best knitter in our town, back e. Say, don't let's talk any more about th' war. unt ter ask you what sort of shows they're havin', , in th' movie houses; and what they did in New k when th' peace news came through; and what's atest song hit on Broadway . . ."

HE American boy left the trains at Tours. And after we left Tours I slept, although fitfully. it is hard to sleep, fully dressed and sitting bolt ght, in a moving train. At every station I woke a start and, as the station lights receded into the t, I dozed off again. And when at last a misty dawn began to creep in through the window, and French woman woke up and unwound the curlers her hair, I knew that we were approaching s.

was just a little before nine that we rolled into the t terminal station, but it was still almost dark (for sun rarely shines in Paris during the winter.) our train came to a standstill I jumped from my , and I think that I was the first one to reach the —to scan the crowded platform for a familiar . I looked for the brother who had been in nce for a year, and I looked for the old newspaper d who knew Paris like a book. . . .

id you ever, when you were a child, swing as high ossible in a swing? If you ever did you know the liar sinking sensation that occurs when you begin ome down again, through the back-rushing air, ards earth. That was the sensation I felt when I ized that neither my brother nor my friend were he station platform! The Tall Boy's prophecy had e true—I was alone in Paris, and I didn't know nch, and there was nobody to meet me!

can't exactly explain how I checked my baggage. d it mostly by gestures. I can't exactly explain I made the porter understand that I would come k for it after I had found a hotel. I only know after a bit he did understand! And then I ried out of the station and into the street.

had been looking forward, for weeks, to my first npse of Paris. But today I do not think that I ld tell you anything of the impression that it made me. I was too worried, too anxious to get a taxi, ry to analyze my feelings. I only knew that I was city thoroughfare and that there were cabs, a nber of them, standing along the curb. I approached the nearest one timidly.

I want to go—" I began in English, and then pped, "Rue des—" I began again, giving the ress that I had been sending my brother's letters he taxi driver looked at me and sniffed. Then he ed, and fixedly, at some point directly over my d. I turned to the next driver, and repeated the ress. He, too, stared over my head, but he murred "engage" in a bored voice. I went down the of the cabs. Every driver showed the same calm fference.

stood there, on the Paris pavement, in front of se calmly indifferent taxi-drivers. I wanted to ut aloud my scorn of them—but I was utterly unable to make them understand a word. I stood there, half torn between the desire to stamp my foot, and the desire to cry. And then suddenly a soldier, with the bar of a first lieutenant on his shoulder, crossed the street and paused in front of me. I touched his arm with nervous fingers.

"Will you please," I asked abruptly, "get me a taxi?"

The First Lieutenant jumped, and turned sharply in my direction. "Of course I'll get you a taxi," he said, "you startled me for a moment. It isn't often that we see American girls—"

We got a taxi, finally, by standing in the middle of the street and stopping every vehicle that came along while the First Lieutenant asked, in very bad French, if they were engaged. Between taxis he told me of his home in Vermont, and of the little French lady who is going back to that home with him. We shook hands warmly and wished each other good-by and good luck when a taxi was finally captured. And I went away with the vision of his smiling face to cheer me.

I drove, first, to the address that we, at home, have been sending my brother's mail to. I drove down pleasant boulevards that I was too preoccupied to notice, down streets with names that were familiar to me. Finally we reached an office building and stopped there. But upon getting out I found that the organization had taken up new quarters in another building.

We left the wide boulevards and hunted through many an alley way and side street, the taxi-driver and I. And finally we stopped at another door, a door that bore the new number and the name of the organization that my brother is with. I pushed it open wearily and asked a young soldier in charge where I might find him. The young soldier looked at me curiously a moment before he spoke—

"You're just over from the States, aren't you?" questioned the young soldier, And then— "It's Sangster you want? Why, this is only his forwarding address. He's been with the boys in Germany for a couple of months. Will anybody else do?"

I turned quickly away. I couldn't let a stranger see that my eyes were full of tears. And I hurried blindly out to the street.

"We'll go to the American Express Company," I told the taxi-driver in a voice that I tried to make steady. (I am having my mail sent in care of the American Express Company) "Rue Scribe," I finished hurriedly as I saw his face going blank—just as all French faces go blank at the sound of the English language. "Surely there'll be a letter there from somebody!" I told myself.

But there wasn't. I came away from the American Express Company empty-handed and with a very heavy heart. It was with a feeling of utter failure that I started out, still in the taxi, to search for my newspaper friend. I was not surprised when the clerk told me, at his hotel, that he had started home, suddenly, a week before.

There was nothing left do but hunt a hotel. And I wasn't prepared for the hunt. I had expected somebody, familiar with Paris, to help me. But I remembered a name that I had heard mentioned on shipboard, a name that had stayed in my memory because of its home sound.

"Go to the London and New York," I told the taxi-driver, who, with a fairly intelligent grunt, turned his car in an entirely new direction.

The London and New York Hotel was full, but the manager directed me to another hotel, in an avenue called the Rue Kleber, that might take me. Said hotel, in the other end of the town, was also full. "It is the conference," they told me, then they gave me a new address. I looked furtively at the taximeter as I again climbed into the cab and thanked fortune that the taxis of Paris are cheap. (I have found out, since, that they are the only cheap things in Paris!)

The next hotel was full, and the next. And it was growing late and I had had no breakfast and no luncheon. I told myself, unhappily, that I was seeing Paris. But that didn't help—much. For I didn't want, at the moment, to see Paris. I wanted to go home—and to see my mother.

My taxi rounded a corner and stopped at a new hotel. It was the last on the list that various clerks had given to me—the Hotel Normandy. And I walked in, desperately, and they told me that they had one room left. And I tried not to kiss the woman at the desk as I paid a deposit.

The taxi took me to the station to get my baggage. And on the way back from the station I found that I was noticing buildings, that Paris was, after all, a charming place. I noticed that I was passing places that I have seen on picture post cards—the Louvre, and the Tuileries, and the Madeleine. I brought my baggage back to the hotel as a triumphant emperor might have brought this captives through the streets of ancient Rome. I entered the hotel feeling as queens have sometimes felt. But when I reached my room I threw myself down on the bed and slept as a tired little child sleeps.

WHEN I awakened it was very dark, I glanced hastily at my watch and saw that it was nearly ten o'clock. And all at once I realized that only a day had passed since I had taken the train from Bordeaux—that only a day had gone by since I had said good-by to the worried Tall Boy on the station platform. Twenty-four hours. . . . I felt that I had lived a lifetime in those twenty-four hours.

I opened my valise to take out the things that I needed for the night. And there, on top of everything, lay the Bible that had come from New York with me. I picked it up, and it fell open in my hands at the third psalm. I read—

"I laid me down and slept; I awakened, for the Lord sustained me.

"I will not be afraid of ten thousands of people . . ."

I laid down the Bible and crossed over to the window. Below me lay Paris, a sleeping city. And as I looked I thought—

"I'm not afraid of you—I'm not. You're only made of bricks and mortar, and your people are only people—even if they don't speak my language!"

And I turned away from the window—a part of it all!

Bolsheviki Seek Peace With the Entente

ON FEBRUARY 6 the Russian wireless announced that the Bolshevist Government was willing to begin conversations h the Entente. The message deed the willingness of the Soviet vernment to acknowledge the finan- obligations of Russia to citizens of Entente. A guarantee was also en for the payment of interest in raw terials. The Supreme Council at ris arranged to send two representaes each of the five great powers to et the Soviet representatives at nces' Island. Prof. Geo. D. Herron, merly of Iowa, now in Switzerland, William Allen White of Emporia, nsas, are the American delegates.

Leaders of the Anti-Bolshevists in ris opposed a meeting of the Bolviki alone with representatives of the tente, since they held that the Ente was thus recognizing them as a de to government. The Government of orgia declined to send delegates to the posed Princes' Islands Conference, miral Kolchak, dictator of the Siben Government, refused to have anyng to do with Bolshevist traitors and esident Tschaikovsky, of the North ssian Government, declared that comomise with Bolshevism was impossi-. The Central Soviet at Moscow, on bruary 4, called to the colors all men tween the ages of 29 and 45 years; and Bolshevists were reported to be wing additional territory north of Vilna d to be practically controlling the raine. Siberian troops forced the lsheviki to retreat south of Perm. The Allied armies south of Archangel, from February 2 to 5, successfully withstood further attacks by the Red armies.

The Week in the World's News

BRITISH STRIKES SPREAD. Belfast and Glasgow on February 3 were in the grip of general strikes which had extended to London, the tube system under the city being practically stopped by unauthorized strikes. There was a threat by the electrical workers to throw the city into darkness and stop all surface traffic. On February 5 the government announced that under the Defense of the Realm Act the threatened action of the electrical workers would be considered a punishable offense. Agreements by the heads of the unions for a 47-hour week were disregarded by the workers who demanded a 40-hour week, the basic reason for the demand being the necessity of insuring work for all. The War Department on February 5 made an attempt to supplement the busses and the surface lines by ordering 1,000 military lorries into service on the main streets to carry the workers, giving preference to women and girls. The lorries took no fares and carried about 250,000 people a day. The London tubes normally carry over 500,000 passengers a day. A settlement was finally reached with the union leaders in London on February 6, but the men refused to accept the settlement. The situation in Glasgow was reported to be clearing up.

The New British Parliament convened on February 4. Premier Lloyd George returned from Paris on February 7 and it was expected that questions involving labor and reconstruction would be given early attention.

NEW LOAN NECESSARY. The action of Congress in repealing appropriations of $15,000,000,000 started a rumor that this money had been returned to the Treasury making the Victory Loan unnecessary. Secretary Glass met this rumor by announcing that no money had been returned to the Treasury and that this $15,000,000,000 represented money which it would have been necessary to raise. The Treasury officials have estimated that the national expenditures for the year ending June 30 next will approximate $18,000,000,000. The Victory Loan to be floated after Easter is, therefore, absolutely essential and there will be the same patriotic reason for participation in it that impelled over 20,000,000 citizens to buy bonds of the fourth issue.

GERMANS AT WEIMAR THREATEN ENTENTE—In opening the National Assembly, on February 6, Chancellor Ebert declared that the old order in Germany was gone beyond recall. He said, "We will call on the old German spirit of Weimar, we will be an empire of justice and truth." He also said, "The conditions of the armistice have been of unheard of severity and were carried out without shame. We warn our adversa-

Continued on page 221

Christianity and Democracy

THE teachings of Christ lead to liberty and Liberty finds her safest haven in Democracy. Wherever the story of Christ has been told the shackles of hereditary rule and ignorance have been shaken asunder. In fact, liberty has outrun faith and there are mission lands now democratic which are not yet Christian. Next week we tell the story.

Margaret Sangster has seen the Marne. Who wouldn't give an eye to see it with the other one? But she saw it with two eyes and a heart and next week she tells about it.

That the best chances in life are those we make ourselves is charmingly shown in the tender and sympathetic short story next week: "Handsome Is."

Secretary Lane has some big plans for our soldier boys. He wants to set before them a wide and certain opportunity. Robert H. Moulton tells of it next week.

Next week, too, Dr. Hall of Korea tells of Medical Mission work in the Flowery Kingdom.

We are thinking especially of the Boys and Girls. Watch for their own particular features next week.

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

Secretary
EDWARD S. BABCOX

President and Publisher
GRAHAM PATTERSON

Vice Pres. and Mgr. Editor
GEORGE H. SANDISON

A New Spiritual Awakening

THE war has come and gone. People everywhere turned away from the pursuits that had claimed their interest and powers and gave themselves over to the big business of winning the war. But winning the war included doing a great many things for the nation and for our boys, things that stirred the heart and that spurred the energies, and people who had always talked in terms of dollar or social values, found themselves learning a new vocabulary.

There were lots of men and women who had been living good lives without feeling the need of the influence of other good people. They felt no personal need of the church. They were satisfied with the varied interests of the busy world which claimed their time and thought.

But men who had been busy creating a structure of influence and power for their sons began to realize, with those sons in France, that there was a power greater than finance. Mothers, whose thoughts had been centered on the social position of their daughters, saw life with wider vision when the daughters in their nurse's uniforms sailed away.

And when the boys began to write home of the solemn moments when they faced the sacrifice they were ever ready to make, and daughters were known to be in daily peril in their work of mercy, and when letters failed to come and fathers and mothers could only hope—and pray—when that time came, many a good man or woman, who had of late years thought much of worldly power and pleasure, began to wonder if, after all, there was not a Power above it all, which ruled among the conflicts of men and which could be known and felt by human hearts and hands.

These good people, finding that the raising of Red Cross money was good fun, that talking up subscriptions to the Y. M. C. A. brought more satisfaction than a good fat order or a social triumph, that a lot of good people who had worked with them in these causes of helpfulness were in the church, and that prayer brought recollection, turned again to the church to see if, in it, they could find a real avenue to God, a real satisfaction, a real leadership in life and thought.

But the church had changed. The narrowness, the denominational emphasis, the so-called piety that cloaked a multitude of sins, the cant that put creed before Christ, was gone. They found the churches pulling together, submerging incidental differences, in order that they might sound a ringing challenge to all evil in the united declaration of their common faith. And, so, in these two years of war, in which nearly 70,000 of our finest boys, dead in France, have given to all of us a new understanding of the meaning of sacrifice and the worth of unselfish service, 2,000,000 persons have come seeking membership in the churches (Dr. Carroll is now gathering full statistics of all denominations for the last twelve months to be published shortly in the Christian Herald).

The men in the trenches felt the need of God, of a power great enough to give meaning to the conflict, and we at home have felt equally with them this hunger for the realities. We have always believed in God, we have felt that we were serving Him in a way, but there has come, through the example of the men in the trenches and through awakening in our hearts, by good works shared with others, a deep desire to bring back the faith of our youth and to know mother's God face to face as she did years ago.

In this spirit people here at home, satisfied for years to live as well as they could outside the church, are coming into fellowship with other Christians in order that they may find and continue that comradeship in good works which in the war months has been revealed to them. A new spirit of Christian Unity is moving men and organizations toward cooperation, a kindly willingness toward accommodation is breaking down the still remaining barriers of sect and tradition, and with extraordinary rapidity is bringing the churches together in the bonds of real Christian brotherhood.

In this new spiritual awakening the press is rendering a valiant service. More books on religion have been issued during the past twelve months than in any previous year, and the magazines and newspapers, which in other years gave little attention to spiritual matters, now make them a standard topic. From the outset, the Christian Herald has devoted its efforts to aiding the work in every way possible, believing that it was of God. It has specially directed attention to the demand for Church Unity, which it considers the most certain evidence of the spiritual awakening. Unity, when accomplished, will be hailed by millions of men and women throughout this land and by Christians throughout the whole world, for unity knows no bounds of sea or shore.

A new spirituality, a clearer and firmer belief in God, has come to us out of the turmoil. Now the nations are convinced that divine wisdom has been trying them in the purifying fire. The old dross of agnosticism, unbelief, false idols, corrupt ideals—how could these have survived the purging flames? Where now is the "higher criticism" which ran through our universities and theological seminaries like a plague and infected our churches throughout the land? How could it do other than shrivel up in the fiery ordeal? Yes, a new spirituality has come to us, for the fire has cleared away much of the rubbish and has brought again into the view of all men the vital, indestructible truths which alone are precious and real. Today all of us know, better than we have ever known before, the reality of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of men.

Anti-Prohibition Propaganda

A BELATED but furious propaganda against National Prohibition is in progress. In the hotel rooms of the country are being placed pamphlets denouncing Prohibition in such harsh terms as "outright theft," "hypocrisy," "terrible tyranny," etc.

This propaganda has strong selfish interest, thorough organization and heavy financial support back of it, and it will fool a great many people if not properly reckoned with.

The old argument that it is unfair to take from the people of New York state, for instance, their "personal privilege" by the votes of other states is persisted in, notwithstanding that New York itself has gone for Prohibition. It never was much of an argument, and now, of course, it is no argument at all.

The natural and inevitable depreciation of saloon property is in this propaganda pronounced "theft." The contention is that all bar fixtures and unexpired leases ought to be paid for by the public.

The propagandists overlook the important fact that these saloon properties have been paid for by the public many times over and in the coin of destroyed manhood, women's heartbreak and children's loss of proper parenthood.

"Lawful investments" and "tangible property" are fine phrases and have weight, but they do not justify the tool-kit of the burglar, however honestly bought, or the knife with which a drunken father would stab his child. Property is sacred, when rightly used, but manhood, womanhood and childhood are far more sacred and to be protected at any sacrifice of sin-tainted property.

Soldier-Farmers

SECRETARY LANE'S plan for placing returned soldiers on small farms will attract very general interest at this time when the country is threatened with a big surplus of unemployed labor. Similar plans have been adopted in several countries, where the release of the troops from active service has created a grave labor problem. The bill which has the approval of the Secretary appropriates $100,000,000 for the investigation, irrigation, drainage and development of waste lands, to provide employment on farms for our honorably discharged soldiers and sailors. Just here, the question may be raised whether it would not be well to consider the availability of the many thousands of neglected and deserted farms in the Eastern and Middle States, as a part of the project at least. There are hundreds of millions of acres of unappropriated government land, which might be included in such a project, but these are largely arid or waste lands, of the kind which require not only clearing, but irrigation and drainage systems, in order to reclaim them for agricultural use.

This nation owes our soldiers every aid it can r der toward their industrial rehabilitation. To ma minds, the soldier farm scheme would have a mu more definite and practical shape if it were not co fined to arid and waste lands exclusively, but appli to available farming land, wherever it could be fou in sufficient acreage. Under the proposed measu the financing of the soldier-farmer is made a compa tively simple affair. The land would be improve the workers equipped and instructed, and gene supervision continued until success is assured. order to meet the necessities of the case, howev practically every detail, not only as to the selecti of the land, but the laying out of the farms, erecti of buildings, preparing of ground, choice of crop market facilities, transportation, and even social a neighborhood advantages would have to be consi ered. Farm colleges or branches at accessible ce ters ought to be included in the scheme. The go ernment did well with its great military camps, whi constituted a formal program. It ought to do qui as well, or even better, with the farm experimen Under proper conditions the soldiers and sailors, very large proportion of whom came from agricu tural districts, would give the best there is in the to the work to assure its success.

At the outset, the men on the farms should not b left to their own devices. They would willingly com under such a system of working as would contribut in a very large degree to the success of the whole ente prise. In working along lines laid down by the gov ernment, the men would be making a solid foundatio for their own future careers.

Better Seamanship

THERE are some statesmen and editors, mostl foreign or of alien sympathies, who pretend to b disturbed and dismayed over the possibility o American shipping being driven from the high seas o account of our seamen's law which guarantees highe wages and better conditions to our sailors than ar enjoyed by those of any other nation.

Mr. Hurley, Mr. Schwab and many other industria and political leaders are entirely convinced that as the President stated in his latest address to Congress, that the chief need of a great industrial civilization such as ours is good railways, good highways, good farm roads, good instruments of distribution over the length and breadth of the land—and the oceans.

The two greatest civilizations of ancient times, Persia and Rome, were based on systems of good roads; and another great civilization, Carthage, also derived its prosperity from good highways, although her highways were the high seas.

Desirable and natural as it is that American shipping shall lead the marine world, it is equally natural and desirable that our seamen shall be elevated to the highest class and conditions.

Shall China Be Degraded?

IT IS an extraordinary revelation that is disclosed in the letters making known the efforts of the liquor interests to establish their outlawed business in China, which the Christian Herald publishes today. The whole story in detail is given, and it must be anything but soothing to the self-respect of the American people to learn that the interests that conduct the vile business which has been cast out of the United States, in their determination to find an outlet for its debasing products, have decided to unload them on helpless China. Why should China be made the dumping-ground of what we ourselves have rejected as a traffic that is a menace to the health, morals and general well-being of every community in this nation?

America is known in China as the best friend that country has. We have demonstrated this on many occasions. Here is an opportunity to do China a real service, which we trust will not be neglected. We hope that our government, which is now in possession of the facts, will take all necessary steps to prevent the carrying out of the plan to debauch the great Asiatic republic for gain.

The first meeting of the Peace Conference in the Quai d'Orsay. The delegates stand as President Poincare declares the Conference in session

© Western Newspaper Union

The League of Nations Takes Form

Commissions Push Work of Peace Conference

THE League of Nations will have teeth. Those who feared that it might be emasculated and impotent to enforce its decisions were answered plainly by the action on February 8 the Commission of the League of Nations of which esident Wilson is Chairman. This commission had n practically completed its task. M. Ferdinand rnaude, one of the French members of the Comssion, gave to the press the following summary of plan as it stood on the eighth. The League is to ve an Executive Committee with full powers, ways in session, the members of this committee to chosen by the great powers.

There is to be a judicial tribunal before which tions may be ordered to appear, by the Executive mmittee, to settle their differences.

There is to be an international parliament, meeting ce a year, with delegates from each member nation, consider world legislation.

There is to be an international police force—army d navy. Each nation will maintain its part of is army subject to call by the Executive Committee the League, to serve wherever needed.

France, fearing that she might again face invasion th allies unable to reach her before the major blow s struck, was reported to have insisted upon the ovision for the international police force. This in ite of the fact that Mr. Wilson, addressing the hamber of Deputies on February 3, had declared rance still the frontier of Freedom and that "when-er France or any free people is threatened the whole orld will be ready to vindicate its liberty." According the summary it is planned that this force shall be ed to compel nations to avail themselves of the eliminary machinery of the League to settle their fferences without war. If war cannot be thus pre-ented, the dispute will be permitted to proceed to ms subject to rules and regulations formulated by e League. It is planned, however, to hold in reserve e weapon of the economic boycott.

During the week ending February 8, the Comission worked long hours, and each day brought ports of progress. The plan to have the Executive ommittee consist exclusively of delegates from the ve principal powers brought protests from the naller nations, and a plan was reported to have been onsidered to give the smaller nations representation the proportion of nine to ten. Similarly it appeared npossible to secure acceptance of the principle of ompulsory arbitration. Under President Wilson's eadership this portion of the plan for the League was hen reported to have been altered, on February 5, to rovide three alternatives, arbitration, mediation—robably by a committee of the League—and inquiry to determine the rights and wrongs of the dispute, the disputants binding themselves not to engage in hostilities until the investigation is completed and the report prepared, Mr. Bryan's plan.

It was also reported that the plan of the League contemplated permission for the signatory nations to accept the plan in full or with reservations.

The Commission on Reparation and Indemnities was also hard at work. France, which had shown willingness to yield many points to secure the League of Nations, was reported unyielding on the point of reparation, demanding that Germany be made to pay every sou that could be forced from her.

Another secret treaty bobbed up during the week, the engagement under which Roumania joined the Entente. By this document, signed August 17, 1916, Roumania agreed to declare war and invade Transylvania, eight days subsequent to the beginning of an offensive from Salonica. Roumania was to conquer and to be permitted to annex certain stipulated areas in Austria-Hungary, including the Banat of Temesvar, now claimed by both Roumania and Serbia. The Serbian interest in the Banat was recognized by a provision requiring Roumania to idemnify Serbians who wish to emigrate from the territory within two years, and by a provision prohibiting the building of fortifications opposite Belgrade.

The question of Arabia was also before a commission of the Conference. Certain elements appeared to be endeavoring to stir up enmity between Britain and France over the mandatory covering the new Arabian Kingdom, which admits its need of western guidance until it learns to walk alone. There was a report that the Arabs had asked the United States to take over the administration of Arabia, Syria and Armenia, possibly of all of the former Turkish territory aside from Mesopotamia.

The Commission on International Labor Legislation of the Peace Conference, of which Samuel Gompers is chairman, has announced no conclusions, but on February 8 the American delegates laid before the commission the proposals, the most important of which are:

"A league of the free peoples of the world in a common covenant for genuine and practical cooperation to secure justice, and therefore peace, in the relations between nations.

"The entrance of any free nation into the league of free peoples should be inherent.

"No reprisals based upon purely vindictive purposes, or deliberate desire to injure, but to right wrong.

"Recognition of the rights of small nations and of the principle, No people must be forced under a sovereignty under which it does not wish to live."

"That in law and in practice the principle shall be recognized that the labor of a human being is not a commodity or an article of commerce.

"Involuntary servitude shall not exist except in punishment for crime.

"Trial by jury should be established.

"The right of free association, free assemblage, free speech and the press shall not be denied or abridged.

"That the seamen of the merchant marine shall be guaranteed the right of leaving their vessels when the same are in a safe harbor.

"No article or commodity shall be shipped or delivered in international commerce in the production of which children under the age of sixteen years have been employed or permitted to work. (Similar prohibitions are proposed against the product of prison labor and merchandise produced in the home.)

The proposals also included an international eight-hour day, adequate wages, based on the standards of living, and equal pay for women and men doing equal work.

There were reports on several days that Japan was bringing pressure on China to force her to cease her efforts to secure at the hands of the Peace Conference release from Japanese dominance. The Japanese delegates declared officially that Japan did not desire any Chinese territory, but China is not only asking for her territory, she seeks also liberty of action.

The Supreme War Council, on February 8, adopted a proposal of President Wilson's by which there was created a Supreme Economic Council to take the place of all similar bodies previously organized and to deal with the matters of finance, food, blockade control and the shipping of raw materials during the armistice. Two civilian representatives for each Government were also added to the armistice commission.

This action was taken because of the increasing number of questions, not of a military character, which were arising daily and which required for their settlement the attention of civilians of experience.

It was expected that the next meeting of the armistice commissioners at Treves would deal more intimately than former meetings with non-military matters. It was also expected that, for military security, the Allies would occupy Essen.

Although the League of Nations appears about to take form and the principles upon which shall rise the structure of peace seem practically defined, a correspondent of the New York Times cabled, on February 7, that he had the highest authority for the statement that the work of the Peace Congress would not be concluded before midsummer, the road being long to the final resolution into full agreement of the complicated questions of territory, race and interest which are to make peace secure and war improbable.

A Plea for Church Unity

*A SERMON BY REV. A. EDWIN KEIGWIN, D.D.

TEXT—I Cor. 12 : 20. "Now are they many members, but one body."

AS ONE enters the visitor's gallery of the Congressional Library at Washington the first thing the eyes rest upon is an inscription upon the opposite wall of the great octagonal reading-room:

"One God, one law, one element,
And one far-off divine event
To which the whole creation moves."

There, above the many men of many minds frequenting the reading-room; there, above the many books of many kinds reposing in the cases and iron stacks, is emblazoned the shining ideal to which the world is moving—Unity.

Just now, the whole creation is moving in the direction of this goal with daily increasing momentum. Perhaps the divine event is not so far off as we had supposed. Certainly Unity is in the air. Statesman and ecclesiastic, business and labor are seeking more earnestly than ever before to substitute cooperation for competition, brotherhood for bitterness.

And the world is looking to the Church of Jesus Christ to lead the way. As the Bishop of Oxford, Right Rev. Charles Gore, put it in a recent address: "No League of Nations will be sufficient unless it be based on the universality of the brotherhood of man, in which denomination, schism, sectarianism and class distinction are broken down and Christendom reunited in one great universal Church."

On every hand and in every land there is a growing demand for that Unity which will embody the essence of the Church Universal, as originally conceived by our Lord and his first disciples. But how is the happy consummation to be brought about? Many and earnest are the inquiries as to the best "modus vivendi," and a veritable epidemic of Unity meetings has broken out. Spontaneously and in different parts of the country and of the world, conferences and conventions are being held. Duly accredited delegates, appointed by various ecclesiastical bodies, have set out from Europe and from America to make overtures to Christians across the seas, only to find, to their immense surprise, sympathetic convocations in session waiting to receive them—God's Spirit having outrun the missioner. Such a delegate from the Greek Orthodox Church, less than twenty-four hours after landing in New York, found himself seated on the platform in a great Unity Conference of the Presbytery of New York. Such is the quickened sense of oneness throughout Christendom!

HOW shall we proceed to give body to these hopes and expectations? Why not follow the example of Paul? The context presents a platform for Christian Unity that cannot be improved upon for directness, tact and practicability. Paul handled divisions in the Church of his day with decision and despatch. Before our great purpose becomes clouded with nonessentials, before the mind has had opportunity to erect barriers in the way of spiritual progress, let the heart speak, let faith declare itself. How?

First, by making a bold declaration for Organic Unity.

But is organic union achievable? Unquestionably. Indeed it is already an accomplished fact did we but realize it. The sooner we acknowledge the fact and approach each other in the spirit of conference rather than the spirit of distrust, the better for the cause. Such is the New Testament method of approach.

Paul met the schisms undermining the first century Church with the bold affirmation: "Now are ye all but one body." Upon the hypothesis that the believers were already one, he set about making them one. He treats a negative situation with a positive corrective. He reminds his patients that they are suffering from an eruption upon the surface, and not from any organic disaffection. And when we review the facts this diagnosis is fully confirmed.

The Corinthian Church, with characteristic Greek admiration for wisdom and eloquence, had mistaken adroit rhetoric and flaming oratory for the real thing—spiritual experience. Therefore, "I am for Paul; I am for Apollos; I am for Cephas." Thus many sincere Christians became entangled in the meshes of ceremonialism, controversy, and casuistry. How is the apostle to extricate his spiritual children from the snares of negation? By calling them back to reality, namely, their indissoluble oneness in Christ.

Is not this the crux to the whole question? Are we or are we not in Christ? If we are, then we are one body, by whatsoever names our several members may be known. To declare, then, for organic Unity is not to propose something new and radical; it is to assert something old and fundamental. It is our ancient faith endeavoring to restore what has become atrophied, what has been lost. At heart we are in harmony, in spirit we are one, in mind we are—how shall I put it?—addled. We have sacrificed collective consciousness for group consciousness. If this be so, the unhappy problem of disunion should be treated biologically and not mechanically. We may take to ourselves the illuminating words spoken by Clémenceau at the opening of the Peace Conference: "The League of Nations is here. It is ourselves. It is for us to make it live, and to make it live, we must have it really in our hearts." The withinness of the Unity movement is the dominant note which must be sounded over and over, until all pipes in the vast organ of Christendom are voiced and tuned.

CHURCH Unity is not a matter that must await the tardy decision of ecclesiastical procedure. It is a wonderfully articulated, diversely functioning body of reality, created not from without by denominational mandate, but from within by the Holy Spirit. Organic union is biological, not theological. Nothing short of this interpretation does justice to I Corinthians 12. Here, as elsewhere, the physical body is represented as the counterpart of the Christian body. The union for which the Master prayed is not an alliance or a federation. It is a living thing—multiform yet uniform.

We are coming more and more to see that this is true. Not alone in the trenches of Europe have men of many church affiliations felt their essential oneness. Wherever there has been comradeship in service or in sacrifice, the same thrill of reality is experienced. That which divides us cannot be so very vital, else why is not the line of cleavage more clearly marked? Is it not a fact that a twilight zone of considerable proportion forms the boundary line between the great denominations? Is it not true that the large proportion of believers inhabit this zone? The most astute theologians find it increasingly difficult to determine exactly where one denomination ends and another begins. Only the other day I heard Dr. H. K. Carroll, the government statistician, say: "I am often hard put to determine, from their belief and practice, just how to classify churches." And a glance at his statistical report visualizes this difficulty. For example, there are fifteen different kinds of Baptists, eighteen varieties of Lutherans, sixteen branches of Methodism and eleven subdivisions of Presbyterianism. Must union (or, better, reunion) be delayed until these one hundred and sixty odd Protestant denominations agree upon tenets which shall bind them together in a United Church of Jesus Christ? I hope not. Why suffer longer the paralysis of a discordant idea, when the mirale-working Spirit stands ready to set us free from our infirmity?

"Now are we one body." Whenever a venture has been made upon this assumption, results have more than justified it. Witness the many interdenominational movements for ethical reform, for social service and for spiritual quickening. Witness that most recent of all, the Inter-Church World Movement, born December 17, 1918, in the presence of one hundred and thirty-five representatives of Home and Foreign Mission Boards and allied agencies. After a day of careful consideration, it was unanimously agreed that the time is ripe for a unified program of Christian service and coordinated improvement of the unique opportunities of the New Era. Under a united budget and treasury, after a thorough united survey of the needs of the home and foreign fields, a united financial campaign is to be undertaken in the spring of 1920. This movement is not to displace or impair the autonomy or responsibilities of cooperating agencies. So nothing is lost and much is gained. It is the adaptation of Allied Strategy to religion.

FROM the neck down, the Christian body is manifestly united. There is a tacit agreement among the members; there is a working agreement. We are one in spirit, one in heart, one in service; why not one in mind? Possibly we are, and will so discover when the Pentecostal Spirit enables us to understand each other's tongue. At once let us come together and declare the wonderful works of God and see what will happen.

In England they have already done this, consequently the Unity Movement is further advanced over there. Such movements as the Swanic Fellowship (taking its name from the town where the meetings are held) have greatly advanced the cause. At first it was a company of Nonconformist ministers drawn together by a yearning for spiritual fellowship and meeting in secret. Then it became two companies, the one Nonconformist and the other Anglican, meeting simultaneously in towns three miles apart because of the ecclesiastical ban put upon the movement by the latter body. But between the sessions members of the respective conferences gravitated together in friendly intercourse, and the Spirit did it work. Then the secret came out as evidence of one living Christian organism began to appear. Then followed the fruits of the Spirit. And now the churches of England are eagerly awaiting the time when the essential Unity of Christian denominations is officially recognized, and the corporate form and title of this Church Universal is evolved. Doubtless the union of Christendom may be brought about by the same biological processes.

SECOND, still following the example of Paul, let there be a declaration for a platform of Tolerance. And by tolerance I do not mean indifference, but a generous recognition that diversity is inevitable in any organism. Remember, we are not trimming a Christmas tree; we are planting a Christian tree. "Thou knowest not what it shall be." Is not this the thought? "Now are we many members, but one body."

We must somehow contrive to pool our beliefs, so to speak. Denominational differences have not been wholly deplorable. It might be a great loss to Christendom, certainly it would be a great handicap upon the Unity Movement, were we to quench the light of great truths which it is thought some folks have seen more clearly than others. "The eye cannot say to the hand, we have no need of you." Denominationalism has grown up out of the necessity for striking back in defense of certain things "revealed unto some and not unto all." Eliminate the attack, and the bristling defenses will fall into decay as so many unsightly fortifications which enlightened civilization has rendered useless. Organic union should not impair liberty of conscience any more than political union does the sovereignty of states.

We are so constituted that we are incapable of seeing things alike. Some feel about union as Charles Lamb felt about music: "Sentimentally I am for harmony, but organically I am incapable of carrying a tune." All due allowance should be made for the self-evident fact that so long as we are in the body there will be diversity of gifts and differences of operation. To many, who sentimentally are for harmony, compromise would be intolerable and conformity would be irksome.

MORE than one effort to unite Christendom has failed utterly for no other reason than this: it was too arbitrary, too mechanical. During the Middle Ages, the effort was made to unite Christendom by means of uniformity of belief, everywhere the same belief embodied in the same tongue. Mechanically the program had everything in its favor. There was the authority of the Papal Church supported by Imperial Rome. This time it is organism, not mechanism, which we have in mind.

The foreign missionary field presents some admirable examples of Christian Unity which might be studied with profit at this juncture. Dr. Arthur J. Brown was thrilled and enlightened by organic union as he observed it in the Far East. One address to which he listened embodied the spirit which must now prevail, if the various Christian bodies in the homeland are ever to get together. A Chinese Christian began an address by pointing to one after another of the American Christians present as he uttered impressively these earnest words: "You are a Presbyterian and you cannot help it; you were born that way. You are a Methodist and you cannot help it; you were born that way. You are an Episcopalian and you cannot help it; you were born that way. We are Christians, and we don't propose to let you keep us apart." The assembled Chinese Christians represented every denomination to which allusion was made and several others. They were all enjoying denominational advantages made possible by denominational generosity in England and America. They were loyal to their respective branches of Christianity. And yet they were one—spiritually one—organically one.

Is such Unity feasible in America and throughout the world? I am sure of it! And I might justify this faith by proofs aplenty, were there time and space. It has been my happy privilege to witness many evidences of the essential unity now present in the various branches of Christianity. A very recent experience is characteristic.

The scene: A committee room where numerous interdenominational conferences have been convened. The occasion: An earnest desire to attempt something really broad and statesmanlike in a home mission field where there has been overlapping. The participants were officially designated representatives from six

Continued on page 223

---

*Pastor, West End Presbyterian Church, New York.

China Emerging from Chaos

The Birth-Throes of a Nation as I Saw Them

By REV. FRANCIS E. CLARK, D.D., LL.D., Founder of Christian Endeavor

CHINA for three thousand years seemed scarcely to turn over in her sleep. Now, however, for nearly a score of years she has been seething with trouble, like a bubbling pot over a particularly hot fire. Within that time she has been ruled by the decadent Manchu dynasty, by an ambitious president, by a dictator who for a week or two made himself emperor, and by other presidents; better but weaker men, and, if we accept as true their own proclamations when they resigned their office, "most unworthy" to fill the high post of the largest republic in the world.

dozen revolutions, more or less serious, in different parts of the country have marked these momentous years, and fearful famines and awful floods have not been among the least of China's calamities.

At first sight it appears that the Celestial Empire (anything, (it would seem, but celestial) had been emerging from chaos for a long, long time. Yet, when we remember her vast extent, her four hundred millions of people, her five distinct and often hostile races (Chinese, Manchus, Mongolians, Tibetans and Moslems), her inherited conservatism, her age-long isolation from other nations and her hatred of change, we can but wonder that in twenty years such marvelous changes for the better have already taken place; changes which it has taken other nations, not decades, but centuries to bring about.

. . .

I have had the privilege of visiting China four times within the last twenty-six years, and had I, or any other sane man, been told on my first visit in 1892 that, in less than a quarter of a century, the Manchus would be deposed, China would be a republic, the country would be gridironed with railways, hundreds of newspapers would spring up, the opium trade would be abolished, her immemorial educational system changed, and an effective army and police force established, we would have said, like the king of l, "If God would open the windows of heaven, then might this thing be," but that only a miracle, wrought by supernatural powers, could bring about such marvelous changes. Yet all these betterments and more have taken place.

typical pagoda,
China's temple
her pagan gods

Each of my visits has happened upon a time of special interest. In 1892 I saw the old China, corrupt, decadent, apparently satisfied to die of lethargy and conservatism. In 1900 she was seething with hatred of foreigners, and on the edge of the Boxer rebellion, and the downfall of the Manchus. In 1910 she was trying to adjust herself to new conditions, but was still suspicious of foreigners, and afraid, as well she might be, of their aggression and spoliation. In 1916 she was in a ferment on account of her own internal troubles, over the ill-starred attempt of Yuan Shi Kai to become emperor. Province after province, including that of Chekiang in which I happened to be detained by illness, rebelled against Peking and declared themselves independent. Yet through all these troubles, and by reason of them, she has been emerging into what, I believe, will sometime be a well-ordered, progressive democracy.

The most exciting days of the last quarter of a century to be in China have undoubtedly been at the opening year of this new century. In April of that year I attended a memorable All-China Christian Endeavor Convention in Foochow, where a thousand Endeavorers from all parts of the Empire came together. There were few outward signs of the terrible chapter in Chinese history which was about to open. To be sure, there had been a year or two before some disturbances of a national character by a widespread society called "Vegetarians,"—a most mild and harmless appellation, but bandits under any other name could be no more savage. The chief article in their creed was hatred of foreigners, and I remember seeing an eminent missionary of the Church of England, whose face was all gashed and seamed by the cruel knives of the Vegetarians. All the other missionaries in her station were killed before the massacre was over. As she fell, she called out to those yet alive, "Be brave! Be brave! In five minutes we will all be in heaven!" She did not go to heaven then, however, but was left for dead under a heap of bodies, and was afterwards rescued, healed, and continued her blessed work for years.

. . .

After the convention in Foochow, we made our way north, stopping in Shanghai, and Tientsin, and reaching Peking when the excitement preceding the Boxer uprising was at its height, and shortly before the massacres of missionaries and Christians began. We saw the splendid heroism of the missionaries and native Christians, who, though they knew that fearful troubles were impending and that their lives might be in jeopardy at any minute, went about their duties as usual, preaching, praying, teaching, visiting the sick, shepherding the converts, as though the Boxers were thousands of miles away.

One of our last visits in China on that occasion was to Paotingfu, where, later, all the missionaries, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, and those of the China Inland Mission were foully murdered. We were the last friends from outside the city they could have seen, for very shortly after we left, the railway was torn up by the Boxers, and escape was impossible.

The half-hearted troops who had been detailed to guard the American Board Mission were quartered within the compound, and were supposed to fire a gun at nine o'clock every night, to let us know that they were on duty. One night the gun was not fired, and when we inquired the reason, we were told they had no powder. The next night the excuse was that they had no wadding. As can be imagined, when the Boxers actually attacked the premises a little later, the defenders all turned tail and fled.

Here lived the heroic Horace Pitkin, the scholar, athlete and noble leader of the Student Volunteer Movement, who a few years before had given himself to the work for China. Nothing is more pathetic than the note found by the allied armies, when a few months later they captured the city, and gave him Christian burial. The note was to his wife, who, shortly before, with their baby, had gone to America. It read something as follows:

> "'My dear wife: The Boxers are all around us. We cannot escape. In an hour we shall all be dead. Train up our little boy Horace for Christ's service, and when he is twenty-five years old, send him to China to take up the work I must lay down.'"

ANOTHER heroic missionary there, who was also our hostess, was Mary Morrill of Portland, Maine, a gentle little woman, with a great big heart of love, and as brave as a lion withal. When the Boxers came and told her she must go to the heathen temple in the city—where she was soon after murdered, with what indignities we know not—she went at once, but all the way to her death talked to them of Jesus and his love. The little beggar boys swarmed about her, as they do in China, and she gave them what cash she had in her pocket, saying, "I shall not want these any longer. You can have them." Kind, gentle, fearless to the end, she so impressed her murderers, I am told, that some of the Boxers themselves said, "She was a good woman. She ought not to have been killed."

An idol whose power is fading before the light of Christ

The missionaries of Peking, though some of them were called upon to die for their faith, were none the less heroic. Through the long, long siege, they never lost heart or hope. They encouraged the native Christians to hold out, worked with a will with gun and spade and pick, fought as well as prayed, and, by the seeming direct interposition of Providence on more than one occasion, won a glorious victory.

OUR own minister, the Hon. Edwin H. Conger, whom I met, was a sturdy, well-poised American, who presided, I remember, at one of our Christian Endeavor meetings in Peking. Another interesting man whom I met was Mr. Squires, the United States Secretary of Legation, whom I afterwards met when he was our minister to Panama. He told me, at that time, as we were talking about the siege in which he took a prominent part, that the Protestant missionaries were the real heroes and generals of the siege, and he especially mentioned Dr. Gamewell of the Methodist mission, and Dr. Ament of the Congregational mission. This high praise of Protestant missionaries was as unbiased as it was deserved, for Mr. Squires was a stanch Catholic.

The Chinese Christians were as brave as their missionary leaders. Thousands of them perished in the Boxer massacre. After the siege, Dr. Ament sent me a beautiful silk banner wrought by the girls in his mission school, representing the church of Peking coming through the fires of persecution, purified and strengthened. On one side was the Christian Endeavor monogram. In the "C" were the names of the men martyrs, and in the "E" the names of the woman martyrs, who belonged to the societies in Peking. This banner, which I greatly treasure, is in the Memorial room of the new World's Christian Endeavor headquarters in Boston.

This uprising was the beginning, I believe, of China's "new era." The blood of the martyrs has proved to be not only the seed of the church, but the seed of a regenerated nation. Soon after this, as we know, the Republic was proclaimed, the decree abolishing opium was put in force, the poppy fields were plowed under, and China has gone forward, though with some faltering and backward steps.

ON MY subsequent visits to China since 1900, I have seen vast changes, but my space is too limited to chronicle them at length. I will mention but one or two striking changes. In 1910, with a large party of fellow Americans, I walked through the streets of Canton. There were six hundred of us, and such a large influx of foreigners had never before come to China at one time for peaceful purposes. The populace was excited, thinking we had come on some political, anti-Chinese errand, and serious trouble was threatened. But a well-drilled, handsomely uniformed body of police protected the travelers, one policeman being detailed to every eight visitors, and the rabble confined themselves to scowls and ugly looks.

On my first and second visits to China, the old system of education was wholly in vogue. I saw the great examination halls in some of the large cities, with ten thousand little cells in each of which a candidate for a degree was immured for three or four days, that he might produce an essay or a poem according to the laws of the Chinese classics. Success in this effort, in which nine-tenths of the scholars failed every year, was the only passport to social or political preferments. For thousands of years this system had been in vogue.

On my last visit, this age-long curriculum had been abolished. Most, if not all, of the great examination halls had been leveled to the dust, and well-equipped halls of science and western learning had been erected in their place. In some of them Christian missionaries were the principals and professors, and in none of them is the Bible tabooed. Surely China "do move." Surely a new and great nation is being born in the eighteen provinces of the "Flowery Kingdom."

The King of Calloway County

A Thrilling Tale of the Cumberlands

By LEWIS H. KILPATRICK Illustrated by GEORGE AVISON

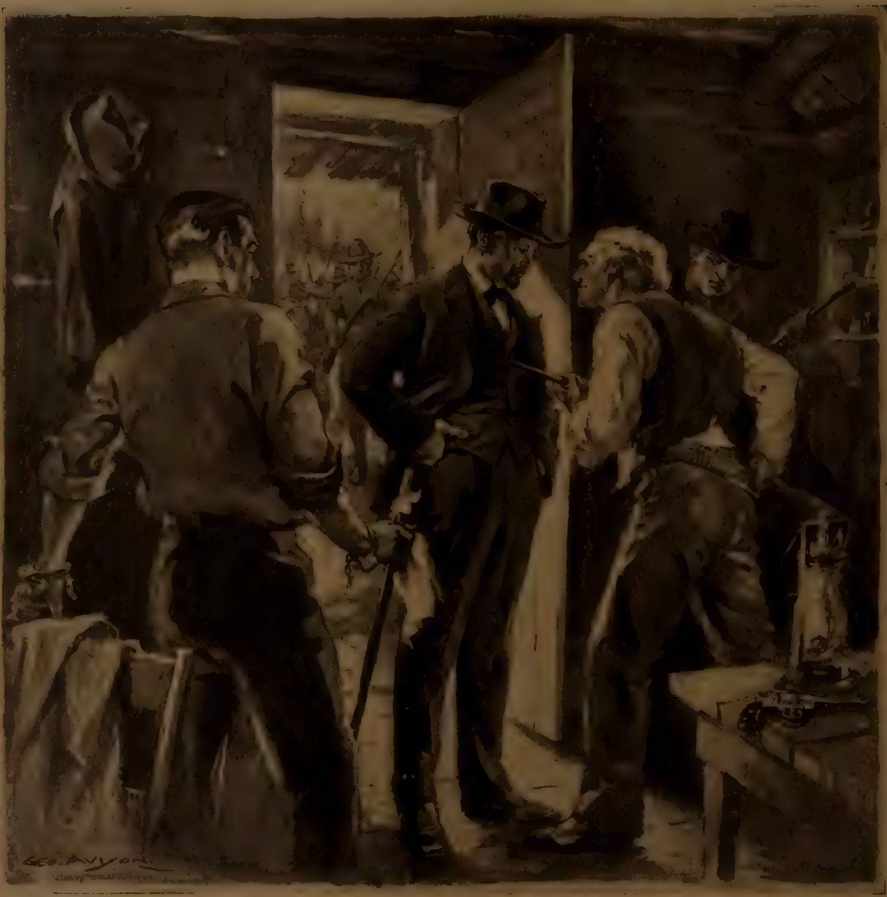
THE stranger threw his saddlebags over one arm, and assuming an air of carelessness, strode up the cindered walk that led from the railroad station to the Court House Square. He was tall, of middle age, with a patch of gray on each temple beneath his black slouch hat. A week's growth of beard masked his face. He carried himself with the easy dignity of a man sure of his own powers and the righteousness of his mission.

A pall of suspense, hostile, quivering suspense, hung between the glaring blue sky and the shingled roofs of the little Cumberland Mountain town. Flannel-shirted, khaki-clad militiamen, with rifles on their shoulders, stood at every corner, returning scowl for scowl with the few natives who skulked about the streets.

The stranger passed the inspection of a sentry, who paced back and forth before a dingy law office, and entered. He paused just inside the door.

"Is this the Honorable Rufus Dorsey?" bowing to the short, heavily built figure who sat behind a flat-topped desk in the farthest and darkest corner of the room.



The old man lurched forward and pressed the muzzle of his rifle against John's breast. "Tell me, stranger, and tell me quick, air ye fer us or ag'inst us?" John was unperturbed. "Wait and see," he commanded.

"It is," was the curt reply.

Without invitation the stranger took a chair, keeping his back to the light. What light there was came from the open door and a single barred window. Dorsey sat well out of range of both. He had enemies to whom the sight of his bushy red hair would be the signal for a shot—and a funeral.

"I believe you own some undeveloped coal lands on upper Sandyfork Creek, don't you?" asked the stranger in a businesslike manner.

Dorsey became interested. "Well, not just yet," he replied.

He tried to get a look at his visitor's face, to judge how far he could be trusted. But while farsighted politically, the little man was nearsighted optically; a nearsightedness that had been rendered close to blindness by the scourge of that dreaded mountain disease, trachoma.

"You see, Mister, it's this way," Dorsey began. "The land's as good as mine now, but I couldn't make a deed of sale to it till after the death of its present owner——"

"Then I'll go and see him," interrupted the stranger.

"Afraid you can't," Dorsey chuckled dryly. "The fact is, he just left here an hour ago on his way to the penitentiary to be electrocuted. Donald McLane's his name, as bad an egg as ever was laid in these Cumberlands."

"Is that the cause of this excitement?"

"Yep." The legislator nodded his red head. "McLane's kin are all dead, but his sweetheart's folks kicked up a fuss when the trial came off and aimed to take him out of jail. But as the Whartons won't play politics on my side of the fence, they didn't stand much chance."

He squinted his eyes with a smirk of self-satisfaction. "I've a cousin who has me partly to thank for his being governor of this state. I ain't seen him for several years; but last November, at the election, I fixed it so that the ballot boxes in these mountain coughed up enough votes to put him where he is. It's made things mighty handy for me! When I call, the militia comes; when I say 'Guilty,' the judge sends 'em up. In other words, Mister, I'm what you'd 'title the King of Calloway County. See?"

"Yes, I see." The visitor picked up his saddlebags and rose to go.

"Come back in a week, when McLane's a corpse; then we can talk business," added the little man. "His will——"

He was interrupted by the sudden entrance of a militia corporal, who, visibly excited, carried an open telegram in his hand.

"He's loose!" panted the corporal, saluting and holding out the telegram to Dorsey. "McLane, I mean. Escaped when they were changing cars at the Junction. Any orders, sir?"

Dorsey held the yellow sheet close to his small eyes and his ruddy face paled.

"Send a squad up on Sandyfork to watch old man Wharton's cabin," he commanded. "Moren' likely McLane's heading that way. If they make a stand, give no quarter, take no prisoners. See?"

The corporal saluted again and hurried out of the office. Dorsey looked around, to find that the stranger also was gone.

With an uneasy oath, the legislator returned to his desk.

Three hours later the stranger, astride a mule, rode toward the friendly bulk of Whippoorwill Mountain. He was dressed as a native, but the stamp of the city was upon him. H possessed the reg poise of one wh had seen much, a done much, and su fered much.

As he neared th base of Whippoo will, he leaned fo ward in his sadd and peered u the mountainsid There, among a ta gle of wild-ro vines, was the ru of a hut. Off to on side, in what on had been a garde were two sunk graves, each marke by a rude cross.

The man gaze upon the picture o desolation and h strong mouth qui ered. He started t ride on, then hes tated, checked h mule and dis mounted. Passin through the rotte slat fence, h plucked two rose from the mass o bloom, and wit bared head and tea dimmed eyes, rever ently laid one at th foot of each woode cross.

The setting su dashed waves o gold against the for ested peaks of th Cumberlands as th stranger rode dow the western slope o Whippoorwill, int the purple mists o Sandyfork Valley.

From a weather boarded schoolhous in a nearby clearin came a girl wit some books unde her arm. Th stranger caught u with her.

"Is that wher Peter Wharto lives?" He politely lifted his hat and pointed toward a big log house on the creek bank, half a mile below.

The girl regarded him with suspicion.

"Yes, sir," she answered.

"Is there any place hereabouts where I can get a bite of supper?" he next inquired.

The native instinct of hospitality partly overcame her doubt, and the girl smiled.

"Why, stranger, you can come right down and eat with us," she said. "My name's Julia Wharton. We'd be pow'fully glad to have you."

She was neatly dressed, gentle, primitively beautiful, a product of the New Civilization that was invading the hills, finding its medium of expression in the church and the "moonlight" school.

"Thank you, Miss Julia. I believe I will." The man got down and walked at her side, leading the mule by the bridle.

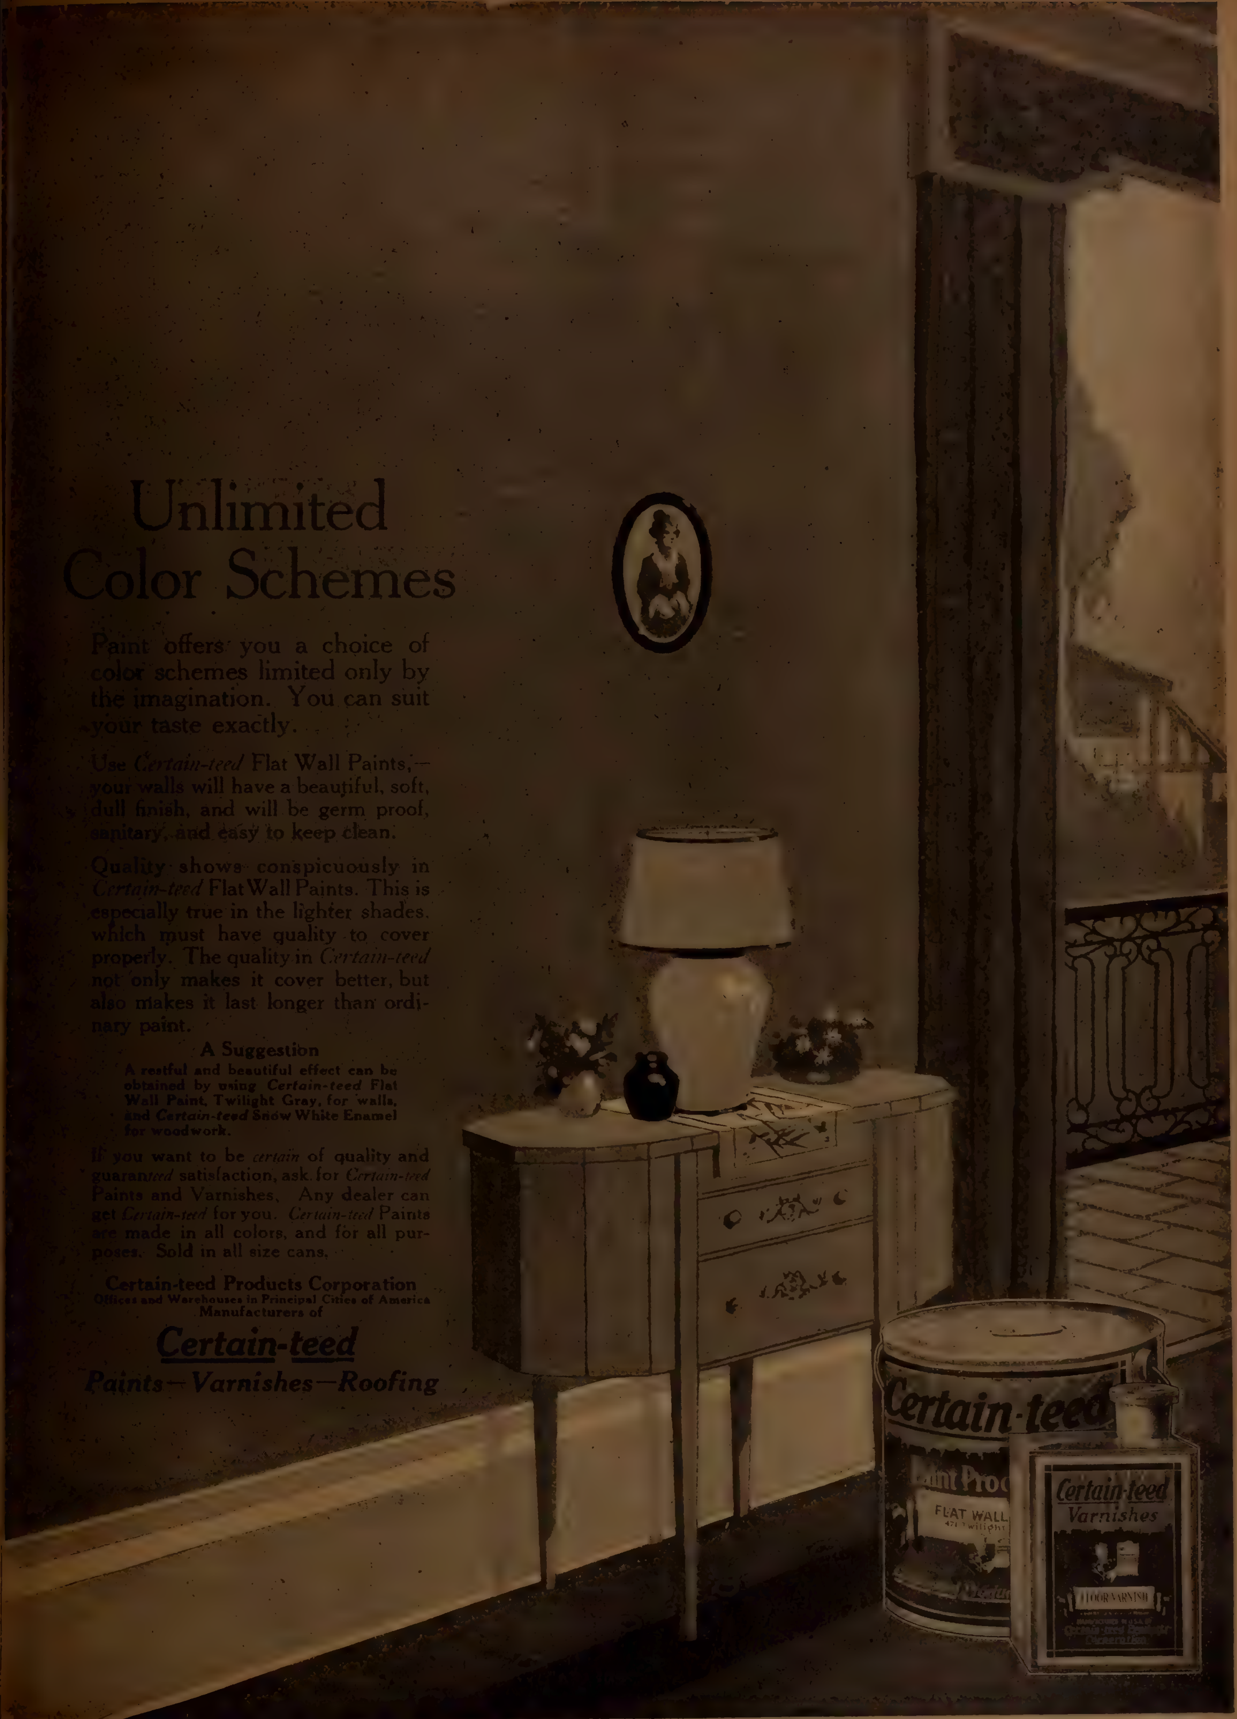
"I'm looking for a young man, Donald McLane, who owns some valuable coal lands somewhere about here," he resumed, watching the girl's face closely.

The former look of suspicion returned to the brown eyes. "I reckon you won't find him, stranger. He's been sentenced to die, 'cause Rufe Dorsey wants those same lands." Then the brown eyes softened and two tears rolled down her cheeks. "They charged him with murder—but he never done it!"

The man appeared thoughtful. "It seems to me that I read something about that in the papers, Miss Julia. How his friends threatened to storm the court house when he was tried; how the militia came just in time to prevent their carrying out the threat, and law and justice were upheld by force of arms——"

"There weren't any law or justice in it!" cried the

Continued on page 206



Unlimited Color Schemes

Paint offers you a choice of color schemes limited only by the imagination. You can suit your taste exactly.

Use Certain-teed Flat Wall Paints,—your walls will have a beautiful, soft, dull finish, and will be germ proof, sanitary, and easy to keep clean.

Quality shows conspicuously in Certain-teed Flat Wall Paints. This is especially true in the lighter shades, which must have quality to cover properly. The quality in Certain-teed not only makes it cover better, but also makes it last longer than ordinary paint.

A Suggestion

A restful and beautiful effect can be obtained by using Certain-teed Flat Wall Paint, Twilight Gray, for walls, and Certain-teed Snow White Enamel for woodwork.

If you want to be certain of quality and guaran*teed* satisfaction, ask for Certain-teed Paints and Varnishes. Any dealer can get Certain-teed for you. Certain-teed Paints are made in all colors, and for all purposes. Sold in all size cans.

Certain-teed Products Corporation
Offices and Warehouses in Principal Cities of America Manufacturers of

Certain-teed
Paints—Varnishes—Roofing

HAVOLINE
OIL
MEDIUM
INDIAN REFI
FIVE U.S. GALLONS NET

Heat does not break up Havoline Oil

That is one great essential in any motor lubricant and it is the outstanding feature of Havoline Oil.

The hot cylinder walls must be protected from the friction of plunging pistons by a constant film of oil. That oil must have body which will form a seal between piston rings and cylinder walls so that all the force of the ignited gas is exerted on the piston head and not down the sides of the piston.

HAVOLINE OIL
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

"It makes a difference"

So carefully is Havoline Oil refined and classed, there is a grade of Havoline that exactly fits the requirements of your passenger car, truck, or tractor.

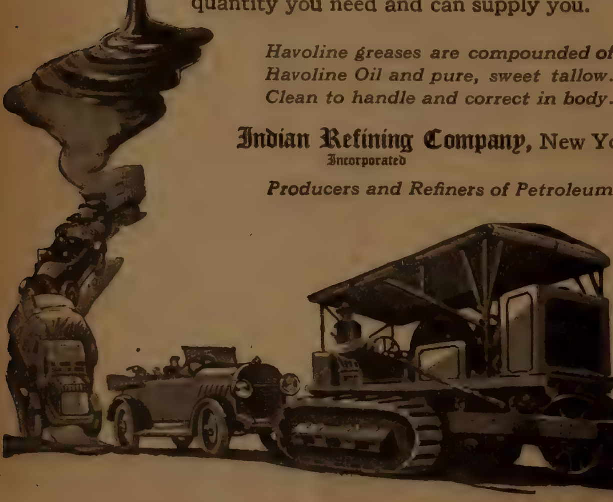
Havoline comes in sealed blue cans of convenient sizes, and also in barrels.

Your dealer will know just the grade and quantity you need and can supply you.

Havoline greases are compounded of Havoline Oil and pure, sweet tallow. Clean to handle and correct in body.

Indian Refining Company, New York
Incorporated

Producers and Refiners of Petroleum



The King of Calloway County

Continued from page 204

girl. "It was politics, dirty politics, played by still dirtier politicians!"

The stranger shook his head in disagreement. "But those same politicians were officers of the law. They were elected by the people to maintain order and dispense justice. It was their sworn duty to use force in opposing mob rule."

Julia bit her lip to keep back an angry retort. "Yes, sir, but the law of self-preservation is a heap stronger than the law of human destruction. To know that an innocent boy is to suffer for something he never done changes peace-loving men into wildcats." Her voice trembled with the intensity of her convictions. "Law is law, stranger, only as long as it's the law o' nature."

A faint smile of appreciation twitched the corners of the stranger's mouth.

"Then McLane isn't a criminal?"

"A criminal? I reckon not!"

They walked along for some moments in silence, following the winding path that led to the Wharton home.

"You see, stranger, we mountain folks ain't like we used to be," continued Julia. "Most of us have given up feuding and moonshining and all those sort of things. Donald's a good boy. Ever since we were children, we've studied and worked and dreamed together. I teach school. Donald was studying to be a civil engineer. Pretty soon we were going to get married.

"One day, about five weeks ago, Donald was in town. The marshal, one of Rufe's pals, came up to him and started an argument about nothing. Before Donald could get away, more of the gang crowded round. There was a shot fired— and the marshal went down. They carried him off right quick, saying he was killed. Then when they searched the crowd to see who had the gun with the empty cartridge, it was found in Donald's pocket. One of Rufe's men had slipped it there. Of course it wasn't any trouble for a rascal like Dorsey to have men swear they saw Donald murder the marshal. He bosses the court and picks the juries. So when Donald was tried, he asked the governor for troops. And in spite of all that Pa and my folks could do, Donald gets the death sentence." Her little chin quivered. "I wish I could die with him!"

The stranger's tone was coolly curious: "Was the marshal instantly killed?"

"Killed? Why, stranger, that bullet wasn't meant to hit him. It was all a fixed-up game. He just acted like he was dead, mashing some polkberries he had in his shirt pocket when he fell, to look like blood. They carted him up a hollow near town, where Rufe has a cabin, so he could hide till Donald is 'lectrocuted. Then he'll come back to life—after it's too late."

"But the coal land Rufe is after?"

Julia's cheeks flushed with anger. "He made a will and forged Donald's name to it, leaving everything to him. As Donald's kin are all dead and Rufe controls the judges, there ain't any chance to dispute it."

They had reached the rock stile in front of the Wharton home. From within came the sizzle of frying things and the appetizing odors of the evening meal. Hitching his mule, the stranger followed the girl into the house.

Old Peter, his wife and Julia composed the family. The news of Donald's escape at the Junction had reached them a short while before. Peter had expected it.

In silence he and his guest took their seats at the supper table. Julia, her pretty face strained and white, waited on them. Her father ate little. He moved restlessly in his cane-bottom chair, glancing first out of the window, then at the loaded rifle in the corner.

"Stranger, hit 'pears to me like I've seen ye somewhar afore," he remarked as they finished the simple meal. "What might yer name be?"

The man smiled. "John—just call me John," he said. As if not caring to dwell on the subject, he added: "May I stay with you for a day or two?"

The old man scratched his gray head uneasily.

"I ain't got no reel objection to y stayin', John—fact is, we'd like mighti to make ye welcome—but thar's liab to be a right smart mess o' troub round here afore long." He pause searching the clean, strong face befo him. "Say, John, do ye believe i fightin'?"

John's kindly eyes hardened. "I com of fighting stock," he said.

"And ye believe in justice?"

"Justice is the first word in th vocabulary of every true man."

"And what ain't yer affair ye le alone?"

The stranger seemed to hesitate, the replied: "I have affairs of my own t attend to without meddling with thos of other people."

Peter beamed upon him cordially.

"I don't know who ye air, John, o whar ye come from, but any man wh says them things and means 'em, ca stay under this roof as long as he will!" He gave his visitor a friendly sla between the shoulders; and togethe they arose from the table and left th room.

It was early the next morning just a daybreak, when the escaped prisone reached the shelter of the Wharto home. He was breathless, hungry, hi clothes torn by his flight through mile of underbrush. The steel bracelets stil were about his wrists, but the chain tha connected them had been severed.

John shook hands with him, returning scrutiny for scrutiny. Donald was big, earnest boy; broad of forehead square of jaw, every inch of him dumbly yet eloquently, expressing the motto o his Gaelic forefathers: No one wound me with impunity.

The stranger watched him closely, with that interested thoroughness of a practiced gauger of character.

"Donald, how did you manage to escape?" he inquired.

"It weren't so hard," replied the youth. He seated himself at the table where Julia had placed food and drink. Then, between mouthfuls of bacon and cornpone, he continued:

"Of course, stranger, we had it all planned. Dorsey thought I'd be safe after he got me out of town; so all the guard I had was two deputies. When we stepped off the train at the Junction, to change cars, two of our boys were there waiting. Each of 'em tackled a deputy, pretending they was drunk and looking for trouble. In the confusion o' the racket I slipped away and struck out for the brush. There a third feller was waiting with a file. He cut the chain between the cuffs, so I could take care of myself, then started out by a short trail to tell Peter. I come around the longest way, knowing that in an hour all the main roads would be guarded. At that, I didn't have no time to lose."

"How fer air they behind ye?" asked Peter, coming in from the living-room.

"Only a few miles. Dorsey and the captain are leading the hunt. They know that I 'as headed this way. I reckon you'd better be getting the boys together, Peter."

Donald turned to John. "You keep out of this, stranger," he said. "It ain't any of your affair. Enough'll get hurt as it is."

Peter took the rifle from the corner and went upstairs to an open window.

Bang—bang—bang! Three sharp reports rang out through the stillness of the dawn, echoing and reechoing among the dew-drenched hills. Bang—bang—bang! Three more. It was the signal for the gathering of the clan. It meant war: it meant death: it meant the defiance of law as a weapon of personal greed.

But the call had come too late. Already the khaki-clad men were surrounding the house, just out of gunshot. The squad that Dorsey had ordered to watch the place did its work well.

Minutes passed.

One clansman slipped through the lines and gained the house. A second reached a holly tree, a few yards from the porch, and fell, the victim of a militiaman's bullet. No more came. Peter, Donald and the lately arrived kinsman barricaded the doors and windows. Julia and her mother went upstairs, to wait till there should be wounds to dress and dead to mourn.

John took no part in the preparations of defense.

"Peter, are you going to resist?" He asked what seemed a foolish question.

Peter looked at him with a trace of scorn. "When a pack o' hounds tree a 'coon, don't ye reckon hit's goin' to fight fer hits life?"

"There's no chance for Donald to escape?"

"Nary a one. The sodjers air all about." The old man filled his belt from a cartridge box. "But hit ain't the law that we're opposin', stranger; hit's that little squint-eyed, sorrel-headed rattlesnake, Rufe Dorsey. That bein' the case, I reckon we'll stand together and fight hit out!"

"But if Donald gave himself up, the governor might pardon him before the day of the execution?" persisted John.

Peter laughed bitterly. "Yas, the gov'nor might pardon him, and the gov'nor might break up Dorsey and his gang, even if he is his cousin. But, John, we ain't got much of a gov'nor. He's been writ and writ about this, but no use." The mountaineer grew strangely sober. "He was born right here in these hills, down t'other side o' Whippo'will. I knowed him as a kid, till his pa and ma died and an uncle come and took him off to the settlements. He grew up to be a mighty smart man, so they tell. Then some politicians made him gov'nor: their gov'nor, to do and say the things they want him to.

"Last fall, when he was 'lected, hit seemed to me these woods turned a little redder'n common, shamed, I reckon, 'cause sech a man was born among 'em." Peter shook his head slowly, as if upon its grizzled locks rested a share of the humiliation. "Naw, stranger, we ain't got much of a gov'nor!"

"Perhaps you judge him harshly," said the younger man, and turned away.

There was hardly a sound in the house or in the valley about it. No shots had been fired except the one that brought down the man under the holly tree. Dorsey and the captain had arrived and were deploying their men for the attack. The defenders grimly waited, saving their ammunition for the onslaught.

John took from his saddlebags a small portfolio and went over to a table in the corner. "'Seemed to me these woods turned a little redder'n common, shamed, I reckon, 'cause sech a man was born among 'em,'" he repeated musingly.

Donald paced back and forth in the big living-room, his muscular arms tightly folded across his chest, his brow dark. Once in a while he glanced upstairs, where Julia waited; then, with a determined jerk of his head, he would sight through a loophole in the log wall and finger his revolver.

Unnoticed by the two men in the other room, John stepped up to the boy and laid a firm hand on his shoulder.

"Donald," he said, "are you going to let that man and the father of the girl you love give up their lives in what we all know is a useless fight?" He spoke the words slowly. The boy flinched, as if he had sensed the storm within his heart.

"There are at least fifty soldiers out there, fully supplied with ammunition, trained to shoot straight, ordered by Dorsey to spare no man who opposes them. They have the law on their side, misapplied as we know it is. To defend this house against them is but putting off the inevitable. They'll get you in the end, Donald. If we resist them, they'll get us too. We can't save your life by giving ours." Their eyes met—steely gray eyes, eyes of the type of men who print the page of history—and a spark flashed from soul to soul. "Donald, it sometimes takes a mighty brave man to play the coward. Donald—are you that brave a man?"

Still gazing into the thinly bearded face, the youth raised his head, compressed his lips and nodded.

"Yes."

He started toward the stairs, then feeling the stranger's eyes still upon him, he turned, took a soiled white handkerchief from his pocket and tied it to the handle of a broom.

"Thank 'em and tell 'em why," he whispered to John. "And"—wistfully—"and give her my love." He unbarred the front door.

But again the firm hand was laid upon his shoulder, this time with the tenderness of a proud father. "Not yet," said the stranger.

A heavy step sounded behind them.

"What air you fellers up to? Who aimed to go outen that door?"

John confronted the wrathful Peter. "The boy aimed to go out that door—but I go first."

"What fer?" suspiciously.

"I want to talk with Dorsey." The stranger smiled. "Being an acquaintance of his, I think maybe I can influence his intentions toward Donald."

The old man lurched forward and pressed the muzzle of his rifle against John's breast. "Tell me, stranger, and tell me quick—air ye fer us or ag'inst us?"

John was unperturbed. "Wait and see," he commanded. Taking the improvised flag of truce from Donald, he threw open the door and stepped out upon the porch.

The same corporal who brought the news of the prisoner's escape to Dorsey's office the day before, came forward to meet him.

"Where's Dorsey?" demanded the stranger.

"Over the creek, behind those big pines," replied the corporal.

"Thought so!" John snorted with contempt. "Tell him to come here; I'll guarantee his safety. I want to talk with him."

In a few minutes the Honorable Rufus Dorsey, accompanied by a bodyguard of two soldiers, appeared. Leaving his guard at the stile, he cautiously advanced half way to the porch.

"What do you want?" It was the same curt tone of the preceding morning, coupled with the leer of a bully.

"What do you want?" retorted the stranger. "Why are you bringing troops to attack the home of a peaceful citizen?"

Dorsey squinted hard at the speaker. "Because there's a criminal in there sentenced to the chair for murder. See?"

"Is he guilty?"

"The court said so."

"Yes, the jury you picked said so, and the witnesses you hired said so. Yet the man he 'killed' is alive within three miles of your office. And the land he owns awaits only the probation of a forged will to become yours. Isn't that it, Rufe?"

"Maybe so." The little man grinned with triumph. "But I've got the law on my side, and we'll either shoot him here or electrocute him at the pen."

The stranger pulled his hat down so as partly to hide his face, drew a folded paper from his pocket, and stepping forward, he put it in Dorsey's hands.

"Read that."

Dorsey grew suddenly white about the lips.

"It's dated today! It's a forgery!" he cried. Swinging on his heel to the militiamen, he ordered: "Arrest that man for forging a pardon."

John pushed back his hat and bent his face close to that of the nearsighted legislator. Turning from the astonished Dorsey, John beckoned to the youth in the doorway.

"Donald, Mr. Dorsey wishes to tell you that you are a free man."

The stranger turned to Dorsey.

"I knew there was something rotten in Calloway County, Rufe. I smelled it as far as the capitol. I investigated." He waved an arm toward Whippoorwill Mountain and his voice was softened with reverence. "Over there, in two sunken graves, lie my mother and father. These are their people, my people. I came here to protect them. They are citizens of a democratic state, entitled to the guardianship and all the privileges of her laws. No longer shall they be the subjects of a local political autocrat!"

Then, with the ringing sternness of one used to supreme authority, the stranger finished: "Within twelve hours these troops will have left Calloway County, and you, Rufus Dorsey, will be on your way to the state line, never to cross it again while I, your cousin, am governor of this commonwealth!"

HEINZ

HEINZ
BAKED BEANS
WITH PORK AND TOMATO SAUCE
57

Oven Baked

BEANS

You should remember Heinz Baked Beans not merely when buying beans, but when buying any food because Heinz Oven Baked Beans are not only the most delicious form of beans, but because they are an acceptable substitute for many foods that cost much more, and have less food value—an important consideration in these days of high living costs.

To get baked beans at their best insist on Heinz Baked Beans, because Heinz Baked Beans are really baked—baked in ovens with dry heat. They have that delicious and unmistakable flavor which the baking gives, and they are seasoned with skill and care. They are flavored with pork or tomato sauce, or both. Four different styles, all equally good.

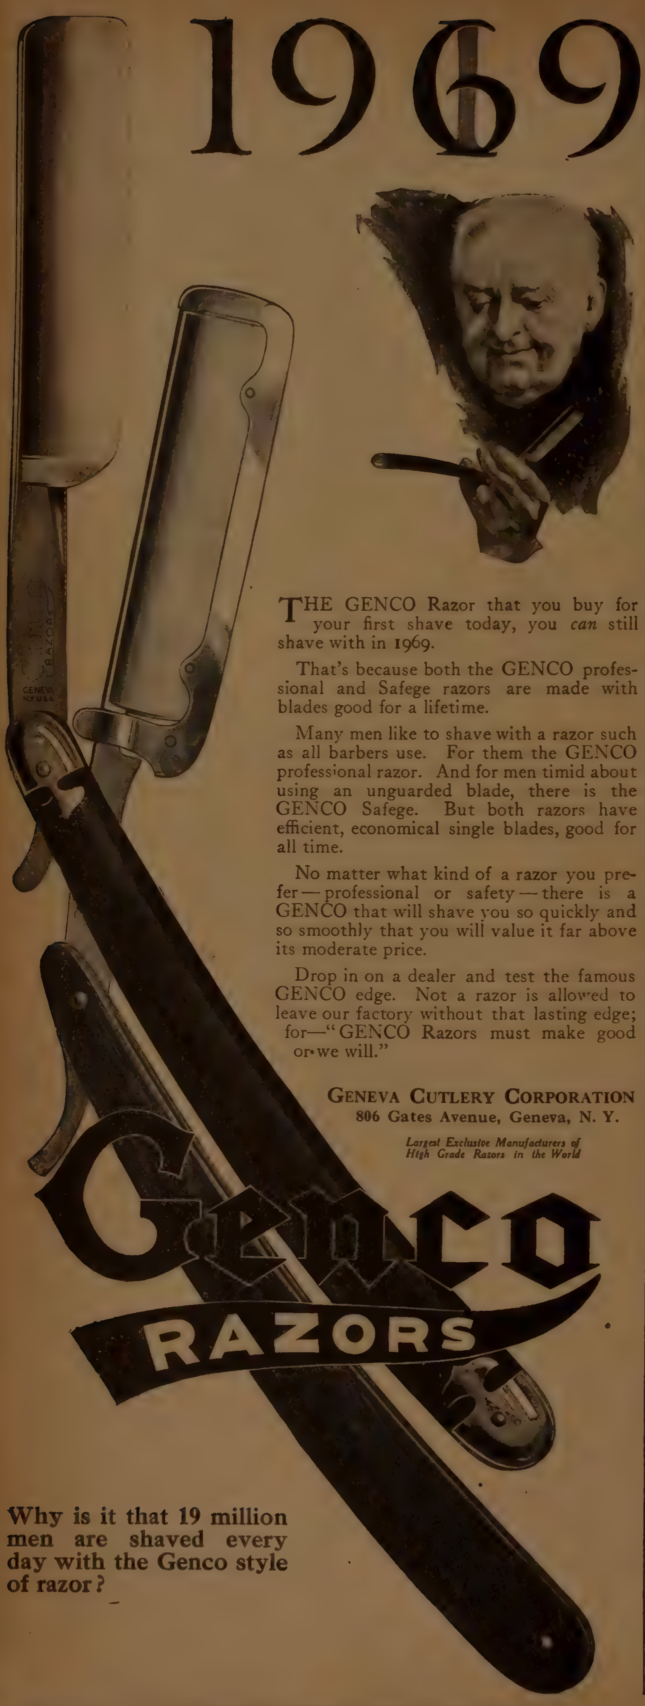
Heinz 57 Varieties

YOUR grocer carries Heinz products. Did you ever step into a grocery store where the 57 were not sold?

Why do you suppose every grocer has the 57?

Popularity didn't make them good—but making the 57 good made them popular so that every good grocer keeps his shelves well supplied for you.

All Heinz goods sold in Canada are packed in Canada



THE GENCO Razor that you buy for your first shave today, you can still shave with in 1969.

That's because both the GENCO professional and Safege razors are made with blades good for a lifetime.

Many men like to shave with a razor such as all barbers use. For them the GENCO professional razor. And for men timid about using an unguarded blade, there is the GENCO Safege. But both razors have efficient, economical single blades, good for all time.

No matter what kind of a razor you prefer—professional or safety—there is a GENCO that will shave you so quickly and so smoothly that you will value it far above its moderate price.

Drop in on a dealer and test the famous GENCO edge. Not a razor is allowed to leave our factory without that lasting edge; for—"GENCO Razors must make good or we will."

GENEVA CUTLERY CORPORATION
806 Gates Avenue, Geneva, N. Y.

Largest Exclusive Manufacturers of High Grade Razors in the World

Why is it that 19 million men are shaved every day with the Genco style of razor?

U. S. Liquor to Flood China

A Plot to Debauch the Asiatic Republic for Gain Fully Exposed

THE North China Daily News of December 18, 1918, printed this letter from its correspondent in Nanking:

"Following upon the report that certain large brewery interests are to establish businesses in China, a large meeting of Americans and others was held after the English Service on Sunday afternoon, to voice the sentiment of the community in regard to the proposal. The matter was presented by the Rev. P. F. Price, chairman of the Church Committee, on the basis of a formal request received from representative American citizens. Numerous speeches were made, all expressing the indignation of Americans who live in China, and who have China's welfare at heart, at the exploitation of China in the time of her weakness by liquor interests that have already been discredited in the United States and which, if allowed their way, will precipitate upon the country a curse and blight beyond calculation. After discussion, the following letter, offered by the Rev. Dr. A. J. Bowen, president of the university, was unanimously adopted:

"'Minister Paul S. Reinsch, American Legation, Peking.

"'MY DEAR DR. REINSCH: Having learned with deep concern that the American Brewers' Association, now virtually deprived of its business in America by the people and the government of the United States, and seeking other fields for exploitation, is planning to transfer its activities to China, the American residents of Nanking most strenuously and urgently request that you, representing America in China, bring every legitimate influence to bear both upon the American government and upon the Republic of China to make this contemplated debauching of a weak and helpless people impossible.

"'We believe that the vast majority of American residents in China, and the great mass of Chinese people, will regard the establishing in this land of the American Brewers' and similar industries forbidden by law in America as a decidedly unfriendly act toward China, and that it will very greatly injure the good name and the high standing of all Americans. We believe that China, without active support and cooperation on the part of American official representatives, will be helpless and hopeless in opposing the brewery forces and other vices: with this cooperation, she will effectively ward off this great danger to her future manhood. We believe that America has no right to impose this additional handicap upon China in this hour when she gives promise of grappling with her already many evils and perplexing problems. The United States is now widely regarded in China as the champion of the rights and liberties of oppressed peoples. She manifestly has a sacred duty to China in helping to protect her from a business now no longer tolerated in our own country, and that will bring the worst forms of oppression. It is, therefore, intolerable to right-thinking Americans that breweries should fasten their blighting curse upon China. We therefore call upon you to use every legitimate means to avert this impending calamity.

"'Very cordially yours,
"'FOR NANKING AMERICAN COMMUNITY.'

"It was also decided to telegraph to Dr. Reinsch, pending the arrival of the letter, and a committee was appointed consisting of Dr. A. J. Bowen, Mr. P. L. Gillett, Dr. T. D. Sloan, Miss Mary Kelly and Dr. P. E. Price to devise ways and means to give publicity and effectiveness to the protest from Nanking."

A report reached the Rev. Hervey Wood, secretary of the Native Races Anti-Liquor Traffic Committee in New York, from Peking, China, dated December 22, saying: "American brewers are spending $6,000,000 in erecting brewery plants in the principal cities of China." Similar reports, Mr. Wood states, come from American and other missionaries on the field. One of these letters is from B. C. Patterson of Sutsienku, China, which says:

"It has been reported in a San Francisco paper that a company of brewers are planning to put a $2,000,000 plant in China to make beer. A notable appeal has gone up to our minister, Paul S. Reinsch, in Peking, urging him to do all he can to influence our government to make this debauching of a weak and helpless people impossible. This is from a large community at Nanking. Other centers are stirred too. It occurs to me that you in your official position could bring powerful pressure through your committee to prevent the debauching of the weaker races.

"It is true that beer is now coming in from Japan into China. But that is only an argument why any clean government and clean people should refrain from participating.

"Since England has stopped importing opium into China Japan has, with official government sanction, deliberately sought and cultivated the trade in opium, and is this year sending into China 18 tons of morphia. This comes through the Japanese post office and through the Japanese customs at Kiaochau, and into Manchuria as 'military stores,' and as such is duty free and not to be inspected. Opium is coming in through the same channels.

"China is awakening, and her good will and respect are worth much to our people, let alone the moral issues at stake."

The Christian Herald has received the following letter on the subject from a well-known missionary, long at work in the Philippines:

"Los Angeles, Calif., January 14.

"Fearing that the papers in the East may not have made public what needs the protest and interference of the Christian and God-fearing people of America, I write to you, for the Christian Herald so earnestly pleaded for China's people during their famines, and in other even more serious needs which were national and spiritual.

"The Evening Express of Los Angeles has had the courage twice to voice a protest from the Chinese against having the dethroned drink of America thrust upon China's inexperienced non-drinking people. These strongly worded protests were due to the statement made by those who hold interests in keeping the drink trade up. They stated that 'if the saloons were closed in America, they will promote drink interests as speedily as possible in China.'

"You will know how to assure yourself fully of these facts. And through your many readers, you can arouse an effectual protest, and urge necessary measures to guard China from having the world's big brother, America, used to transfer her drink sorrows to China's millions. In this hour of America's big experiences for the needy and dependent nations, she only needs to be warned against this threatened shame to her name.

"ELIZABETH W. JANSEN."

All the facts in the case have been laid before the State Department by the Christian Herald, with the urgent request that such action be taken as will render futile any attempt of the character indicated.

◆

WE WISH to thank you for the three bunting flags which you so kindly sent. These were greatly appreciated by all the camp secretaries as well as by the soldiers. This thoughtfulness on your part in assisting us in our decorations is very much appreciated. BENJAMIN F. BUTTS.
Camp Merritt, N. J.

Reverends
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
and
C. C. Albertson, D.D.

Daily Meditation

Reverend
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

The Victim of Miscellany

SUNDAY, February 23. Luke 10 : 41. "Thou art troubled about many things." I am at present unable to trace the phrase, but I am almost sure it was used by Emerson about himself: "a victim of miscellany, miscellany of design and vast debility." Men are not always at their best in their own self-judgments, and it may be that Emerson was not deserving of this severe verdict which he passed upon himself. But the phrase, suggests a very grave peril into which countless thousands have fallen. Their life has been swayed by no sovereign purpose, no lofty dominating control. It has been fragmentary and discordant, like an orchestra where every instrument plays a separate piece. The victim of miscellany is one who has many fires lit but not one is blazing. He has a multiplicity of interests, but no commanding enthusiasm. He toys with a thousand opinions, but he has no supreme conviction. He has a throng of flirtations, but he is not taken captive by any overwhelming affection. There is no great white throne, no supreme sovereignty that brings everything under the rule of one scepter. Instead of being the strong and fascinating captive of a great quest, he is the weak victim of miscellany.

Now in the religious life there are souls whose devotion is distributed thinly over many things. If we inspect any side of their spiritual service we find the liberated energy about the same as it is on any other side. There is no force in it, no drive, no tremendous power of "getting there." Everything is slightly aired but nothing burns. There is not heat enough to burn a trail through intricate forests of difficulty. It is as though the contents of a smoldering fire had been distributed, one ember here and another there, but nothing giving enough heat to kindle an irresistible blaze. It is the want of a supreme passion that makes everything dull and dim. The soul must be possessed by some one overwhelming devotion if its life is to be safe and progressive. And in the Christian life this overwhelming devotion is love for the Lord Jesus Christ. J. H. J.

The Hospitality of God

MONDAY, February 24. Luke 14 : 16. "A certain man made a great supper, and bade many." The parable of the Great Supper falls into the same class with that of the Lost Sheep, the Lost Coin and the Lost Youth. The parable of the Lost Coin reveals God as an infinite Economist, not willing that anything of value should be lost. The parable of the Lost Sheep reveals the eternal solicitude of God for the safety of his flock. The parable of the Prodigal Son reveals the eternal Fatherhood of God. The parable of the Great Supper reveals the eternal hospitality of God. Jesus was brought up among hospitable people. Consider how often he was present at feasts and suppers. It was the common and the proper thing to celebrate a happy event by inviting in as many guests as one's house could hold. Simon the Pharisee gave a supper in Jesus' honor. The prodigal's father celebrated the return of the wanderer by spreading a banquet. The shepherd celebrated the finding of the lost sheep and the woman the recovery of her lost silver piece by calling in the neighbors to rejoice. Hospitality is a beautiful characteristic. "The kingdom of heaven is like a man who gave a great supper." Who is the man? We have here a portrait of God, a portrait showing him to be very human, very anxious to cultivate the friendship of the children of men, very generous in providing for their comfort, and righteously jealous for the honor of his hospitality. C. C. A.

Our Heavenly Father

TUESDAY, February 25. Luke 11 : 11, 12. "If a son shall ask bread of any of you that is a father, will he give him a stone? or if he ask a fish, will he for a fish give him a serpent? or if he shall ask an egg, will he offer him a scorpion?" This comparison is to emphasize to us once more the thought which was expressed in the opening words of the Lord's Prayer, namely, that the divine Being to whom we address our prayers is our Father. It is not only the right but the duty of a father, when his child asks him for something unnecessary, foolish or hurtful, to withhold the request and to substitute for the object requested another, the necessity and usefulness of which the child had not seen. The mother of the Zebedees asked for preferment for her sons in the kingdom of the Lord and was told that he did not know what she was asking for. We expect our earthly fathers to revise our petitions in our own interest, and we cannot expect less from our Father in heaven. But barring this possibility, we may rest assured that our heavenly Father will give us exactly what we have asked for. He will practice no cruel deception upon our confiding hearts. We may pray not only for necessaries of life, like bread and fish, but also for things like an egg, for which there will be only an occasional necessity, and we may rest assured that it will be supplied to us. There will be no useless or even dangerous substitutions for the things that we had asked. We may make mistakes in our prayers, asking for stones and serpents, and scorpions—for things which, if they were given us, would either prove useless and a burden to us or would inflict a fatal injury upon us. But what God will give us in answer to our prayers will always be good and really meet our wants. Why? Because he is our Father and has our true interests at heart better than we can imagine. If we can be convinced of the poor, imperfect love of our earthly parents and their honest dealings with us, how much more should we be assured of the purity of the affections of God, who knows our needs better than we know them ourselves and is more ready to supply them than we are to have them supplied? W. H. T. D.

Three Passions

WEDNESDAY, February 26. Matt. 23 : 33. "How shall ye escape the damnation of hell?" It is said that Henry Ward Beecher once uttered this text in three distinct ways, to show how the same words can express different attitudes of the mind. His first rendering showed anger and hatred; his second, warning, and the third, melting tenderness and sorrow. Does not our Lord manifest these different attitudes of mind in his presentation of truth? One day he stands weeping over the city of Jerusalem as he exclaims, "Oh that thou hadst known in this thy day the things that belong to thy peace!" On the next day, preaching his farewell sermon to those who had rejected him, he cried out, "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees and hypocrites! Ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretense make long prayers; therefore ye shall receive the greater condemnation. Ye serpents! Ye generation of vipers, how shall ye escape the damnation of hell!" "You make clean the outside of the platter, but within you are full of extortion and excess."

How Christ's face must have shone with the terribleness of his denunciation! In the twenty-five verses of this awful arraignment, we have selected only a few of the sentences. He who was the Truth spoke the words without fear or favor, as he will when he sits upon his judgment throne. His intense warnings were with no uncertain sound. He did not seek to gild sin with the beauties of art, poetry or rhetoric, but made it stand forth in its real ruin. The three years of his ministry had been full of gentleness, mercy, kindness and compassion; but now, just before he is to cry out on Calvary's cross, "It is finished," he rolls up the curtain of the future and shows his audience a miniature Judgment Day. E. W. C.

Hope for the Hopeless

THURSDAY, February 27. Isa. 55 : 7. "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon." There is little waste in modern manufacture. Nothing which can be utilized goes to the scrap-heap. The greatest of all losses is that occasioned by human failure. What shall be done with character that seems fit only for the scrap-heap? There is a human junk-pile in every community made up of floating fragments of humanity, the dependent, the defective, the delinquent. Then there is an invisible scrap-heap, made up of all who have failed to govern themselves, who have failed of self-control and hence have failed to find the meaning of life. What shall be done with these? We reclaim waste lands. Can we reclaim waste lives? We pick up scraps of paper and metal and make them over. What can be done with scraps of character? It is a great question. Law can punish crime, but what can prevent it? This verse is God's answer. It is at once a challenge and an invitation. It says, in substance, "Let all who have wasted their souls, all who have been deluded and defrauded by sin, come near, and they shall find the path to peace and recovery." Across the stormy years that flow between Isaiah and Christ this message stretches like a bridge of gold, and over the untold years that await our race Christ's own words extend, a solid highway for the sinner's feet, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Mercy and pardon are the great words in the Gospel of Hope. They cover all the past and all the future. The past shall be as though it had not been, and the future shall be fair as the face of God. "Can God forgive?" the doubter asks. We forgive. We offend one another, and yet when we confess our faults we are forgiven. Is God less powerful and less free than we, his creatures? The question is not, "Can God forgive?" but "Will He forgive?" Here is the answer: "He will have mercy and abundantly pardon." Unconditionally? Surely not. There are terms and conditions. The offense must not be wilfully repeated. There must be repentance and reform. The wicked must forsake his way and the unrighteous must renounce his thoughts. I have known a man to whom this message of hope first came while he was behind the bars, a drunken and dissolute saloon-keeper. He lived to atone by forty years of humble devotion for the sins of his youth. We honor God when we give him our lives unspoiled, but he can make much out of the fragments. C. C. A.

The Most Precious Gift

FRIDAY, February 28. Luke 11 : 13. "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?" This is the grand conclusion of the Lord's instruction regarding prayer as Luke has recorded it. It clinches the whole argument with a rhetorical question for which there is but one answer possible. But there is one gift mentioned in this peroration of the Lord that gives to the whole discourse a peculiar solemnity and force. The highest gift which is within God's power to bestow is no earthly substance or temporary emolument or seasonable relief, but the divine Spirit of holiness. Coming forth from the Father and the Son the Holy Spirit is to enter the hearts of those who with believing hearts have laid hold of the Word of God. He is to bring life into our dead hearts and is to make his presence known to our intellect by illuminating our darkened understanding so that we know the truth as it is in Christ Jesus our Lord. He is to fill our paralyzed will with the strength of new resolves and make our lives resplendent with that holiness without which no one shall see God. He is to bring blessed comfort to our troubled hearts in hours of sorrow and suffering, and by making us ever conscious of the great redemption by which our guilt was canceled and we were made righteous in the sight of God by the sacrifice of his Son he is to bring to us a deep and serene joy over our blessed child relationship with God. Where this gift has been once bestowed all other gifts follow in the wake, and in comparison with this grand gift all others appear paltry. W. H. T. D.

The Water of Life

SATURDAY, March 1. Rev. 22 : 1. "And he showed me a river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb." There was a river in the first Eden, but a grander one in the heavenly Paradise, for its waters pour forth from the throne of God. It runs through the streets of the city and is bordered by trees of rich fruitage on either bank. There was but one tree of life in the first Eden, but an abundance here. There are trees of life on the earthly as well as on the heavenly side of this river. We eat of the same spiritual food and cleanse in the same fountain of waters as the saints in glory. The kingdom within and the kingdom coming are one kingdom of Christ. The one is invisible in the soul; the other, glorious in its power and splendor throughout the universe. The apostle John beheld the first glory of Jesus while he was in the flesh, and afterward has the visions of the second and final triumph of his kingship and kingdom.

Our Lord is this River, flowing through heaven and earth, and any one who drinks of its waters need never thirst again. Peace is the language of the gentle river. It also signifies fulness, sufficiency, abundance. All the world may be filled with this healing stream, and the more thirst that is quenched, the more remains.

"Thou, O Christ, art all I want;
More than all I find in thee."

Christ is the fountain, the river and the wide ocean of infinite love. He is the beginning and the ending. Everything liveth whither the river cometh; deserts blossom, valleys are filled with verdure, trees with beauty, whose leaves are for the healing of the nations. This river of crystal purity, flowing through the hearts, the homes and the nations of the earth, is making our world a garden of God, like the heavenly Eden. E. W. C.

The courtyard and an upper porch

Entrance to the main house of the Colony building

THE AMER
AT J

By WILBUR

DURING the long, anxious months that have just passed—in which the destiny of the Holy City has been trembling like a fragile bit of thistledown held in air by equally opposing winds—thousands of people throughout the United States and Canada have been scanning the newspaper headlines for some inkling of the conditions that prevailed in the American Colony, which for many years has existed just outside the walls of Jerusalem, on the Damascus Road. Deeply concerned, they still wonder what has actually befallen courageous Sister Spafford, the wife of its founder; the learned Brother Joseph, the obliging Brother Elijah, the vivacious Sister Elizabeth, the appropriately named Sister Grace, and all the other hospital brothers and sisters, whose letters, Christmas cards and souvenirs failed to reach our country since the beginning of the war.

Now that Christian rule again controls the situation, and the Moslem sway of centuries has been overturned and broken, many ministers of the Gospel and other Christian workers are giving thanks, having recognized that the restoration of the Holy City is significant of world-wide civilization.

One taking a trip through the Holy Land—as our party of six did after leaving the Arabic at the port of Haifa—will not be disappointed an the glamourous atmosphere of that renowned country, if he be proof against continuous blighting squalor and a multiplicity of jarring noises and odors; but we, in our day, could not refrain from chafing incessantly that the birthplace of Christianity had to remain in the clutches of such a barbarous mistress as Turkey. From Haifa to Damascus and all through Palestine to the place of our final embarkation at Jaffa, we blushed whenever we recalled Scriptural allusions to the tropical vegetation of the Holy Land, and its fragrant oases flowing with milk and honey. Instead of energetic tillers of the soil, we found wandering Bedouins, raising within the scant confines of their temporary estates—which were bounded with small flat rocks—only sufficient grain to supply their actual need.

Few of the dwellers in the smaller towns could speak coherent English or French; but their faces would brighten when their ears had felicitously caught the tune of Teutonic gutturals. There were Germans everywhere.

Across the Sea of Galilee like a shining mirror in a hollow of smooth, green-velvet mounds—we rowed in small boats to Tiberias, the city of Herod Antipas—at that time half hidden by almond trees delicately deepening from youthful pinkness to the more beautiful lavender hue of maturity.

But the Mecca of our journey was Jerusalem; and the chief of its attractions—with all due respect to sacred landmarks—was the American Colony, where we expected to rest our bruised and buffeted bodies and enjoy a modicum of comfort before attempting other strenuous side-trips. Consequently, after visiting the historic ruins of Magdala, Capernaum, and other municipal ghosts bordering beautiful Galilee, we stoi sumed our journey—jolting along in clumsy each of them drawn by three sturdy horses—many miles of black mud, and occasionally at dirty adobe villages with their chara assortments of dark and scrawny inhabit
Nazareth. Hence we were to go by horse
Lebona, within three miles of Jerusalem
Nazareth, we trailed on through a series

AT THIS h
Mr. Will ness. The A only survived lence, but it w humanitarian the Holy City
cation. It ga deserving poor when famine depots and sou thousands from readers of the C
Their gifts mad try, under the n shortly before t devoted to char war, disaster h had been foun
prise was comp deliverance, the taking had not the war it had service, which i

Twenty-one nationalities are represented in the school

Refugees waiting for a soup kitchen to open

The weaving-room

The dining-room where Americans fare as at home

N COLONY
ALEM

EL WILLIAMS

ra for Palestine,
, special timeli-Jerusalem not amine and pestirying on a great years in which utside communihundreds of the hem living wages
l, but its relief means of saving s great work the
a warm interest.
lish a lace indus-
American Colony,
from which were hat, owing to the enterprise, which rayer. Our surafter Jerusalem's l that the under-that all through rk of Christian reasingly.

desiccated villages—corpses of Turkish misrule—arriving at Jenin, the Enganim of the Old Testament, or "Garden of Fountains." We spent a night at Nablus, formerly Shechem; then another day over hills and valleys, through the same sort of villages. We finally arrived at Lebona, where we thankfully turned our geldings loose, and scampered for the waiting carriages. We wondered if, after our weary siege of managing horses, we should find a remnant of something dignified or comfortable in Jerusalem. Even Mount Scopus and the impressive towers, domes and minarets of the Holy City, at that ailed to inspire us; and but few of us were in a o join in when some of the younger ministers to sing "Jerusalem."
high gray-stone buildings of the American soon loomed up before us—damp, chilly, rose in the drizzle of that March afternoon—we drew nearer, we were pleased to note that usterity was softened by surrounding trees, ery, and flowers.

We followed our dragoman and an Arab factotum through the reception hall of the main building to a drawing-room. But before we could sink into upholstered armchairs or upon chintz-covered couches, we were met by a host of cheery elderly men and women. Our own American people!

MOST of the women wore black silk dresses and white aprons. Long experience in entertaining cultivated tourists from all over the world had developed their alertness, tact, and felicity of word and manner.

"How did you enjoy your trip?" This inquiry came from a little old New England dame; and I immediately bounded from my relaxing stupor. Just imagine a florid woman with wrinkles of the smiling variety, engaged in knitting!—after a man has searched till his eyes blinked with pain, through forty adobe villages, for a woman that reminded him of home.

Her conversation was not forced or perfunctory. She said that, at the present time, a nephew and a niece of Count Tolstoy were among their guests; and that an old Arab sheik had trudged in from the desert to spend Sunday with them; he liked their singing, although at first he had thought it abominable. It had made him angry to hear civilized women strike high notes; it hadn't seemed consistent for them to yell when there was absolutely nothing hurting them.

The great drawing-room reminded us of some quiet New England sitting-room, except that its walls were much higher. Pictures in carved frames adorned the walls; the low, wide windows were hung with filmy curtains; there were plump cushions and sofa-pillows, an attractive rag-carpet with a figure of good design, furniture plain but artistic in form and arrangement, and many other smaller essentials—even to draperies, tidies, and "throws."

THE little woman told us that every article in the room had been made by members of the Colony—even the brass chandeliers high above our heads, and the wicker work-basket which some one had left in a far cozy-corner. Their unflagging industry, combined with their genius for discovering and utilizing resources, had made it possible for them to live independent of the world, although their actual aim was to keep in the closest relation with it.

Continued on next page

Members of the American Colony at Jerusalem

The lace shop of the American Colony

The American Colony at Jerusalem

Continued from preceding page

Suspected and annoyed by the natives, less than a score of our own American people had founded the colony—which at the time of our visit barely exceeded six-score—and had lived their lives so usefully and so devoid of ostentation, that their neighbors had become interested in them and marveled at the growing progress made, with such small expense and so little talk about it. Their curious investigation had proved to them that this band of workers believed in the righteous brotherhood of man; and that their strength lay, not in autocratic leadership, but in the power gained by their ability to labor together as one individual creature for the common good of all; briefly, that they were exemplifying and vitalizing the teachings of the Christian religion.

We learned that each of the brothers and sisters was called by a Christian name. There were Brothers William, Elijah, Joseph, Paul, John, Lewis, Francis, Samuel, Thomas, and Benjamin; and Sisters Elizabeth, Mary, Margaret, Caroline, Catherine, Sarah, Alice, Jane, Anne, and Emma: and they spoke of the younger members as Brothers Frederick, Theodore, Walter, Edward; and Sisters Lucy, Dorothy, Helen, Evelyn, Miriam, and Blanche.

TWO of us were led by Brother Elijah to a large bedroom on the ground floor, which opened upon a court crowded with shrubbery and flowers. This apartment also had a lofty ceiling--so lofty that it seemed to be lost to view; the ceilings and walls were coated with white kalsomine, and formed a pleasing contrast to the baseboards, painted dark red. It was a composite of our greatest American ideals—comfort, cleanliness, and comeliness, reduced to the simplicity we adore; although its most salient features were such humble fittings as a rag carpet, muslin curtains, three mountainous feather beds with white counterpanes, two or three pictures in shell frames, and a hair-wreath of pioneer days. Brother Jacob hastened to bring us towels and tin bath-tubs; a strange brother fetched several pitchers of hot water; then a sister pushed a plate of cake through a crack in the door. We learned incidentally that Brother Elijah was to accompany us next day, in one of the Colony carriages, on a pilgrimage through Jerusalem and on to Bethelehem. Brother Elijah was a man of mental gifts—both learned and loquacious without being boresome.

"How did you happen to come to the Holy Land?" one of us asked Brother Elijah.

"I wanted to end my days in a Christian community where all its members were quietly living up to its best interests—something bigger than the family; for the family is apt to become narrow and selfish," was the quiet reply. "I wasn't able, at that time, to find such a place in the United States, so I came here. I'm glad I did; for when one begins to advance in years, and imagines himself in the way of the younger generations, it's wise for him to find a home where old age is considered the respected badge of decent living. This is the only place I know where it is esteemed an honor to grow old in service—and where people in middle life look serenely forward to advancing years, instead of worrying themselves into their dotage trying to stay young."

"Tell us something about this institution—or whatever you call it," begged the other tourist, who was inclined to take Eastern affairs irreverently.

"IT WAS founded by Dr. Horatio Spafford, formerly a wealthy Chicago lawyer, who belonged to the Fullerton Avenue Presbyterian Church," straightway began Brother Elijah. "Dr. Spafford was the author of that immortal hymn, 'It Is Well with My Soul.' His wife and four daughters took a trip abroad on a French liner while he remained alone in Chicago, awaiting the time when they should return to him, much improved in health and eager to resume their happy home life. During the voyage a terrible wreck occurred, and many lives were lost; Mrs. Spafford was rescued in an unconscious condition, only to learn, soon after, that her four daughters were among the missing. She never saw them again.

"Some time later, Dr. Spafford made up his mind to carry out his plan of starting a Christian Colony near the Holy Sepulchre, in Jerusalem. He, with his wife and two remaining little daughters and a dozen followers—people mostly from Chicago and New England—invested all their money in this project. But they were compelled to undergo a siege of sufferings almost as terrible as those endured by the early Christian martyrs torn to pieces by wild animals in the arenas of Rome. Dr. Spafford knew, however, that his colony—like the Puritan settlement at old Plymouth—must experience many horrors before it would begin to expand and flourish; he also knew that, in accordance with the Scriptures, those nearest to them in ties of blood and religious belief would add to these persecutions. He was right in his conjecture, for we suffered the scourge; but we survived it, although at times we have had to beggar ourselves to take in the Jews, the Armenians, or whatever other race needed succor. At one time we were as miserably poor and downtrodden as the Bedouins of the desert; but the Turkish government delivered——"

"The Turkish Government!" we cried in chorus.

"Yes. You think of the Mohammedans as barbarians, and they think the same of you; for to them all unbelievers in the Prophet—even murderers and outcasts—are known as Christians. Our American consul did not relieve our persecutions; he seemed to have taken the word of scandalmongers that we did not deserve protection. It was terrible——"

The man's voice flagged; but presently he resumed with no trace of hatred:

"TALES were soon circulated concerning our alleged unworthiness, by many who condemned us without giving us the investigation we prayed for. Although we came from some of the most honorable families in our native land—and our motives were of the noblest—the American flag was torn down from above our heads! Our protests—our prayers to the United States Government—were simply filed for future consideration. We waited patiently, knowing that the time would come when we should have the support of our mother country."

"And what about the Turkish Government?" we asked.

"The officials of Turkey had been observing our educational methods. They seemed especially impressed by the quiet, brave, and thoroughly consistent conduct of our women—which should prove that the influence of a Christian woman can penetrate and convert the camp of the barbarian. A Turkish woman, you know, is held in light esteem by her husband; she is third in his affection—following his dog and his donkey. These native Turkish officials placed our women, headed by Miss Grace Spafford, in charge of the Mohammedan School for Girls in Jerusalem, which has grown to a membership of one thousand. Additional honor was conferred upon our women when their classes were given quarters in the Temple Area, near the Mosque of Omar——"

"The greatest and most exclusive mosque in the world—is it not?" we interrupted.

Brother Elijah nodded, and continued: "We begged investigation; but it was not granted until Ismail El Hussany, the Turkish Superintendent of Public Instruction, had written a scathing letter to a former president of the United States, begging intercession for us; and entreating him not to ignore our supplications simply for the sake of maintaining unrighteous peace. Other foreign consuls in Jerusalem added their entreaties; a dilatory investigation followed, and at last the American flag was again hoisted over us—and it still protects us."

BY THIS time we were exceedingly interested in the history of the American Colony, and marveled at the sturdy sinews of Christian fortitude which can endure persecutions patiently and meekly and free of hatred, when nurtured by sustaining faith.

But the dreary past of the American Colony was clanged away by the supper bell. When we entered the cozy dining-room across the court, another surprise almost overwhelmed us. We smelt chicken potpie! We miraculously lived to see it borne into the room—great platters of it, smoking hot—by a bevy of girls in white. What a boon, after our luncheon two days before, on the dirty common at Jezreel, with the natives squatting in a circle around us! And there were other sumptuous viands, rendered all the more inviting in their setting of crystal and silver, on home-spun linen, brightened with vases of blood-drops, yellow-bells, white violets, and other flowers!

The older people of the Colony were scattered among us—Sister Elizabeth, the eldest and most interesting of them all, at the middle of the long table, directly opposite my companion and myself. At another table sat Mrs. Spafford, between two Swedish boys who had just joined the big family and were being initiated into American customs; at still another table was her adopted son, Brother Joseph, a Spaniard speaking nine languages. At the last table, which completed the square, was Miss Grace Spafford, talking to a Rumanian convert. We also observed that the young waitresses were regarded as equals of the colonists upon whom they were attending, and that they clustered affectionately about the chairs of their elders; while still others, coming in from the kitchen and the nursery, where the youngsters were finishing their suppers, almost congested every available bit of space. Soon there was solemn silence, followed by the singing of their simple grace:

"God is great, and God is good,
And we thank him for our food;
By his hand must all be fed—
Give us, Lord, our daily bread."

THE general conversation that followed was superior to the typical small-talk thought to be conducive to speedy digestion; for this band of colonists, tempered by years of varied experience, was supplied with anecdotes and gems of philosophy brought to their tables from every corner of the earth. It was interesting to hear them casually refer to "dear Mrs. Shepard" (formerly Miss Helen Gould), Countess of Warwick, Prince of Monaco, Nicholas of Montenegro, Peter of Serbia, and other celebrities who had signed their names in the guest-book. Furthermore, we were positive that the ethics of their religion would demand that no less courtesy be extended to their more humble visitors—especially when we saw the kindly attention they were paying a little Moslem woman, who was manipulating a knife and fork with the same amusing awkwardness that an American novice displays in plying chop-sticks. Then, picture a plum-pudding to crown this memorable feast!—and everybody happy and at peace with one another, as they should be.

A song service followed in the drawing-room, which was more to our taste than any sacred concert we had ever attended. Mrs. Vester, the vocal director, was already reaping the results of her hard labor, although, as she declared she had never received a penny during all her life—and never wanted to. In the picked male quartette was a Mohammedan who had been with the Colony twenty years. Although he had never been solicited to give up his faith in Islam, he had gradually forsaken his Moslem teachings, and was now leading the Christian life—also singing basso profundo, with an occasional crescendo that shook the chandeliers.

DURING the day that followed, we learned that the Colony had no head outside of the general administrative board of older members which had controlled its policies from the beginning. Tips were refused; and any offers to pay the necessary small bills were embarrassingly referred to Sister Elizabeth, Brother Elijah, or whomsoever might chance to be at hand. "Do whatsoever your hands find to do," seemed to be a fundamental precept; and its literal interpretation struck us humorously at times, particularly when one of the guides and lecturers—a man of towering dignity and self-containment, as well as learning sufficiently profound to be classed as erudition—stepped up to a colored woman in the kitchen and helped her to dry the dishes.

The bazaar, at that time conducted by the younger brothers of the Colony, was prosperous, and far more interesting than any curio-shop we had seen in our travels. The clerks, although unpaid, were as attentive as those working for high salaries in our own country; and each thoroughly understood that the chief source of income for the Colony must come from the capable management of its mercantile interests. While visiting the other departments of industry, we began to realize the enormous amount of work each pair of hands must accomplish. There was the weaving-room, in which rag carpets and useful fabrics were woven for the bazaar; the bakery and the preserving-room where dainties were made under expert supervision and shipped to all parts of the world for weddings and other notable affairs; the workroom for the making of lantern-slides, books of pressed flowers, and other artistic things; the department devoted to the turning of olive wood into candlesticks, napkin-rings, match-safes, and other souvenirs; the foundry where bronze and brass articles were manufactured; the upholstery and furniture factory; the atelier where, under the eyes of a creditable artist, students were given instructions in painting and drawing. Furthermore, we called upon the doctor, whose task never ended, for he was the Colony physician as well as the Board of Health, and the dentist, who seemed to have more to do than the doctor. Likewise we explored the gardens and the grain-fields; saw the milkmaids at their work, and the dairy-women making butter; even the general garbage-collector—a talented man who had chosen that vocation in order to keep his pronounced personal ambitions in the safe shelter of humility, and who, by the way, was much depended upon to decide matters requiring the exercise of a keen executive brain, as well as to act as umpire at a juvenile ball game, and to think up suitable charades.

With such guides as these learned members of the American Colony, we were able to get a better understanding of most of the notable landmarks about Jerusalem, including many unmentioned in guide-books. But pleasant it was, after the expeditions to neglected places of holy interest—our minds distracted by the yells of camel-drivers and irreverent street urchins, and the filth and decay omnipresent in every tributary of Turkey—to return to the peaceful Colony at eventide; to be met at the gate by the same smiling sisters who had waved us adieu when we left in the morning. Sweet were the voices of the children romping in the playground, or chanting their lessons in the schoolrooms; welcome to our domestic ears the lowing of well-fed kine, and—as it seemed, at that time—the musical crowing and clucking of poultry! Each time we returned to our rooms, we would find fresh nosegays, fruits, sweetmeats, picture-cards, or souvenirs; and in vain did we try to find out the names of the donors; we were simply told that the little gifts scattered about were manifestations of brotherly love, and that "the right hand should not know what the left hand doeth."

"Home Again!"

Cooking for the boy who has come back is mother's biggest pleasure these days. And the new Detroit Vapor Stove makes it certain that the mother-made pie or cake he longs for will be perfect.

Perfect, thorough and rapid baking and cooking make this stove appreciated by every household. Although it burns oil, it is comparable only to a gas range in its powerful, instantaneously efficient burners with their sturdy construction and their ease of control.

DETROIT VAPOR STOVES
"Work Like Gas"

Burn Oil, Gasoline or Distillate

There are no wicks, no asbestos rings, and no substitutes for either in a Detroit Vapor stove. Durable 8½ pound iron burners vaporize the oil so that they burn a gas instead of a liquid. The flame is intensely hot right under the cooking utensils, and can be regulated to any requirement.

Detroit Vapor Stoves "work like gas." The kettles go on as soon as the match is struck. Double-walled ovens and flues carry the heat twice round the roasting or baking.

They cook as fast as gas and at a cost less than with gas, coal or wood. One gallon of fuel gives 19 hours of perfect cooking and baking. Each stove is complete in itself. No pipes or pressure tanks.

Some good dealer in your town sells Detroit Vapor Stoves. Ask him to demonstrate what words or picture cannot tell about this high grade, guaranteed stove. Also write us for free stove book C1, showing the latest styles and sizes and meeting every requirement for large and small households, farms, and suburban homes.

The Detroit Vapor Stove Company
Detroit Michigan (70)

The Detroit Vapor Stove Company
Detroit, Michigan

Please send me your new stove book C1.

Name____________________

Address____________________

WE ARE THE REPRESENTATIVES AND DISTRIBUTORS OF YALE
BUILDERS HARDWARE
Y
YA
YAL
YALE
TRADE
MARK

All's well—
"YALE" is on guard

THOSE near and dear—are they protected in your absence? Can they snap out the lights, certain of their security? Easy in mind, with no thought of the creeks and whispers of a house asleep? Will they have the confidence that results from the use of Yale Builders' Locks and Hardware?

Your plans for that cozy home provide for comfort and convenience. Add to these that comforting sense of security and freedom from intrusion by providing for Yale Builders' Locks and Hardware.

You will stimulate a taste for better things with "Yale". In your home you will carry on the influences with which you want to surround yourself and family. For Yale Hardware is correct in design, proportion and finish.

All this and a restful security will be yours when you install Yale Builders' Locks and Hardware.

Look for the Yale trade-mark on the product.

The same trade-mark guarantees Yale Night Latches, Yale Padlocks, Yale Door Closers, Yale Cabinet Locks, Yale Bank Locks and Yale Chain Blocks.

The Yale & Towne Mfg. Co.
9 East 40th Street New York City
Chicago Office: 77 East Lake Street
Canadian Yale & Towne, Ltd.
St. Catharines, Ont.

Look for the dealer who has this sign in his window when you want Yale Builders' Hardware

Intensive Evangelism—What It Is and What It Doe

A New Method of Multiplying Results and the Story of Its "Try-Out"

By H. K. CARROLL, LL.D.

WHAT would you think of an evangelistic method which added to the churches of a medium-sized city of 300,000, like Indianapolis, 3,500 members the first year, 7,000 the second year, 8,000 the third year, 8,000 the fourth year, and 7,500 the fifth year; or 34,000 accessions in five years? It is worth while, is it not?

It is called "pastoral evangelism," "intensive evangelism," "united evangelism," "personal evangelism," or whatever you like. The name is not important. Whatever you choose to call it, it uses no "imported evangelists," erects no tabernacle, rolls up no big campaign expenses which have to be raised by a "drive," and interrupts none of the regular services of the churches uniting in it.

It seems to have originated in Indianapolis about six years ago. It has been tried in other cities—Buffalo, N. Y., Erie, Pa., Norfolk, Va., and elsewhere, and the results are declared to be satisfactory.

The Indianapolis yearly campaign for new members—and it is said to be more inspiring than a drive for dollars—is conducted by a committee of pastors and laymen, under the auspices of the City Church Federation. The program is taken up in the month of September and continues to and closes on Easter Sunday. The plan is mapped out in the spring of the year, all the churches agreeing to work in harmony with it. In September they begin active work upon it. October is devoted to the reorganization and mobilization of all the forces; November to a survey of the community and a canvass of the homes of the people; an intensive evangelistic movement begins in January, the center of which is noon-day meetings in a down-town theater for two weeks. Services are held in all the churches, conducted by the pastors, according to their own method, and in their own way, each church having been fully organized and prepared for these efforts, which are held on week nights as well as on Sunday. Evangelistic teams from the churches go over the entire city, and few families escape visitation once, or indeed many times. These church evangelistic meetings are held simultaneously for two weeks or longer in January, and again before Easter. The noon-day meetings in the theater are also repeated after January. They are attended by 800 to 2,500 people daily.

NEARLY two hundred churches of the various denominations participate in this evangelistic campaign. About one-third of the city's population belong to the churches—Protestant, 65,000, and Catholic, 35,000, making 100,000 church members. Another third are affiliated in one way or another with the churches, leaving the last third outside of church influence. Practically 100,000 church members have the task of reaching and bringing into membership the other 200,000.

The aim of the evangelistic movement is to enroll at least five thousand personal workers and train and organize them into teams, to bring the members of the Sunday school into the church and every member of the church into the Sunday school, and to add every year at least 8,000 members to the churches. Lenten services are held every day in Passion Week in all the churches, and Easter Sunday is the day of great ingathering of new members.

Other features of the campaign are shop and factory meetings, a banquet of fathers and sons, and of mothers and daughters, in every church, and meetings in each church after Easter to consider civic needs and the obligations of Christian citizenship.

Among the other things accomplished by the Federation, beside spiritual things, are these:

> "It has stood for the suppression of all forms of vice in Indianapolis, and through its efforts the evil of prostitution has been practically suppressed.
>
> "It has given attention to the recreational and amusement life of our people and in many ways purified these to the point of decency and good order.
>
> "It has consistently preached the doctrine that the good citizenship of Indianapolis should control in the election of well-qualified Christian men for all offices of public trust.
>
> "It has cooperated with the school authorities in the promotion of wholesome school conditions throughout the city.
>
> "It has succeeded in bringing about an understanding between the denominations relative to the location of new churches and missions. All duplication and waste of both men and money have been eliminated.
>
> "It has conducted a great campaign of church publicity, having for four years had complete charge of a religious page each Saturday in the Indianapolis News, containing large-type church editorials.
>
> "It has promoted the teaching of social hygiene in the colleges and universities of Indiana.
>
> "It has represented the churches in all sessions of the legislature in securing more wholesome moral legislation.
>
> "It has become the Bureau of Religious Information for Indianapolis, and is recognized as the Religious Chamber of Commerce."

THE Indianapolis plan is a combination of various methods—personal evangelism, pastoral evangelism, community evangelism, and intensive and cooperative evangelism; but it differs from what is known as tabernacle evangelism by holding meetings in two hundred churches, instead of a great central hall; in using pastors as evangelists, instead of one man, and in developing corps of singers and workers for service, first in their own chu and parishes, and, secondly, in noo meetings and in general visitation

Personal evangelism can be u taken in any individual church requires a strong committee of tr workers, who first make a plan then follow it out. It aims at mobilization of the whole bod church members in systematic and personal effort to reach the u verted in the families and constitu of the church, and persuade the become members. It involves pers visitation, personal approach and sonal prayer. Men and women stay away from church meetings, they can be directly reached by pers approach. Neighborhood or cott prayer meetings are held, and att ance at church is urged upon all.

Old and young, male and female enlisted, and these objectives, a others, are kept constantly in v (1) Get at the stay-at-home, disaffe and indifferent church members t come active again; (2) Get children the Sunday school; (3) Present Gospel to unconverted parents w children are in the Sunday school, get them to go to both Sunday s and the church; (4) visit the sick afflicted and the unemployed, minister to all in distress. One ch sends loving and sympathetic mess from its prayer meeting to the and the bereaved.

THERE is no better method church work than that of Ch himself, who went about "doing goo visiting the sick and afflicted, comf ing the poor and distressed, and c verting sinners. This is the metho personal evangelism. Human na reveals itself in those "called to saints" in peculiar ways often. Th excuses for ignoring their church v and obligations show how little a th it takes to alienate a member. woman, with her whole family, st away from church because the pas had once used a word which she thou undignified. A little kindly influe brought her back, with her family, she also brought in her neighbors. will not do to treat this class with c tempt. A man became disaffected cause the pastor did not, on one oc sion, visit a sick member of his fami The pastor had not heard of the illne "Was she very sick?" he asked of head of the family. "Sick enough have a doctor." "How did the doc know she was sick?" "We told hin "Why didn't you tell me?"

Many cases can be reached better a lay worker than by the pastor. P sonal evangelism multiplies the pow of a pastor a hundredfold, keeps t members alive and active, and creases church attendance. It applies religious work the methods of thoroug going business, which cultivates a looks systematically after its custome notices when they drop out, and fin out and removes the cause.

Mr. Hoover on Belgium

THE Commission for Relief in Belgium has received a report from Herbert C. Hoover, Food Administrator, investigating the food situation in Europe. Mr. Hoover says of the situation in general:

"My survey of the rest of Europe, the Baltic States and Poland is not complete, but sufficient evidence is at hand to show that before next harvest relief of an unprecedented character must be extended if the remaining population is to be maintained in any semblance of health."

In discussing the situation in Belgium, Mr. Hoover said:

"For instance, meat is $2 a pound, eggs $1 each and butter $2.50 a pound. But the fact is that more than one-half the population of Belgium today has an income under $4 a week per family.

"There exists among certain classes undernutrition, but continued supplies of food will rapidly rectify this. There has been a considerable spread of tuberculosis as a result of this undernutrition, but the Belgian authorities believe that this can be stamped out without great loss provided adequate supplies of food arrive.

"The most cheering factor in the situation is the condition of the 2,000,000 Belgian children who have been the object of the utmost solicitude of the whole world during the four years of occupation.

"Because of the supplementary meals furnished by the Relief Commission and the many children's institutions which have been largely supported by the magnificent outpouring of world charity, these children have come through this period in a state of health perhaps even better than could be expected.

"Prior to the evacuation something like 3,500,000 persons were de titute. They were depende not only on the ration of in ported commodities from the Reli Commission, but on further suppl mental rations through the soup kitche throughout Belgium.

"The energy of the Belgian people getting back to work is rapidly dimi ishing the number of persons in th soup lines, until today they probab do not exceed 2,000,000 persons. It hoped that within another month this w be diminished to not more than a millio

"All Belgian officials and heads committees are in agreement tha Belgium does not want further charit from the world, except immedia supplies of second-hand clothing. Th self-reliance and self-sufficiency of th people is the foremost phenomenon i Belgium today. Their gratitude their salvation during the last fo years is unbounded and embarrassing.

Just to Set You Thinking

By HENRY C. RISNER, D.D.

PRESIDENT WILSON was introduced to the Senate of France as "The man having ideals." This statement signifies enough fil volumes. An idea becomes an l when we suffer for the idea and he it with sentiment. What a trib- to all that America has lived, loved . suffered for, and what a rebuke to se who accept quick rewards, rather n suffer for an ideal. A few years ago dyard Kipling wrote an article under caption: "The Man To Keep Your e On." Kipling's contention was t every person lives for money, or t which is beyond money, whether in iness relations, social circles, legisla- halls, or diplomatic councils. That n who lives for that which is beyond ney will conquer.

Between the beloved home of Long- ow and the Charles River there is an n space. The good people of Cam- dge will never allow anything to be lt upon that spot, because Long- ow would never allow anything to ne between him and the river he loved dearly. To it he sang:

Thou hast taught me, gentle river,
  Many a lesson deep and long;
Thou hast been a generous giver—
  I can give thee but a song."

MOST every person and every home has had some experience with a eral, but the saddest funeral that comes to any person, family or tion is the day upon which that per- , family or nation buries its ideals!

We can never live hopefully without ing profoundly.

Suppose we try John Ruskin's mem- ble injunction for the year at least:

> "Make yourselves nests of pleasant thoughts, bright fancies, satisfied memories, noble histories, faithful sayings—treasure houses of precious and restful thoughts which care cannot disturb, nor pain make gloomy, nor poverty take away from us—houses built without hands for our souls to dwell in."

Probably the most universal regret nong all grown-up people is that they nt too little time and effort in laying deep and broad foundation for their tellectual and spiritual lives.

> "Today, well lived, makes yesterday a dream of happiness and every tomorrow a vision of hope."

Mrs. Browning wrote to Mr. Brown- g:

> "Of all the commerce from Tyre to Carthage, the exchange of gratitude for sympathy is the most princely thing."

Of a noble lady it was said:

> "She possessed the love of wisdom and the wisdom of love."

THE men are concerned about the money market—the women are concerned about the market-money.

In all the vicissitudes of life the big question is not what happened to us, but what was the effect of the happening upon us; in other words, Job says (23 : 10): "When he hath tried me I shall come forth as gold."

The war has forced humanity into an appreciation of those qualities of which it has always been more or less ashamed. So often we hear "that's sentiment," or he or she "is emotional." The fact is, in the final analysis these qualities are the strongest and most serviceable. Fred K. Harrison says: "The emotional side of literature is the most needed for daily life."

There is much wisdom in the old negro's saying:

> "Be what ye is, not what ye ain't; becase if ye is what ye ain't, ye ain't what ye is."

Those who are fond of wearing true dignity should never forget Wordsworth's superb picture of a dignified person.

"True dignity abides with him alone
  Who, in the silent hour of inward thought,
  Can still suspect and still revere himself
  In lowliness of heart."

IN THESE days when history is being made and men are being revealed, we need a good definition for history and also a good definition for biography. History is the investigation of how what is came to be what it is; a good biography tells us just how that person came to be what he or she is.

It is said of Premier Clémenceau, that he could not only lead but keep together forty million people, consequently he must have had a great soul. While doing this he visited the front; saw the men, frequently several times a week, in the trenches, "and made them feel that they had somebody behind them." In the end, what did it do for him? This is the test of all true progress. After the tension of the war Clémenceau revealed a surprising capacity for "emotion and admiration," paying homage to the memory of Gambetta, the genius of Foch, and the heroism of the soldiers he had seen so often and so near. It is said that his homage was as warm and generous as that of a boy.

We hear much about progress! progress! There are two kinds of progress: progress in the realm of things, wherein we get large results by small expenditures of energy; then there is progress in the realm of ideas, where progress is achieved only in reaction against difficulties affecting the human spirit. Truly has John Ruskin said:

> "He only is making progress whose blood is getting warmer, whose heart softer, whose brain quicker, whose spirit is entering into eternal peace."

◆

The Chimere, Notre Dame

hey Say:
When little girls are not good in Paris these fly own and bite 'em. I'm being good.
MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

How a Sunday School Helps Poor Children to an Outing

HEREWITH enclosed find check of $24, the amount gathered by our Sunday school "Birthday Bank," to give New York children an outing at Mont-Lawn. We are so glad to be able to send eight children this year! This was made possible by adult classes that became interested after our superintendent, W. A. Meyers, distributed the booklet, "When Stella Went to Mont-Lawn," among the scholars in the main room, a week before the bank was opened. Trusting that the interest of our Sunday school in Mont-Lawn may grow greater in the coming year, I am MRS. M. L.
Stoutsville, Ohio.

Children Love Grape-Nuts

for its attractive form and pleasing flavor.

Parents appreciate Grape-Nuts for its remarkable qualities as a body and brain builder for old and young.

No cereal food excels Grape-Nuts in sturdy nourishment.

"There's a Reason"

SEND US YOUR
Old Carpets
Rugs and Old Clothing

We reclaim the wool in them by our special process of cleaning, combing, carding, and respinning. Then we dye it and weave new in plain, fancy or Oriental patterns—any color you want, any size—the equal of the high-priced store rugs.

Velvety Rugs

You Save $10 to $30

and get beautiful, reversible, seamless, soft, bright, new rugs, guaranteed to wear many years. We pay you for your material if not satisfied. Every order completed in three days.

FREE Write for book of designs in colors — liberal freight or express payment offer and full information.

OLSON RUG CO.
Dept. D-16 36 Laflin St., Chicago, Ill.

HOOSIER STOVES & RANGES FREE

To try in your home 30 days free no matter where you live. Show your friends, send it back at our expense if you do not want to keep it. Million members of families enjoying the comforts and pleasures of "Hoosier" Stoves & Ranges, perfect bakers and heaters, beautifully finished, smooth latest design, guaranteed for years.

Write for our big free book showing photographs, describing large assortment of sizes and designs of Steel and Cast Ranges, Cooks, Soft and Hard Coal Heaters, to select from, explaining our free trial. Send postal today.

HOOSIER STOVE CO.
164 State St., Marion, Ind.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS

Bring people to church. Their clear, beautiful, sustained, far-reaching tones are a power for good. Your church should have one. Durability guaranteed. Inexpensive. Art catalog & buying plans free.

The Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co Dept. B51 Cincinnati, O.

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION CUPS

Should be used by every Church. Trial free.

THOMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO., Box 150, Lima, O.

Hinds HONEY AND ALMOND Cream

Soft, Smooth Skin

is essential to an attractive complexion. It takes HINDS CREAM to soften the skin without making it greasy, oily or sticky; to soften so it will not chap even tho exposed to chilling winds; to soften and freshen the hands roughened and soiled by arduous Red Cross and hospital work, household, store and office duties.

Nurses and surgeons know that naturally soft skin wards off skin troubles. Some have written us that HINDS CREAM quickly restores their hands to natural velvety smoothness after being roughened by immersion in strong antiseptic solutions. Hinds Honey and Almond Cream keeps cheeks and neck fresh, fair and exquisitely soft. Added charm awaits the woman who selects the daintily-packaged requisites made by Hinds for improving the skin and complexion.

SAMPLES: Be sure to enclose stamps with your request. Hinds Honey and Almond Cream 2c. Both Cold and Disappearing Cream 4c. Talcum 2c. Trial cake Soap 8c. Sample Face Powder 2c., Trial Size 15c. Attractive Week-end Box 39c.

Hinds Cream Toilet Necessities are selling everywhere, or will be mailed, postpaid in U. S. A., from Laboratory.

A. S. HINDS 291 West Street Portland, Maine

Send for Catalog

We Pay Shipping Charges

AMAZING SUIT OFFER!

THIS $27.50 suit only $17.50. CUT TO YOUR INDIVIDUAL MEASURE—tailored with all the skill and style that only the best custom tailors can give. Finished with highest grade trimmings and linings—the kind that wear and give satisfaction. A special proposition to introduce to the readers of this magazine the wonderful values offered by our system of tailoring. Nothing else like it—no value to equal it.

Save $10 On Every Suit We have no agents, no dealers, no traveling salesmen. Our catalog is our only representative. Our plan saves $10 or more on every suit and gives you real individuality in your dress. A wonderful selection of fancy wool worsteds, cassimeres and all-wool BLUE SERGES, AT UNHEARD-OF LOW PRICES.

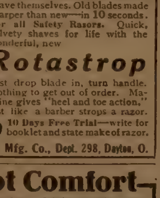
Send Only $3.00

and your measurements, with cloth selection made from our catalog. We will make the suit to your measurements and you pay balance on arrival—we paying all transportation charges. So confident we are that we can please you that all we ask is that you make a trial of our system; that you learn how easy it is to take your own measure and save money on every suit. We take all the risk, you none, for this is our guarantee: Complete satisfaction or all money refunded.

CATALOG FREE

Our big, new Spring and Summer book is ready for you—contains—samples latest woolens—also lowest prices on men's hats, shoes and furnishings. It is your guide to correct and economical clothes buying. Write mentioning this publication so we can identify this special offer.

Bernard-Hewitt & Company
424-434 S. Green St., Desk H-62, Chicago, Ill.



Rider Agents Wanted

Everywhere to ride and exhibit the new Ranger "Motorbike" completely equipped with electric light and horn, carrier, stand, tool tank, coaster-brake, mud guards and anti-skid tires. Choice of 44 other styles, colors and sizes in the famous "Ranger" line of bicycles.

DELIVERED FREE on approval and 30 DAYS TRIAL. Send for big free catalog and particulars of our Factory-direct-to-Rider marvelous offers and terms.

TIRES Lamps, Horns, Wheels, Sundries, and parts for all bicycles—at half usual prices.

SEND NO MONEY but tell us exactly what you need. Do not buy until you get our prices, terms and the big FREE catalog.

MEAD CYCLE COMPANY
Dept. F-71 CHICAGO

600 Shaves From One Blade

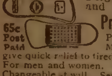
Yes, and more. That's the record of many men who shave themselves. Old blades made sharper than new—in 10 seconds. For all Safety Razors. Quick, velvety shaves for life with the wonderful, new

Rotastrop

Just drop blade in, turn handle. Nothing to get out of order. Machine gives "heel and toe action," just like a barber strops a razor.

10 Days Free Trial—write for booklet and state make of razor.

Burke Mfg. Co., Dept. 298, Dayton, O.



Enjoy Foot Comfort

65c Post Paid

Forget your feet. Make walking easy and enjoy solid comfort by wearing

Pneumatic Perfection Arch Cushions

Prevent Flat Feet and Fallen Arches. Make your shoes easy as old slippers and give quick relief to tired, aching feet. No metal, light, durable. For men and women. Fit any shoe. (State size and width.) Changeable at will. Send for Free Catalog.

Pillow Shoe Co., Dept. 3, 184 Summer St., Boston, Mass.

The Search

By
GRACE LIVINGSTON HILL
(MRS. LUTZ)
Author of "The Witness," "The Measure of a Man," Etc.

CHAPTER VIII—Continued

JOHN spent most of the time with his mother. He went up to college for an hour or so Saturday evening, dropping in on his fraternity for a few minutes and realizing what true friends he had among the fellows who were left. But most of them were gone. He walked about the familiar rooms, looking at the new pictures, photographs of his friends in uniform. This one was a lieutenant in officers' training camp. That one had gone with the Ambulance Corps. Tom was with the Engineers, and Jimmie and Sam had joined the Tank Service. Two of the fellows were in France in the front ranks; another had enlisted in the Marines; three were in aviation; it seemed that hardly any were left, and of those few three had been turned down for some slight physical defects, and were working in munition factories and the shipyard. Everything was changed. The old boy comrades had become men with earnest purposes. He didn't stay long. There was a restlessness about it all that pulled the strings of his heart, and made him feel how everything was changed.

Sunday morning as he walked to church with his mother he wondered why he had never gone more with her when he was at home. It seemed a pleasant thing to do.

The service was beautifully solemn, and Dr. Thurlow had many gracious words to say of the boys in the service and spent much time reading letters from the boys at the front who belonged to the church and Sunday school, and spoke of the "supreme sacrifice" in the light of a saving grace. The sermon was a gentle, ponderous thing that got nowhere, spiced toward its close with thrilling scenes from battle news. John Cameron, as he listened, did not feel that he had found God. He did not feel a bit enlightened by it. He laid it to his own ignorance and stupidity, though, and determined not to give up the search. The prayer at the close of the sermon somehow clinched this resolve, because there was something so genuine and sweet and earnest about it. He couldn't help thinking the man knew more of God than he was able to make plain to his hearers. He had really never noticed either a prayer or a sermon before in his life. He wondered if all sermons and prayers were like these and wished he had noticed them. He had never been much of a churchgoer.

But the climax, the real heart of his whole two days, was after Sunday dinner when he went out to call upon Ruth Macdonald. And it was characteristic of his whole reticent nature and the way he had been brought up that he did not tell his mother where he was going. It had never occurred to him to tell her his movements when they did not concern her, and she had never brought herself up to ask him. It is the unfortunate habit of some women, and many mothers.

A great embarrassment fell upon him as he entered the grounds, and when he stood before the plate-glass doors waiting for an answer to his ring he would have turned and fled if he had not promised to come.

It was perhaps not an accident that Ruth let him in herself and took him to a big quiet library with wide windows overlooking the lawn, and heavy curtains shutting them in from the rest of the house, where to his amazement he could feel at once at ease with her, and talk to her just as he had done through the letters.

Somehow it was like having a lifetime dream suddenly fulfilled to be sitting this way in pleasant converse with her, watching the lights and shadows of expression flit across her sensitive face, and knowing that the light in her eyes was for him. It seemed incredible, but she evidently enjoyed talking to him. Afterward he thought about it as if their souls had been for several years calling to one another across infinite space, things that neither of them could quite hear, and now they had got within hailing distance.

He had been there almost fifteen minutes. He had thanked her for the sweater and other things, and they had talked a little about the old schooldays and how life changed people, when happening to glance out of the window near him he saw a man in officer's uniform approaching. He stopped short in the midst of a sentence and arose, his face set, his eyes still on the approaching soldier:

"I'm sorry," he said, "I shall have to go. It's been wonderful to come, but I must go at once. Perhaps you'll let me go out this way. It is a shorter cut. Thank you for everything, and perhaps if there's ever another time—I'd like to come again—!"

"Oh, please don't go yet!" she said, putting out her hand in protest. But he grasped the hand with a quick impulsive grip and with a hasty, "I'm sorry, but I must!" he opened the glass door to the side piazza and was gone.

In much bewilderment and distress Ruth watched him stride away toward the hedge and disappear. Then she turned to the front window and caught a glimpse of Lieutenant Wainwright just mounting the front steps. What did it all mean?

CHAPTER IX

RUTH tried to control her perturbation and meet her guest with an unruffled brow, but there was something about the bland, smug countenance of Lieutenant Wainwright that irritated her. To have her first pleasant visit with Cameron suddenly broken up in this mysterious fashion, and Wainwright substituted for Cameron, was somehow like taking a bite of some pleasant fruit and having it turn out plain potato in one's mouth. It was as sudden and disconcerting as that. She could not seem to get her equilibrium. Her mind was in a whirl of question, and she could not focus it on her present caller nor think of anything suitable to say to him. She was not even sure but that he was noticing that she was distraught.

To have John Cameron leave in that precipitate manner at sight of Harry Wainwright! It was all too evident he had seen him through the window. But they were fellow townsmen, and had gone to school together! Surely he knew him! Of course Harry was a superior officer, but Cameron would not be the kind of man to mind that. She could not understand it. There had been a look in his face—a set look! There must be something behind it all—some reason why he did not want to be seen by Wainwright. Surely Cameron had nothing to be ashamed of—! The thought brought a sudden dismay. What did she know about Cameron after all? A look, a smile, a bit of boyish gallantry. He might be anything but fine in his private life, of course, and Harry might be cognizant of the fact. Yet he did not look like that. Even while the thought forced itself into her mind she resented it and resisted it. Then turning to her guest, who was giving an elaborate account of how he had saved a woman's life in an automobile accident, she interrupted him:

"Harry, what do you know about John Cameron?"

Wainwright's face darkened with an ugly frown.

"More than I want to know," he answered gruffly. "He's rotten. That's all! Why?" He eyed her suspiciously.

There was something in his tone that put her on the defensive at once:

"Oh, I saw him today, and I wondering," she answered evasivel

"It's one of the annoyances of life that we have to be herded up all sorts of cattle!" said Wainw with a disdainful curl of his baby tache. "But I didn't come here to about John Cameron. I came t
you that I'm going to be married,
I'm going to be married before I France!"

"Delightful!" said Ruth pleasa
"Do I know the lady?"

"Indeed you do," he said, wat her with satisfaction. "You've k for several years that you were the one for me, and I've come to tell that I won't stand any more dall
I mean business now!"

He crossed his fat leather pu creakily and swelled out, trying to firm. He had decided that he mus press her with the seriousness of occasion.

But Ruth only laughed merrily had been proposing to her ever sin got out of short trousers, and she always laughed him out of it. The time she told him that she was on kid and he wasn't much more hi and she didn't want to hear any such talk. Of late he had grown troublesome, and she had been incl to settle down to the old neighborly p mate relation; so she was not gre disturbed by the turn of the conve tion. In fact, she was too much u and annoyed by the sudden depar of Cameron to realize the determi tone in Wainwright's voice.

"I mean it!" he said in an offen tone, flattening his double chin and ing out his fat lips importantly. " not to be played with any longer."

Ruth's face sobered:

"I certainly never had an idea playing with you, Harry. I think always been quite frank with you."

Wainwright felt that he wasn't ting on quite as well as he had plann
He frowned and sat up:

"Now, see here, Ruth! Let's t this thing over!" he said, drawing big leather chair nearer to hers.

But Ruth's glance had wandered of the window. "Why, there co Bobbie Wetherill!" she exclaimed gerly, and slipped out of her chair the door just as one of Wainwrigh smooth, fat hands reached out to t hold of the arm of her rocker. " open the door for him. Mary is in kitchen and may not hear the bell ri away."

There was nothing for Wainwright do but make the best of the situati although he greeted Wetherill with very good grace, and his large l pouted sulkily as he relaxed into chair again to await the departure the intruder.

Lieutenant Wetherill was quite ov whelmed with the warmth of the gre ing he received from Ruth and settl down to enjoy it while it lasted. Wi a wicked glance of triumph at his ri he laid himself out to make his accou of camp life as entertaining as possib
He produced a gorgeous box of bonbo and established himself for the aft noon, while Wainwright's brow gr darker and his lips pouted out farth and farther under his petted little mu tache. It was all a great bore to Ru just now, with her mind full of the a noyance about Cameron. At least s would have preferred to have had h talk out with him and found out wh he was with her own judgment. B anything was better than a tête-à-tê with Wainwright just now, so she a bonbons and asked questions and ke the conversation going, ignoring Wai wright's increasing annoyance.

It was a great relief, however, whe about half-past four the maid appeare at the door:

"A long-distance phone call for yo Miss Ruth."

Ruth was going up the stairs to wn private phone she paused to n the tie of her low shoe, which had undone and was threatening to her, and she heard Harry Wain- 's voice in an angry snarl:

hat business did you have com- ere today, you chump! You knew I came for and you did it on pur- . If you don't get out the minute ets back I'll put her wise to you, the kind of girls you go with, in no . And you needn't think you can the tables on me either, for I'll fix so you won't dare open your fool th!"

e sentence finished with an oath Ruth hurried into her room and the door with a sick kind of feeling her whole little world was toppling t her.

was good to hear her cousin Cap- LaRue's voice over the phone, even gh it was but a message that he not come as he had promised that ing. It reassured her that there good men in the world. Of course as older, but she was sure he had r been what people called "wild," ugh he had plenty of courage and . She had often heard that good were few, but it had seemed to y to her world but vaguely. Now of a sudden a slur had been thrown hree of her acquaintances. John eron, it is true, was a comparative ger, and of course she had no s of judging except by the look is eyes. She understood in a gen- way that "rotten" as applied to a g man's character implied unclean- . John Cameron's eyes were steady clear. They did not look that way. then, how could she tell? And this very minute, she had been ng that Bobbie Wetherill's com- y was not all that it should be; and wright had tacitly accepted the ibility of the same weakness in elf. These were boys with whom had been brought up. Selfish and eited she had often thought them ccasion, but it had not occurred to that there might be anything worse. pressed her hands to her eyes and to force a calm steadiness into her . Somehow she had an utter dis- for going back into that library hearing their boastful chatter. Yet must go down. She had been hop- all the afternoon for her cousin's ing to send the other two away. that was out of the question and must use her own tact to get pleas- rid of them. With a sigh she ned her door and started down rs again:

t was Wainwright's blatant voice n that broke through the Sabbath rnoon stillness as she approached library door:

Yes, I've got John Cameron all now!" he laughed. "He won't his head so high after he's spent w days in the guardhouse. And 's what they're all going to get that ate coming back this time. I found before I left camp that his pass reads till eleven o'clock, and the o'clock train is the last one he can e Chester on to get him to camp by en. So I hired a fellow that was ing up to buddy up to Cam and fix at he is to get a friend of his to take m over to Chester in his car to the in. The fellow don't have to get k himself tonight at all, but he isn't ng to let on, you know, so Cam will k they're in the same boat. Then 're going to have a little bit of tire ble, down in that lonely bit of gh road, that short cut between and Chester, where there aren't cars passing to help them out, and 'll miss the train at Chester. See? then the man will offer to take n on to camp in his car and they'll stuck again down beyond Wilming- , lose the road, and switch off toward gleton—you know where we took se girls to that little out-of-the-way that time—and you see Cam getting k to camp in time, don't you?"

Ruth had paused with her hand on heavy portière, listening wide-eyed.

"But Cameron'll find a way out. He's sharp. He'll start to walk, or he'll some passing car to take him." This m Wetherill.

"No, he won't. The fellows are all med. They're going to catch him in a place where the road is bad, you know, and nobody but a fool would go with a car. He won't be noticing before they break down, because this fellow told him his man could drive a car over the moon and never break down. Besides, I know my men. They'll get away with the job. There's too much money in it for them to run any risk of losing out. It's all going to happen so quick he won't be ready for anything."

"Well, you'll have your trouble for your pains. Cam'll explain everything to the officers, and he'll get by. He always does."

"Not this time. They've just made a rule that no excuses go. There's been a lot of fellows coming back late drunk. And you see that's how we mean to wind up. They are going to get him drunk, and then we'll see if little Johnnie will go around with his nose in the air any longer! I'm going to run down to the inn late this evening to see the fun myself!"

"You can't do it! Cam won't drink! It's been tried again and again. He'd rather die than touch a drop. He's been that way since he was a little kid. I've heard him refuse myself."

But the girl at the door had fled to her room on velvet-shod feet and closed her door, her face white with horror, her lips set with purpose, her heart beating wildly. She must put a stop somehow to this diabolical plot against John Cameron. Whether he was worthy or not, they should not do this thing to him! She rang for the maid and began putting on her hat and coat and flinging a few things into a small bag. She glanced at her watch. It was a quarter to five. Could she make it? If she only knew which way he had gone! Would his mother have a telephone? Her eyes scanned the C column hurriedly. Yes, there it was. She might have known he would not allow her to be alone without a telephone.

The maid appeared at the door.

"Mary," she said, trying to speak calmly, "tell Thomas to have the gray car ready at once. He needn't bring it to the house; I will come out the back way. Please take this bag and two long coats out to the garage; and when I am gone, go to the library and ask the two gentlemen there to excuse me. Say that I am suddenly called away to a friend in trouble. If Aunt Rhoda returns soon tell her I will call her up later and let her know my plans. That is all. I will be down in two or three minutes, and I wish to start without delay!"

Mary departed on her errand and Ruth went to the telephone and called up the Cameron number.

The sadness of the answering voice struck her even in her haste.

"Mrs. Cameron, this is Ruth Macdonald. Has your son left yet? I was wondering if he would care to be taken to the train in our car?"

"Oh, he has just gone!" came a pitiful little gasp that had a sob at the end of it. "He went in somebody's car and they were late coming. I'm afraid he is going to miss his train, and he has got to be back by that train or he will be in trouble! That is the last train that stops at Wilmington and makes connection."

Ruth's heart leaped to her opportunity.

"Suppose we try to catch him, then," proposed Ruth gleefully. "My car can go pretty fast, and if he has missed the train perhaps we can carry him on to Wilmington. Would you like to try?"

"Oh, could we?" the voice throbbed with eagerness.

"Hurry up then. My car is all ready. I'll be down there in three minutes. We've no time to waste. Put on something warm!"

She hung up the receiver without waiting for further reply, and hurried softly out of the room and down the back stairs.

To be continued

◆

I CERTAINLY enjoy your magazine. There's something in its atmosphere that is wholesome, refreshing, and elevating. There's spiritual power back of the Christian Herald. If I had the means, I would love to place its literature in every home of our land.

MRS. N. V. LA DUE.

AutoStrop
SAFETY RAZOR
AutoStrop Safety Razor Co
AutoStrop
New York, U.S.A.

How many good shaves to a safety razor blade?

ISN'T it true with most safety razors that after the first shave the blade becomes dull and is not good for more than two or three shaves?

This would be equally true of the AutoStrop Razor were it not for its individuality—the blade-stropping feature.

The fact is, a razor blade should be stropped before using—that's what puts the edge back on it.

The AutoStrop Razor gives consistently clean, smooth, comfortable shaves because it is the only safety razor that can be stropped to a keen edge, used and cleaned without having to be taken to pieces and reassembled.

The twelve blades furnished with the set are guaranteed by the manufacturers to give at least 500 quality shaves. This same guarantee goes with each and every dozen blades subsequently purchased.

Auto-Strop Safety Razor

Sold All Over the World

AutoStrop Safety Razor Co.
New York London Paris Toronto

BOSS Glass Door OVEN

"I always know just when to take them out"

"I have been keeping house for over ,five years but I never had such good baked-things until I got my Boss Oven."

That has been the experience in many, many American homes. The day the Boss Glass Door Oven arrived marked the end of uncertain, unsuccessful baking. For the Boss makes it so much easier to bake things just right, not nine times out of ten, but every time.

There really is no secret about it. With an old fashioned solid-door oven you guess. With the Boss Glass Door Oven you know. You can look right into the oven just as you look into a large show window. Everything is in full view. If you've never used a Boss Glass Door Oven you can hardly imagine what a wonderful cooking help it is.

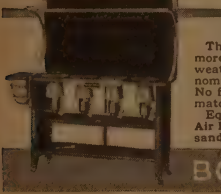
It doesn't make any difference whether you have an oil, gas or gasoline stove. The Boss Oven will fit right over the burners and do your baking much better and with less fuel than the built-in oven.

It heats up in a few minutes. All the heat passes directly into the oven and is evenly distributed by the patented heat deflector. Convenient to handle. Economical. Durable. Be sure to look for the name, BOSS.

There are other glass door ovens for sale but always remember that the glass in the Boss Oven is guaranteed not to break from the heat. Should it accidentally break you could easily replace it. Any dealer in glass could supply you at a small cost. If you cannot get the genuine Boss Oven write to us and we will see that you are supplied.

The Boss Oven and the Boss Oil-Air Stove make a wonderful cooking combination.

THE HUENEFELD COMPANY
21 Grove Avenue, Cincinnati, Ohio



Have a Cooler Kitchen and Save Money on Fuel

The Boss Oil-Air Stove means more comfortable cooking in hot weather—better and more economical cooking in any weather. No fires to build. Just strike a match.

Equipped with a patented Oil-Air Burner, which burns a thousand times as much air as oil.

Intense blue flame plays right against the pots and pans. Cooks quickly, saves fuel and does not heat up the kitchen. There is no other stove like the Boss Oil-Air Stove. Made with 2 to 5 burners.

See the new models on rollers at your dealers. This makes them easy to move about.

BOSS OIL-AIR STOVE

A Chaplain of Marines

"WITH the help of God and a few marines."

This is the quaint way in which a naval captain of long ago expressed the two elements upon which he depended for success in an undertaking in which he was about to engage. This expression also forms the title of a book recently published by Brigadier General Albertus W. Catlin, of the marines, who was wounded in action at Belleau Wood.

Doubtless the naval captain who first voiced these oft-quoted words considered the elements involved interdependent upon one another as requisites to victory. At any rate it is certain that one of God's workers, Chaplain James Duncan MacNair, played a wonderfully heroic part in inspiring the Marines at the Château-Thierry sector with the righteous wrath which enabled them to turn back the Hun hordes at the very gates of Paris.

Throughout the long, terrible month of fighting in the vicinity of Belleau Wood and Boureshes, Chaplain MacNair found himself not only the minister of men's souls, but of their bodies as well. With his own hands he assisted in the care of the wounded and at times even wielded the pick and spade to give a final resting-place to those who had completed their supreme duty to their country and their God.

Chaplain MacNair was attached to the Sixth Regiment of Marines and served with that organization throughout its days of intense action in France.

In his annual report to the Secretary of the Navy he tells his own story in a simple, straightforward way, but between the lines may be read the greatness of his soul as he labored in the interest of God amid the battle-crazed confusion of a contorted world.

His report to the Secretary of the Navy is in the form of a memorandum, and for that reason is concise and unembellished with details.

Extract follows:

"While with the marines I was regimental censor. Five or six hours of my time each day were taken up by this duty.

"Divine services were held regularly by me whenever it was possible to do so, and when that was impracticable I gathered small groups about me for worship and prayers. My spare moments were spent in doing all I could to encourage, comfort and help my boys.

"I visited the sick, ministered to the wounded and buried the dead. I endeavored to perform my duty full to the best of my ability. From the first of June until the twenty-third, when the marines were fighting at Bouresches and in Belleau Wood, a great part of my time was spent searching for and burying the dead, cheering the wounded, and oftentimes binding up their wounds.

"There was no burial corps in our organization; hence the digging o graves and burial was dependent working parties of men ordered fr company or a battalion. The chap often had to play the part of u taker, grave-digger and clergyman none complained, and all were to do what they could to honor heroes who had made the sup sacrifice.

"My work in France was perfo under trying circumstances, for whic one was to blame. With the excep of about 5,000 sheets of writing-p and envelopes from the Y. M. C nothing was received by me from individual or organization for the yet I carried with me ink, paper, velopes, candles, calcium carbide, ch late, tobacco, and some medic (such as soda mint tablets and the li which I freely gave to those who wi them, and I kept fairly well sup by frequent purchases from the commissary.

"I took particular pains to encou the men to send money home, and tween April 1 and May 29 money or to the amount of $15,000 were chased through me. The postma in charge of the A. P. O. of our sion sent a report to his superior of money order business which had done in our regiment due to efforts.

"It is with a great deal of pride
I can say I have served with the Si Regiment of Marines and was them during those days in June, when by their heroic deeds they w a page in history that will remain ever as one of the grandest in the an
of the Great World War.

"I wish to express my apprecia and my thanks for the kindness and courtesy of the officers and private the regiment. They were always wil to aid me to the utmost of their abil Colonels Catlin and Lee were lead who by their own optimism, cour and daring inspired their officers men to perform splendid deeds of va
The atmosphere of the whole organi tion was charged with the determinat to uphold the high standards of Marine Corps. During my stay the Sixth I learned to love and adm the officers and men. I was plea when my order came detaching me ordering me to Boston, but I had reached Paris when I wished that were back with my boys."

The Rev. Mr. MacNair is now ch lain of the Boston Navy Yard.
only did he discharge his religious du faithfully and well, but he was also f mally cited in orders for bravery. " performed his services in daily risk death from enemy fire," according the words of his citation, "and his lab in locating and burying the dead a in giving comfort to the wounded w given with fidelity to duty under conditions."

Eskimos Who Make Good

IN ALASKA each schoolhouse is a social center. Many of them contain kitchens, rooms for the teacher, and a laundry and baths for the natives.

This work is carried on under the Bureau of Education, and the details of current operation are reported upon by William Hamilton, who says that there are in Alaska approximately 25,000 natives in villages of 30 or 40, up to 300 or 400 persons. Some of the remoter villages are only visited by a United States Coast Guard steamer on its annual cruise, or by the supply vessel sent by the Bureau of Education. During eight months of the year all the villages, except those on the south coast, are reached only by trails over the snow-covered land or frozen rivers.

In spite of the difficulties, a public school has been established in each of seventy villages. In many instances the school is the only elevating power in the community.

In its endeavor to safeguard the health of the natives the Bureau of Education maintains hospitals in five centers. Physicians and nurses devote themselves to medical and sanitary work, a provide medical supplies and text-boo to the teachers. It often becomes t duty of a teacher to render first aid the injured or to care for a patie through a serious illness.

Another duty of the teacher is supervise the cooperative store. T government of the white man has protect the native from the unscrup lous trader. The Bureau of Educati has established reservations where t natives can obtain fish and game a trade. The settlement at Noorvik, on t Kobuk River, in arctic Alaska, is one the most striking examples of this polic

With advancement in civilization t
Eskimos at Deering, on the coas craved a new home. A tract on t bank of the Kobuk River, aboundi in game and timber, was reserved f these Eskimos, and thither they m grated in 1915. On this tract the co nists within two years have built village with well-laid-out streets, n houses, gardens, a store, a sawmil electric light and a wireless station whic keeps them in touch with the world.

/hat We Read in the Home

By JOSEPHINE STORY

UNDAY school is all right as far as it goes," confided a father to me, "but I want to know how to he children interested in the Bible ll it stands for—at home."

was very earnest, rather troubled, is evident distress of mind led me l him of my experiments along the f Bible study at home. When we d he grasped me by the hand, have helped!" he exclaimed, and smilingly on his way.

y plan had been a very simple one. boys loved to have me read aloud em after they had been tubbed, had supper and been tucked into their beds. After our read we had the heart-satisfying confabs on all rs under the sun. The winter were ten and twelve I decided to the New Testament take on ty and vividness for them if I could. ssiduously gathered bits of infor- on which related to the Bible of its s. I learned that four hundred years ed between Malachi, the last book e Old Testament, and Matthew, the book of the New. Before we began reading Matthew I read the last chapter of Malachi to the boys. That, you remember, contains God's judgment on the wicked, his blessing on the good, his exhortation to study the law and his prophecy of Elijah's coming.

Each night I read aloud a certain number of pages of the New Testament, followed by extracts from Stalker's Life of Christ for atmosphere and history. After that came two chapters of Ben Hur by Lew Wallace. How the boys loved its color, its rhythmic flow of words, the tragic, the religious, the romantic experiences of the young Jew! It seemed to clinch the New Testament story in their minds. Then I made them familiar with the Messianic psalms, the second, seventy-second, one hundred and tenth.

There are so many good books of fiction with their scenes set in New Testament times that it need not be difficult to find material to interest children who love to be read to. Just preface it as I did and you will be amazed at their quick appreciation of the greatest literature in the world.

The Art of Mothering Grown-Ups

S perfectly absurd!" stormed a rl. "I am twenty-seven years old, I go out in the evening alone er and father make such a fuss it that they take all the fun out of wanted to help nurse during the emic; I had taken the home-nursing e; but no, something might happen ne. Well, suppose something had pened? I should have accomplished thing, and I should have had some viduality, shouldn't I?"

was quite right. How apt parents o forget that the child has grown up; it is an individual; that the more acter the mother and father have, more of an individual it will be. Suppose something happens to them? The daughter will have to rely upon herself, will she not? How much better for her to begin while she has them to counsel her! Let the parents do their best to establish certain standards and fundamentals; then they must sit back and let the young people go ahead. Assist with counsel, yes, by all means, to the best of their ability, and live up to their standards themselves. Do you remember that bit from one of the old Greek dramatists? "'Tis not the counsel but the speaker's worth which gives persuasion to his eloquence." It is what you have made of yourself that counts when you are giving advice. E. B. L.

A Handy Recipe Case

HE girl who is clever with paste and scissors can make something for her her which will be a great help to her card catalogue to keep her recipes in. sekeepers are now copying their es on cards and keeping them in boxes made to hold the cards; y find it handy to have all their es together, and also find that it is h easier to lift a card out of a box, they want to cook something, it is to go to a book in search of a pe card catalogue for mother may be by covering a shoe box with nne or left-over pieces of wall r, pasting the covering to the box. nary cardboard, cut to fit into the nicely, provides the cards upon h mother will copy or paste her old recipes and write the new ones she happens to come across. Twenty-four cards of heavier cardboard should be cut with a "tab" (or square little piece looking like a tower) rising above the other cards; on the tabs of each of these twenty-four cards will go one letter of the alphabet.

Now, if mother wants to find her recipe for clam chowder, for instance, she will look among the cards which stand behind the heavy card which has "C" on its tab. Mother may have as many recipe cards between the alphabet cards as she likes—for the box is long and it will hold a great many cards. Until it is filled, a clean, round stone should stand behind the last card to keep them all from falling over.

L. A. K.

Practical Gifts for the Baby

UR first impulse, when we hear of the arrival of a very new person, is send a material welcome, and almost y baby has a chamber of horrors re he keeps all the useless and unnec- ry things that his loving friends wer upon him.

Many a young mother had laid away a dozen ridiculously small hot er bags and wished that she might e suggested some of the things the little fellow really needed.

Knitted and crocheted sacques and ers for the carriage and crib are ys welcome, and a large white bath nket of double-faced eiderdown, nd all around with a two-inch on, can be used in many ways.

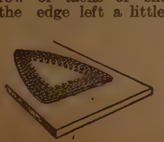
full-size hot-water bag to warm the or carriage before baby is tucked y for his nap is another useful gift. plain flannel cover with a draw-string y be made for this.

If he hasn't a brush and comb, a nty set may be sent to train the t soft fluff on his little crown.

Very small people cannot bother with frilly clothes, but they are inclined to be very gracious when their kind friends send them perfectly plain, fine white slips. E. F.

Iron-Rest for Ironing-Board

AN IRON-REST that will never get lost or separated from the board can be easily made by simply driving a lot of tacks into one end of the board. They should not be driven clear in but project about an eighth of an inch to prevent burning the board. Round brass-headed tacks are preferable. A row of tacks or short nails around the edge left a little higher than the others will keep the iron in place. Wind some wire around the outer row, and clothes will not catch on the tacks.



DURABLE
DURHAM
HOSIERY
Trade Mark

You can see that this hosiery is strongly reinforced at points of hardest wear

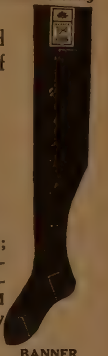
Ask your dealer to show you Durable-DURHAM Hosiery. Examine it and you can see the extra reinforcing that means extra wear. You can feel the fine quality of the yarn and notice the careful finish and splendid appearance of the stockings.

Two of the many fine values in Durable-DURHAM Hosiery

DURABLE
DURHAM HOSIERY
FOR MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN

Made Strongest Where the Wear is Hardest

The tops are amply wide and elastic; legs are full length; sizes are accurately marked; soles and toes are smooth, seamless and even. The Durham dyes prevent fading after wearing or washing. There are styles of Durable-DURHAM Hosiery for every season of the year, for work, for dress, play or school retailing at 20c to 50c per pair.



BANNER
All year wearing stocking. Medium weight. Soft combed yarn, lisle finish. Wide elastic tops. Strongly reinforced heels and toes. Black and white.
Price 30c pair

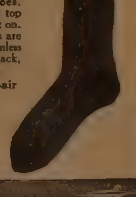
For coldest weather Durable-DURHAM Fleecy-lined Hosiery is full of warmth and full of wear

Fleecy-lined stockings and socks for women, children and men, strong and good-looking, with soft, warm fleecing.

You should be able to buy Durable-DURHAM Hosiery at any dealer's. If you do not find it, write to our Sales Offices at 88 Leonard Street, New York, and we will see that you are supplied. Free Catalog of all styles mailed on request.

DURHAM HOSIERY MILLS, Durham, N. C.
88 Leonard Street, New York

Durable-DURHAM Hosiery is not a product of child labor. No person under 14 years is employed. Average working day is 8 hours and 15 minutes. Industrial conditions under supervision of experts trained in U. S. Government courses on employment management.



TAR HEEL
A medium weight sock with 3-thread, strongly reinforced heels and toes. Elastic ribbed top securely knit on. Feet and toes are smooth, seamless and even. Black, tan and white.
Price 20c pair

The
Companion of the Healthy

BAKER'S
COCOA

tastes good and is good

It is a great aid toward the maintenance of health and strength, as it is absolutely pure, wholesome, and possesses real food value, more than one quarter of it being a pure and easily digested fat.

Booklet of Choice
Recipes sent free

Walter Baker & Co. Ltd.
Dorchester, Mass.
Established 1780

REG U S PAT OFF

Forman
Farm Mortgages

—are Safe, Sound and Remunerative.

Particulars gladly given.

George M. Forman & Co.
Investment Bankers
Founded 1885
11 S. La Salle St. Chicago

Learn Photography

Good-paying positions in the best studios of the country await men and women who prepare themselves now. For 24 years we have sucessfully taught

Photography, Photo-Engraving and Three-Color Work.

Our graduates earn $25 to $75 a week. We assist them to secure these positions. Now is the time to fit yourself for an advanced position at better pay. Terms easy; living inexpensive. Largest and best school of its kind. Write for catalog today.

ILLINOIS COLLEGE of PHOTOGRAPHY
Box CH., 970 Wabash Avenue, Effingham, Illinois

Q. E. D. OR NEW LIGHT ON THE DOCTRINE OF CREATION
By PROF. GEORGE McCREADY PRICE. Cloth Only 75c
The Last Word of Science on the Oldest Problem of Religion
"Deals the death-blow to the evolution theory."—Evangelical.
F. H. Revell Co., 158 5th Ave., N.Y.; 17 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

The Report of the Spies

International Sunday School Lesson for March 2
Num. 13 : 1 to 14 : 38

The Sin of Faint-Heartedness

By Rev. George D. Allison, Ph.D.

WHAT a pitiful tale of human frailty we have in this record of the faithlessness of a people who had been so providentially led out of slavery and through the desert! Our childish recollection of the Exodus may be that of a forty years' march, but a little investigation shows less than a year of journeying, and all the rest of the time due to indecision and fearfulness on the threshold of opportunity. The people were more impressed by the report of giants and walled towns and barren stretches than by the counter-claim of fruitfulness and accessibility made by Caleb the brave. Like the multitude in all ages the Israelites were always ready to believe the worst.

It Can't Be Done

No worthy project was ever proposed to a group of people but the croakers arose to say, "It can't be done!" Columbus heard it when he undertook his great voyage across the Atlantic. Washington and his colleagues heard it often enough during the dark years that followed the Declaration of Independence. President Wilson heard it again when he proposed to go to the Peace Conference to advocate a League of Nations and a better way of international life. You remember how the pessimistic senators tried to dissuade him from even trying, and the great "respectable" newspapers made all sorts of fun of his going at all.

It is the same way with every venture of the organized Church of Christ. Whether it be a new and mighty missionary program which is to be launched for the redemption of a continent, or the church in the village planning to build a parish house and community center, you can be certain of plenty of opposition and much more faint-hearted refusal to help.

Why, oh, why do Christians fail to believe in the future of their own Church and of their Lord's Kingdom? How then can they believe that their individual lives are to be successful and valuable to him? Over and over again they make the mistake of the ten spies and leave out the vital and decisive factor in the whole situation—the will of Jehovah. If he is our partner, then success is sure and we must make our plans large.

Giants and Grasshoppers

That saying of the cowards that the giants, the sons of Anak, were in the land, closes with a little gem of pessimistic psychology—"we were in our own sight as grasshoppers, and so were we in their sight." Of course! It's all in the attitude of soul whether the foe shall despise us or dread us. It is a matter of morale, of which we have heard so much in the war. An English observer says that Tommy Atkins may not be able to define morale, but he knows when he has it! "He can who thinks he can." He who thinks he can't is beaten already. The same people who loomed so large to the timid explorers are quite differently described by Joshua and Caleb: "Neither fear ye the people of the land, for they are bread for us." Whether you like slang or not I for one shall tell our boys just what Joshua meant: "They are easy meat for us!" Any boy will understand the Hebrew idiom if you give him the American baseball-field equivalent for it!

Probably investigation might have proved that the Amorites were an inch taller than the Hebrews, and perhaps they were not even that. A popular American boxer had the right idea when he said of his antagonists: "The bigger they are, the harder they fall." That was true of Prussian militarism, of the liquor traffic in America, and of every great obstacle to the advance of God's kingdom on earth.

How then are we to get the courageous point of view regarding the difficulties, personal and social, that confront all our worthy enterprises? In a word, by gaining a higher vantage ground. I think it was Dwight L. Moody who said that from the high peaks of faith difficulties look like molehills, while from the valley of doubt they look like impassable mountains. We need to get God's point of view. Only he can give it to us. We need not only to sing but to pray. "Lord, plant my feet on higher ground."

Progress Through Minorities

The investigating committee decided by a vote of ten to two that the conquest of Canaan was impossible. On referendum to the people they were almost unanimously sustained, and it was decided, as so often since, to do nothing! But Joshua and Caleb and Moses were right, the majority were wrong. The men of faith are frequently outvoted in church and state today and find themselves in the same fix as these three—compelled to wait forty years to do what should be done at once. In the past the faithless crowd has often stoned the pioneers to death, as they intended to do here. They are only vindicated by the future, but through them comes human progress. Because there were even three progressives, the children of Israel never went back as they threatened. They delayed, ah, yes, for years while Moses' heart ached, but eventually they went forward with the faithful few in the lead of a new generation. The new generation did not have to go through that particular struggle again. At a great price Caleb and Joshua had won them the chance to fight for their heritage.

Be patient, men and women of faith. The world is slow to believe in Jesus' way. On the first popular vote we would likely be defeated in any great international, national or local application of Jesus' way to some new issue. But in the end we shall reap if we faint not. The "big men" and the "great newspapers" of New York are stunned to find prohibition sweeping the nation. They seem to know nothing of the early voices crying in the wilderness, of the faithful W. C. T. U. in each community, of the Sunday School Lessons the enemy made fun of, of the growing conviction of the Protestant Church that the saloon menaced the Kingdom of God and must go. Just forty years the pioneers waited, and the new generation is ready, as in the Exodus, to enter in to a new order of things.

Slowly, steadily, the principles of Jesus are vindicated, heard and followed. Even Mr. Bernard Shaw, fronting the terrific problems of reconstruction, of international relations, and of the problem of capital and labor, says: "Everything else has failed; why not give Christianity a trial!"

The Penalty of Faint-Heartedness

The ingratitude of the people might have merited the pestilence which Moses seemed to fear as a possible punishment of unbelief. But God punishes more naturally than that. Men reap what they sow. His penalties are only inevitable consequences. They are afraid to enter the promised land? Very well, "surely ye shall not enter in." The penalty of being afraid to try is just ignominiously to fail to arrive. Just to be a coward and a slacker is punishment supreme. Perhaps the failure to achieve Christlikeness, when fully realized by the backslider, will be the worst retribution for his folly in a world to come. For the wicked and the depraved, two elements of punishment are sure: to be unable to enter in to the Kingdom of the Christ, and to contemplate without earth's veils and glosses their own miserable selves.

Hear the Wisdom of the Son of Sirach concerning this whole matter:

"Woe to the fearful hearts,
  And to faint hands,
  And to the sinner that goeth two ways!
Woe unto the faint heart!
  It believeth not,
  Therefore it shall not be defer
Woe unto you that have lost patience!
What will ye do when the Lord
    visit you?"
(Ecclesiasticus 2 : 1

Superintendent Kinzer
Plan

MANY and unique methods used to increase Sunday sc attendance in different part the country, but perhaps the me which is giving the best success is followed by the Sunday school of Pierce, Florida, which has an attend of several hundred boys each Sun
as well as an equal number of girls

Last year the Sunday school att ance dropped off to nearly the var ing point, and Superintendent Ki found he had no one to teach, except own boys and the minister's.

Something had to be done, and n be done right then; so Superintend Kinzer talked the matter over many of the town boys and girls formerly attended his Sunday sch and they each had a pet plan, but Su intendent Kinzer decided to give the boy or girl who had the best pla

Above five hundred replies came and Superintendent Kinzer, after sorting the replies, found this sug
tion:

"If you will make the Sunday sc interesting to us boys, we will c every Sunday, and bring our frie but if you continue to make it po we will stay away."

The superintendent decided that pokiness was the root of the lack of terest, and decided to make things h in his Sunday school; so he confer with a local newspaper man who wa member of his church, and decided t the best suggestion was from a sm boy who wanted to go in swimmi and wanted his sister to gather sh on the ocean beach.

"That," said the newspaper m
"is the solution of the Sunday sch problem. Charter a boat, or, bet still, get some church member to l
you a boat, and once a month go o to the beach and let the boys swim the ocean and the girls gather she and I'll warrant you will have a church every Sunday."

The superintendent began to th and soon decided to begin making Sunday school attractive by issu service cards, with Scriptural motto to each boy and girl who attended Sunday school, and after they had tended four consecutive Sundays th were presented with a pass which titled them to the trip across the fer and also to a bathing suit at the pavili

The owner of the resort gives the f use of his ferry if the Sunday school comes in a bunch, and those who a late he allows to cross for half price.

The boys bring their own lunch and go in swimming, while the girls up and down the ocean beach and gath pretty shells. The ice cream parl near the bathing pavilion is selli enough ice cream cones to boys, gi and friends to more than make up t free trip across on the ferry; and t owner has decided to give the Sund school a further remembrance by offe ing to the boy or girl who attends mo regularly a gold ring with initials, wh the second most regular attendant r ceives a silver one, and the third mo regular receives a box of chocolate

Superintendent Kinzer says he is no having a great deal of trouble keepi the boys and girls out of his Sund school, as the whole town has go wild over his plan, and the oth churches are now going to adopt h ideas. B. YORKSTONE HOGG.

◆

Wants a New Flag

I AM sending the Order blank for t flag. We have one that is abo worn out, having it seven or eight yea
—one we got with the Christian Hera at that time. It has been out in a kinds of weather, so now we want a other. MRS. E. B. BEVIER.
Kingston, N. Y.

The Week in the World's News

Continued from page 199

not to push us too far. . . . The ole German government might be sed to renounce the peace pourparlers l throw upon our adversaries all the ight of responsibility for the new rld organization. Confident in the mises of President Wilson, Germany down her arms and now we await the ace of President Wilson to which we ve a right. We turn to all the peoples the world for justice, we ask that our nomic life be not destroyed."

The Supreme Allied War Council, on bruary 7, took notice of Ebert's eat which was said to be the climax tactics of obstruction indulged in by Germans, who were not living up to ir armistice agreement, no merchant ps having yet been delivered at ied ports. It was reported that, uns the Germans toed the mark, Marl Foch, on February 17, would take ps to bring them to a realization of fact of their defeat.

BRITISH EMBARGO ROUSES THE SENa. The restrictions on British trading, ective March 1 and July 1 under ich import licenses are to be required food and raw materials after July 1 d on certain manufactured articles er March 1, aroused a storm of debate the Senate, on February 5. Senors of both parties expressed their r that the embargo would hurt our dustries, while Senator Reed went so as to suggest the necessity of reprils. Senator Weeks introduced a resotion asking the State Department if had done anything to ascertain the ason for the British embargo on imrts and declaring that the embargo olated the third of the President's urteen points. On February 6 the solution was reduced to a simple reest of the State Department for information. Senator McCumber of North akota urged an embargo against anadian grain to protect the Amerin market, and asked, "Can we comin against another nation doing actly what we are bound to do."

RIFLE FOR RIFLE. The actual numr of rifles at the front measures the al strength of an army. The American eneral Staff, on February 5, gave out e following table with the actual rifle rength of the respective armies from pril 1 to Nov. 1. This table shows the ason for the apparently sudden Geran collapse in October and November:

Date	Allies	Germany
pril 1, ...	1,245,000	1,569,000
ay 1, ...	1,343,000	1,600,000
une 1, ...	1,496,000	1,639,000
uly 1, ...	1,556,000	1,412,000
ug. 1, ...	1,672,000	1,395,000
ept. 1	1,682,000	1,339,000
t. 1, ...	1,594,000	1,223,000
ov. 1, ...	1,485,000	866,000

A JOB FOR EVERY SOLDIER. Secrery of War Baker at the session of the ational Rivers and Harbors Congress eclared it to be an unthinkable thing hat any soldier who put on the uniform his country in this war should be llowed to remain without a job.

ALLIES LIFT EMBARGO ON NEUTRALS. egotiations at Paris resulted in an greement on February 5 for the return o Holland and the Scandinavian counries of all vessels chartered by the Entente nations, and in a considerable modification of the rules governing imports to these nations.

SOCIALISTS WOULD PLACE RESPONSIBILITY. The International Socialist and Labor Conference of ninety delegates, representing twenty-five countries n session at Berne, Switzerland, on February 5, appointed a committee on responsibility for the war, under the chairmanship of Hjalmar Branting of Sweden.

AMERICAN STRIKES. The striking garment workers in New York City on February 6 had made settlements permitting the return to work of about 10,000 workers. On the same day 5,000 woolen mill workers went on strike in Passaic, N. J., and 20,000 silk workers went on strike in Paterson, N. J. 3,000 textile workers were out in Lawrence, Mass.; 6,000 in Manchester, N. H.; 5,000 in Albany, N. Y., and 2,000 in Jamestown, N. Y. A general strike was called in Seattle and Tacoma in which 45,000 union men struck in sympathy with 25,000 shipyard workers. At the request of Gov. Lister troops were sent both to Seattle and Tacoma. In Seattle the strike tie up was complete.

DIVISIONAL RAILROAD CORPORATIONS. Director General Hines, on February 2 and 3, before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, said he thought the best results could be obtained by creating a few large corporations on a regional basis, with government representation of the Board of Directors. Two million railway employees presented to the Committee on February 7 through the Counsel of the Railway Brotherhoods a plan for national ownership of the railways, holders of railway securities to receive government bonds in their place, the roads to be operated by corporations comprising all the present employees.

THE MOTOR INDUSTRY AND THE GOVERNMENT. From April, 1917, to December, 1918, automobile and truck manufacturers assumed government contracts for more than $1,100,000,000, and furnished the government with 38,460 passenger cars and 204,760 motor trucks; 7,904 passenger cars and 54,343 trucks were shipped overseas. The taxes paid on sales of automobiles and trucks in twelve months to September 1 were $32,813,678. The production of passenger cars in 1918 was 926,388, about 800,000 less than in 1917.

CANADA DRY. With Quebec going dry on May 1, the whole of the Dominion will be prohibition territory.

RELIEF FOR THE NEAR EAST. The Committee for Relief in the Near East (Armenia and Syria) appropriated $1,054,000 for relief work in February.

ELECTRICAL POWER FOR THE EAST. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, has presented to the House Appropriations Committee a request for $200,000 for a special investigation of the power supply of the whole industrial region between Boston and Washington, D. C. The Secretary's plan involves utilization of all sources of power for the running of the railroads and industrial plants in the whole region east of the Alleghanies.

TO ENFORCE PROHIBITION. The Secretary of the Treasury recommended to the House that buildings used for selling liquor be declared public nuisances, giving courts the power to close them for a year, that possession of liquor be considered evidence of intention to sell, that all liquor seized be destroyed and that vehicles used for transporting liquor be subject to seizure and sale or destruction.

PARIS TO SELL FOOD. Municipal stores are to be opened in Paris in which foodstuffs will be sold direct to the public at prices fixed by the Food Ministry.

AUTOMOBILE PRODUCTION. The total passenger car production in the United States in 1917 was 1,740,792 cars, while production in 1918 totaled 925,388. There were in manufacturers' hands on December 31, 1918, 15,545 finished passenger automobiles.

MOTOR TRUCKS FOR MAIL. In December the Post Office Department made requisitions on the War Department for 17,135 motor trucks, mostly from three-quarters to two-ton sizes, for use in carrying mail.

FOREIGN TRADE IN 1918. Heavy December shipments brought total value of 1918 exports from the United States to $6,150,000,000, a decrease of $83,000,000 from the 1917 total. Imports for the previous year were valued at $2,952,000,000.

Help—not too late,
but when most needed

When a father dies without life-insurance, the mother and children are the ones that suffer most. The POSTAL LIFE recently received a very touching letter from a sorrowing wife whose husband put off protecting his family until it was too late.

Women and children are indeed the ones to whom an insurance policy means most. It is help—not too late, but when most needed.

Here is a letter to the POSTAL from a thankful wife, whose husband did not leave her unprotected:

> On Saturday I received my check on the life of my husband. Words cannot express what a help that check will be, as I am left with a little boy to bring up. As soon as he can be insured it will be with the Postal Life. I thank you for your promptness and kindness.

This typical letter and picture tell the story—a story of protection, performance and promise. The father protected his family; the Company paid the death-claim promptly; the mother promised to stand by the Company—and she will.

That's co-operation all along the line. That's what has built up the POSTAL LIFE from small beginnings. That's what has helped to make it the Company of safety, service and saving.

POSTAL LIFE BUILDING
511 FIFTH AVE. COR. 43rd ST
NEW YORK

Find Out What You Can Save

on any standard form of policy, whether to protect your family or to make you independent in old age.

Simply write a line mentioning CHRISTIAN HERALD for February 22nd and giving [a] your exact date of birth, [b] your occupation. No agent will be sent to visit you, but full insurance particulars will be promptly forwarded—by mail only. Address,

POSTAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

WM. R. MALONE, President

511 Fifth Avenue, cor. 43d St.
New York City

Strong Postal Points

First: Standard Policy Reserves. Resources more than $9,000,000. Insurance in force, $40,000,000.

Second: Old-line legal reserve insurance—not fraternal or assessment.

Third: 9½% dividends guaranteed in your Policy and the usual contingent dividends paid as earned.

Fourth: Standard Policy Provisions, approved by the New York State Insurance Department.

Fifth: Operates under strict New York State requirements and subject to the United States Postal Authorities.

Sixth: High Medical Standards in the selection of risks.

Seventh: Policyholders' Health Bureau provides one free medical examination each year, if desired.

GIANT TOMATO-CUCUMBER-PEANUT-10c

Here Are Seeds of Three Valuable and Interesting Varieties You Should Grow In Your Garden This Year.

Giant Climbing Tomato—Is one of the largest grown. Vines grow very strong and will carry an enormous weight of fruit, very solid, crimson color; specimens often weighing 2 to 3 lbs. each.

Japanese Climbing Cucumber—Is a grand variety from Japan; can be trained to fences, trellises or poles and save space in your garden. Fruits early, growing 10 to 15 inches long, and are good for slicing or pickling.

Early Spanish Peanuts—Earliest variety and a great Peanut for the North; easy to grow, enormous yielder, and a few hills in your garden will be very interesting to show your neighbors.

Special Offer: I will mail one regular sized Packet of Tomato, Cucumber and Peanut for only 10c, or 3 Packets of each for 25c.

My new Seed Book of Garden Seeds is included free. Order TODAY.

F. B. MILLS, Seed Grower, Dept, 30 Rose Hill, N.Y.

Giant Climbing Tomato

Early Spanish Peanuts

Climbing Cucumber

ORNAMENTAL FENCE

6 Cents per Foot and up. Costs less than wood. 40 designs. All steel. For Lawns, Churches and Cemeteries. Write for free Catalog and Special Prices.
Kokomo Fence Machine Co. 499 North St., Kokomo, Ind.

CHURCH FURNITURE
Pews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book Racks, Tables, Desks—EVERYTHING. The finest furniture made. Direct from our factory to your church. Catalog free.
DeMoulin Bros. & Co. Dept. 54. Greenville, Ill.

KIDDER'S PASTILLES Standard relief for ASTHMA (Inhalation.) All Druggists, 50 cts., or trial size for 2c. stamp.
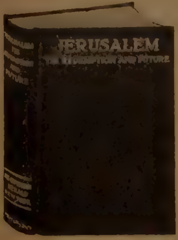
STOWELL & CO., 50 D Main St., Charlestown, Mass.

CHRISTIAN HERALD SUBSCRIPTION OFFERS

"Jerusalem—Its Redemption and Future"

IT IS only now that the real story of the Redemption of Jerusalem can be told and it is that story which the Christian Herald presents in the book entitled "Jerusalem—Its Redemption and Future." It tells the story in vivid detail of conditions in the Holy city during the war.

The book reads like the unfolding of a vast drama, one of the grandest ever known. The redemption is not confined to Palestine, but includes all the Bible lands: Syria, Armenia, Arabia, Mesopotamia, the old country of the patriarchs, and even the "Eden Land"—the cradle of the human race. It is a volume which should be in the possession of every Christian man and woman in America, as it is plentifully illuminative of the fulfilment of God's pledge which is being brought about in a remarkable way in our lifetime. Illustrated with fifteen pages of beautiful pictures from the Holy Land.



We will send a copy of "Jerusalem—Its Redemption and Future," postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year, for $3.00.

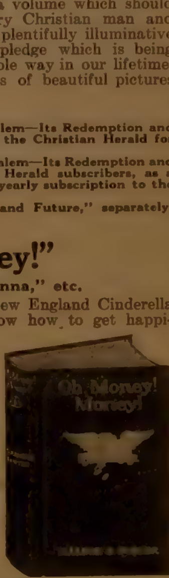
We will send a copy of "Jerusalem—Its Redemption and Future," postpaid, to Christian Herald subscribers, as a reward for sending us ONE NEW yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $2.50.

"Jerusalem—Its Redemption and Future," separately, $1.00 per copy, postpaid.

"Oh, Money! Money!"

By Eleanor H. Porter, Author of "Pollyanna," etc.

"OH, MONEY! MONEY!" is a romance of a New England Cinderella and a Western millionaire. "If you don't know how to get happiness out of five dollars, you don't know how to get it out of five thousand," says Maggie, the cheery philosopher of "Oh, Money! Money!" and this is the keynote of Mrs. Porter's latest story. Out of a clear sky came three checks to the three Blaisdell families. How each family tried in its own way to get happiness from its unexpected fortune—and failed; and how poor Maggie, without trying and without a fortune, succeeded, is told in "Oh, Money! Money!"



We will send a copy of "Oh, Money! Money!" postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year, for $3.00.

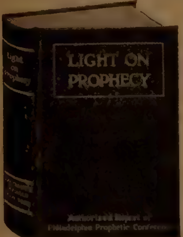
We will send a copy of "Oh, Money! Money!" postpaid, to Christian Herald subscribers, as a reward for sending us ONE NEW yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $2.50.

"Oh, Money! Money!" separately, $1.50 per copy, postpaid.

"Light on Prophecy"

Report of the Philadelphia Prophetic Conference

"LIGHT ON PROPHECY" links up the prophecies of the Bible with the great events of today and shows conclusively that we are living in an age of prophetic fulfilment. When we set out several months ago to print "Light on Prophecy," we felt that it was a book which our readers would welcome. It held something that very many good people want to know. The result, however, far exceeded our expectations. "Light on Prophecy" has now passed through four large editions, and the demand is still growing. The book contains all the notable addresses on prophecy delivered at the Philadelphia Prophetic Conference, which was the most important gathering of its kind ever held in this country or perhaps in the world.



We will send a copy of "Light on Prophecy," postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year, for $3.00.

We will send a copy of "Light on Prophecy," postpaid, to Christian Herald subscribers, as a reward for sending us ONE NEW yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $2.50.

"Light on Prophecy," separately, $1.00 per copy, postpaid.

Killing a Million Armenians

Ambassador Morgenthau's Revelations

AS GERMANY is now suing for peace, it is important that the world should know some things she has tried to keep secret.

This inside history and much more, all significant and breathlessly interesting, is in "Ambassador Morgenthau's Story." This book tells why the Turks killed 1,000,000 Armenians and fixes on the Germans the responsibility for the atrocities. It reveals the perfidy of Germany's attempt to start a holy war against Christians. It is the kind of a book that keeps one reading on and on. It is entertainingly written, yet it is packed full of authoritative facts. Illustrated with photographs, maps and diagrams. Over 400 pages; cloth bound.

AMBASSADOR MORGENTHAU'S STORY

We will send a copy of "Ambassador Morgenthau's Story," postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year, for $3.50.

We will send a copy of "Ambassador Morgenthau's Story," postpaid, to Christian Herald subscribers, as a reward for sending us TWO NEW yearly subscriptions at $2.50 each.

"Ambassador Morgenthau's Story," separately, $2.00 a copy, postpaid.

CHRISTIAN HERALD, 1499 Bible House, New York, N. Y.

COLOR VIEWS of the HOLY LAND
Bible House New York

10 WONDERFUL VIEWS OF THE HOLY LAND

HERE is a great opportunity for you to secure ten beautiful reproductions in full color of the most famous and accurate Holy Land paintings that have ever been made. These works of a great artist have preserved to the world the Holy Land of Bible days, that country known and loved so well by our Saviour.

In the past you have known the Holy Land only through the most meager and uninspired dressings, none of them presenting this wonderful country in its true beauty and charm. Now you are offered masterpieces that put before your eyes the entire birthplace of Christianity as Christ himself knew it. For the first time ten of these views in all the beautiful tints and shades of the land itself are offered you.

Like a Visit to Palestine

As you look at these pictures you feel that you yourself stand with the artist on the slope of Olivet and look across the valley of Jehoshaphat, through which winds the old road to Samaria, and beyond, under the bright sunshine, you see the walls of Jerusalem. Through these works of art you travel the Jordan road as did our Saviour so many years ago. You visit the Pool of Bethesda, and the tomb of St. James, and feel the charm, the beauty, and the dignity of every sacred place. These reproductions are in themselves a trip to the Holy Land.

David Roberts, of the Royal Academy, made the long trip from England for the purpose of painting the most famous scenes of biblical history in order that the Christian world might have truthful pictures of the birthplace of the religion. He expressed in water-colors the scenes of Christ's life and activities, as well as many things of historical interest in Egypt and the Nile country, the very cradle of modern civilization, which he visited while on his way to Palestine. Reproductions of ten of Mr. Roberts' great paintings have been made and are now offered you in folio form. The booklet is 4½ x 9½ inches. Every picture is worthy of framing.

With each of the ten pictures goes a complete description of the scene depicted with mention of the historical and biblical interest that attaches to the place. Every student of the Bible and every person interested in the life and progress of these early days will appreciate the beauty and value of these reproductions, both as works of art and as illustrations of the great scenes in scriptural history.

THREE SPECIAL OFFERS

These special offers are strictly limited to the supply of Holy Land Booklets which we have completed for distribution. These color reproductions are really so beautiful you will want at least a dozen after you see one.

Offer No. 1 If you are now a subscriber to the Christian Herald, add 10 cents to your remittance when renewing and one of these booklets will be sent postpaid. Any number can be ordered at 10 cents each—and they will be mailed to one or different addresses.

Offer No. 2 If you are not now a regular subscriber to the Christian Herald, fill in the coupon below and mail with 35 cents. This will entitle you to the Christian Herald for 10 weeks and also to one of these Holy Land Booklets.

LIST OF SUBJECTS

- Wells of Moses
- Ancient Temples at Baalbek
- Sea Castle at Sidon
- Road to Samaria
- Ashdod, Where Dagon's Idol Fell Before the Ark
- Flowers at the Sea of Galilee
- Sarepta
- Tiberias, Looking Toward Lebanon
- Port of Tyre
- St. Jean D'Acre

Offer No. 3 Send us, with 35 cents, the name of a friend or relative who is not now a subscriber to the Christian Herald, and to whom you would like to send it. The name of the new subscriber will be entered at once for a ten-weeks' subscription to the Christian Herald. The folio of reproductions in color, twenty-four pages, will be sent you free of charge upon receipt of your order. Use the order blank below and mail it to us at once, so as to be sure of your folio. If you prefer we will send the booklet to the new subscriber instead of to you.

CHRISTIAN HERALD, 1599 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK, N.Y.

USE THIS COUPON

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 1599 Bible House, New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen: I am enclosing 35 cents for "Color Views of the Holy Land" and the Christian Herald for 10 weeks, as per your special offer.

Send booklet to

Name ....

Address ....

....

Send Christian Herald 10 weeks to

Name ....

Address ....

....

A Home-Made Doll's House

By HILDA BUSICK

FRIEND of mine decided to allow her little ones to make a doll's se at home. For twenty cents two den egg boxes were secured from the er, amid much excitement on the t of the children.

he boxes were taken straight to the dren's corner, and it was decided t work should be done on them on y days only, and that the children to do all of the work if possible.

t their dictation, Mother made a of the things they intended to do: nt the outside of the boxes white; ke a curtain across the front; have itchen, dining-room, sitting-room l bedroom; paper the rooms; make s for the floors; and make furniture the different rooms. The next thing lo was to prepare a list of the various terials needed: paint, paper, scissors, mb tacks, cardboard boxes, spools, scalloped-edged tissue-paper naps for window curtains, white oil-th, jap-a-lac, and so on. These lists not completed at once, but added s the children thought of things, as new things were made for the kin-garten doll house, which served as ir model.

ll this was splendid training in mem- and in concentration, for it kept the attention directed toward one object, and at the same time, it was sufficiently varied work not to become monotonous. It also developed skill in the use of the hands. Mother, who was just as enthusiastic as the children, would occasionally suggest something of which they had not thought.

The wall-paper was cut from a sample book given by a neighboring wall-paper firm, blue and white tiled paper for the kitchen, flowered paper for the other rooms. Rugs were cut from mail-order catalogues and pasted on stiff cardboard. Tables, chairs and beds were made of paper boxes, with spool legs. The kitchen sink was made of a small tin box fastened to the wall, with two square brass hooks, inverted, to represent hot and cold water faucets.

This house was kept for several years, but the interior was constantly changed as the children became more efficient in hand-work. There was no whining, "What shall we do?" They would play for long periods at this favorite occupation while Mother sat by and mended and made their clothes. She, for her part, never became irritable when they interrupted for legitmate assistance, for she realized the wonderful lessons they were constantly learning.

A National War Park Memorial

HE Nation is greatly stirred at the sacrifice of young and splendid life war demands, and deeply moved in npathy at the high spirit France has wn throughout its great tragedy for past four years. The relation be-en this continent and France goes k to her first settlement on the Aca-n shores, before the landing of the grim Fathers. For a century there-er she held and occupied the land. portion of that old French Acadian ssession now lies within the bounds the United States, and on it the Gov-ment has established a unique and ble seacoast park under the title of "Sieur de Monts National Monu-," so named for the founder of ia and embracing the only moun-s that come down to meet the sea on our eastern coast.

Two of these mountains, the highest the group and its gigantic, deeply lated eastern spur, the Secretary of e Interior and the National Park Ser-e plan to dedicate in the Nation's me to France, their first possessor, d to our Nation's sons who fall across e sea in battling for the freedom of the world. Two mountains in the group already bear French names, related to the early history of Mount Desert Island on which the park is situated; Cadillac and Champlain. Cadillac Mountain is the highest on the island. Between it and Champlain Mountain, with an unbroken outlook also across the ocean highway toward France, lies the second mountain that, joined with Cadillac, will form the war memorial. This mountain, singularly bold and massive in its rock formation, is to be specially dedicated to the Air Service of the country, and the men who gloriously take part in it. In honor of the LaFayette Escadrille and its successors on the battlefields abroad, this mountain will be named "The Flying Squadron." A landing field is planned in connection with the memorial to bear the name of LaFayette.

Bringing Home the Boys.—At present ships are available to bring home 250,000 of our soldiers a month, and it is planned to secure additional tonnage sufficient to transport 300,000 men each month.

A Plea for Church Unity

Continued from page 202

enominations. First, there was friendly xchange of ideas; then the cordial ecognition of our essential Unity; then ank acknowledgment of the unwisdom f the existing go-as-you-please system, nd its utter inadequacy. After which e conferees took up the particular uties entrusted to them, to wit: first, e mapping out of an adequate and omprehensive program for concerted ction; and second, the establishment f a theological seminary for natives—he latter a rather ambitious venture. he first end was attained by agreeing pon a complete survey of the whole eld and its needs in the light of the ew Era, and a new assignment of terri-ory upon the basis of comity. The econd duty, which it was thought night involve greater difficulties, was lischarged with extraordinary harmony nd dispatch. Proceeding upon the ssumption that we are all members of ne body, we incorporated this belief in he name agreed upon. To call the new nstitution "The Union Seminary" would be to cloud a bright prospect with memories of former disunion. So the name finally chosen was "The Evangelical Theological Seminary," thereby fixing the gaze of preacher and parishioner upon the new day and the enlarging opportunity, rather than upon the old order and its misunderstandings. Throughout the conference all were conscious of the presence of the Holy Spirit and the consensus of opinion was that we were then enjoying in a small way what all Christians will some day enjoy on a grand scale. Several "Peters" were present who made bold to declare, "Men and brethren, this is that which is spoken by the prophet."

The promotion of Unity is a Christian duty from which none may be absolved. Never have denominations been so nearly of one mind as now. Therefore, if it is at all possible to unite on a basis of spirit and service, by all means let us do so and at once, leaving the organism to develop normally and in as varied detail as the living Spirit may determine.

◆

To Write Life of Dr. Chapman

MRS. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN, widow of the late evangelist, has authorized Dr. Ford C. Ottman of Stamford Conn., to write the official biography of her husband. Dr. Chapman and Dr. Ottman were lifelong personal friends. He has access to all the correspondence of Dr. Chapman, and the biography will cover the intimate personal life of the late evangelist, as well as his career as a minister, as vice-chairman of the Presbyterian New Era Movement, and as a leader for Organic Unity of all evangelical churches.

FURNACE HEAT without PIPES

When Marconi announced that he could telegraph without wires, using the air to carry his message, he was considered an impractical dreamer. Yet to-day wireless messages are encircling the globe to the great benefit and profit of humanity.

When we announced that we had perfected a furnace which would heat any home up to eighteen rooms through one register without the use of pipes to carry the heat, people would not believe it; but to-day more than fifty thousand homes in America are heated better, more uniformly and more economically than ever before, by the

PIPELESS CALORIC FURNACE

The Original Patented Pipeless Furnace

The Caloric is also heating churches, halls, factories and stores. It does this at a saving of one third to one-half the amount of fuel formerly required, be it coal, coke, wood, gas or lignite. Easily installed in new or old buildings, frequently in one day and without interfering with your present heating arrangements.

The Caloric is sold and fully guaranteed by thousands of leading dealers. Let us send you our interesting literature with letters from satisfied users, some in your section. Send us your name to-day—a postcard will do.

THE MONITOR STOVE COMPANY

Established 1819—A Century of Service—"Pioneers of Pipeless Heating".

1329 Woodrow St. Cincinnati, Ohio

Immediate shipment made from Burlington, Ia., Green Bay, Wis., Harrisburg, Pa., Minneapolis, Minn., Omaha, Neb., Lansing, Mich., Salt Lake City, Utah, Spokane, Wash., Seattle, Wash., Aurora, Ill., Baltimore, Md., Columbus, Ohio, Louisville Ky., New Haven, Conn., Newark, N. J., Peoria, Ill., Philadelphia, Pa.

New Method Makes Music Amazingly Easy to Learn

Learn to Play or Sing—Every Step Made Simple as A B C—Try It on Approval—Entire Cost Only a Few Cents a Lesson—and Nothing Unless Satisfied

How often have you wished that you knew how to play the violin or piano—or whatever your favorite instrument may be—or that you could take part in singing?

How many an evening's pleasure has been utterly spoiled and ruined by the admission "I can't sing," or "No. I am sorry, but I can't play."

And now—at last—this pleasure and satisfaction that you have so often wished for can easily be added to your daily life.

No need to join a class. No need to pay a dollar or more per lesson to a private teacher. Neither the question of time nor expense is any longer a bar—every one of the obstacles that have been confining your enjoyment to mere listening have now been removed.

My method of teaching music by mail—in your spare time at home, with no strangers around to embarrass you—makes it amazingly easy to learn to sing by note or to play any instrument.

You don't need to know the first thing about music to begin—don't need to know one note from another. My method takes out all the hard part—overcomes all the difficulties—makes your progress easy, rapid and sure.

My method is as thorough as it is easy. I teach you the only right way—teach you to play or sing by note. No "trick" music, no "numbers," no makeshifts of any kind.

I call my method "new"—simply because it is so radically different from the old and hard-to-understand ways of teaching music. But my method is thoroughly time tried and proven. Over 225,000 successful pupils—from boys and girls of 7 to 8 to men and women of 70—are the proof. Largely through the recommendations of satisfied pupils, I have built up the largest school of music in the world.

To prove what I say, you can take any course on trial—singing or any instrument you prefer—and judge entirely by your own progress. If for any reason you are not satisfied with the course or with what you learn from it, then it won't cost you a single penny. I guarantee satisfaction. On the other hand, if you are pleased with the course, the total cost amounts to only a few cents a lesson, with your music and everything also included.

Why not at least let me send you my free book that tells you all about my methods? I know you will find this book absorbingly interesting, simply because it shows you how easy it is to turn your wish to play or sing into an actual fact. Just now I am making a special short-time offer that cuts the cost per lesson in two—send your name now, before this special offer is withdrawn.

For Beginners or Advanced Pupils

Piano, Organ, Violin, Viola, Banjo, Mandolin, Clarinet, Flute, Saxophone, Cello, Harmony and Composition, Sight Singing, Guitar, Ukulele, Harp, Cornet, Piccolo, Trombone,

U. S. School of Music
152 Brunswick Building,
New York

Mr. David F. Kemp
President U. S. School of Music, 152 Brunswick Bldg., New York City.

Please send me your free book, "Music Lessons in Your Own Home" and Particulars of your Special Offer.

Name ....
Address ....
City .... State ....

YOU CAN MAKE MONEY selling our exclusive Dress Goods, Suitings, Waistings, Handkerchiefs, Hosiery, Silks, etc., latest and most stylish designs. Profitable, congenial employment of spare time for ladies of refinement. No money or experience necessary. Samples FREE. Write to-day. Mitchell & Church Co., 121 Water St., Binghamton, N.Y.

You can be quickly cured, if you STAMMER

Send 10 cents coin or stamps for 70 page book on Stammering and Stuttering, "Its Cause and Cure." It tells how I cured myself after stammering and stuttering 20 years. BENJAMIN N. BOGUE, 1100 N. Illinois St., Indianapolis, Ind.

Ernest B Smith, Jr, Memphis, Tenn.

Mellin's Food

Mellin's Food adds to cow's milk important food materials that are necessary to make a complete and satisfying diet for the baby.

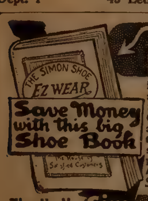
Write today for a Free Trial Bottle of Mellin's Food and start your baby right.

MELLINS FOOD COMPANY
BOSTON, MASS.

KNITTING WOOL
Direct From Mill

Extra fine quality four-ply woolen yarn just released for home distribution. This wool was used extensively during the war for soldiers' and sailors' sweaters, socks, helmets and wristlets. Unusually soft and warm—easy knitting with comfortable "give." Khaki, oxford, natural, white, black, navy, salmon, canary, turquoise, peacock. Sent postpaid, insured, the day we get your order. Free samples sent on request. 2-lb. carton (4 hanks to lb.) $3 per lb. 5-lb. carton $2.80 per lb. Send money, money order or bank draft. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.

Immediate delivery—Order today
F. W. WALTER
Dept. F 43 Letitia St., Philadelphia, Pa.



THE SIMON SHOE
EZ WEAR
Save Money with this big Shoe Book

This FREE Shoe Book is crowded with photographs and descriptions of Ez Wear Shoes for Men, Women and Children. Ez Wear shoes are sent postpaid, guaranteed to combine comfort, style and quality, to fit perfectly or money back. Amazingly low prices. Send for your copy today

The H. V. Simon Shoe 1589 BROADWAY BROOKLYN, N.Y.

WE PAY CASH FOR OLD FALSE TEETH
Don't matter if broken. Also cash for old gold, silver, platinum, dental gold and old gold jewelry. Will send cash by return mail and will hold goods 10 days for sender's approval of our price. Mail to Mazer's Tooth Specialty,
Dept. 37, 2007 So. 5th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

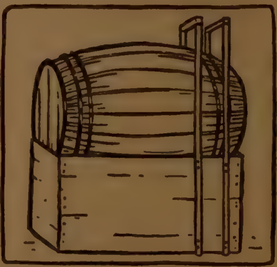
Fred and Hal's Home-Made "Gym"

By LAURA A. KIRKMAN

ANY boy can make such a gymnasium as Fred and Hal made. Hal's uncle had an old outbuilding which was no longer in use, and this he said the boys might have to play in. As this building had a low roof (low cross-beams would offer the same advantage), the boys thought it would be just the thing for a "gym," because they could make trapezes out of the short odds and ends of rope they had on hand; and then, too, as Hal said, their mothers need not worry about their falling.

Fred, too, was a considerate boy, and he suggested that they make some floor pads to go under the trapezes, so that their mothers might have still less cause for worry. These they made out of old denim from the rag-bag, stuffed with hay.

The boys made a vaulting-horse in this manner: they sank a barrel into the top of an uncovered oblong wooden box (the desired height of the vaulting-horse was secured after experimenting with boxes of various heights), and then nailed barrel to box and box to floor. The handles which a vaulting-horse must have were made by boring four holes into the floor, ten inches apart, near one end of the barrel—two holes on either side, directly opposite, close to the barrel; into these holes were stuck poles of even length, and nails secured the poles to the floor as well as to the barrel. Cross-pieces of wood, from the tops of the two poles on one side to the two pole-tops on the other side, formed the handles.



Hal's football was used for a punching-bag, suspended from some beams by a piece of his father's old suspenders.

In order to provide the canopy from which a punching-bag bounds back to the fist, the boys formed a little roof over the suspended bag by placing pine boards close together and nailing them to the beams.

Do you wonder that Fred and Hal's "gym" became the popular gathering-place on stormy days for the boys in the neighborhood?

The World's Greatest Revenue Bill

Continued from page 196

Returns on which tax has been determined shall be public records, open to inspection.

"Intangible property" means patents, copyright, secret processes and formulæ, good will, trade-marks, trade bands, franchises, etc. "Tangible property" means stocks, bonds, notes, etc. bills and accounts receivable, leaseholds, etc. "Borrowed capital" money, etc., borrowed, whether represented by bonds, notes, accounts or otherwise. The par value of stock or shares shall be deemed the fair market value of such stock or shares. The estate tax is 1 per cent. of the amount of net estate not in excess of $50,000; 2 per cent. of amount not over $150,000; 3 per cent. of amount not over $250,000, and so on till 25 per cent. of amount over $10,000,000.

TAX ON TRANSPORTATION

After April 1, 1919, a tax of 3 per cent. of amount paid for transportation by freight, and a tax of 1 cent for each 20 cts. of amount paid for transportation by express; 8 per cent. of amount paid for transportation of passengers; 8 per cent of amount paid for seats, berths, and staterooms in parlor or sleeping cars or on vessels; 8 per cent. of amount paid for transportation of oil by pipe line, each telegraph, telephone, cable or radio despatch or conversation charged at 14 cts. and not more than 50 cts., 5 cts.; when charge is over 50 cts., 10 cts.

LIQUORS AND TOBACCO

A tax of 30 cts. on each proof gallon of distilled spirits or wines.

On beer, ale, porter, etc., with ½ per cent. alcohol $6 for every barrel of 31 gals. or less.

On wines with 14 per cent. alcohol, 16 cts. per gal. 14 to 21 per cent., 40 cts. per gal. Over 21 per cent., $1.

Each bottle of artificially carbonated wine, liquors, etc., 6 cts. half pint.

Sweet wines 30 cts. per proof gal. of grape brandy or wine used in fortifying such wines.

Cigars, $1.50 to $4 per 1000; Cigarettes $3 to $7.20 per 1000.

ADMISSIONS AND DUES

1 ct. for each ticket of 10 cts. or less for admission to public places. 50 per cent. of value of tickets sold in excess of regular prices.

Ten per cent. of amount paid as dues where dues are $10 per year.

EXCISE TAXES

Automobile trucks, 3 per cent.; other automobiles and motorcycles, 5 per cent.; tires, inner tubes, parts, etc., 5 per cent.; pianos, organs, piano players, graphophones, phonographs, talking machines, music boxes and records, 5 per cent.; sporting goods, 10 per cent.; chewing gum, 3 per cent.; cameras, 10 per cent.; photo films, 5 per cent.; candy, 5 per cent.; slot selling machines, 5 per cent.; slot weighing machines, 10 per cent.; livery suits and boots and hats, 10 per cent.; hunting and riding garments, 10 per cent.

SPECIAL TAXES

Every domestic corporation shall pay annually $1 for each $1000 over $5000 of capital employed, every foreign corporation shall pay $1 for each $1000 of the average amount of capital employed; brokers shall pay $50; pawnbrokers, $100; ship brokers, $50; custom-house brokers, $50; theatres, museums and concert halls, seating over 250, $50; seating 500, $100; seating 800, $150; over 800, $200; circuses, $100; other public exhibitions or shows, $15; bowling alleys and billiard rooms, $10 per table or alley; shooting galleries, $20; riding academies, $100; jitneys seating seven or less, $10; over seven, $20; liquor makers or sellers in prohibition territory, $1000; tobacco manufacturers with sales less than 50,000 pounds, $6; 50,000 to 100,000, $12; over 100,000, $24; cigar manufacturers of less than 50,000 cigars, $4; 50,000 to 100,000, $6.

When a stamp is used to denote a tax, the person using the same shall write or stamp his initials and the date.

STAMP TAXES

On all bonds, debentures or certificates of indebtedness, on each $100, 5 cents. On each original issue of certificates of stock, on each $100, 5 cents where certificate is without face value, tax is 5 cents per share; passage ticket for points not in United States, Canada or Mexico, not less than $10, nor more than $30, $1; $30 to $60, $3; over $60, $5.

Parcel post packages with postage of 25 cents or more, 1 cent for each 25.

TAX ON CHILD LABOR

Any person operating a mine or quarry in the United States with children under 16, or any mill, cannery, workshop, factory, etc., where children under 14 work or children 14 to 16 work more than 8 hours a day or more than 6 days a week or after 7 P.M. or before 6 A.M. shall pay, in addition to all other taxes, 10 per cent. of all net profits of sale of such products.

First aid in every househol
—Musterole

Cough, cough, cough. How it racks little Dorothy and passes on to mother and grandma and holds a croup danger for all the little ones!

Hurry, there, with the Musterole, that pure, white ointment that is better than a mustard plaster—and it will not bring a blister. Massage it gently over the chest and neck. Feel the tingle, then the cool delightfulness as Musterole searches down. It will penetrate, never fear. It will rout that old congestion clear away.

Musterole is a pure, white ointment made from oil of mustard and a few home simples! Musterole searches in under the skin down to the heart of the congestion. There it generates a peculiar congestion-dispersing heat. Yet this heat will not blister. On the contrary you feel a relieving sense of delightful coolness. Rub Musterole over the spot. And you get relief while you use it, for Musterole results usually follow immediately.

On no account fail to have a jar of Musterole handy. For coughs and colds and even the congestions of rheumatism or lumbago Musterole is wonderful.

Many doctors and nurses recommend Musterole.

30c and 60c jars—$2.50 hospital size.
The Musterole Co., Cleveland, Ohio

BETTER THAN A MUSTARD PLASTER

MUSTEROLE
WILL NOT BLISTER

DEAF?

Here is Free Proof That

You Can Hear!

The wonderful improved Acousticon has now enabled more than 325,000 deaf people to hear. We are sure it will do the same for you; are so absolutely certain of it that we are eager to send you the new and greatly improved

1919 Acousticon DICTOGRAPH
For 10 Days' FREE TRIAL
No Deposit—No Expense

There is nothing you will have to do but ask for your free trial. No money to pay, no red tape, no reservation to this offer. Our confidence in the present Acousticon is so complete that we will gladly take all the risk in proving beyond any doubt that

THE JOY OF HEARING CAN BE YOURS AGAIN!

The Acousticon has improvements and patented features which cannot be duplicated, so no matter what you have ever tried, just ask for a free trial of the New Acousticon. You'll get it promptly, and if it doesn't make you hear, return it and you will owe us nothing—not one cent. Address
GENERAL ACOUSTIC CO., 1314 Candler Bldg., N.Y.
Canadian Address: 621 New Birks Bldg., Montreal

Our Mail-Bag

NOTICE

E editors of the Christian Herald will be lad to answer any question addressed to fail-Bag provided it be of general interest not merely personal. Correspondents may nom de plume to identify the question, but ters must contain name and address of the , in addition to the nom de plume. No ion will be paid to anonymous letters nor se written with lead pencil.

)uestions and Answers

HE "Old Pastor" in Washington, D. C., writes us, conveying his heartfelt thanks to those friends who have been so kind to him during the past year. On March xt he will be seventy-nine—a ripe old In his letter he says: "How can I convey epth of my thankfulness and the measure gratitude to all who have so generously n such princely fashion remembered the Pastor? To my heart such sweet appre- ns of the bodily and temporal needs of d; unworthy servant of the Lord is as fra- as the first flowers of opening summer, as beautiful as a midnight dream of the tian's heaven." Surely it ought to be ightful thing for our friends to know they made the closing years of a saintly life ppy and rich in blessings. We know of ther benevolence that equals this in real -satisfaction. It is as though each of friends who share in this beautiful enter- had a corner in their hearts reserved for 'Old Pastor," as though it were a "proph- oom," consecrated to the shelter and pro- on of one whom they had learned to love.

S., Pitcairn, Pa. The eagle as a na- l emblem was first used when ancient ria, a country of Italy west of the Apen- , used it as a symbol of royal authority. Romans, in 87 B.C., followed their exam- nd the silver eagle on the top of a spear, ing a thunderbolt in its talons, became error of the world. After Hadrian's time agle was made of gold. The two-headed of the Byzantine emperors was to sym- e control of both East and West. From e the custom of using eagles on standards ad to all other European nations and from to America.

ubscriber, Schenectady, N. Y. One can- lay down a rule as to the age at which a l may be considered accountable to God ts actions, as much would depend on a 's conception of right and wrong. When ren realize the effect and nature of sin n early date, their accountability would equently start early. To state a specific applicable to all is impossible. A child's untability begins with the dawning of al consciousness, when it knows itself a er in the spiritual sense, and has impressed n its consciousness the fact of Christ as our, Helper, Guide and Friend.

. C. B., Oswego, N. Y. Herod did not d in bodily fear of John, though he may e had come apprehensions of an outbreak is followers, John being a leader of the ple. His fear was that which a wicked may have of some godly minister who s him of the consequence of his wicked- . Mary Stuart is described as dreading ve all things the visits of John Knox.

. B. C., Wisconsin. The royal family of land is of the house of Orange. Frederick ry, who in the seventeenth century began erection of the "House of the Wood" as a to his beloved wife Amelia, was a prince range, and the grandfather of William III Holland and England. The "House in the od" was finished by Amelia after her hus- d's death, as a monument to him, and the utiful Orange Hall was called by her the all of Peace."

. E. A. The scene of the enunciation of Beatitudes is according to tradition the orns of Hattin." Stanley says: "It is the y height seen in this direction from the lake Gennesaret. The plain on which it stands asily accessible from the lake, and from t plain to the summit is but a few minutes' k. The platform at the top is evidently able for the collection of a multitude, and responds precisely to the 'level place' to ich he came down as from one of its higher ns to address the people."

Mrs. E., Rowley, Iowa. The new Jerusa- , according to the orthodox interpretation, l be God's dwelling-place with men on the v earth. It is the antitype of the tabernacle the wilderness.

W. B., Cherokee, Iowa. Any one who empts to justify Germany's treatment of lgium is either an enemy to freedom and tice, or a pro-German, or both.

N. C. A., Harrisonburg, Va. For the in- mation you desire on war reconstruction rk, write to the Christian Herald Informa- n Bureau, Washington, D. C., enclosing p for reply.

H. H., Lexington, N. C. I would like to tell "Reader" from Illinois that if he (or she) will turn to Jesus, help will come. In my own experience, I tried hard to keep true to God, but I would slip so often when in temptation and would weep so bitterly afterward, that I felt I was not worthy to call on Jesus any more for help, if I could not lay hold of his strength when temptation assailed. Then, when desperate, I found this: "Christ has made provision for us to live the overcoming life. We can overcome. We do not need to go with the current. There is no sinful habit Christ cannot break; no temptation we cannot, by his help, overcome; no depths from which we cannot rise. All we need is the overcoming power, and Christ is that power. If we imagine we cannot do it, we are defeated at the very beginning. If we believe we can, we can; for His is the victory that overcometh the work, even our faith. If we say we must live in the dust, we do not know our Saviour." Take this into your heart and soul and throw yourself on Christ, and day by day you will feel his strength more and more. The old temptations will, by resisting them with his help, cease to tempt, and you will feel that you are really a child of God.

Ida L. Reed, the well-known poet, writes from Moatsville, W. Va., sending this beautiful thought. "I think, when we have kept our faith and trust in God through all things, that whatever of sorrow and care, of loss or pain, has darkened life's day, "at evening time it shall be light." Somewhere beyond the sunset we shall find all that we have toiled for, all we have loved and longed for and missed; not according to our earthly dreams, but given in God's own way, as far beyond them in glory and beauty as our lost ones will be when we meet again. I wish for the Herald and all its staff and readers the most blessed and prosperous year of all their lives. May God specially bless the Herald during this trying year of world readjustment and reorganization, and make it a voice of wisdom, counsel, hope, strength and comfort to the multitudes who need its messages."

E. E. F., Madrid, Iowa, sends these lines, which are not yet too late to serve as a New Year's greeting:

"I sincerely wish you a happy New Year,
With joy in each sorrow and hope with each tear.
Bear burdens for others, your heart will keep light,
Lift clouds from the downcast, your skies will stay bright;

"Provide for the needy, your wants will be few,
While you care for others, the Christ cares for you.
It's not getting but giving that brings us real wealth,
And not rest but action that gives the soul health.
Forsaking all for the Master you "all things" receive
And get foretastes of heaven each day that you live."

J. B., Baltimore, Md. We like the good old way of ascribing glory to God when any great and much-desired event takes place in the nation's history. It is the Bible way, the early Christian way, and moreover it was the traditional way among the Hebrews from the beginning of their national history. Further, it is the way of faith and trust and gratitude. There can be no true or appropriate appreciation of God's goodness without rendering to him thanks as the Giver of all good.

R. M. Y., Gouverneur, N. Y., writes: "Having seen several items about aged readers of your valuable paper, I am sending you a snapshot of probably the oldest, my mother, 95 years of age the coming April. She is just the dearest and jolliest mother and thinks there is no paper like the Christian Herald, which she reads without glasses. Her mother, a cousin of Captain James Lawrence, lived to be 102 years and 7 months."

Mabel E. D., Eldorado Springs, Mo. We would refer you for all information concerning gifts of clothing for Belgium, to the Red Cross headquarters in your section. We do not believe that it is desired to send old clothing to any of the suffering areas. Your questions and comments have been read with interest, but it is not possible to deal with so many.

E. G., Bayville, N. Y. The little proteges in our indsutrial missions in China usually leave at the age of self-support, when their training has been sufficient to make them desirable workers. This may be at any way from fifteen to eighteen years. There are, however, some who, having developed special aptitude on certain lines, are carried along for several years later at higher schools and seminaries. Hundreds are supporting themselves in various ways today, as farmers, workers in metals, carpenters, weavers, knitters, domestic servants, nurses, Bible women, colporteurs, teachers, evangelists, and in many other callings.

Just Dip the Brush!

YOU'LL marvel at the ease, if you have never used Kyanize Varnishes and Enamels, with which you can beautify your home

Kyanize KY-AN-IZE Products

The Home Preserving Varnishes and Enamels

Under the Kyanize Label you'll find a varnish or enamel for every home finishing requirement.

Write for our FREE BOOKLET, "The Inviting Home" it contains many helpful, home finishing hints and is beautifully illustrated in colors.

BOSTON VARNISH COMPANY
82 Everett Station, Boston, U. S. A.

KYANIZE FLOOR FINISH, for furniture, woodwork and hardwood floors.

Kyanize White Enamel, for highest grade interior and exterior work.

Kyanize Sanitary Floor Enamel, for old or sof wood floors and woodwork.

SMITH BROTHERS'
S. B.
COUGH DROPS.
S. B. Stamped on each Drop
POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y., U.S.A.
Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.
TRADE
MARK
S. B. COUGH DROPS
SB

5¢

Children are sensitive little beings. They hate to be put to shame. And coughing does put them to shame. It reflects on the parent, too. For coughing is unnecessary. S. B. Cough Drops relieve it. Give the children all they want. Absolutely pure. No Drugs.

Drop that Cough

SMITH BROTHERS of Poughkeepsie

Famous since 1847

GUNN Sectional Bookcases

will fit in nicely between or under windows, in or around corners, and give you your full money's worth. They are guaranteed to be of the highest class of workmanship and material. No unsightly iron bands to mar the artistic effect. Made in Colonial, Mission, Queen Anne, Clawfoot and Standard styles in oak and mahogany.

Fit Any Floor Space

The most practical, convenient and economical method of caring for books, and one that can be harmonized with various surroundings, is described in detail in our handsome Style Book, mailed on request. If you have floor space to utilize at a modest cost send for it.

THE GUNN FURNITURE CO. 1820 Broadway, Grand Rapids, Mich.

GUNN OFFICE DESKS
WRITE FOR CATALOG

Make Bran Delightful

Nearly everybody needs it every day. Its lack brings dull days, headaches, blues. Then folks resort to artificial laxatives. Doctors urge bran. They warn you against the pill habit. Bran is Nature's way of keeping people fit.

Pettijohn's conceals the bran in a luscious morning dish. You'll like it better, probably, than any branless dainty. Yet there's sufficient bran. Try it one week. Your own good spirits will then tell you what to do thereafter.

Pettijohn's

Rolled Wheat—25% Bran

A breakfast dainty whose flavory flakes hide 25 per cent of bran.

Also Pettijohn's Flour—75 per cent fine Government Standard flour, 25 per cent bran. Use like Graham flour in any recipe. (2:8)

The Quaker Oats Company

Pay Less For That Range

LET us send our new book that will show you how to get unbeatable quality in Kalamazoo Ranges, Stoves, Furnaces, Gas Ranges, Oil Ranges and Kitchen Kabinets at wholesale factory prices. As Del Dane has often told you—we are manufacturers and sell direct to users.

DEL DANE "The Old Stove Master"

Get The New Book at Once

Learn about our 30 Days' Trial—Cash or Easy Payments—Unlimited Guarantee. Ask about Kalamazoo Phonographs, Cream Separators, Refrigerators, Roofing, Paint and other home necessities.

Ask for Catalog No. 103

Kalamazoo Stove Co.
Manufacturers
Kalamazoo, Michigan

"A Kalamazoo Trade Mark Registered Direct to You"

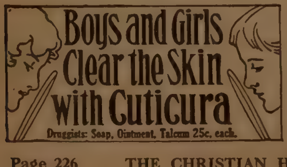
Paint Without Oil

Remarkable Discovery That Cuts Down the Cost of Paint Seventy-Five Per Cent.

A Free Trial Package is Mailed to Everyone Who Writes

A. L. Rice, a prominent manufacturer of Adams, N. Y., has discovered a process of making a new kind of paint without the use of oil. He calls it Powdrpaint. It comes in the form of a dry powder, and all that is required is cold water to make a paint weather proof, fire proof, sanitary and durable for outside or inside painting. It is the cement principle applied to paint. It adheres to any surface, wood, stone or brick, spreads and looks like oil paint and costs about one-fourth as much.

Write to Mr. A. L. Rice, Manufacturer, 107 North Street, Adams, N. Y., and he will send you a free trial package, also color card and full information showing you how you can save many dollars. Write today.



Boys and Girls Clear the Skin with Cuticura Druggists: Soap, Ointment, Talcum 25c. each.

George · Washington

He · always · spoke · the · truth, and · we
Are · both · like · him, we · hope;
We'll · never · fib, and · have · to · have Our · mouths · washed · out · with soap!

·Elizabeth · FitzHugh·

A Modern Bartimeus

"DO you believe in miracles? Don't know if you do? Well, I do," said my friend. "It is only occasionally I take a vacation, but last summer I went north and visited for the first time the mission at St. Anthony and the one at Battle Harbor, Labrador. I came back full of what I had seen, and very enthusiastic indeed, and I remember feeling that the half had never been told of the fine results secured. I returned by the west coast of Newfoundland, which caused me to have to stay at a little town called Curling for two days. In the evening a group of us were sitting around on the lawn of the hotel, and I was telling the people some of the things of interest in connection with the Labrador Mission, and about the wonderful operations that had been performed while I was there. While we were talking, two men came along, one leading the other, who was totally blind. They joined our group. I got into conversation with the blind man. He told me he was a fisherman, and that he had been suffering for years with serious eye trouble. After spending literally all he possessed, trying various doctors and specialists and taking different sorts of treatment, he was now totally blind. The doctors said his case was hopeless.

"I listened with much interest to the history of the case, and then I told the man about the wonderful work at St. Anthony of Dr. Andrews, eye surgeon of the mission, and I strongly advised him to get down there somehow. His means were exhausted, but he promised to try to get his relatives interested. This was some time in July of last year.

"The matter was entirely forgotten, as far as I was concerned. As superintendent of the Seamen's Institute at St. John's, I have a large acquaintance. One day, about a week before last Christmas, I was making up my cash register, when a man sitting opposite me asked why I hadn't gone to see him when I was in Curling the previous summer. I replied that as a matter of fact I was only there for two days and had not his address.

"'Well,' he said, 'you did one bit of good work while you were there.' I asked him what he referred to. He replied, 'Don't you remember speaking to a blind man and recommending that he go to the hospital at St. Anthony and see the mission doctor?' I said that I did recall it, and asked if the man went. 'Oh, yes, he did; I should just say he did. He was up there for several weeks. You know, he is my brother. One day I received a telegram saying he was coming home by the next train from Lewisport. I went to the railroad station expecting to have to lead him home, as I had done on so many occasions. As the train came in, I stood on the platform watching for my brother. He saw me first and came running to me, his face beaming. His sight had been entirely restored and he could now see as well as I could. Ours was a very happy home that Christmas.'

"This is simply one of many striking instances of the good work done at the mission hospitals. Dr. Andrews performed the operation and administered the necessary treatment for the fisherman entirely without remuneration. The doctor comes from California each year at his own expense and spends the summer working at the hospitals of the mission. His work is exclusively eye work.

"Men still read the story of Bartimeus in the Bible, but doctors like this one have right here today made it possible to tell stories, true in every detail, of sight restored, the lame made to walk, the helpless cared for, the innocent protected, and how the poor of the Far North have the real Gospel of love preached to them.

"While there, I also saw forty little children—waifs of that long, solitary coast—who had no one to care for or love them. They were picked up from time to time by the little hospital steamer Strathcona, as she cruised to and fro on her errands of mercy. But the Children's Home, built of timber hewn in the neighboring forest, shaken by the storms of the north and warped by the arctic frosts, is no longer able to be kept warm as it should be, with the present high price of coal. The doctors are trying to get a new building, built of brick.

W. H. JONES.

St. John's, Newfoundland.

The Rural Church and Soldier Boys

THE rural church must be awak
to the impending crisis of hol the soldier boys in the home r communities when they return. Th sands of these boys will be lost for to the country, if the rural church its community fails to hold them w they return.

These young men have had exp ences that have greatly enriched t lives; some of them will have li five years of experience in one ye time. They will require a much be and richer rural community life on t return than when they left.

What will the rural church do ab this? Will she meet the needs of young men of war, or will she p along in the ancient way and lose t splendid men forever? The minis and the leaders among the rural layn will have a great responsibility in connection.

Too many of the rural chu members know little concerning solution of their own community pr lems; indeed, the same may be of many rural preachers. It is meet this need of definite and sy matic knowledge on the social economic problems of the rural chu that the International Rural Chu Reading Circle Movement is or izing its work this year. The tex the Movement is a new book, "T Church in Rural America," writ by the director with the purpose giving clear ideas and the results practical experiences on the fun mental tasks and means and metho of progress.

Any church or community m begin a Circle at any time. Certifica and diplomas are issued to the faithf Better community life should be t result of a faithful performance of du Full particulars are available for asking. Address the director of Movement, Professor Garland
Bricker, Syracuse University, Syracu
N. Y.

◆

The United States Boys' Working Reserve

IN MAY, 1917, a group of men w foresaw the need of labor to ov come the food shortage organized t
United States Boys' Working Reserv
This organization now has branches every state of the Union, the District
Columbia and the territory of Hawa
Its purpose is to mobilize for servic chiefly on farms, all fit boys fro sixteen to twenty years of age; to s that their education is maintained; a to prevent the exploitation of th labor. The Y. M. C. A. is in clo cooperation with the Reserve, in whi hundreds of Y. M. C. A. men a officials. The Reserve issues a series loose-leaf pamphlets, called the Far Craft Lessons, the purpose of which to enable all boys to learn the rudimen of farm practice, and which will used as a course of study in every hi school in the United States. There an enrolling officer in every high scho and every public library. Besides t enrolment button and certificate membership, a service badge is given every boy who does six weeks' work on farm. All the work is done in t summer vacation so as not to interfe with the boys' education.

KELLOGG STRAWBERRY GARDENS

Yield big crops and give big profits everywhere. Kellogg Strawberries are big, delicious beauties. Many families get their own strawberries FREE and

Make a Good Many Extra Dollars Profit Each Year

from Kellogg Strawberry Gardens. Let a Kellogg Garden add beauty, pleasure, profit to your home

Our Big Book Tells How

WRITE FOR FREE BOOK

Send for Your Copy Now

IT'S FREE AND POSTPAID

A POSTAL WILL DO

R. M. KELLOGG CO., Box 879, Three Rivers, Mich.

oung People's Topics for March 2

Our Relation to God
III. Obeying

(Consecration Meeting)

ian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic. John 15 : 12–17

THE first two studies of this series e came through repentance to rfect trust. Having repented of ns, and having trusted in Him for tion, and having received his wit- that we are accepted of him, we t but love him with the most in- earnestness of our hearts. Loving we naturally seek to serve him, and st requisite for service is obedience. dier cannot be sent to battle until arns that a command is not to be ssed but is to be executed. There mutual service in home or school ldren refuse obedience through any ken feeling of threatened inde- nce. Authority must be respected, o be respected long it must be just. inspires true authority, but if we we can never know the rule of love, we thereby necessitate the rule of But obedience puts the indi- into harmony with authority, he spirit of love in service is made fest. The first command of Christ ose who would serve him is to love nother. He says he has chosen us. accept his love and love him we also love those others whom he has n. The thirteenth chapter of I thians is a perfect outline of stian love. It is kind, it seeketh not . How often we fail to serve be- e we seek to be first or because a al or derogatory word gets between d our opportunity! Our littleness o often thwarts His greatness.

e normal child soon finds that ther knows best," and both love and ion lead to obedience. The child of may well be like-minded, may well God to order wisely, and then obey estioningly. Christ said, "Ye are friends if ye do whatsoever I com- d you."

igh Hearts for Great Days

orth League Topic. Matt. 10 : 37– Eph. 1 : 15–23; Matt. 17 : 14–20

HEY shall not pass" has become immortal, for in it lay the spirit nbeaten France. The days of 1914, '16, '17 and '18 were great days. hem the free peoples of the world found the common basis of their rties, and then, united, administered he enemy of all the most complete humiliating defeat since Darius rwhelmed the drunken Belshazzar. great as were the days just gone, ater lie before us. The world, torn nder economically, physically, polit- y and spiritually, is now to be re- e. Rebuilt under proper leadership ill be a better world. It must be a ter world, and every Christian is rged with a share of the duty of so king it. Christ leads. He has told that he who loseth his life in his vice shall find it. He has called us accomplishment through faith. He he head of the Church, to which his rit is promised in its fulness. He has that he would go with us all the . What more do we need to set the od moving in our veins? In his rit, strengthened by his power, we attack in confidence the problems t face us. These are big problems and d. Churches must banish division consummate unity. Nations must get political ambition and give their ength to the protection instead of to exploitation of the weak. Employers and employees must realize their real community of interest and avoid industrial ferment by achieving industrial justice. Labor has been wronged for centuries. It is now strong enough to wrong others in establishing its own right. Christian men must see that right and justice, good will and mutual respect are maintained as the basis of our reconstruction. This can only be if the work is done in the spirit of Christ. These are great days; you have a great leader; go on and conquer.

◆

Cana

(Cover Picture Story)

IT IS written of Mary the mother of our Lord, that "she hid these things in her heart." Of the divinity and power of her firstborn she had no doubt. So when Jesus, returning home from his baptism, with disciples already following him, appeared ready to begin his ministry, and when the wine, the central element of the marriage feast, unexpectedly failed, what more natural than that she should bring to Jesus the opportunity for his first miracle?

We can hardly understand the implication of his answer, but we can understand her failure to be discouraged by it and her confident direction to the servants, "Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it." Nor was she disappointed, for in his chosen time the virgin water in the newly filled pots reddened at his word and brought the feast to its highest perfection, surprising even the master of the feast with its goodness.

Jesus gave many evidences of his sympathy with our human life. His presence at the marriage at Cana gave new sanctity to the holy bond of conjugal love. His supplying of the feast was a sufficient answer to all those who would divorce piety and pleasure.

But of Cana, the home of Nathanael, and the scene of Christ's first gracious miracle, we now have no certain trace. Two sites claim to be the real Cana. One, 9 miles north of Nazareth, is now a complete ruin. The other, now called Kefr Kenna, 4 miles northeast of Nazareth, contains a partly ruined church and a small Christian population. Into the wall of the church, at the foot of the hill which tradition says stands on the site of the miracle, is built a water pot which is said to be one of the jars that encompassed the miracle wine. Nearby a pile of ruins is pointed to as the home of our Lord, possibly the dwelling of Nathanael.

◆

Testaments for Our Sick Soldiers

Office of the Chaplain,
United States Army Base Hospital,
Fort Riley, Kansas.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT is made of consignment of New Testaments for use in this hospital. The Testaments have reached us in good condition, and we are certainly very grateful for the opportunity to distribute them for you through the hospital. Up to the present time the Christian Herald has furnished all of the Testaments for use in this hospital, and very careful distribution has been made of your contributions. We have a 3,500-bed hospital here, and the work is carefully organized to cover each man in the institution, so I am sure your services in the matter of distribution of Testa ments has been very efficient.

G. CHARLES GRAY,
First Lieutenant, Chaplain.
January 4, 1919.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Graham C. Patterson, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Edward S. Babcox, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.50 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, January 25, 1909, as Second-class Matter under Act of March 3, 1870
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

BRISCOE

The enjoyment of the owner is heightened by the knowledge that upkeep and maintenance have been reduced to the minimum.

Touring and Roadster Types

□

The price is merely a minor reason for the popularity of the car.

BRISCOE MOTOR CORPORATION
JACKSON MICHIGAN

99% BRISCOE BUILT

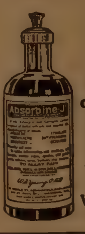
Exercise Makes Tired Muscles

After the eighteenth hole—the last set or the ninth inning, when violent exercise is over, you need a highly effective liniment for tired and aching muscles.

A little Absorbine, Jr., well rubbed in, prevents after-soreness and promotes the exhilarating vigor that should follow healthful sport.

Absorbine.Jr.
THE ANTISEPTIC LINIMENT

has for years been a staple household antiseptic and germicidal liniment. It is the favorite of athletes and of college athletic trainers. It is preferred because it is absolutely dependable in eliminating stiffness and allaying inflammation. Absorbine, Jr. cleanses as well as heals; it may be applied to cuts and open wounds, acting as a soothing and antiseptic lotion.



You will like the "feel" of this clean, fragrant and antiseptic liniment. It penetrates quickly, leaves no greasy residue and is intensely refreshing. Only a few drops needed to do the work, as Absorbine, Jr., is highly concentrated.

Get a bottle today. Your druggist sells it. If, by any chance he is out of stock, a bottle will be mailed to you anywhere on receipt of price, $1.25.

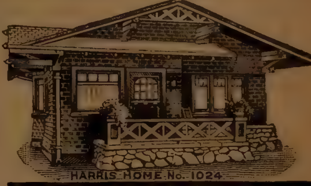
A LIBERAL TRIAL BOTTLE will be sent postpaid upon receipt of 10 cents in stamps.

W. F. YOUNG, P. D. F.
5 Temple St., Springfield, Mass.

A BACK YARD GARDEN

On a small plot of ground will save you many dollars in a year. We have for this purpose a special assortment of seeds. Our catalog tells about it and many other bargains. It is free. Send today.

IOWA SEED CO., Dept. 45 Des Moines, Iowa



$1133 BUYS THE MATERIAL TO BUILD THIS HOME

Improved Sensibly. Cut-to-Fit. Approved by Carpenters. When You Build "THE HARRIS WAY" you build to stay. Exclusive cutting and bundling features—special advantages for the careful Home Builder. It is the best, safest and most sensible way to build your ideal home right, without the waste of a single penny.

LOW PRICE STILL IN FORCE

If you are needing a house, either for investment or for a home, write us.

$10,000 FREE Plan Book

Write today for our beautiful $10,000 HARRIS HOME PLAN BOOK now ready. 100 Designs, with floor plans, prices, etc.; explains how we save 25 to 33 1-3% on finished cost. Write Today

Get our FREE Blue Print Plan offer

Your protection—Every sale iron clad guaranteed

HARRIS BROS. CO. Dept. CX-202, Chicago

AGENTS: BIG MONEY

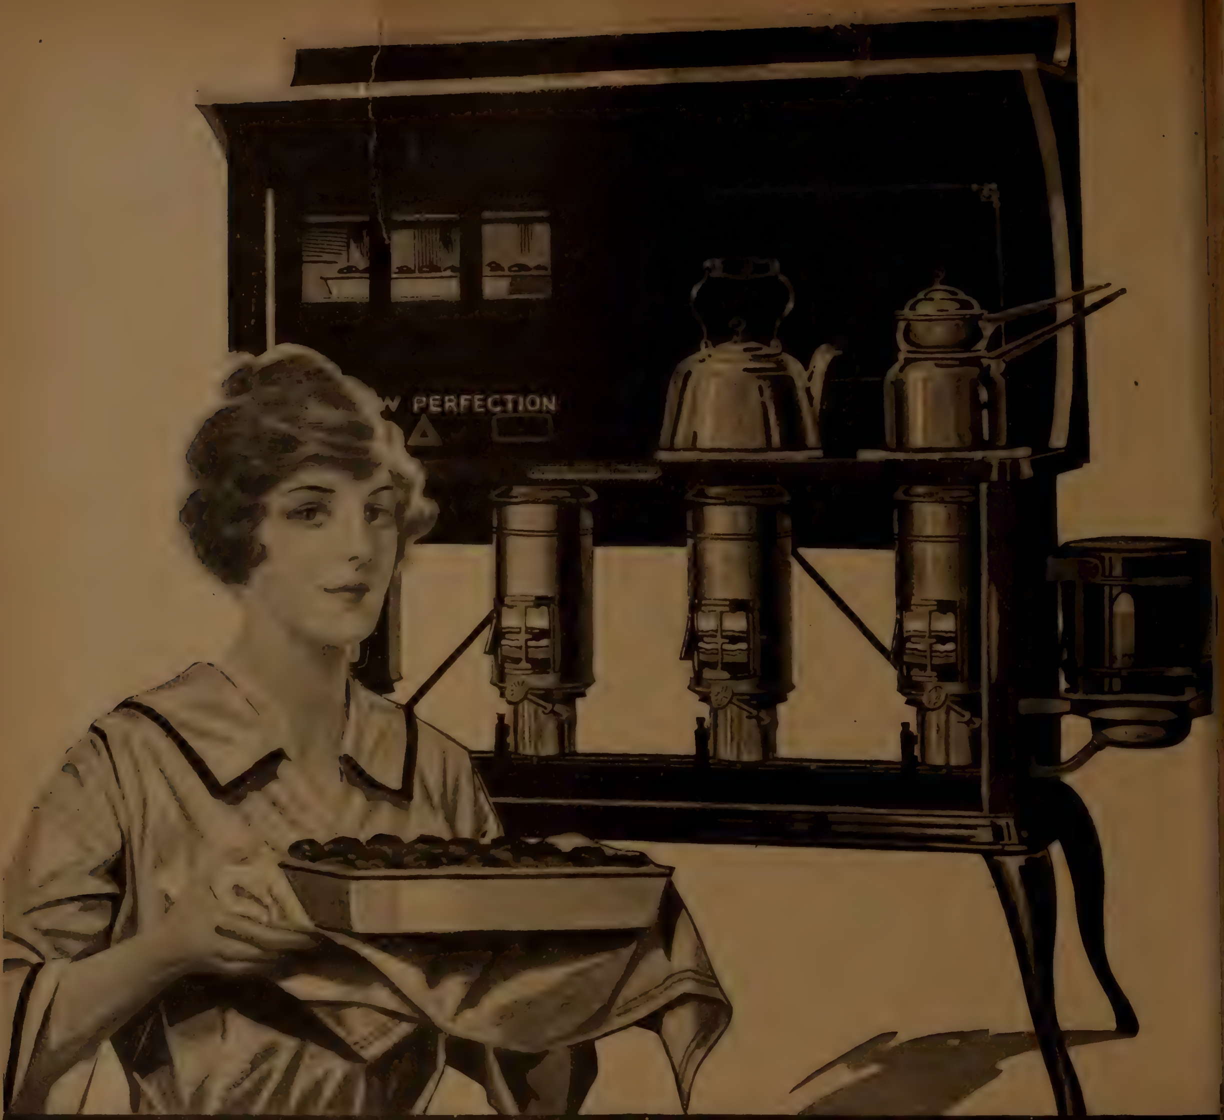
2 in 1 Reversible Raincoat

Something new. Not sold in stores. Heavy; warm, positively guaranteed water-proof. One side a handsome black raincoat, reverse side a fine dress coat. Takes the place of an expensive overcoat. Elegant style. For business men, clerks, farmers, teamsters, truck drivers.

Every Man a Prospect

Everybody pleased. Binford sold 26 coats in 5 days. Don't fail to get this big money maker quick. Right now is the season for this new, big seller. Be first in your territory to introduce this reversible coat and our new line of fancy guaranteed raincoats. Send at once for our offer and sample.

THOMAS RAINCOAT CO.,
724 Jane St. Dayton, Ohio



NEW PERFECTION

HOUSEHOLD PRODUCTS

Delicious Because cooked on the New Perfection Oil Cook Stove—the stove that keeps the kitchen so comfortable, even in the hottest weather, and makes kitchen work so much easier.

that's why more than 3,000,000 housewives use New Perfection Oil Cook Stoves—no soot or odor—abundant heat for all cooking purposes.

and this is the secret—

The Long Blue Chimney Burner — approved by 3,000,000 housewives.

This Long Blue Chimney Burner turns every drop of kerosene oil into clean, intense cooking heat and drives it full force, directly against the utensil.

Because it is exactly the right length, it gives you exactly the right heat for every cooking purpose—simmering, searing, roasting, toasting, boiling or baking.

Instantly, you can turn it up to full heat. Just as quickly, the low simmering flame is ready. And the flame always stays where you set it, without smoke or odor.

Ask your dealer to demonstrate this fast-cooking flame—

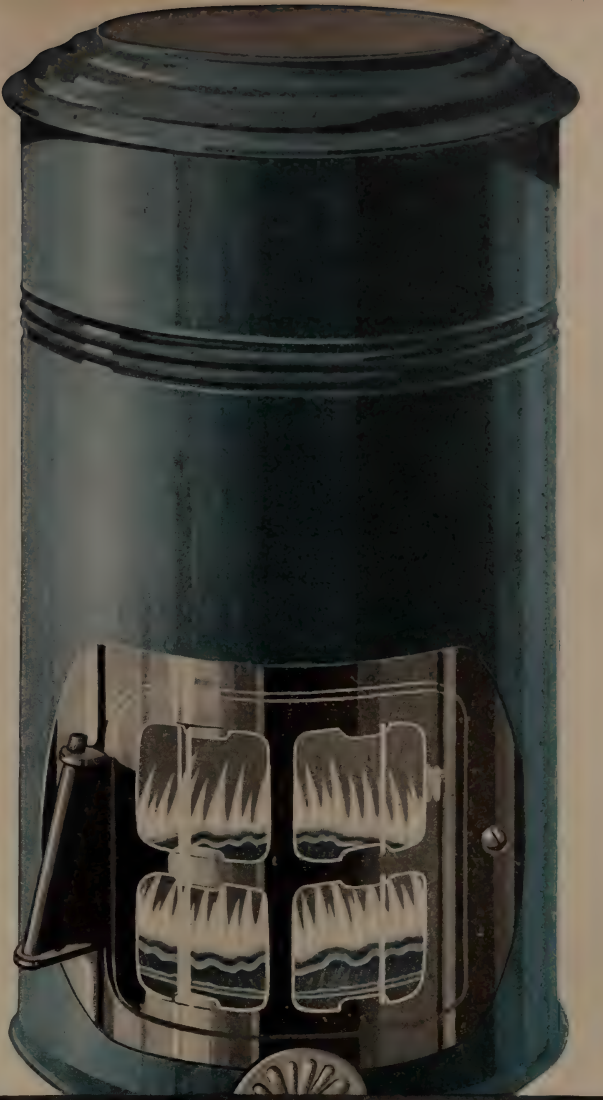
Ask him to show you the wide range of flame adjustment, from low simmering to high searing heat. The flame is visible through mica doors, easy to operate, and absolutely dependable. The burners are made of brass and last for years.

All good dealers sell New Perfection Stoves and Ovens—and New Perfection Ovens bake perfectly.

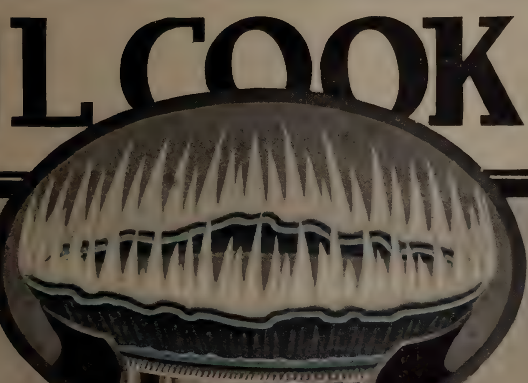
See your dealer or write for New Perfection Booklet—it's free.

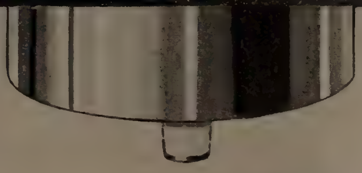
THE CLEVELAND METAL PRODUCTS CO.
7580 Platt Ave. Cleveland, Ohio

Also made in Canada by the Perfection Stove Co., Ltd., Sarnia, Ont.

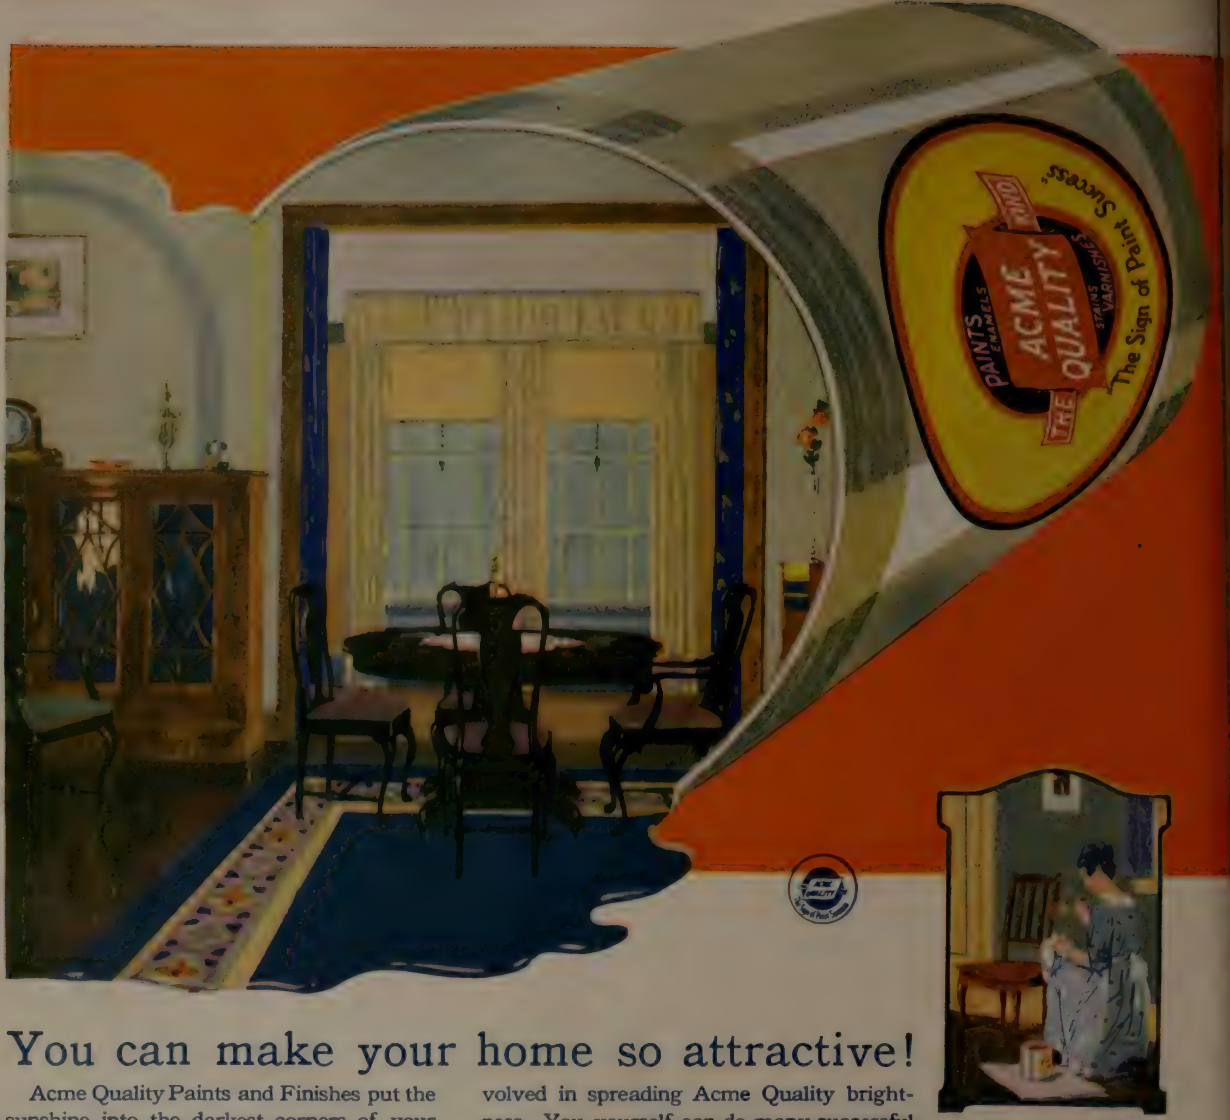


OIL COOK STOVES





Look for the Long Blue Chimney



You can make your home so attractive!

Acme Quality Paints and Finishes put the sunshine into the darkest corners of your home. What can be more joyous to you and to your family than to feel that every room is a good place to be; that every bit of furniture is a delight to the eye! All that comes close to helping make home more than just a name and a place to sleep!

So little time and so little expense is involved in spreading Acme Quality brightness. You yourself can do many successful home jobs, while your decorator will surely endorse Acme for more important work. Acme Quality Paints and Finishes are prepared to meet every home demand, giving a most satisfactory finishing touch to home decorating. There is a special Acme Quality kind for every surface.

ACME QUALITY

PAINTS & FINISHES

To make your enthusiasm for beautifying all the keener we publish two very helpful booklets—"Acme Painting Guide" and "Home Decorating." They offer helpful suggestions for the refinishing of the thousand and one surfaces about the house that are shabby from service. The first tells you everything you'll want to know about any work you'll want done; the decorating book is the last word in perfect color schemes, giving innumerable attractive combinations.

If your dealer's supply of these valuable booklets has been exhausted, write us. We will send them without cost.

HAVE AN ACME QUALITY SHELF

For the many "touching-up" jobs about the house, keep always on hand at least a can each of Acme Quality Varnotile, a varnish for floors, woodwork and furniture; Acme Quality White Enamel for iron bedsteads, furniture, woodwork and all similar surfaces; and, a quart of Acme Quality Floor Paint of the right color.

ACME WHITE LEAD
AND COLOR WORKS
Dept. O, DETROIT, MICH.

Boston
Toledo
Lincoln
Chicago
Nashville
Spokane
Minneapolis
Birmingham
Portland
St. Louis
Fort Worth
Salt Lake City
Pittsburgh
Dallas
Los Angeles
Cincinnati
Topeka

Christian Herald

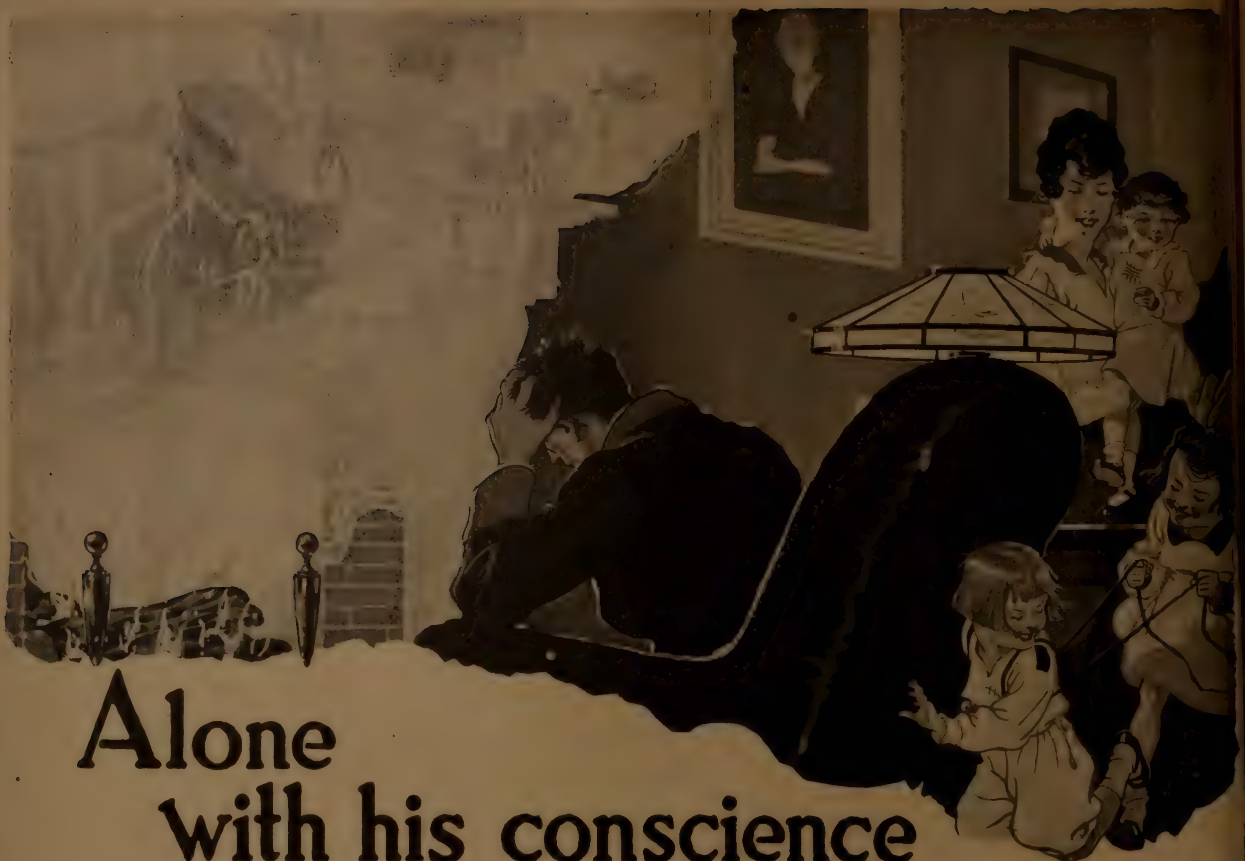
COPYRIGHT, 1919, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, MARCH 1, 1919

THE WINTER-BOUND WOODS

Interesting—Informing—Inspiring

FEATURES FOR THE CHILDREN



Alone with his conscience

Weed
Tire
Chains
Prevent Accidents

"Will I never be able to rid myself of the awful responsibility for that almost fatal accident? The memory is constantly before me. Even now the very flames leaping up the chimney seem to portray the nerve-racking scene and bring it all vividly before me again.

"Had I only put on my tire chains that eventful morning, as I well knew I should, I could easily have controlled my car and thus have saved all this remorse.

"Just suppose it was one of my little girls that had been hurt by another motorist as careless and thoughtless as myself?

"I wonder if I could complacently have accepted the flimsy excuse—that he "couldn't help it"—that "it was unavoidable"—when I knew that it was nothing but downright carelessness—an utter disregard of that first principle of careful driving— Put on your Weed Chains at the first drop of rain."

EVERY "WEED" IS GUARANTEED

AMERICAN CHAIN COMPANY, INC.

Bridgeport Connecticut

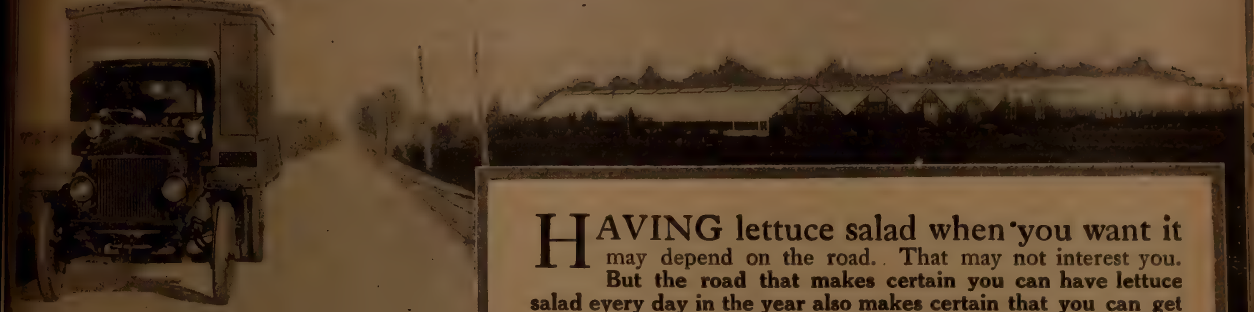
In Canada: Dominion Chain Company, Limited, Niagara Falls, Ontario

Largest Chain Manufacturers in the World

The Complete Chain Line—All Types, All Sizes, All Finishes—From Plumbers' Safety Chain to Ships' Anchor Chain

THE NAME WEED ON EVERY HOOK

Concrete Roads
and Lettuce Salad



HAVING lettuce salad when you want it may depend on the road. That may not interest you. But the road that makes certain you can have lettuce salad every day in the year also makes certain that you can get fresh eggs, milk, poultry, butter, potatoes and other things when you want them — and that should interest you. Think of the farm produce you would buy or sell if you could, but that now goes to waste because the roads prevent marketing.

The U. S. Food Administration estimates that bad roads in Erie County, Pa., added at least $2,000,000 to the food bill of Erie and other cities in the county last winter.

In 1905 the Zuck Greenhouse Co. built a small greenhouse several miles out of Erie. The problem then of transporting produce to Erie and to the express companies operating out of Erie was a serious one. In 1910 the Zuck Company bought a motor truck, but the earth roads were so bad in wet weather that a team of horses always accompanied the truck to pull it out of mudholes.

Now the road has been paved with concrete. The Zuck plant consists of 13 modern greenhouses and produces large quantities of vegetables yearly.

Read what F. J. Zuck says about this concrete road:

"Now we can deliver our produce free from bruises, blemishes and disarrangements caused by jolting over rough roads through mud.

"The cost of hauling over the concrete road, when compared with the original earth road, has been reduced 50%. This is due to the greater speed and larger loads possible over the concrete road, together with the reduction in cost of operating and maintaining our trucks. Added to this is the availability of the concrete road during the winter and spring, when greenhouse food is in greatest demand.

"Upon receiving assurances that the road upon which our greenhouses are located would be permanently improved with reinforced concrete, we immediately awarded contracts for additions to our plant. These, together with plans for further improvements, have been made possible by the economy of transportation over the concrete road to Erie."

Erie can have lettuce salad any day—and the road that will bring you lettuce salad when you want it will bring you other things you want when you want them.

Is it necessary to ask whether concrete roads pay?

PORTLAND CEMENT ASSOCIATION

ATLANTA
CHICAGO
DALLAS
DENVER
DETROIT
HELENA
INDIANAPOLIS
KANSAS CITY
MILWAUKEE
MINNEAPOLIS
NEW YORK
PARKERSBURG
PITTSBURGH
SALT LAKE CITY
SEATTLE
WASHINGTON

CONCRETE FOR PERMANENCE

How to Grow "Younger"

Regardless of how old you are—regardless of your years—you can grow younger in body, younger in spirit, younger in ambition and younger in every characteristic that gives greater living power, greater earning power and greater pleasure power. You can gain thinking power, reasoning power, health power and pleasure power, as you may desire.

The number of years you have lived does not tell how old or how young you are. You are as old or as young as your energy, as your vitality, as your capacity for work and play, as your resisting power against disease and fatigue. You are only as old or as young as your memory power, as your will power, as your sustained-thought power, as your personality power, as your concentration power and your brain power. You are only as old or as young as your digestive power, as your heart power, as your lung power, as your kidney power, as your liver power, etc. Age is measured by the life of your cells, tissues and organs, and not by the calendar.

Daily Results

"Conscious Evolution has taken away that tired, lazy feeling and replaced it with a feeling of energy—a feeling to do something and to take an interest in doing it. Truly, Conscious Evolution is a wonderful discovery. My experience with it enables me to say that it is all that is claimed for it and more."

"Conscious Evolution made me feel twenty-five years younger. I can run up and down stairs, and walk six or seven miles at any time. I rest and digest as I did in my youth. I have no worry, and I feel happy. My arms and legs are getting strong, and I thank your System for it all. I have got along so well, I constantly think of going into the shipyard, to see what I can do. I want to stir around at something, even though I am eighty-three years of age. Conscious Evolution is bringing me back to life. Conscious Evolution is bringing me back to youth. And I thank you, Mr. Swoboda."

"I had a nervous breakdown not long ago. I am writing now to tell you that I am improving rapidly, and words cannot express my thankfulness that the 'Lord directed me to Conscious Evolution through the Christian Herald.' I am indeed a new creature. My nerves are steadier than they have been for several years. My bowels are moving regularly each morning, and that alone is worth more than one can estimate. I have a feeling of desiring to do any and all things. My color is much better. My mind and heart echo the testimonials given in the Christian Herald."

"I am working outside, hauling stools and poles. Conscious Evolution is all that you claim and more. Conscious Evolution is helping me, in spite of the fact that I am up early and working hard all day, driving a team and feeding the horses and living with a husband."

"I have no more indigestion and have no more dizziness. I have gained fourteen pounds in weight. The night sweats which I had for four months have quit entirely. My nervousness is all gone, and thus you see Conscious Evolution has done me more good than all the medicine ever taken. I thank you many times for the benefit your system has given me."

"My physician advised me that one of his patients was so greatly benefited by Conscious Evolution, that it was a surprise to my doctor as well as to others who knew of the case of high blood pressure of this patient. This patient took your system without the knowledge of his physicians, and the result was so extraordinary and unusual in the case of reducing high blood pressure acquired through hardening of the arteries, that the physicians finally prevailed on him to tell through what agency the unusual thing occurred, and then, and not until then, did your patient disclose to my doctor and to others that he had been reducing his blood pressure and restoring himself to full power of life through Conscious Evolution."

"I feel absolutely convinced that Conscious Evolution is everything you claim and more. I have always been interested in self-promotion, and in my college days was most successful as an athlete. My health before trying Conscious Evolution was good, but my feeling of vigor has improved to such an extent through Conscious Evolution that I look upon my condition and wonder why I was satisfied. I shall continue interested in Conscious Evolution always."

"Your system is direct, simple, scientific, effective, and makes one feel so invigorated. As an athlete and as a physician, I endorse Conscious Evolution unreservedly. It is, and more, what is claimed for it."

"Conscious Evolution has given me surprising results. I expected good results but I am surprised."

"Never before have I felt so full of energy and in such excellent condition as at present. I just enjoy living every minute, and even though I have worked unusually hard, there being a great deal of overtime work, I am not in the least tired, whereas formerly ordinary work exhausted me."

"I noticed a decided change for the better immediately, which has increased each week. I realize from day to day new benefits. Prior to this course, in reality, since I was a child, my health was not strong, and I was continually taking medicine. Had I known of this course sooner, would have tried it. It has been said that curiosity killed the cat, but it has benefited me, for curiosity led me to Conscious Evolution. I have already recommended your system to several of my friends."

I am very thankful that the Lord directed me to Conscious Evolution through the 'Christian Herald.'"

What Others Have to Say

"Conscious Evolution has done all for me that you promised and I am simply radiating good health. I can hardly believe it myself, it has made such a great change in me. I am in better condition than I have been for twenty years and am chock full of energy and ambition. Tasks that were a burden to me in the past are now easy and a pleasure. I have no money to burn or throw to the birds, but if you were to offer me one thousand dollars in good hard cash and put me back where I was before beginning your system, I would say, 'Nothing doing.' I enjoy the work you have mapped out for me and am impatient to get at it."

"I SHALL BE SIXTY-SIX YEARS OLD NEXT AUGUST and if you were to see me right now you would say 'forty,' and, as a fact, I am better, stronger, and have more energy than the average man at forty. I have only you and your system to thank for these things, and I want to thank you from the very bottom of a grateful heart for what you have done for me. I am a man now in every sense of the word, whereas I was only a fraction of a man and rather a small fraction before profiting through Conscious Evolution."

"The strangest part of it all is that my hearing is greatly improved. The muscles of my shoulders, back and abdomen are immense, and I have forgotten that I have a liver, kidneys, heart, or any other organs, except my stomach which makes a loud call three times a day. I have lost all desire for stimulants."

"When I tell some of my friends how quickly I was benefited by Conscious Evolution, they do not believe me. They think I exaggerate."

"One year ago I was an old man at forty; today I am a youth at forty-one."

What You Can Gain

"I can honestly say that the benefits I have received from Conscious Evolution cannot be measured by any payment of money, and I can say unhesitatingly that your system far exceeded my fondest hopes."

"I could see the tremendous reality and possibilities of Conscious Evolution in less than half a minute's direction of my energies into creative channels."

"Conscious Evolution has changed me from an invalid into a tireless human machine."

"I would not consider trading the benefits I have received from Conscious Evolution for gold."

"As a student of physiology and histology, I at once recognized the feasibility of Conscious Evolution."

"Ten seconds from the time I started Conscious Evolution, I felt myself more alive and energetic."

"I have used Conscious Evolution for a few weeks, and I find myself marvelously improved in both body and mind. Conscious Evolution is wonderful, and the world will be brighter when men and women everywhere grasp it."

"My doctor has been quite interested in my results. Today I went to his office for a personal examination. It is my practice to have my physician examine me once a year. The doctor said he would not have thought me susceptible of so much development and improvement and reiterated, 'It is wonderful. Does not seem possible, etc.' He was highly impressed and you could not expect him to be more favorably so."

"I became aware of the beneficial power of Conscious Evolution at the end of the first ten seconds."

"What more can I say except to express my appreciation of your method and sincere thanks for your interest and cooperation. What more can one want for so little? What more does one get in this world?"

Results Waiting for Yo

"Your system makes me feel like a different perso Every one whom I have ever met who has tried it o has the same thing to say about it. Was talking to man today whose wife is a Swoboda enthusiast."

"Conscious Evolution sent a message of energ health and power through me in twenty seconds, whi has been increased from day to day."

"I feel very much better. You did me more good i three weeks than four doctors did in sixteen months."

"Your course has been of great benefit to me. I a able to do a great deal more work with less fatigue. M pleasures are also increased; all work seems a pleasur now."

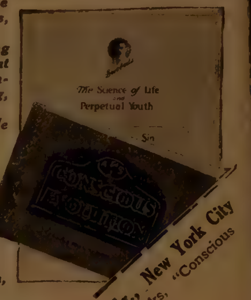
"When your first letter of instructions reached m I was tired and blue. I read it and saw the 'light. My blues disappeared. I used my energies for abou ten seconds, and my tiredness left me. Conscio Evolution is increasing my every power of mind an body as I wish and as you promise."

"I indeed realize what physiological gladnes means, My sensation of physical enjoyment is won derful. It seems too good to be true. It is somethin as I felt when I took my first trip to the Bermudas where nature has combined the blending of dainty coloring so exquisite that nothing short of fairy lan can describe it. This is how Conscious Evolution causes me to feel."

"Through Conscious Evolution, I have for the first time in years, gone without cathartics. I have no headache and no coated tongue. My abdomen, which has been up to this time, resting against the waist band of my trousers for the last ten years, is now standing on its own feet, so to speak, and has decreased four inches, while my chest measure is fully two inches greater. This, I consider remarkable progress for one month."

These Introductory Books Are Free

Swoboda has published for distribution two remarkable books which explain his system of Conscious Evolution and what it has already done. Write for these books—not because Conscious Evolution has meant so much to 262,000 other men and women, not because there is scarcely a prominent family in the country that hasn't at least one member a pupil of Swoboda, but because they contain valuable ideas for you. Conscious Evolution is being personally used by many of the most prominent physicians, and such men as Woodrow Wilson, Charles E. Hughes, the Rockefellers, the Vanderbilts, the Goulds, the Huntingtons, the Cudahys, the Armours, the Swifts, and McAdoos for advancing themselves in energy, health, vitality and power of personality.



Write for these books because they mean so much to YOU in multiplied living power, earning power and personal power. They are filled from cover to cover with the vital facts about yourself and how you can acquire the degree of power in body and mind that you so consciously or unconsciously desire. They explain the dangers of excessive deep breathing, excessive exercise, and excessive muscular development.

CONSCIOUS EVOLUTION and THE SCIENCE OF LIFE show how to double or even treble your power of mind and body; not by tedious, prolonged study, but by a process of energization which raises the very level of your life and mental power.

CONSCIOUS EVOLUTION and THE SCIENCE OF LIFE supply the key to dominant personal power, dominant business power, dominant success power, dominant mental power and dominant will power. They show how to change your aimless and fruitless life and attitudes into ambition, inspiration, enthusiasm and the higher success.

These books show how to amazingly increase your power of will and personality, as well as your power of body for every action, for every purpose and process.

Conscious Evolution is a new science, and no one can afford not to know at least the simple facts about it. These facts show how Conscious Evolution overcomes weak will, poor health, feebleness of mind and body.

They show how to overcome the inferior, pleasureless, feeble and unsatisfactory life, by giving the means to the successful, superior and abundant life.

Conscious Evolution also shows how to arrest the aging of the body, and how to remain young, energetic, vigorous and active all of the days of life.

These books are absolutely free and there is no obligation now or after. These books are yours to keep, that you may attain a higher understanding of yourself and of evolution and the means to a higher existence.

Even if you gain but one idea or the realization of the one principle of life through CONSCIOUS EVOLUTION and THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, these books will be of eternal advantage to you.

Just write your name and address on this page, tear it out and mail it to Swoboda, or draw a ring around your name on your letterhead, or merely send a postal, giving your name and address. Do it today! This is your opportunity! Now is your turn! This is your day! This is your hour! Write NOW.

ALOIS P. SWOBODA, 2249 Berkeley Bldg., New York City

ALOIS P. SWOBODA, 2249 Berkeley Bldg., New York City

Please send me your free copyrighted books, "Conscious Evolution" and "The Science of Life."

Name.............................

Address.............................

City.............................

State.............................

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

ENTERED AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER JANUARY 25, 1909, AT THE POST OFFICE
AT NEW YORK, UNDER THE ACT OF MARCH 3, 1879

VOL. 42—NO. 9. PRICE 10 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE NEW YORK

The World's Peace Covenant

President Wilson Reads the Draft of the League of Nations' Constitution Before the Peace Conference

© Underwood & Underwood

President Wilson as a guest of the French Senate at luncheon in the Luxembourg Palace

FRIDAY, February, 14, marked the most momentous day in nty centuries of world's history. the afternoon, esident Wilson, Father of the ague of Nations, peared before a eting of the plen Peace Confer e, which opened 4:30 o'clock in audience cham r at the Quai rsay, to hear the ding of the draft the Constitution the League. In a ar voice, which uld be distinctly ard by the entire sembly, he spoke nearly an hour the delegates. ccasionally, here he judged ex anation to be nec ssary, he inter pted his reading ith brief extempo neous comment. e then in slow and easured tones be n to read the raft of which he s not only the ief inspirer, but e author, and hich represents the unanimous desire of fourteen ading nations to rid the world of war. As article fter article was read by the President, with slight ccasional explanations, there was no interruption. t was evident that the reading of a document of such anscendent importance was too solemn an event to e interrupted even by applause, and it was only at he close that a subdued ripple could be heard.

In the audience were the representative statesmen f all the fourteen powers. The entire affair was rgely informal. Premier Clemenceau, who presided, alled the Conference to order, and President Wilson se and addressed the gathering in these words:

"Mr. Chairman: I have the honor and assume it a ery great privilege of reporting in the name of the ommission constituted by this Conference on the ormulation of a plan for the League of Nations. I am appy to say that it is a unanimous report—a unani ous report from the representatives of fourteen ations—the United States, Great Britain, France, taly, Japan, Belgium, Brazil, China, Czecho-Slova ia, Greece, Poland, Portugal, Roumania and Serbia. think it will be serviceable and interesting if I, with our permission, read the document as the only report e have to make."

He then proceeded to read the draft. When he eached article XV, and had gone through the second aragraph, the President paused and illustrated the eaning by a purely hypothetical case. "Suppose," e said, "there is in the possession of a particular ower a piece of territory, or some other substantial hing, in dispute, to which it is claimed that it is not ntitled. Suppose that the matter is submitted to the xecutive Council for recommendation as to settle ent, diplomacy having failed, and suppose the de ision is in favor of the party which claims the subject atter of dispute, as against the party which has the ubject matter in dispute. Then, if the party in pos ession merely sits still and does nothing, it has ac epted the decision of the council, in the sense that it akes no resistance; but something must be done to see that it surrenders the subject matter in dispute. In such a case—the only case contemplated—it is provided that the Executive Council may then consider what steps will be necessary to oblige the party against whom judgment has been given to comply with the decisions of the council."

Again, after reading article XIX, the President paused to explain that the article had been the subject of very careful and thorough discussion, and had finally been accepted as the unanimous conclusion of all the representatives.

After completing the reading, the President gave a brief review of the result of the labors of the Commission. The debates had given opportunity for full expression of sentiment and enthusiasm and there was throughout "an undertone of high respect and of enthusiasm for the thing we were trying to do." This greatly encouraged the Commission in its work, as it had felt "that the concord of the world in the future with regard to the objects of justice should not be subject to doubt or uncertainty." The compulsion of this task was constantly present with the members, and he regarded it as of very great significance that the result was reached unanimously. Fourteen nations, including all of the great powers, were represented, he said, and added: "I think we are justified in saying that the result has the deepest of all meanings—the union of wills in a common purpose, a union which cannot be resisted and which, I dare say, no nation will run the risk of attempting to resist."

Of the draft itself, said he, he regarded it as very simple in structure; it suggests a League of Nations, a body of delegates, an executive council and a permanent secretariat. "We represent, as we sit around this table, more than 1,200,000,000 people. . . . Plain men everywhere want the door left open to a variety of representation, instead of being confined to a single official body. This body has unlimited rights of discussion of anything within the field of international relations, especially war or international misunderstandings, or anything that may lead to friction or trouble; this is everybody's business because it may affect the peace of the world."

Armed force, he said, is in the background of the program, if the moral force of the world should not suffice. But this is the last resort, because this is a constitution of peace, not a league for war. He further characterized the Constitution as "not a strait-jacket but a vehicle of life; not a vehicle of power but one in which power may be varied at the discretion of those who exercise it and in accordance with the changing circumstances of the time. It is a definite guarantee of peace and against aggression—a guarantee against those things which have just come near bringing the whole structure of civilization into ruin."

Continuing, he said that one of the most satisfactory features of the program is that we are done with annexations of helpless peoples. We recognize that the condition of the helpless and undeveloped peoples of the world puts an obligation upon us to look after their interests primarily, and that in all cases of this sort it should be the duty of the League "to see that the nations who are assigned as tutors, advisers and directors of those peoples shall look to the interests of the peoples and their development" before they look to their own. There has been no greater advance than this. "States will be picked which have shown that they can exercise a conscience, and under their tutelage the helpless peoples will come into a new light and a new hope."

After the President's address, which was interpreted to the audience by an official, Lord Robert Cecil, Dr. Orlando, the Italian Premier, Leon Bourgeois of the French delegation, Baron Makino of Japan, George Nicoll Barnes, British Minister of Labor, Premier Venizelos of Greece, Dr. Wellington Koo of China, and Premier Hughes of Australia spoke, all in praise of the plans of the League. The Conference adjourned at 7 o'clock.

The draft of the Constitution is not complete, being subject to amendments at later meetings, but there is little doubt that it will be adopted substantially as read.

Having finished his work, President Wilson left Paris for Brest at 9:20, by special train.

President Wilson sailed from Brest on February 15, and was expected to land at Boston on the 25th. He planned to make a public address in Boston and another in New York on his way to Washington. Before leaving Paris the President cabled invitations to the members of the Foreign Relations Committees of the two houses of Congress, asking them to meet him at luncheon at the White House on his return and asking that debate in Congress await this conference.

. . .

A summary of the Constitution of the League is printed on the next page.

Proposed Plan for the League of Nation

COVENANT

PREAMBLE—In order to promote international co-operation and to secure international peace and security by the acceptance of obligations not to resort to war; by the prescription of open, just and honorable relations between nations, by the firm establishment of the understandings of international law as the actual rule of conduct among governments, and by the maintenance of justice and a scrupulous respect for all treaty obligations in the dealings of organized people with one another, the powers signatory to this covenant adopt this constitution of the League of Nations.

Article I. The action of the high contracting parties under the terms of this covenant shall be effected through the instrumentality of a meeting of a body of delegates representing the high contracting parties, of meetings at more frequent intervals of an Executive Council, and of a permanent international secretariat to be established at the seat of the League.

Article II. Meetings of the body of delegates shall be held at stated intervals and from time to time, as occasion may require, for the purpose of dealing with matters within the sphere of action of the League, and . . . shall be held at . . . such places as may be found convenient. . . . Each of the high contracting parties shall have one vote, but may have not more than three representatives.

Article III. The Executive Council shall consist of representatives of the United States of America, the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan, together with representatives of four other States, members of the League. The selection of these four States shall be made by the body of delegates. . . .

Meetings of the council shall be held from time to time as occasion may require, and at least once a year, . . . and any matter within the sphere of action of the League or affecting the peace of the world may be dealt with at such meetings.

[It is also provided that powers not members of the League shall be permitted by invitation to take part in discussions of matters affecting their interests.]

Article IV. All matters of procedure at meetings of the body of delegates or the Executive Council, . . . shall be regulated by the body of delegates or the Executive Council, and may be decided by a majority of the States represented at the meeting.

The first meeting of the body of delegates and of the Executive Council shall be summoned by the President of the United States of America.

Article V. The permanent secretariat of the League shall be established at ———, which shall constitute the seat of the League. The secretariat shall comprise such secretaries and staff as may be required, under the general direction and control of a Secretary General of the League. . . .

[The expenses of the secretariat are to be apportioned among the members of the League.]

Article VI. Provides diplomatic privileges and immunities for officers of the League.

Article VII. Admission to the League of States, . . . requires the assent of not less than two-thirds of the States represented in the body of delegates, and shall be limited to fully self-governing countries, including dominions and colonies.

No State shall be admitted to the League unless it is able to give effective guarantees of its sincere intention to observe its international obligations and unless it shall conform to such principles as may be prescribed by the League in regard to its naval and military forces and armaments.

Article VIII. [Recognizes that armaments must be reduced in the interest of peace and provides that the Executive Council shall also determine for the consideration and action of the several Governments what military equipment and armament is fair and reasonable in proportion to the scale of forces laid down in the program of disarmament; and these limits, when adopted, shall not be exceeded without the permission of the Executive Council.

Not disregarding the necessity upon some countries to purchase munitions of war the private manufacture of implements of war is declared to be open to grave objections.

All the contracting parties agree that there shall be a full and frank interchange of information as to their military and naval programs.]

Article IX. A permanent commission shall be constituted to advise the League . . . on military and naval questions generally.

Article X. The high contracting parties shall undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all States members of the League. . . . The Executive Council shall advise upon the means by which the obligation shall be fufilled.

Article XI. Any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the high contracting parties or not, is hereby declared a matter of concern to the League, and the high contracting parties reserve the right to take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations.

It is hereby also declared and agreed to be the friendly right of each of the high contracting parties to draw the attention of the body of delegates or of the Executive Council to any circumstance affecting international intercourse which threatens to disturb international peace or the good understanding between nations upon which peace depends.

Article XII. The high contracting parties agree that should disputes arise between them which cannot be adjusted by the ordinary processes of diplomacy they will in no case resort to war without previously submitting the questions and matters involved either to arbitration or to inquiry by the Executive Council and until three months after the award by the arbitrators or a recommendation by the Executive Council, and that they will not even then resort to war as against a member of the League which complies with the award of the arbitrators or the recommendation of the Executive Council, which . . . shall be made within six months. . . .

Article XIII. The high contracting parties agree that whenever any dispute or difficulty shall arise between them, which they recognize to be suitable for submission to arbitration and which cannot be satisfactorily settled by diplomacy, they will submit the whole matter to arbitration. . . . The high contracting parties agree that they will carry out in full good faith any award that may be rendered. In the event of any failure to carry out the award the Executive Council shall propose what steps can best be taken to give effect thereto.

Article XIV. The Executive Council shall formulate plans for the establishment of a permanent court of international justice, and this court shall, when established, be competent to hear and determine any matter which the parties recognized as suitable for submission to it for arbitration under the foregoing article.

Article XV. If there should arise between States, members of the League, any dispute likely to lead to rupture, which is not submitted to arbitration as above, the high contracting parties agree that they will refer the matter to the Executive Council; either party to the dispute may give notice of the existence of the dispute to the Secretary General, who will make all necessary arrangements for a full investigation and consideration thereof. For this purpose the parties agree to communicate to the Secretary General, as promptly as possible, statements of their case, with all the relevant facts and papers, and the Executive Council may forthwith direct the publication thereof.

Where the efforts of the council lead to the settlement of the dispute, a statement shall be published, indicating the nature of the dispute and the terms of settlement, together with such explanations as may be appropriate. If the dispute has not been settled, a report by the council shall be published, setting forth with all necessary facts and explanations the recommendation which the council think just and proper for the settlement of the dispute. If the report is unanimously agreed to by the members of the council, other than the parties to the dispute, the high contracting parties agree that they will not go to war with any party which complies with the recommendations, and that, if any party shall refuse so to comply the council shall propose measures necessary to give effect to the recommendations. If no such unanimous report can be made it shall be the duty of the majority and the privilege of the minority to issue statements, indicating what they believe to be the facts, and containing the reasons which they consider to be just and proper.

The Executive Council may in any case under this article refer the dispute to the body of delegates. The dispute shall be so referred at the request of either party to the dispute, provided that such request must be made within fourteen days after the submission of the dispute.

Article XVI. Should any of the high contracting parties break or disregard its covenants under Article XII it shall thereby ipso facto be deemed to have committed an act of war against all the other members of the League, which hereby undertakes immediately to subject it to the severance of all trade or financial relations . . . and the prevention of all financial, commercial, or personal intercourse between the nationals of the covenant-breaking State and the nationals of any other State, whether a member of the League or not.

It shall be the duty of the Executive Council in such case to recommend what effective military or naval force the members of the League shall severally contribute to the armed forces to be used to protect the covenants of the League.

The high contracting parties agree, further, that they will mutually support one another in the financial and economic measures which may be taken under this article in order to minimize the loss and inconvenience resulting from the above measures.

Article XVII. [Provides for action in regard to disputes concerning a State in the League and a State not a member, but invited to accept the obligations of membership for the settlement of the dispute; and provides further that if both parties to the dispute, when so invited, refuse to accept the obligations of membership in the League for the purpose of such dispute, the Executive Council may take such and make such recommendations as will pr hostilities and will result in a settlement.]

Article XVIII. [Provides that the League be intrusted with general supervision of the tra arms and ammunition.]

Article XIX. To those colonies and terri which, as a consequence of the late war, have c to be under the sovereignty of the States w formerly governed them and which are inhabite peoples not yet able to stand by themselves u the strenuous conditions of the modern world, should be applied the principle that the well- and development of such peoples form a sacred of civilization and that securities for the perform of this trust should be embodied in the constitu of the League.

The best method of giving practical effect to principle is that the tutelage of such peoples sh be intrusted to advanced nations, who . . . can undertake this responsibility, and that this tute should be exercised by them as mandatories on be of the League.

The character of the mandate must differ acc ing to the stage of the development of the people, geographical situation of the territory, its econo conditions and other similar circumstances.

Certain communities, formerly belonging to Turkish Empire, have reached a stage of developm where their existence as independent nations ca provisionally recognized, subject to the renderin administrative advice and assistance by a mandat power until such time as they are able to stand al . . . [Then follows a classification of the various a as to the nature of the mandatory applicable to the

Other peoples, especially those of Central Afr are at such a stage that the mandatory must be sponsible for the administration of the territory, s ject to conditions which will guarantee freedom conscience or religion, subject only to the mai nance of public order and morals, the prohibitio abuses such as the slave trade, the arms traffic, the liquor traffic, and the prevention of the est lishment of fortifications or military and naval ba and of military training of the natives for other t police purposes and the defense of territory, and also secure equal opportunities for the trade and co merce of other members of the League.

There are territories, such as Southwest Africa a certain of the South Pacific Isles, which . . . can best administered under the laws of the mandato States as integral portions thereof, subject to t safeguards above mentioned in the interests of t indigenous population.

In every case of mandate, the mandatory Sta shall render to the League an annual report in ref ence to the territory committed to its charge.

The degree of authority, control, or administratio to be exercised by the mandatory State, shall, if n previously agreed upon by the high contracting pa ties in each case, be explicitly defined by the Exec tive Council in a special act or charter.

The high contracting parties further agree to esta lish at the seat of the League a mandatory commi sion to receive and examine the annual reports the mandatory powers, and to assist the League insuring the observance of the terms of all mandate

Article XX. The high contracting parties w endeavor to secure and maintain fair and huma conditions of labor for men, women, and children, . . in all countries . . . and to that end agree to esta lish as part of the organization of the League a pe manent bureau of labor.

Article XXI. The high contracting parties agre that provision shall be made through the instrumentality of the League to secure and maintain fre dom of transit and equitable treatment for the commerce of all States members of the League. . . .

Article XXII. The high contracting parties agre to place under the control of the League all international bureaus already established by genera treaties, if the parties to such treaties consent. Furthermore, they agree that all such internationa bureaus to be constituted in future shall be place under control of the League.

Article XXIII. [Provides that all internationa engagements must be registered with the Secretary General before becoming binding.]

Article XXIV. It shall be the right of the body of delegates from time to time to advise the reconsideration by States members of the League of treaties which have become inapplicable and of international conditions of which the continuance may endanger the peace of the world.

Article XXV. The high contracting parties severally agree that the present covenant is accepted as abrogating all obligations inter se which are inconsistent with the terms thereof, and solemnly engage that they will not hereafter enter into any engagements inconsistent with the terms thereof. . . .

Article XXVI. Amendments to this covenant will take effect when ratified by the States whose representatives compose the Executive Council and by three-fourths of the States whose representatives compose the body of delegates.

CHRISTIANITY and DEMOCRACY

AT A little gathering in New York a few days ago of men observant of the wonderful changes that have taken place in the world, the fact was brought out that the spirit of democracy everywhere followed the preaching of the Gospel of Jesus rist. The one was the immediate corollary of the r. It was pointed out that Christian missions in lands had become centers for the dissemination of ocratic thought, and even those nations which had yet accepted Christ had absorbed the broad, derlying democratic principles which are the out-me of his teachings.

s a further illustration, the speaker alluded to the t that Japan's present government and the in-strial and political leadership of that nation have ome largely democratic, as the result of the impact our Western civilization. Buddhism is now under-ng a struggle to retain its dominant position in panese life. In China, under the new republic, the nciples of democracy have wholly replaced those of ancient empire; yet although there are many ristians in China, including a large proportion of leading men, as a nation she is still Confucian. en in the Mohammedan countries, democratic als are making their way, and the seed of the spel, long planted, is steadily growing. The orgian and Armenian republics, too, may be re-rded as further evidence of the persistent pressure ich the teaching of Jesus imparts toward liberty d justice.

These instances might be multiplied, for it is indis-table that the Gospel unconsciously yet irresistibly comes an agent for universal readjustment. It was oclaimed to the poor, to those who had been onged, to the prisoner and the oppressed, and to all o had, through human selfishness or the tyranny of ir rulers, missed the material good of life. Laveleye, distinguished political economist of the last ntury, declared that if Christianity was taught cording to the spirit of Jesus, "the existing social der of the world would not last a day," so linked up d intertwined is the democratic spirit with his chings. His Gospel is the solvent of the world's oubles, which in the past have set class against class bitter antagonism, distorting the social and eco-mic order and filling the whole earth with scenes of olence and bloodshed. It was true in the past as it today, that the only way to make the world safe democracy is to make it a Christian world.

NATIONS have souls. We speak of the spirit of a city, of a community, of an individual. National construction even on the material side, it has been isely said, will fail, unless there is spiritual recon-ruction also. The older nations that "forgot od" and followed their own ambitions and lusts ssed away, as was foretold. It is related that a rty of travelers, among whom were several famous xplorers, while passing through the Arabian desert, ught the shelter of a rock to escape a violent sand-torm. When the danger had passed, they found that e blown sand had uncovered a boulder which howed traces of human workmanship. Digging, ey found the ruins of an unknown city. They also ncovered a tablet on which were inscribed some lines an unknown tongue. They took it with them to lexandria and Cairo, and after many efforts the key o the strange language was found and the transla-ion read:

"My name, Anaximander, king of kings. Look on y works, ye mighty, and despair!"

Who was he, and what was his kingdom? History as no record, and the world has forgotten that such a ne ever lived.

Hugo Grotius wrote three centuries ago that he egarded the Gospels as "the ultimate source of Christian laws regarding war and peace," a con-lusion which is now widely recognized. The oundation-stone of our republic has become the sub-structure of the new order—the fundamental expres-sion of that universal democracy which will yet bring to pass "the parliament of man, the federation f the world." Christianity is based on the divine atherhood and human brotherhood. "All ye are brethren," said Jesus, and his Gospel makes all humanity equal before its Maker.

"Christianity," writes Professor Coe of Union Theological Seminary in his notable volume on "The Psychology of Religion," "is the only religion that gives to the soul of man a better humanity."

Take the map of the world. When Christ came, practically the whole earth lay in spiritual darkness. He left behind him a mere handful of followers, who made up the first Christian congregation, 120 souls all told. Yet at the end of the first century A. D., according to the figures given by Turner the historian, there were 500,000 adherents of the Gospel. We call the roll of the centuries to show the onward progress of Christianity:

Second	Century	2,000,000	Eleventh	Century	70,000,000
Third	Century	5,000,000	Twelfth	Century	80,000,000
Fourth	Century	10,000,000	Thirteenth	Century	75,000,000
Fifth	Century	15,000,000	Fourteenth	Century	80,000,000
Sixth	Century	20,000,000	Fifteenth	Century	100,000,000
Seventh	Century	24,000,000	Sixteenth	Century	125,000,000
Eighth	Century	30,000,000	Seventeenth	Century	155,000,000
Ninth	Century	40,000,000	Eighteenth	Century	200,000,000
Tenth	Century	50,000,000	Nineteenth	Century	350,000,000

And now, in the twentieth century, according to the statistics of a European bureau of acknowledged authority, the total estimated number of Christians in the world at the present time is 564,510,000. There was but one halting period in the whole procession—in the thirteenth century—which was due to great world persecutions in the decades immediately preceding. At this rate of progress, and with vastly increased momentum, how long will it take for Christianity to democratize the world?

WE HAVE crowded into these last four years centuries of experience. They have given us all a new perspective on life and its meaning. The first-fruits of the war have been increased unity of faith in God and impulsive conviction of the brotherhood of man as essential to the working out of the divinely appointed destiny of the nations. Religion is not only democratizing the world, but it is itself becoming democratized. Old barriers of religious division have been disappearing, while kingdoms and empires have been crumbling. It is the time of overturning. The Golden Rule, which is the essence of Christian democracy, is leavening all humanity with the spirit of international friendliness and helpfulness. It will presently be found as practical and indispensable between nations as between individuals, for it is the law of righteousness and essential to the world's safety and happiness.

Dr. S. Earle Taylor, a leading layman, has expressed the situation in these forceful words:

> "The world cannot be reconstructed by a formula. No mere agreement among diplomats can heal the wounds of war. No international constitution, however perfect in its phrasing, and no mere economic revolution, however sweeping in its scope, can bring about the universal reign of peace and good will among men. World Democracy can and will be realized only through the practical application of the religion of Jesus, and nothing but faithlessness on the part of the Christian Church need delay its realization now."

Every program of world organization in the past has fallen to the ground, because they were not in accordance with the one principle that is vital—that of Christian Democracy. The strong nations were not willing to make the sweeping sacrifice of power, distinction, authority and ancient prestige. They were not ready for the doctrine which involves that sacrifice. Now the souls of the nations have been awakened. They are beginning to understand that the only path to enduring national development is the path of sacrifice which is indicated in the broad Democracy of Christianity and its proclamation of the duties of brotherly love, fellowship and service. It was Lowell who pointed out that "the Church herself was the first organized Democracy." This thought had been in the minds of thinkers in other lands. Carlyle indeed went so far as to declare that "Democracy itself will accomplish the salutary change from delusive to real, and make a new, blessed world of us by and by."

IN HIS timely book on Christian Internationalism, Dr. William Pierson Merrill asks: "Christian Internationalism, is there such a thing? Can there be such a thing? Can there be Christian nations living together like Christian gentlemen? If not, we may as well stop talking about 'Christian civilization.'" Yet the conviction that the spirit of Christian internationalism has been awakened among the peoples, has taken hold of the strongest and clearest thinkers both in and out of the Church. It is persistent and persuasive. Why should it be a thing impossible? Christianity is either for all men, as Jesus said, or it is totally unfitted for the world. A Gospel which could apply to only a comparative few would never leaven the nations. No such Gospel would justify the Divine Commission. There are extremists who yet hold that Christianity and the way of the modern world are irreconcilable. They tell you "It can't be done!" yet neither they themselves nor any considerable body of men anywhere have ever seriously made the trial. What has happened in the case of individuals and communities can become true of nations. As Dr. Merrill has pointed out, "the most truly Christian cause, the holiest, the most exciting and most adventurous, is the Christianizing of international relations. Our patriotism, however ardent or beautiful, must not stop at the border of our own land; it must reach out to the whole world." Christianity is world citizenship. Not only the social life of nations, but their political, industrial and economic life, will yet be lived in obedience with the teachings of the rightful Sovereign, Jesus Christ.

"WHEN will this great change come to pass?" we ask ourselves. God's ways are not our ways, nor his thoughts our thoughts. The greatest of changes may come without observation. Four years ago the world was apathetic, forgetful, spiritually asleep. Suddenly, without observation, it finds the change in process. It may not have come in the manner they expected; yet it is here. We find the principles which Jesus taught enunciated in the language of international statesmanship, yet unmistakably recognizable. These principles we now see applied not to groups and communities, but to nations and races. We see too that Christianity, in its simplest interpretation, is common sense, kindness and brotherly love. Who shall say that the spirit of Christ is not winning all men to his teachings, and inspiring them to think in the terms of Christian common sense and kindness? Kings and emperors have been set adrift and the common people are coming into their own. It is the day of World Democracy, which, as President Wilson has repeatedly declared, "is to make this world a better place to live in."

It has fallen to the lot of America to lead the way. America, the Pathfinder, has given a far-reaching refulgence to the lamp of Liberty. She has succored the prostrate peoples and fought the battle of the weak against the strong, and now she is seeking to give them justice and security through the League of Nations, the organization of which was announced to the world as practically complete on the anniversary of the birthday of Lincoln, the martyr President, whose immortal words at Gettysburg, fifty-five years ago, still ring throughout the world: "that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

That is Christian Democracy in its ultimate sense—the spirit which is destined to bring to the race of men a new revelation of God, and of life, liberty and happiness.

The League of Nations and Religion

THE principles of President Wilson, upon which the nations based their peace deliberations, are principles of justice. But they are more. They go beyond exact justice to the higher plane of mutual support, service and sacrifice. This is a Christian ideal, and Dr. Charles E. Jefferson next week clearly, skilfully and with rare penetration draws the parallel between religion and the League of Nations.

The Salvation Army through its doughnut has won enduring fame, yet the doughnut was just an incident, though sometimes there were as many as 8,000 of these incidents a day. But that is Margaret Sangster's story, and she tells it next week.

Money is often a burden. An endowed church is—well, read Too Much Elnathan next week and see what a blessing it is to be rid of money.

The orphans of the Fukien Homes are a Christian Herald opportunity. Next week we bring them before you in word and picture.

Bolshevism Meets Its Waterlo

MAYOR OLE HANSON of Seattle, unknown on February 6, stood before the nation on February 9 as a man of courage, force and resource The general strike called at Seattle was planned to be a demonstration in America of the beauties of Bolshevism. The City Hall was to be seized, and the government of the city taken over. In a special despatch to the New York Times on February 8, Mayor Hanson declared the strike had been an attempt of the I. W. W. leaders who had secured partial control of the Central Labor Council to duplicate the revolution in Petrograd, that labor planned to run everything, and even janitors and engineers in the schools were called out. He issued a proclamation declaring that the seat of Government was at the City Hall, organized a thousand extra police and instructed them to shoot on sight anyone causing disorder and got ready for business. He declared· "They knew that I meant business and they started no trouble. This was an attempted revolution which they expected to spread all over the United States. It never got to first base and it never will if the men in control of affairs will settle all traitors and anarchists if they start anything. Law and order are supreme in our State." On February 9 the unions began to fall away from the strike, street cars began running, and on February 10 at noon the strike was called off. On February 10 a Government special passed through Chicago bearing fifty-four foreign anarchists and members of the I. W. W., the majority from Seattle, who were being deported according to the provision of emigration law. The special proceeded to New York and the deportees were taken to Ellis Island pending their sailing.

The Week in the World's News

BOLSHEVISTS REIGN BY TERROR. At the Senate investigation of Bolshevism in Washington on February 11 and 12 Dr. W. C. Huntington, former commercial attaché of the American Embassy in Petrograd and Rev. Geo. S. Simons, Supt. of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Russia and Finland, recently returned, presented evidence as to the terrorism by which the Bolsheviki maintained their power. Dr. Huntington showed Soviet orders demanding the murder of opponents of the Reds. One order declared: "At the slightest attempt to resist shootings of masses of hostages should be begun without fail." He declared that the Bolshevik reign was an absolute reign of terror and that the Bolsheviki admitted that and were ready to justify it. He declared that Russia so far as civilization was concerned was a dead land. He produced evidence to show that the Bolsheviki were appropriating large sums of money for propaganda in an attempt to spread Bolshevism among every people in the world. He said that many of the agitators in Russia had flocked back to Russia from New York's East Side and that the Red Guards raped, ravaged and destroyed women at will, and that a catchechism of Atheism had been added to the curriculum of the Russian Public Schools. He said that the Bolshevists declared that all misery was due to the superstition that there is a God.

NO CLASS CAN RULE ENGLAND. Premier Lloyd George addressing the House of Commons on February 11 declared that the Peace Conference was making good progress, especially along the line of placing the responsibility for the war and the question of indemnities. He declared that the most grave matter before the Parliament was the question of labor unrest, of which there was no doubt, but the cause of which it was not so easy to find out. He expressed the opinion that the unrest was based on the general fear of unemployment, the better education of the working classes, bad housing and crowding. The Premier declared that the Parliament must take these questions up and provide a satisfactory settlement.

As Parliament opened on February 11 the strikes in Belfast appeared to be in process of solution. The government had reached an impassé with the Welsh Miner's Union, and on the 12th it appeared that a strike of the 1,500,000 workers representing the Miner's Federation, the National Union of Railway Men and the National Transport Workers Federation could only be avoided by concessions, which neither side appeared ready to make. The unions were asking shorter hours and higher pay. The government asked them to return to work pending an investigation. J. H. Thomas, General Secretary of the Railway Unions, told the Commons, on February 13, that there were 1,000,000 unemployed, and that Britain might any moment be plunged into one of the greatest industrial upheavals ever known.

HOUSE PASSES REVENUE BILL. The War Revenue Bill with taxes expected to raise $6,077,200,000 in 1919, was passed by the House, 310 to 11, on February 8. The Senate accepted the conference report on February 13 without a roll call. Senator Smoot declared that the Senate Post Office Committee should conduct a thorough investigation of the whole question of second-class postage before July 1. He said he was not opposed to taxing second-class matter if necessary, "But," he said, "don't chop this country up into zones. No other civilized country has done it. It is mortifying to me to know that a magazine may be sent to the farthest corner of India for less than from my state to an adjoining state."

SUFFRAGE DEFEATED IN SENATE. The National Woman's Suffrage Amendment resolution was lost in the Senate on February 10 by one vote, receiving 55 votes to 29 opposed. On the previous day the National Woman's party conducted a number of its members into the custody of the police by attempting to burn President Wilson in effigy, because he did not force the Senate to adopt the resolution.

HOUSE VOTES FOR BIG NAVY. The House on February 11 by a vote of 281 to 50 passed the Bill providing for a new three-year building program for the navy, and set the time for the beginning of the construction at June, 1920. Chairman Hurley of the Shipping Board, who returned to America on the Leviathan early in February, said that America's merchant marine was able to compete with the merchant ships of any foreign nation, and that America would be able to hold her newly achieved position as a maritime power of the first rank. He said that we now have under our flag 2,072 seagoing vessels of 6,470,396 tons and declared that the wage question was not serious, that high wages prevailed in all merchant shipping, the British seamen receiving only $3.00 less per month than the American, while the Scandinavians in some cases were receiving more.

MUST STOP FIGHTING. London despatches of February 11 declared that the Allied Governments had ordered the Poles and Germans to stop hostilities.

OUR BANKING RESOURCES. The Controller of the Currency on February 9 announced that the banking resources of the country on December 31 amounted to $20,042,224,000, more than twice the resources of eight years ago, when the figure was $9,820,483,000.

SYSTEMATIC GERMAN DESTRUCTION. Facts were made public in Paris, on February 11, which showed that the Germans had set about a systematic destruction of certain industries of France, and that 200 specially assigned experts had completed a report of 482 pages showing the destruction of French industry and the possibilities of German absorption of the French trade. Special attention was paid to the textile, chemical, sugar, metal, leather and milling industries.

HOMEWARD BOUND. The War Department announced on February 12 that, from the date of the armistice to February 8, 287,332 American troops from France and Great Britain, had embarked for the United States. On ruary 7, 215,749 had reached Am can ports. Up to February 10, 27, officers and 1,069,176 men had b
demobilized in the camps at home.
February 1, there were 62,561 men
France being treated for disease 24,484 for wounds, while since the ginning of the war 63,160 sick wounded men had been brought ho

INCOME TAXES MARCH 15. Rum that the date for filing income ta returns would be set forward fr
March 15 to April 15 were denied the treasury on February 11.

EBERT PRESIDENT OF GERMA
The German National Assembly session at Weimar on February 10 and adopted a temporary constitution p viding for the reorganization of German Empire on a Democratic b with a State commission correspond to the American Senate. An atten was unsuccessful to substitute the w Republic for the word Empire. T salary of the President was limited one million marks. On February Frederic Ebert was elected President the German State by a vote of to 379. Philip Scheidemann was pointed Chancellor. In accepting presidency Herr Ebert declared: "I administer my office not as the leader a single party. I belong to the Social party and cannot forget my origin a training. We shall combat dominati by force to the utmost in whate direction it may come. We wish found our state only on the basis right, and on our freedom to shape destiny at home and abroad."

GARRETSON WARNS OF LABOR R
INGS. At a hearing before the Intersta
Commerce Committee of the House
February 11, A. B. Garretson, Preside of the Order of Railway Conduct declared that any attempt to redu wages would strengthen discontent a that "we are as near to a powder mi as one can imagine, a careless spa may start a conflagration." Mr. Garr son said that the world owes eve man a living, and the only way to sh the burden of supporting the men fro society to the m himself is to see th
he gets work wh
he needs it.

NO BEER N
WORK. Under th slogan some of t labor unions in t
East are plannin to organize a spec strike to be call coincident with t enforcing of prob bition on July
They demand t modification of t prohibition law permit the man
facture and sale
beer and light wine claiming that t employment of million men is i
volved in the enforc
ment of prohibitio

PLANNED T
CRUSH FOE. Secr
tary of War Bake on February 1 stated that had th war gone on f another year th perfection whic had been reache
in engines of des truction would have brought abou losses equal to those of the four pr ceding years. He said that in all armie 7,300,000 men had been killed in actio or died of wounds, while deaths i prison camps had brought the tota to 9,000,000. He declared also tha the total cost of the war to all th nations involved was in the neighbor hood of $193,000,000,000.

Photo from Underwood & Underwood

The Seattle strike. Crowds on the street receiving extra papers distributed by the special police

Orient Welcomes Medical Missionaries

Doctor Rosetta S. Hall Tells Some Interesting Incidents in Twenty-Eight Years' Experience in Korea

Former Governor Matsunaga of Pyeng Yang and his family. His wife, a college graduate, was active in educational work for women

MRS. ROSETTA SHERWOOD HALL, M. D., for twenty-eight years a medical missionary in Korea, is now in the United States upon her fourth furlough. Some of the older readers of the Christian Herald may remember that upon Dr. Hall's first furlough she was, for one memorable summer, the examining and resident physician for the Christian Herald Children's Home at Mont-Lawn on the Hudson.

After a quarter of a century of medical work and continuous effort for the training of Korean women doctors and the education of the blind and deaf in Korea, Dr. Hall was presented with a unique certificate of merit from the Korean Government, reading literally: "From early time you have done not a few noble deeds in regard to education and benevolence, and you are indeed a good example to the people. Accordingly, the Governor-General of Chosen awards one set of silver cups to you, as a token of its appreciation.

"31st October, Fourth year of Taisho.

"Count Terauchi, Governor-General of Chosen."

The day appointed for this presentation was that celebrated as the birthday of the Emperor of Japan, and Governor Matsunaga, the Civil Governor of the province of Pyeng Yang, made the presentation with great ceremony. It was the first time a Korean missionary had been thus honored.

On her recent voyage, Dr. Hall took passage from Kobe, Japan, upon the Shunyo Maru, and when she reached Yokohoma, she learned that she was to have audience at Tokyo with Count Terauchi, the former Governor-General of Korea and then Premier of the Japanese Empire. This audience took place at the official residence at Nagata Cho, May 6. Dr. Hall was already well known to His Excellency, and she was accompanied by his good friend, Bishop M. C. Harris, and by Miss Matilde Spencer, her hostess, a pioneer missionary in woman's work in Japan.

Less formality than usual was observed. The interpreter was allowed to be seated, and Count Terauchi made Dr. Hall feel quite at home. He told her of the illness of the Countess, and, with fatherly interest, he sketched a recent experience he had in the capital with a Korean woman student. This is what he said of the new Korean women doctors whose pictures Dr. Hall presented, his language being officially interpreted by his private secretary, Dr. Ikebe:

"H. E. Count Terauchi is pleased and satisfied to learn that your Korean girls, three in number, have graduated from the Government Medical School, and are given license to practice medicine without further examination. They will undoubtedly not spare their noble efforts for Korean women and children. Their future success is sincerely hoped for. The people will be happy when many girls follow their example."

This last remark is very true. Two of Dr. Hall's Korean patients have donated twenty and thirty yen each toward the three hundred yen (about $160) needed for a medical scholarship, and one wealthy Korean is paying for a whole scholarship. A number more are needed, not only for the study of medicine, but for pharmacy and dentistry, and for the salaries ($300 each) of the young women already graduated, two of whom Dr. Hall left in charge of the Harris Hospital and Baldwin Dispensary at the East Gate, Seoul, while the third went to assist Dr. Mary M. Cutler at the "Hospital of Extended Grace" in Pyeng Yang, Dr. Hall's former work.

The following quotations from a letter of the Corresponding Secretary of the Society which sent Dr. Hall to the foreign field presents the situation tersely:

"I wondered how you could leave the East Gate Hospital before Dr. Stewart returned, and now I want to sing a doxology with you concerning those three medical graduates with their licenses to practice, two doing your work in Seoul and one of them in Pyeng Yang. It surely is worth all the life, energy, prayer and fight that you have given to accomplish this splendid end! As the list grows, it seems wonderful—a dozen more already in school, a dozen more preparing, two studying pharmacy, one dentistry and scores of nurses, active and preparing. I do not wonder that you have come home with a happy heart. You have worked so hard for just this result. May God grant great increase to these years of effort. He knows Korea's need of women workers for women far better than can any one of us. He will show you and others how to meet the need financially."

As to the need of women qualifying in medicine for the mission field, some light may be gained from what Yun Tchi-Ho, Korean General Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., said in a recent interview. Being asked the question—"Are there social conditions in your field which call for separate hospitals for women and men?" he replied, "I can give no better answer than by stating the following fact: Some time ago Dr. Oh, of the Severance Hospital, was called by a 'yangban' family to see a lady who had some kind of trouble in one of her knees. The doctor was made to wait in an ante-chamber fully half an hour, being 'teaed and caked' to the full in the meantime. Finally, the doctor was conducted to the lady's room. You may well imagine his astonishment when he found that, through an aperture in a silk curtain, part of the lady's knee which was affected was exposed—and no more. Dr. Oh simply declined to have anything to do with the case; saying he was not able to diagnose a case by looking at a small part of the knee through an opening in a curtain. And the family would not yield a step, so the doctor left the room. Formerly, when a queen or a high-class woman had to be examined medically, a silk thread was tied around her waist and the physician was asked to listen to the beats of the pulse by holding one end of the thread to his ear. That was all he could do, and on such an examination he was expected to prescribe remedies for the patient. By way of concession, in other families the thread was dispensed with, the lady's hand was wrapped in a handkerchief and the wrist was passed through a hole in a curtain to allow the physician to feel the pulse. Many of the absurd notions of female seclusion have passed away. Now ladies of high-class families in case of necessity allow themselves to be examined by men physicians. Still it is so evident that female doctors are preferred by women that it requires no sort of argument."

Dr. Hall, standing at the left, and the first three women to graduate from the Government Medical College at Seoul

It is not only for work in the Orient that women should qualify in medicine. Many more college women should take up the work for service in this country, Dr. Hall declares.

"It is as natural for a woman to be a doctor as it is to be a mother," she says, and there is no reason why she should not be both—Dr. Hall is a mother with a son. She deprecates the shortage of American women who are preparing to fill this immeasurable field of need, which English women and others are entering more and more.

As Dean Martha Tracy of the Woman's Medical College of Pennsylvania (Dr. Hall's alma mater) said in an address to college women: "Others can make Red Cross dressings and fill shells, —you only can fill the thinning ranks of physicians."

And you, women, who are blest with abundance of this world's goods, who have given your sons to your country and backed them with your dollars, should give some of your means to train physicians, who may then be ready to care for the wives and babies of the boys who have rendered such splendid service "Over There."

Our Chinese Orphans as Farmers

MISSIONARY HENRY J. MAIER, of Tsaohsien, China, writes under date of July 8, telling of the excellent progress of the forty boys and girls who have been trained and educated at the Mission Orphanage. "Some of the others," he says, "have been married; some have gone to their relatives who are now able to take care of them, and others have run away of their own accord.

"But no matter in what manner they have left us, our prayers will follow them, and we know the Gospel they have heard while here will not return void. So to the many who have assisted and are assisting us in this great work I would say, 'Your labor is not in vain in the Lord.'

"Though this country, and especially this vicinity, has been very restless this past year, yet we can say that God has been our refuge and strength in time of trouble. The work of spreading the Gospel has been unhindered and a number have been saved. As most of the richer people from the villages have moved into the walled cities for protection, we have a good opportunity to give them the Gospel, and our orphan boys and girls are doing their part in this.

"There has been a good spirit among our orphans this past year, and a number have been saved and baptized. May their lives tell for the Master, who has done so much for them. We wish to thank all your readers for their kind assistance in this noble work of 'rescuing the perishing.'"

The letter of this missionary enclosed a photograph showing some of the orphan boys, now grown up into big strong lads, loading and hauling wheat on an ox-cart. We are sorry there is not room to reproduce it here, to show the good patrons of these children and all of our friends how China's orphans helped to win the war, and are prepared to serve their nation and the world in these fair days of peace.

Pyeng Yang girls who studied medicine

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

Secretary
EDWARD S. BABCOX

President and Publisher
GRAHAM PATTERSON

Vice Pres. and Mgr. Editor
GEORGE H. SANDISON

No Class War in America

NOTWITHSTANDING the disorder in Seattle and some other of our cities, Bolshevism cannot thrive in America as it does in parts of Europe, because it has here no real grievances to feed on. There can be no class war where there are no fixed classes.

In America, more than anywhere else, it is three generations from shirtsleeves to shirtsleeves. There is no single hereditary fortune in America that is not being split up. Aristocracy and intrenched wealth cannot exist without primogeniture and entail, and our laws know neither.

Our country presents many fine examples of the man who begins life in his shirtsleeves and ends employing thousands. Few of our rich and really forceful men began otherwise. The whole list of America's multimillionaires contains scarcely the name of a single man who did not start in life comparatively poor. They began work in their shirtsleeves, and it was the work, with the strength of aspiration and the quickness of intellect that work promotes, that made them masters.

And there is also a very long list of men who began life rich and are ending it poor. It is an unwritten but almost infallible law that the boy pampered in wealth has a slim chance in the contest with the poor boy whose mind and muscles have been trained in toil.

We talk about "classes" in this country without knowing the word's meaning. We have social grades, educational levels and ranks of riches; but fixed classes, in society, learning or wealth, are absolutely impossible.

The way up is open to all, and new men are constantly climbing upward, while others, weakened by wealth, its worries and indulgences, sink back to common service.

Carrying Needless Burdens

AMERICANS are the largest-hearted people in the world. They want to help wherever help is needed. They respond readily to a properly worded appeal. That is just as we would have it, but in that readiness to help lies a danger. During the war we have, as a nation, supported with our hearts and our millions various organizations which have arisen and have been adapted to render necessary service. Now the war is over. The need for these services will end with the mustering out of the last soldier, but already we are seeing evidences that some of the men who left good positions to direct these enterprises are beginning to become attached to the jobs and to see visions of a permanent work which shall grow out of this temporary effort and shall continue its spirit and activities into the years of peace to come. We think the most patriotic thing these men can do is to resist any such temptation, and to look about them for the best place which civil life and constructive effort open to them. Some day there is going to be a great sweeping away of non-essential organizations and of unnecessary machinery which have served their purpose. We must go ahead in all good and worthy activities, but nothing is to be gained by carrying over into the busy days of peace and progress impediments now useless and out of date.

A Jewish Commonwealth

THREE of the great Zionist organizations have submitted to the Peace Conference, through their representatives, a proposal for the ultimate formation of a Jewish commonwealth in Palestine. It is understood to be on the lines already suggested by the American Jewish Congress. Nothing is said concerning a protectorate. Jewish opinion is divided as to which nation would be most acceptable, should a protectorate be ultimately decided upon. France and the United States have both been discussed in this connection by the Zionists. France does not regard her treaty with England, made at the beginning of the war, relative to the control of Syria, as effective unless approved by the League of Nations; indeed, it is probable that all treaties and agreements made in war time will be voided, failing approval of the League.

The idea of a Palestinian commonwealth is not a new one. It has been cherished many years, but only since the great war has it become a really living project. Jacob H. Schiff has declared himself definitely in favor of Palestine being made a homeland for the Jewish people, and this is the united aim of the Zionist organizations today. Progress made even under discouraging conditions in the last ten years has strengthened this purpose. Recent political and territorial changes in Russia, it is believed, will be followed by conditions which in Mr. Schiff's opinion will cause the distinctive life and the concentration of the Russian Jewish communities to disappear. This, he holds, makes a homeland for the Jewish people a necessity. There is no other spot on earth toward which they are so strongly drawn, both by association and by the hope of rebuilding the ancient fatherland so that it may yet become the joy of the whole earth.

No Time Like Now

NOW is the bright period of reconstruction, of readjustment, of boundless opportunities for service, spiritual and material, individual and international.

The beginning and the ending of the world's greatest endeavor are comprehended in that little word NOW.

It is short, but it stretches all the way from inception to completion. It is little, and it indicates but an instant, yet it fills all time, and it will fill all eternity.

NOW is the secret of filling our days and our souls to repletion.

All that we are or have, all that we ever were or had, all that we ever will be or have, all our dreams, hopes, possessions, loves, associations, are ours by virtue only of that slender thread of an instant, NOW.

NOW is all we have. The past is gone, the future is yet to come, but NOW is ours.

The value of the time we use we can measure in a way, but who can ever know the value of the time that has been lost?

True, there are some things that cannot be done now. We have not the material for them. We have not yet the skill. It is not time for them to be done. But commonly even these can be begun now while the desire and the intention are fresh and strong. To begin a thing is to make oneself a part of it.

NOW is ours. It is all we have. And we never shall have it again.

Never again will the individual or the world know the opportunities that are presented now.

All One Family

ON SEVERAL occasions during services in the Brooklyn Tabernacle, the late Dr. Talmage had on the platform, and taking part in the exercises, clergymen of other churches and denominations. After a forenoon service of this character, and while the crowds were leaving the big auditorium, an influential Tabernacle member, chatting with the pastor, remarked: "Isn't it rather unusual, not to say anything further, to have men of different creeds speak from your platform, Doctor?" A broad smile lit up the dominie's face. "No," he replied, "not as long as they hear the Gospel preached or assist in its preaching. God is no respecter of persons; he draws no fine distinctions, as some of us do. You may remember," he went on, "that Jesus, who spoke to the multitudes, no doubt had in his audiences Scribes, Pharisees, priests, publicans and sinners, some of whom, very likely, were among the converts who afterward formed the nucleus of that pioneer congregation of 120 souls, when they met for their first service in that upper room in Jerusalem. There was no distinction then—why should there be now?

"I can recall a dream," he went on. "It was many years ago. I came to a great city filled with beautiful, stately buildings. It was impressed upon me that it must be the city of the New Jerusalem. The wide, spacious streets were filled with people. I asked a man, who stood near the gate as I entered, who these people were, and he replied: 'They are of every nation and of every tongue.' Then I said, 'I suppose there must be a Presbyterian place of worship somewhere, and if so I should like to be shown there.' But th person addressed shook his head and said: 'No, ther are no such people here.' 'What, no Presbyterians Then Congregationalist or Baptist?' 'No, we know none,' with another shake of his head. 'Then th must be certainly a Reformed Church somewhere I went on, and I asked him concerning the Lutherans Episcopalians and Methodists, but to each inquiry h gave a negative shake of the head—he knew of non there. Amazed, I said, 'Who are all these people then—this immense multitude?' 'These, like all th others who come here from the earth, belong to th family of the redeemed; we know no others.'

"Then, in my dream, there was impressed upon m the tremendous truth that there was no place i heaven for denominationalism, or sects, or distinction in belief, but that all there were one great united famil of the saved. You see, my friend, the Gospel levels al inequalities and irons out all differences, so that all ar one in Christ Jesus. Now, I am satisfied there are positively no denominations in heaven, and I have eve thought," he added reflectively, "that it might be a good thing if we could so patch up our differences tha there might be none here either."

Great movements usually progress slowly at th outset, gathering momentum as they go on. This i illustrated in the crusade for Church Unity, which, having gone through the preliminary stages, has now completed an organization in which all the great denominations are represented. Committees have been formed with special duties assigned to each, and the way is being prepared for a continent-wide survey, designed to include all evangelical bodies. In this organization the ablest men have been selected, and we think a wise choice has been made of those who are not merely in hearty sympathy with the work but who fully comprehend its far-reaching purpose. Readers who have watched the spiritual development of the new era know that it does not aim at the obliteration of denominationalism, but simply to unite all the existing bodies more closely than heretofore in bonds of Christian fellowship and service. We believe this will be accomplished and that in the near future it can literally be said of the Church, with all its branches, knit together, that it is a mighty army: "We are not divided, all one body we; one in hope and doctrine, one in charity"—consecrated with a single desire to spread the Gospel until it reaches all lands and all people.

The Christian Herald will record every forward step of this great advance, which is by no means confined to our own land. The situation is one that kindles the hope that the time may not be far distant when the world, as a whole, will accept the religion of Jesus Christ. A world-wide league of the spiritual forces of Christendom has the whole field open for it. It needs only courage and faith to enter in and take possession.

Church Spirit in the Loans

THE various Liberty Loan campaigns have brought members of different communions into closer contact and promoted a better and more sympathetic understanding. Church union has become more nearly realized as all of the churches have shared in the spiritual enrichment of sacrifice and service for high ideals.

The Victory Liberty Loan which will soon be offered should strengthen these bonds. The united work done in days of war must be continued until all of those who have fought abroad for the spread of American ideals have returned to recognize what has been accomplished along the same lines by the organized forces of Christianity in the United States.

This is to be the last of the popular loans; that is to say, this is the last opportunity for us to use the appeal of our government as a text for thrift, for service, and in some cases for the glory of temporary sacrifice.

The more that is done for the boys who have to be brought home, and for the boys who cannot yet come home because they have their own job to finish, the more definitely and forcefully can we present the Gospel of the Prince of Peace to the hundreds of thousands who shall return to America with new cravings for the consolation of the spiritual life.

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted By FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D. D.

Bollworm Exterminated

WHEN the pink bollworm, the most destructive enemy of cotton known in the world, was introduced in Texas
Mexico in 1916, the Ameri-took measures for its eradica-
The pink bollworm, comd with whose capacity for de-tion the boll weevil is almost less, has for years reduced the n output of Egypt, Mexico South America by half, but t regulations against importa-of cotton plants and diseased had kept America free from the
Its presence in Texas was dis-red before it had spread bed a small area, and this was imiately quarantined and the k of eradication was begun by Department of Agriculture. So plete was this work of extermion that not one pink bollworm, larva or moth has been found in the quarantined areas or where in Texas during the sea-of 1918. This gives ground for ecting the ultimate complete rmination of the pink bollworm
Texas. If this result is achieved will be, in the opinion of the artment, "the largest successful omological experiment of the d in history." The extermination he pink bollworm illustrates the gress that modern science is makin killing these enemies of the den, the field, the forest and the
ly. And Christ, the great phyan, has come to cure the diseases
t would destroy the soul of man.
od showed unto me, and behold, formed grasshoppers in the begin-g of the shooting up of the latter wth." (Amos 7 : 1.)

Unnaturalized Aliens

PPROXIMATELY one-tenth of the population of the United ates is composed of unnaturalized ens, according to Raymond F. ist, Deputy Commissioner of Natalization, who declared that such ondition would not be permitted any other country, and appealed Americans to help in making izens of alien residents. He said ere were 10,500,000 such persons this country who still retain their legiance to the lands of their birth.
is a shame for people to come to r country and enjoy its glorious vantages and then be little enough terested in it to declare loyalty to
It is a crime to come to our untry a subject of another country
d entertain hatred for our instituons and fight against them. Such rsons should be either shut in hind bars or sent back to the untries from which they came and here their heart is. Many for-gners have taken out their papers nd become naturalized and make lendid citizens. Paul tells the urch members at Ephesus that ey had been aliens, but had be-me citizens of Christ's Kingdom.
e says: "Now therefore ye are no ore strangers and foreigners, but llow citizens with the saints, and of e household of God." (Eph. 2 : 19.)

Portugal's Fishing Trade

THE republic of Portugal with its seacoast has for centuries been ne of the greatest fish markets of the orld. The war greatly interfered ith this trade. Now the war is over, reparations are being made to start up nd enlarge the fish canneries and send, in larger quantities than ever, cod, mackerel, sardines and many other fish to the food markets of the world. A correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger the other day gave this account of a visit to some of the fish-preserving factories in Portugal: "From the Olhao sardine-packing factories we went on to Villa Real de San Antonio, the center of the tunny fishery. The tunny is a noble fish, and the province of Algarve has no more stirring sight to offer than the raising of the tunny nets. The fish, which are very timid despite their great size, are skilfully driven into a species of corral formed by encircling nets. The fish once inclosed, the boats draw round, and as they do so the net is raised. As it approaches the surface the fish are exposed, harpooned as they appear, and skilfully drawn aboard the boats. In the factory the great fish are hung in long lustrous rows, heads down. Below extend great tables, where, after washing, cleaning and scraping, the dense, dark red flesh is cut up to be boiled in rows of boilers not unlike laundry coppers. Thence it is taken, sorted and conveyed to the tinning section, from which it is soon to issue sealed, labeled and ready for ship or rail. The fisheries question is one of those most bitterly contested between Portugal and Spain. Spain has long been anxious to secure the right of fishing in Portuguese waters, in exchange for a similar liberty to Portuguese fishers as regards Spanish territorial waters. The Portuguese fishing community contend, however, that the Spanish waters are poor beside their own, and jealously demand the maintenance of the legal territorial limits." The Hebrews used fish as an important article of diet. "And they gave him a piece of a broiled fish, and of an honeycomb, and he took it and did eat before them." (Luke 24, 42, 43.)

© Underwood & Underwood

Theodore Roosevelt National Memorial

SINCE the world began there has seldom been such universal lamentation over the death of any one man as over that of Theodore Roosevelt. February 9 was adopted by Congress as its National Memorial Day, and governors of various states, mayors of cities, patriotic and church societies of all kinds, held services in every city and village of the land. Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, who was a college mate at Harvard and a lifelong friend, made the oration at the great national service in Washington, in the House of Representatives. The two houses of Congress, the Supreme Court, the Cabinet, a former President, the generals of the army, the admirals of the navy, the diplomatic corps, and a host of leading citizens were present at the exercises. Senator Lodge began his address as follows: "A tower is fallen, a star is set! Alas! Alas! for Selim! The words of lamentation from the old Moorish ballad which in boyhood we used to recite must, I think, have risen to many lips when the world was told that Theodore Roosevelt was dead. But whatever the phrase, the thought was instant and everywhere. Variously expressed, you heard it in the crowds about the bulletin boards, from the man in the street and the man on the railroads, from the farmer in the fields, the women in the shops, in the factories and in the home." He ended his address with these words: "So Valiant-for-Truth passed over, and all the trumpets sounded for him on the other side." Judge Charles E. Hughes made an able address before the Republican Club of New York City, and great men addressed assemblies in every community. I drape with crape this picture of our hero, my warm personal friend for twenty-five years; but over it I put the Stars and Stripes, and above it the Cross of Christ; and the picture thus draped has sorrow, intensest patriotism and brightest hope for the inspiration of the millions of our nation. "He being dead yet speaketh." (Heb. 11 : 4.)

America's Fire Record

THE losses from fire per capita in the United States in 1913 were $2.10; in France 49c; in England 33c; in Germany 28c; in Italy, Austria and Switzerland 25c each, and in Holland 11c. It seems hardly possible, and yet the figures show that the loss per capita from fire in this country is more than that of all the seven other countries combined. Is there any wonder that a "Fire Prevention Day" is set apart, and that the whole nation should be acquainted with the alarming facts and stop this wanton destruction? We are more to be condemned as a people because many if not most of the fires could have been prevented. The official report of the National Board of Fire Underwriters for Greater New York says: "The largest single causes of fires last year were the careless handling of cigars, cigarettes and smoking pipes, and children playing with matches." This carelessness which caused so many of the 22,083 fires in New York City is manifested throughout the whole country. This carelessness is criminal, and is punished as a crime in some countries, and may have to be branded as such by our statute books if there shall not be an immediate and radical reform in this matter. It is from the small causes, the cigar, the cigarette, the pipe, the match in the child's hand, the great fires spring. This fact is thus employed by the Apostle to illustrate the danger of an evil tongue: "Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth." (James 3 : 5.)

Violins Full of Love

TWO rare old violins, said to be a Cremona and a Stradivarius, were cherished through twenty-five years of poverty by Mrs. Sarah Maul, aged eighty-five, until her death. They had belonged to her husband, John Maul, a former member of the Cleveland Opera House orchestra and prominent in Chicago musical circles. She lived on meager charity rather than part with them, although they were worth thousands of dollars. As in the nursery rhyme the cat was in the fiddle, so in the minds of some old-fashioned church people the devil was in the violin, because it was used often in places of questionable amusement. Forgetting that God was in the viol in the temple service, they remembered only its use in the bacchanalian revels thus referred to: "And the harp, and the viol, the tabret, and pipe, and wine, are in their feasts." (Isa. 5 : 12.)

STAY WHERE YOU ARE!

A SERMON

By

*REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

TEXTS—I Cor. 7 : 20 and 24. "Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called . . . therein abide with God."

IT WAS a very restless and perilous spirit of change which had evoked this counsel from the Apostle Paul. So many people were imagining that their Christian life would become more fruitful if only their sphere could be changed, and so there was a general shifting of position and place.

The evangel of the Lord Jesus Christ had come like the breathing of a warm spring wind, and the land was thrilled with the sound of liberation. Everywhere there was a snapping of icy bondage. Everywhere the burden of oppression was being lifted. Everywhere there was a strange, an unfamiliar sense of lightness and liberty. And with all this change of mood, there sprang up a feverish yearning to change one's place, and pursue the glories of the Christian life in more congenial spheres. The slave who had cast off his thraldom, and discovered his own inherent dignity, imagined that that new-found dignity could only be gratified in more favorable surroundings. The believing wife who had an unbelieving husband, or a husband whose relation to the new faith was cynical, hostile, and defiant, could only see one open road, and that was to be found in separation from the husband. And many a common craftsman, engaged in common toil, was beginning to imagine that such labor was trivial and paltry, and altogether unworthy of so highly privileged a child of God.

An evangel, such as he had received, required a herald! Grace, such as he had experienced, demanded a witness! Nothing else than a life was required for such service, and, therefore, farewell the common trade! and farewell, the common tools. "I will follow Thee," and by the following he implied a surrender of the common work. Such is a popular statement of the prevalent conditions. There was a growing dissatisfaction with one's own vocation, and an itching desire for some immediate change and transformation.

NOW what are the apostolic principles in reference to a situation like this? Let me give a few of them; they are as relevant to our modern life as to the people to whom they were first given.

First of all, there is no doubt in the apostle's mind as to what ought to be a Christian's course when his occupation demands connivance with sin. The occupation must be abandoned. If a man is engaged in a business in which he cannot possibly keep clean hands, he must drop it! There can be no compromise on the matter. "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." At all costs and all sacrifice, a man must keep clean hands. "Come ye out from among them and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing."

And a second principle is this: No individual action is legitimate which will jeopardize the interests of the many. No man is permitted to draw a little circle round about his feet and assume that he has enclosed all the interests of the situation.

A man is enjoined to look beyond himself in estimating the issues of his personal deeds. "No man liveth unto himself." A Christian slave might feel that his newly-gained manhood required his freedom, and he might feel justified in seeking that freedom by flight. But it might be that his flight would only add to the burden of those who were still in bondage, and the spirit of tyranny would be inflamed and intensified. "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others."

And here is a third principle: Christianity does not work volcanically, but atmospherically. It does not advance by explosions, but by leaven. Emancipation is not the outcome of violent convulsions, but of silent and gradual pervasions. The Christian religion does not work by gunpowder, but by a secret corrosion, which wears away the ramparts of the devil.

And, lastly, the individual believer is himself to be a propagating center of redeeming grace. He is to remain in the dark place and be its lamp. He is to abide in the corrupt place and be its salt. He is to dwell in soddened and saddened conditions and raise them by the leaven of an exalted life.

These are the apostolic principles, and therefore I do not wonder at the apostolic counsel. He wrote to these shifting, changing people, and counseled them not to seek betterment by indiscretions or by violent action. Stop where you are "with God!" "Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called." "Let every man, wherein he is called, therein abide with God."

NOW, the old problems remain with us in modern conditions. We have the old inclinations, the old dissatisfactions, the old temptations, and therefore the old unrests, and modern Christians have similar feverish ambitions to change their lot. How often have I heard young people say that if only they could get into another business, they would find it easier to live a Christian life! If they could only get into another office! If they could only find another workshop, where the conversation was less lewd and blasphemous! If they could only get into a trade where the temptations were not so fierce! The commercial traveler dreams how differently things would have been had he been made a doctor. The draper has visions of a delectable country, if only he had been permitted to be an artist. The grocer believes that he would have been encircled by favoring grace, if he had been allowed to go to the foreign And the tailor envies the minister, while al time the minister is envying the tailor!

SERVICE

WORK on, however small your sphere may be.
Know this: True service is the best of life.
And, though the path from thorns be never free,
The thought of duty done with peace is rife.

The seed you sow today may help to feed
The hungry, though its harvest others reap.
The fabric that you weave may stay the need
Of some poor shivering being in God's keep.

The stone you lay may help to raise the wall
That will a flood of insurrection quell.
The word you trace, however poor and small,
May help the tide of human thought to swell.

In the white glory of some infinite day,
You may, with mind made great to comprehend,
Gauge the full meaning of this interplay
Of many forces working toward one end.

And even though you never grasp it all
Still be content to do the best you can,
Trusting that whatsoever may befall
Is but a part of the eternal plan.

J. E. DOLSEN.

Well, now, in the vast majority of inst the turn-about would be a fruitless chang think the majority of us are just where we o to be, if only we are there "with God." If be not with us, we should be wrong everyw and everywhere we should be out of joint out of place. Here is the apostolic cou "Abide therein with God." We should go the old conditions with a new Friend. We sh stick to the old calling in the enjoyment new and transfiguring relationship. "With G will make any sphere glorious.

JUST think what even a human fellowship accomplish. What a new color falls on old gray road where you walked alone w you tread it with a new friend! What a di ence it made to Christian when he had enc tered Faithful! What a tremendous cha came into Ellice Hopkins's life when she James Hinton! Yes, magical differences wrought by the creation of new fellowships. wedding often transforms the world.

Let us lift up the principle and apply it to supreme relationship of friendship "with G When we discover this Friend, "all things come new." The bare stones at Wastwater veal extraordinary hues when the sunshine f upon them. And so it is with many a bare ragged lot; wonderful colors adorn it when light of the Lord falls upon it.

That is so with the Desert of Sorrow. W through it alone, and it is all gruesome and bidding; walk through it "with God," and discover "treasures of darkness."

And how this relationship "with God" tra forms every calling! Bring it into the calling a preacher, and every word from his lips vitalized. All his words become sacred vehi of holy power, and they unburden their wond ful wealth into empty waiting souls.

Bring it into the calling of a singer. Ther many a second-rate voice which fills the au ence with the spirit of awe, because the vo itself is the very utterance of our God. Th say that Jenny Lind used to hold her hear spellbound with a mystical something whi the ordinary canons of music could not expla Sankey's voice was a marvelous instrument, cause it was used in fellowship with God.

AND bring it into the calling of the politici The politician, "with God," becomes prophet. That is what it made of Cromw and of Bright, and of ten thousand men w have remained in obscurity, and who have be the very ambassadors of God in their little a unreported sphere.

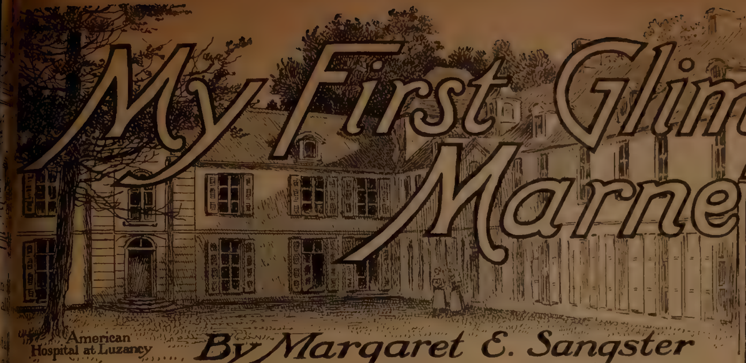
The politician who is in fellowship with G receives elevation, and vision, and range, a amplitude of air. Abide in thy calling, O po tician, but abide there with thy Lord!

And so it is with the calling of the busine man. When God is in the office, and the sho and the market, a new dignity steals into t soul, which manifests itself in the very stri That new dignity gives the man a new sense values, and even though there may be many day when he has not made much money, finds his success in the glories of spiritual attai ment and in the supreme gain of moral rest.

---

* Dr. Jowett's sermons appear on the first Saturday of each month in the Christian Herald.

My First Glimpse of the Marne



By Margaret E. Sangster

The carefully tended graves of American heroes of Château-Thierry and Belleau Wood

IT WAS a great château, once, the American Woman's Hospital at Luzancy. A queen has spent the night in it—I saw the very room that she slept in—and there are dukes and duchesses and counts and countesses buried in the quaint little hapel that stands behind it. It was a great château with secret passages, and violet gardens, and highly ultivated groves of trees. And, even though it is now a hospital, one can still walk through the passages and can still pick violets, even in the dead of winter ime, in the garden places.

I came down to the hospital, in the early evening, rom Paris. The trip was not a long one—I was only on the train for an hour and a half—and because it was getting dark I could not see much of the country that I was passing through. I could see trees, feathery, ghost-like trees; and here and there I could glimpse a farmhouse or the white ribbon of a country road through the dusk. And once when we stopped at a station, stopped only long enough for three French soldiers to crowd into our compartment, I could see the misty lights of a little town. And that was all.

LUZANCY is not on the railroad. It is some five miles from the nearest station, five country miles over real country roads. We were met at that station by a young woman doctor—all of the staff at the hospital are women—who had driven down in one of the ambulances. As I climbed gingerly into the back of it I felt rather like a character in a story book. And I said so to the doctor.

"This isn't true," I told her. "I'm not really here—I'm back in Paris. It's such a short time since I left the city——"

"Oh, you're not in Paris!" laughed the doctor. She had started the car and she swung it, as she spoke, into the village street. "You're way out in the wilds. You're on a road, now, that the Germans marched down in 1914——"

I gasped. "Do you mean to say—?" I began, and stopped. For suddenly, overwhelmingly, the war had been brought home to me. I had never realized, before, how close the Germans came to Paris—I had never known how nearly the war ended in that first, awful autumn time! Forty or fifty miles sound a very safe distance when you sit in front of your own hearth fire and read the figures on the page of a newspaper! But when you've traveled those miles in an hour and a half—well, you understand!

"I never knew," I told the doctor.

"Not many people in America did know—then!" the doctor answered; but France knew!"

We were going slowly over the paving stones of the village streets—round cobblestones they were; and the ambulance clattered across them. I, looking out of the back of the ambulance, saw houses whirling away from me, saw the public square vanish, and the market place fade into the distance. I saw everything dimly, for village streets, in France, are practically unlighted after the sun goes down. But I watched with fascinated eyes. For the houses, looming up in silhouette, were of white stone and the roofs of them were thatched. And there were high walls, and archways, and queer nooks that might, at one time, have held shrines.

"Wouldn't an artist love this place!" I said softly.

"Artists have loved it—great artists," answered the doctor. Deftly she turned the car into a crossroad that led away from the village. "Corot lived here, at one time, and many of his pupils have come back to paint the bits of landscape that he most cared for. . . ."

WE WERE going down a narrow lane with tall trees on either side of it. And then, all at once, we turned another corner. And, in the dim light, I could see that we were following a stream of water.

"What is that brook called?" I questioned idly, "or hasn't it any name——"

The doctor turned squarely in her seat and looked at me.

"Brook?" she exclaimed, "that's not a brook! That's the Marne!"

For the second time that evening I had a thrill. I leaned forward breathlessly.

"Do you mean to tell me," I asked, "that that is the Marne? Why, I thought—" I hesitated. How could I explain that I had expected the Marne to be wide and deep—a great menacing sheet of dark water——

"It measures about thirty-two feet across, "the doctor told me. She might have been reading my thoughts. "It runs along at the foot of the hospital garden. We all love the Marne! It's almost more than a river to us——"

I didn't answer for a moment. I sat very still and watched the silver flicker of the stream that flowed so calmly beside our path. And as I watched I thought of the spirit back of a race who could make an impenetrable barrier of such a slight thing—who had made an impenetrable barrier of it! And suddenly I, too, loved the Marne.

"Yes, it's more than a river," I echoed, "it's a symbol!"

We drove the rest of the way to the hospital in silence.

SET upon the banks of a brave river, bounded by history and legend, surrounded by beauty that one of the greatest French artists has reproduced for all of the world to see, the American Woman's Hospital at Luzancy is an ideal place for the carrying on of an ideal work. The outside of it, with its picturesque courtyards and high garden walls, is typically French; but the inside of it, with its whitewash and tiling and varnish, with its electric lights and sterilized instruments, is strictly American. And the doctors in their neat khaki uniforms are strictly American, too. There are eight of them—efficient, capable, clever women—who have given up their practices in various states to answer the call of France. Doctor M. Louise Hurrell, the chief of staff, is from Rochester, New York; Dr. Charlotte Fairbanks, the surgeon, is from Vermont; and Dr. Doherty, the dentist, is from Milwaukee. Dr. Mary Evans, who has charge of the laboratory work, and Dr. Jay Mainwaring, who takes care of the district route, are both from Connecticut; while Dr. Mary McLachlin, the house physician, is from Oregon. Dr. Frazer, who manages a branch hospital, is from Denver, Colorado; and Dr. Inez Bentley, the superintendent, is from New York City. These eight women cover a territory that takes in all of the country around Soissons and Château-Thierry. They visit dispensaries in a great circle that includes ten large towns and their outlying districts.

The American Woman's Hospital was opened on August 1, 1918. At that time, folk thought that the war was going to last for at least a year—perhaps for a good many years. When the armistice was signed in the autumn, it came as a surprise to the staff of the hospital; but even though the doctors rejoiced at the thought that there would be no more war-torn bodies to mend, they knew that the call of France was still urgent—that there was still work for the hospital to do. For the people of France have been weakened by their four years of horror, and the doctors of nearly every French village are still with the army. The signing of the armistice did not put an end to epidemics of influenza and typhoid and diphtheria. It could not renew broken minds and hearts!

From August 1 to January 1, the doctors of the American Woman's Hospital have seen 902 patients. In that same time they have made 2,393 house calls and 2,106 dispensary visits. In December alone the hospital has cared for 83 surgical cases, and on the very day that I spent with them Dr. Fairbanks performed a very difficult and successful operation on a woman who was well past her three-score years and ten.

I WENT through the long wards with Dr. Hurrell—wards that might have belonged to any well equipped hospital back home. I saw peasant women

Continued on page 256

The hospital staff at Luzancy. First row: Dr. Garnier, Dr. Frazer, Dr. Hurrell, Dr. Hunt. Second row: Madame Pinard, Miss Duncan, Miss Lehman, Dr. Getty, Dr. McLachlin, Dr. Evans, Miss Binet, Miss Whittaker. Third row: Madame de Boresdon, Miss Purvis, Miss Tobitt, Miss Chapman, Miss Drummond, Miss Eadie

"Handsome Is—"

A Story of a Waif Who Won Out

By Belle C. Harrington

Illustrated by Varian and Osborne

"NO, NEVER mind, Mis' Ames, I can't sit down. I just dropped in a minute to see how you took your new responsibility. Two girls in one day is quite a load to be hung around a body's neck."

"You're just right, Mis' Smith. It surely is. Do sit down a minute. It'll seem good to talk it over with somebody. If anybody'd told me a week ago that I'd be shouldering the care of two half-grown girls, I'd have held up my hands in horror."

"I can't stay more'n a minute. I promised Lem I'd make hot biscuits for supper, and you know how men are."

"Yes, that's so. Debbie, hurry up with them beans and put them on to cook just as soon as you can. That child is the slowest mortal," lowering her voice a trifle, "and the dumbest! It seems as if what you say don't sink in at all. Sometimes it'll be full ten minutes before she answers something I say to her, and then it seems as if she can't hardly get the words out."

"I know, there are some children like that. My sister's boy used to be just that way."

"But it ain't my way to shirk a duty, and when Sister Mary was taken away so sudden, there wasn't anything for me to do but take these girls. Of course, Phylis would belong to me naturally, my own sister's child. Debbie wasn't regularly adopted, but I know my sister meant to keep her; so now when there's no one in the world wants a child like that, I'm not the one to shut the door."

"Yes, some one has to take care of the widow and the orphans."

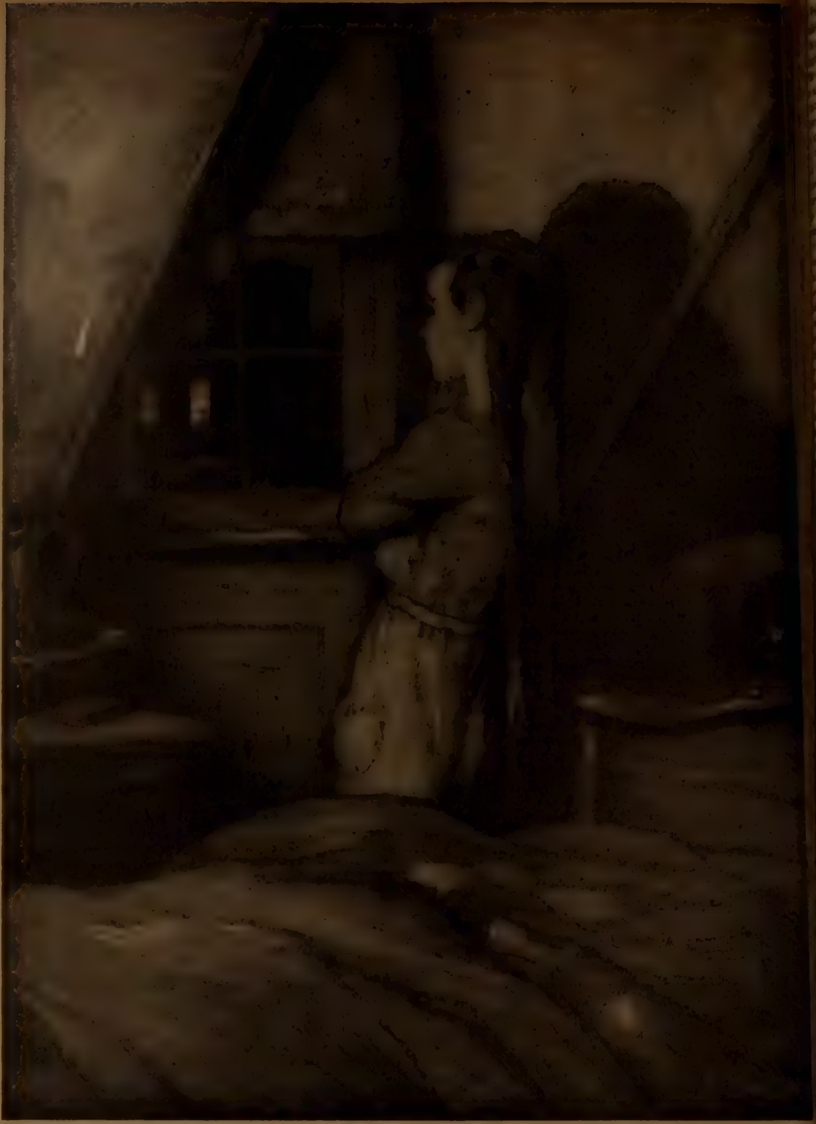
"Of course Phylis fits in just as if she'd always belonged to us. She's a little beauty, you know, and Mr. Ames just dotes on her already; but not being well, anything unpleasant makes him nervous, and I have to keep Debbie out of his sight as much as I can."

There was an abrupt movement in the adjoining kitchen, and in a moment Debbie was shuffling along the walk toward a little nook among the trees in the back yard. The beans were cooking and she was free until Mrs. Ames called her to come and set the table. But Debbie didn't seek this retreat in order to play or to read some coveted story. She came to get away from the cruelly frank discussion of herself, and to see if the cool moist air wouldn't help the ache that fairly throbbed inside her. Debbie wasn't the sort of child that could cry. Instead of bursting into passionate sobs, as did Phylis, her face flushed to a purplish tint, the muscles of her neck swelled, and something inside her hurt until it seemed as if it would burst. Then people thought her sullen, or "dumb," as Mrs. Ames had said; and so many people didn't seem to mind saying unpleasant things right before her—just as if she couldn't hear!

The child was undeniably plain. Her stubby nose, high cheekbones and colorless complexion did not accord with the generally accepted idea of childish beauty, and her hair of luxurious dusky brown was combed tightly back from her forehead and platted into two heavy braids, ignominiously fastened at the ends with rubber bands. Of course heavy blue gingham dresses and calfskin shoes and cheap hats didn't add anything attractive to the general effect, and it required kindly, far-seeing vision to be able to read in the expressive eyes, the generous, affectionate mouth, and the strong shapely hands, the earnest of a noble woman in the years to come.

Aunt Mary, who had died so suddenly, was the only woman who ever really understood Debbie. Once the child, in a burst of impotent grief, cried out to her: "Oh, Aunt Mary, why do I have to be so homely—couldn't there have been just one pretty thing about me?" Then Aunt Mary had taken her in her arms and had told her that not all the things in the world were meant to be beautiful, some were intended to be useful and comforting and helpful. She told her it was far better to be good than to be beautiful, for if she were good, every one would love her, and then she would seem beautiful, too.

The lonely little waif was trying to think of Aunt Mary's words now, but she was wondering to herself how anybody could be good, constantly hearing disagreeable things about one's self. Just then Mrs. Ames's shrill voice called her sharply back to the kitchen.



Debbie found that the far corner of her bed-room window gave her a view straight across into the living-room of the Harlan home, and the richness and beauty fascinated her until sometimes she could hardly bear to go to bed for looking at it

She had yet another trial before her, for the evening meal was scarcely finished when a second neighbor dropped in, intent upon helping Mrs. Ames share her new burdens. "I just wondered if you wouldn't like to have me go with you tomorrow and help pick out the girls' new fall things. I used to be a milliner, you know, and I have a cousin who's in the children's suit department at Morley's."

"Indeed, I'd take it kindly if you would, Fanny. I was really dreading the task. I looked at hats a little, while we were waiting for the car the other day. Of course I didn't have any trouble with Phylis. Her curly hair and fair skin made 'most any thing becoming to her; but Debbie, there, I do declare! she looked just like an ape in everything we put on her."

"I know. I used to have customers just like that. You'll have the same trouble with dresses and cloaks. Everything is so extreme this year. The best way is just to get something that wears well and never mind about the looks."

A new horror assailed Debbie, washing dishes at the kitchen sink. Must she go with them down town tomorrow and stand before the huge mirrors and see herself a perfect fright, while Phylis stood beside her looking like a little angel with her blue eyes and yellow curls? Mrs. Ames was right. She did look just like an ape in some of the things she had tried on the other day, and her face burned as she remembered the amused faces of the clerks.

Summoning all her courage, and clearing her throat in an embarrassed effort to find her voice, she approached Mrs. Ames's chair respectfully. "Couldn't I stay at home and work tomorrow and let you bring me my clothes, please? I—I want to work," she added lamely.

"Stay at home! I should say not. How do I know anything about fitting a twelve-year-old girl unless I have her along? I don't want any of your sulking just because you're not as good-looking as Phylis. 'Handsome is that handsome does' is what you'd better remember. Now you go up stairs to bed and be thankful there's some one that's willing to buy you clothes, and house you and feed you."

Debbie stumbled through the dark hall up to her little room. Mrs. Ames believed in teaching children to be fearless, so she didn't give them a light. The room wasn't really dark, though, for the soft glow of the lights in the Harlan mansion on the big estate just beyond the hedge filtered into the room in a way that was comforting and homey. Debbie had another source of comfort too, though it seems almost sacrilege to speak of it. Debbie never had mentioned it to a living soul. Dear Aunt Mary's religion would have been shocked at the idea of a God other than Jehovah sitting on his throne, approached with the utmost reverence, and granting help through his myriads of angels. But Debbie's idea was that if any one really loved a person they'd be right there close beside them. If they were sorry for a person they'd stay with them all the time when things were hardest, and if they really wanted to help, they'd do it in a practical and tangible way. A more experienced theologian would have known this personality by the name of Comforter, but it is likely that Debbie thought of him as ear Friend, though his name never was uttered. e talked with him often when she was lonely and d, though no audible word passed her lips.

Tonight this Friend was her only comfort. "You'll st have to go with me," she agonized. "I never, ver can stand it unless you do. You know how I st hate myself when I walk in front of those big indows. I can't stand it to be all alone when those erks are laughing. You'll have to stick by me close. ou'll have to stick by me close," she kept thinking, d at last she drifted off to slumber with her hand enched tightly as if holding fast to some invisible esence.

The days that followed were not wholly without appiness, for Debbie loved her school, and Mrs. Ames id with all fairness, "Yes, Debbie does real well with r books. Of course, she ain't the teacher's pet like hylis, but she does real well." Then she had always e joy of watching the Harlan mansion. Every time e could slip away during those glowing autumn days, e would run down to the hedge and watch the old lored gardener as he cared for the beds of gorgeous tumn blossoms. Sometimes his young mistress me down, and Debbie felt that she could fairly orship her, she was so beautiful and so sweet. One ay the child heard a little conversation which she ever forgot. It was the gardener and Miss Harlan: Say, Mis' Margaret, what yo' think 'bout my diggin' p these big coarse-leaved plants back here? Seems me they don't no wise fit wif de roses an' heliotrope ' things."

"No, no, Tobey, leave them alone. Maybe they e a bit coarse and ugly all by themselves, but they e just the background we need to show off the more elicate flowers. God needs some homely things, you ow, as well as the beautiful ones."

Debbie found, too, that the far corner of her bedoom window gave her a view straight across into the ving-room of the Harlan home, and the richness and eauty fascinated her until sometimes she could ardly bear to go to bed for looking at it. Mrs. Ames ept her shades tightly drawn of evenings, but these ere wide open, and there seemed to be light and armth and cheer enough for every one, not just a lite bit for the few who were nearest. The young oman who sat by the beautiful lamp and read or ewed often seemed lonely. Debbie had heard how e father and mother had both passed away within e year, and there were rumors that the thoughtless oung brother wasn't as mindful of his sister's lonelies as he ought to be, though the little girl didn't see ow anybody could help staying home evenings in ch a beautiful place as that.

Once in a while a double radiance filled the Harlan ome. That was when the soldier-man made flying isits, sometimes for two or three days, and then gain only for a few hours. At these times the Beautiful Lady fairly radiated joy and happiness, and Debbie herself glowed with delight. She conceived a articular interest in soldiers, and even kept a cheap ttle American flag smuggled away behind her curtain. Mrs. Ames would have asked unpleasant questions if he had seen it, but every night Debbie brought it out nd waved it affectionately toward the billowy folds of he Stars and Stripes that greeted her from the walls f the Harlan living-room.

With these secret sources of happiness, life wasn't alf bad—then one night there came a shock. Mr. Ames had been threatened with pneumonia, and now hat he was better the physician had ordered his immediate departure for the South. Debbie heard Mrs. Ames telling a neighbor about it as she washed the upper dishes. "We're going to start just as soon as e can pack up," she said. "Of course, we'll take Phylis, but we can't be burdened with Debbie. I uess I'll have to let her go to Gray's. It ain't the kind a place Mary'd have wished for her. Mrs. Gray on't keep any kind of order in that rough-and-tumble amily, but Mr. Gray's a good provider, and she'll ave enough to eat, at any rate."

Debbie heard the news with dismay. Of all the laces her desolate childhood had known, Gray's was he worst. She generally accepted whatever came, as he natural and inevitable lot of an orphan, but this ime she rebelled. She couldn't and she wouldn't go to ray's; not, at least, until she had tried every other means first.

She slipped upstairs. Her Friend always seemed o much nearer to her when she was alone. She was lad it was dark now. "We've got to do something," he breathed inaudibly. "If you'll go with me, I elieve I'd dare to do it. Yes! We'll go to Miss Haran's, and I'll ask her to take me. I'll be awfully cared, but I guess we can do it."

Twenty minutes later Miss Harlan herself opened he door in answer to a timid ring. "Don't you want homely little girl to come and live with you—lease!" a childish voice asked brokenly.

"A homely little girl—who is it? What do you mean?" the Beautiful Lady asked in a puzzled tone. 'Oh, you're the little girl from Mrs. Ames's," she dded, as Debbie moved forward into the circle of ight. "Come into the house and tell me what you mean."

Debbie trembled all over as she shuffled over the olished floors, and she was actually afraid to sit down n the shining velvet couch. She stood with her ands pressed tightly together, talking very fast, as if he were reciting a difficult lesson. "I heard what you aid, out in the flower-garden one day, about needing omely things to set off the pretty ones. Nobody else wants a homely girl—oh, please, Miss Harlan, please, won't you take me?"

"Why—why, doesn't Mrs. Ames need you?"

"No'm. Nobody ever needed me. They just keep me a while because they're sorry for an orphan, and then they pass me on to somebody else. Oh, Miss Harlan, I'd like to belong to you!"

Kaleidoscopic changes passed over the sensitive face of Margaret Harlan; first something that seemed almost like revulsion, then pity, and after that loneliness and longing. "Poor little girl!" she half sobbed, drawing Debbie down beside her on the couch, "I haven't anybody to belong to, either. Maybe we can help each other.

"What's your name, girlie?" Miss Harlan asked after a moment.

"Debbie, but that's homely just like me; maybe I could change it."

"Oh, your real name must be Deborah. That's beautiful! It was my grandmother's name. See, wasn't she a fine-looking old lady?" pointing to a portrait done in oil, hanging just over the desk in the corner.

"Are you going to let me come?" Debbie could hardly find courage to ask the trembling question.

"Surely, dear; tomorrow, tonight, any time."

"Then I'll come tonight! Mis' Ames said she wished she had me off her hands, and I'll go right now and tell her."

With heart pounding until she could hardly breathe, the little girl was back with her meager bundle of clothing in an incredibly short time. Miss Margaret had been busy too, and Debbie's room was all ready for her. If only she could fly across the wonderful floors, instead of having to shamble with those heavy shoes! "Miss Harlan," she cried at last in desperation, "if you'll let me, I'll go in my stocking feet. Truly, I can walk just like anybody, with my shoes off." Miss Margaret gave one quick glance at the ungainly shoes. "Deborah! why did anybody ever buy you shoes like that?"

"Because they are warranted to wear a year. This is the fourth pair I've had."

"Take them off, dear," the young woman commanded tenderly. "You're never going to see those shoes again. I'm going to dress you all up fine before Jack comes," she added gaily. "He must form a good impression of the Lady Deborah."

The next half-hour was one of unalloyed bliss to the beauty-starved little girl. Miss Margaret rubbed her rough red hands with something which made them feel soft and smooth, almost like her own. Then she unbraided the tight plaits of hair and let the wavy billows fall lovingly around the bare little forehead. She tied it gracefully back with a wonderful dark red ribbon just such as Debbie had longed for, and then she brought out a loose silk gown of the same lovely color and wrapped it around her with a gold cord. Most wonderful of all were the satin slippers that just exactly matched, which made her feel as if she were walking on air. They hurried down to Miss Margaret's sitting-room when they heard Jack coming. "This is our own little Deborah, Jack. She's going to live with us."

Jack's face was a study. There was genuine surprise there, for he had become accustomed to finding his sister always alone. Then the mischievous impulse to say something teasing flashed out of his eyes, but a look on his sister's face touched him, and besides, it really did seem good to have some one else in the house.

"Hurrah for Deb! Looks mighty cozy to see you two sitting here. I believe I'll have a couple of the fellows in tomorrow night to show off our new cousin."

"Sure, Jackie. Deborah and I can make the fudgiest fudge you ever tasted."

Jack hurried away to the telephone, and Miss Margaret gave the little girl an ecstatic hug. "Dear Deborah, we aren't going to be lonely any longer. Even Jack notices the difference. But look in this big mirror, dear; you haven't seen how fine you are."

Debbie gazed into the mirror as if she were looking at a vision, then she glanced at Miss Margaret, to make sure that even she was real. The older girl understood her feelings and slipped out of the room, closing the door behind her. Then it was that Deborah did what Debbie never in her life had done—threw herself upon the couch and sobbed as if her heart were breaking. When she was at last quiet, there went up from her heart the truest kind of thanksgiving as she breathed to the Friend who was still with her: "Oh, I b'lieve I can be good and pretty, too. I really do! And I'm going to try!"

Debbie couldn't have told how long she lay there trying to sense the wonderful change, when all of a sudden she heard a long swinging step at the front entrance, and a moment later a glad cry from Miss Harlan.

"Philip! Why, how came—" the rest of the sentence faded away in a smothered blur of inarticulate sounds.

"Forgive me, sweetheart, for not letting you know. We're sailing for France in three days on some big reconstruction work. Everything's absolutely sub rosa, not a man has been allowed to send a telegram. It's only because I am an officer in fairly good standing with my superiors, that I was allowed to come to say good-by."

"France! Why I thought—the war was over!"

"Yes, darling, it is; but I'm being sent on a special mission, and I've only three hours to spend with you. But I just had to come—I came for my wife."

Debbie was the soul of honor, but she was so carried away with the sudden news, it never entered her mind that she was an eavesdropper. So clearly did she visualize the scene in the other room, it seemed as if she was really there, a part of the little by-play. She could see the misty tenderness of Miss Margaret's eyes, and the pathetic droop of her mouth. She knew as well as if she were seeing it, that the man's strong arms were about her, his cheek resting against the glistening golden hair. And Debbie was distinctly pro-Philip!

"Why, Philip, I couldn't—in three hours. It—it wouldn't seem decent!"

"I know, lover, you'd be missing all the things a girl plans for; but you shall have the music and the flowers and the honeymoon afterward—I give you my word for it. I just can't go to France without having a wife."

"But, Philip! There are so many things you don't know about——"

Debbie felt it was time for action. Of course Miss Harlan was thinking that she couldn't be married and go to France, because she'd just promised to take her, and she didn't quite know how to explain to her soldier-man all about it. For a moment she cowered back on the couch, while a sickening picture of "paradise lost" flashed across her brain, with the shadowy background of Gray's, and the never-ending round of quarrels, and dish-washing, and harsh words.

But Debbie was no coward. The minister had said last Sunday that we hadn't all been called on to fight, but we'd all have to make sacrifices. This was her sacrifice, and before she had a chance to weaken she marched bravely into the other room.

"Miss Harlan," she began, looking straight before her, "if it's me that's keeping you from getting married and going to France, I'm willing to go over to Gray's right now. Anybody can stand most anything when they have to—and I guess that's my part in this war." The childish voice trailed off into a half-sob at the end, but she blinked back the tears and smiled bravely.

Miss Margaret was covered with sweet confusion, which seemed to make her even more lovely in the eyes of the man, who kept her folded close in his arms. "Why, Debbie, child, I'd forgotten about you. What is it you're saying about Gray's, and my going to France?"

"I see!" cried the soldier-man, a sudden light breaking over him. "She thinks of course I wouldn't be coaxing you to marry me unless I were going to take you with me. God knows I wouldn't, if there were any other possible way."

"Was that it, child?" slipping out of the restraining arms, and blushingly resisting an attempted caress. "I couldn't go to France with him, dear—officers lose their rank if they insist on taking their wives along. He just wants to be married now, before he goes, and it's all so sudden I—I hardly know what to say."

Debbie's adoring glance at the tall man in uniform left little doubt as to what she would say; then, overcome by confusion at the sudden realization of what she had done, she hastily fled to the library.

"You hadn't told me about this child, Margaret; what a sweet face she has!" she heard the deep voice say, as the girlish form again found refuge.

Late that night, after the quiet wedding was over, and the brave farewells had been said, Debbie lay, wide-eyed and sleepless, trying to realize the wonderful thing that had come to her. She was almost afraid to shut her eyes, for fear she'd wake up to find it all a fairy dream. The only thing that seemed real was the presence of her Friend. "I'm so glad I was willing to go to Gray's," she whispered to him—"and the soldier-man said I had a sweet face!" as the tired little eyelids closed.

The Journey's End

LIFE'S long path is dipping westward
  Toward the sunset gates of gold,
And the even light is lying—
  With a glory all untold—
On the valleys spread before me,
  Vales I dreaded long ago,
Dreaming they were lost in shadows,
  Veiled in darkness deep and low.

How my heart leaps up rejoicing
  As the last cloud clears away,
And I see the silver lining
  From the heavenly side today.
Oh, the radiance and the beauty—
  Joy I never dreamed could be!
All life's gifts, withheld, I longed for Light the journey's end for me.

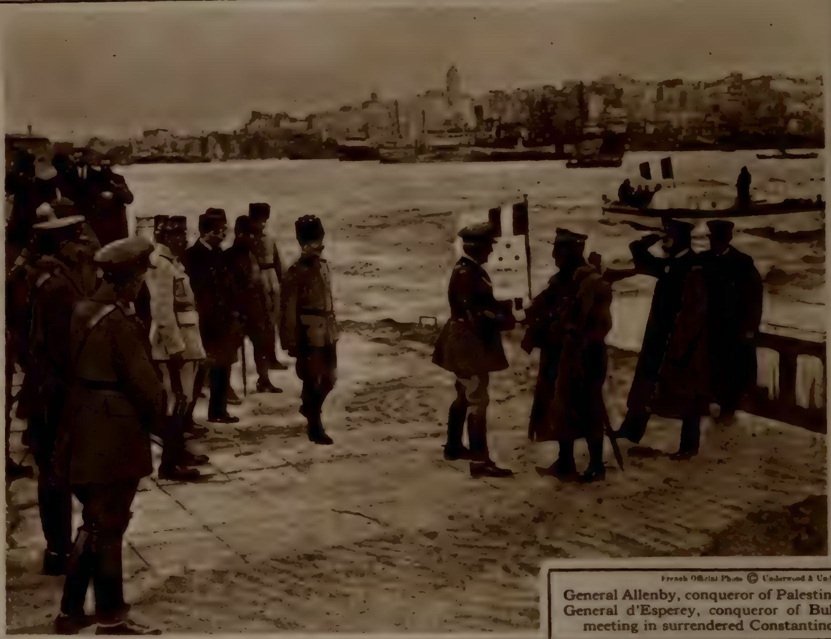
And I know beyond the sunset
  Nevermore the night shall fall,
Never storm shall beat above me,
  Never grief my life enthrall.
All is light, and song, and gladness,
  And I'll find again, I know,
All my lost dreams, hope's fulfilment,
  Past the golden gates aglow.

Moatsville, W. Va. IDA L. REED.



French Official Photo © Underwood & Underwood

General Allenby, conqueror of Palestine, and General d'Esperey, conqueror of Bulgaria, meeting in surrendered Constantinople

© International Film Service

Government troops firing a field gun in Berlin, at the Palace of the former Emperor, occupied by Spartacide rebels

STEPS T

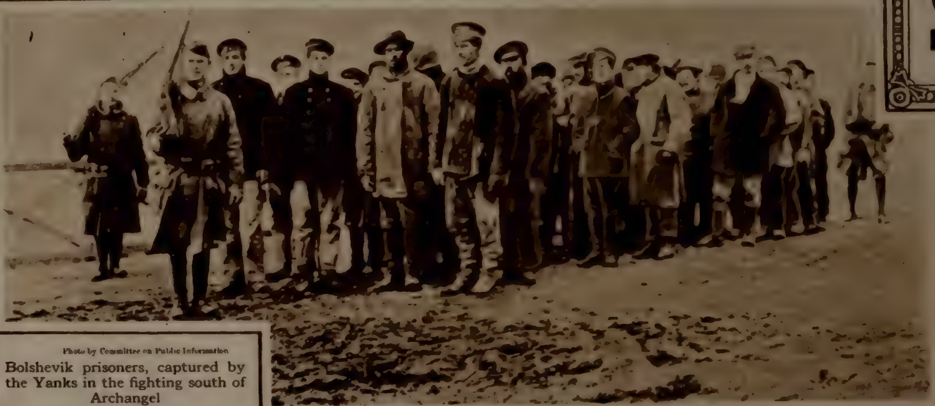


Photo by Committee on Public Information

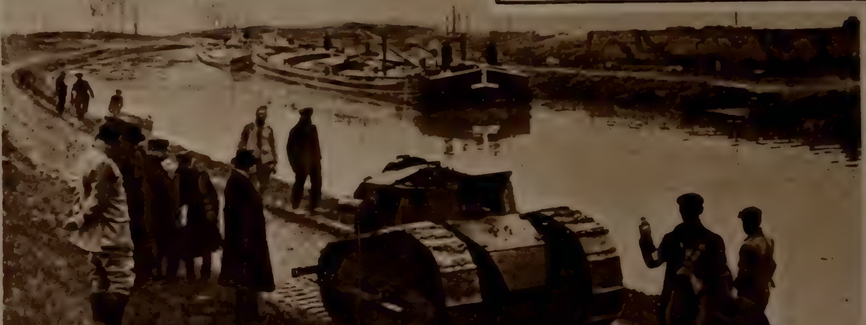
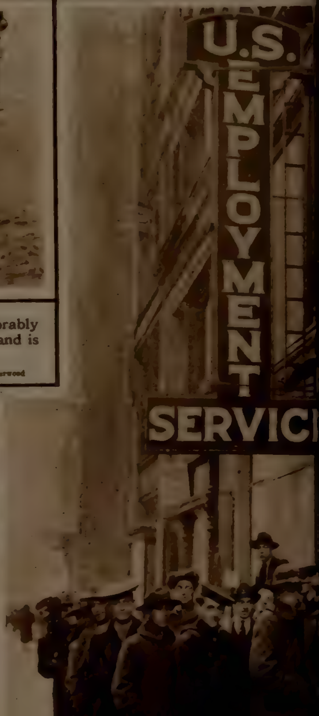
Bolshevik prisoners, captured by the Yanks in the fighting south of Archangel

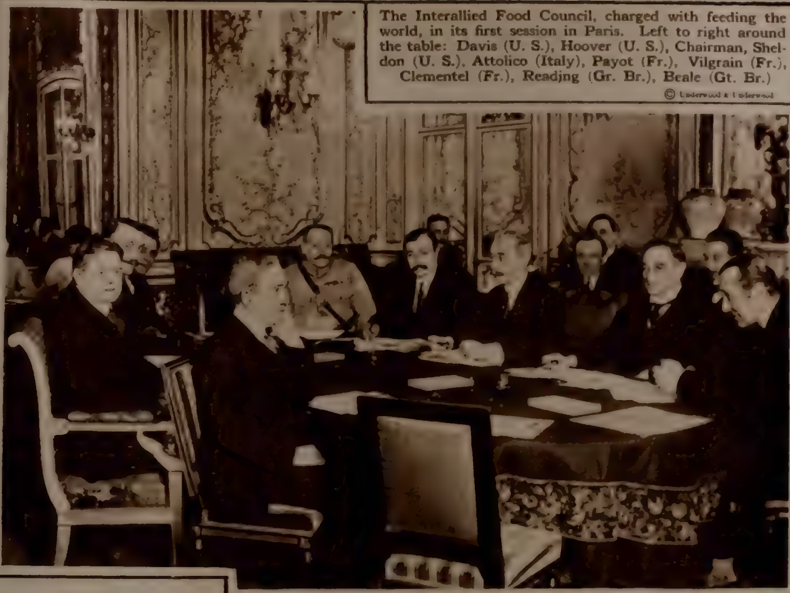
The tiger tamed. This French whippet tank, honorably discharged from the army, has taken a civilian job and is towing barges of food for the hungry

French Official Photo © Underwood & Underwood





Men
ing of



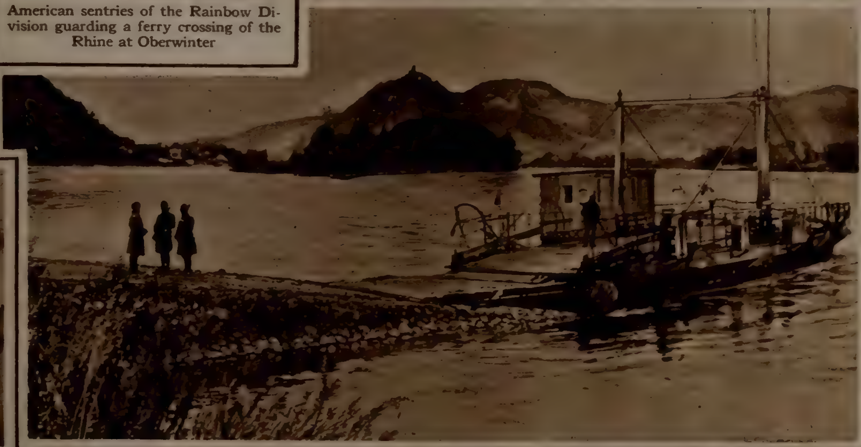
The Interallied Food Council, charged with feeding the world, in its first session in Paris. Left to right around the table: Davis (U. S.), Hoover (U. S.), Chairman, Sheldon (U. S.), Attolico (Italy), Payot (Fr.), Vilgrain (Fr.), Clementel (Fr.), Reading (Gr. Br.), Beale (Gt. Br.)

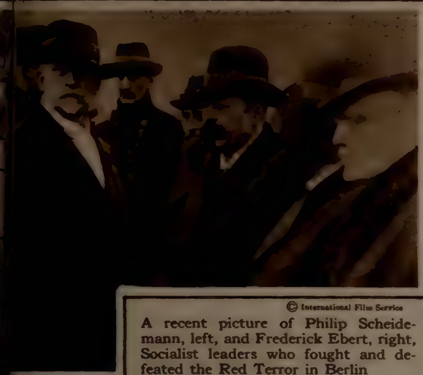
© Underwood & Underwood

RD PEACE

© Committee on Public Information

American sentries of the Rainbow Division guarding a ferry crossing of the Rhine at Oberwinter





© International Film Service

A recent picture of Philip Scheidemann, left, and Frederick Ebert, right, Socialist leaders who fought and defeated the Red Terror in Berlin

© Underwood & Underwood

m the camps awaiting the open-ent office. If you know of an tell Uncle Sam

© International Film Service

A meeting of the Soldiers' Council in the Reichstag Chamber in Berlin

SWORDS INTO PRUNING HOOKS

How It Is Proposed to Make the Unreclaimed Farm Wealth of the Nation a Heritage of the Soldiers After the War

By ROBERT H. MOULTON

MAKING provision for her disabled soldiers will discharge only a fraction of America's great debt to her millions of warrior citizens. A majority—a great majority, it has been shown—of these soldiers will be able-bodied. Inured to outdoor life, hard as nails and rejoicing in their physical vigor, they will shrink from the confinement of office and shop. Like the returning soldiers of our civil war they will undoubtedly turn in vast numbers to the land as the surest and most congenial path to a nook in the productive life of the nation.

Anticipating this, Secretary Lane is urging the President and Congress to consider a plan whereby approximately 400,000,000 acres of land now unfit for use may, by irrigation, drainage and clearance, be made suitable for farming and ranching, after which it will be settled, either free or upon easy terms, on such of our returning soldiers as wish to become agriculturists.

The plan, if successful, would tend to restore the parity between the urban and rural population, the disappearance of which in recent years has given rise to much pessimism among our political economists. The reclamation of the land in question—a vast domain equivalent in area to ten or twelve states the size of Illinois—with its subsequent development, would have a profound effect upon our post-war prosperity.

Every country has found itself face to face with this problem at the close of a great war. At the close of our Civil War the public domain fortunately offered opportunity to the home returning soldiers. The great part the veterans of that war played in developing the West is one of our epics. The homestead law had been signed by President Lincoln in the second year of the war, so that out of our wealth in lands we had farms to offer the military veterans. It was also the era of transcontinental railway construction. It was likewise the period of rapid yet broad and full development of towns and communities and states.

These cabbages are growing on reclaimed swamp land

Irrigation helped nature and the farmer to make these onions

We have not now the bountiful public domains of the '60s and '70s. In a literal sense, for the use of it on a generous scale for soldier farm homes as in the '60s, the public domain is gone. The official figures at the end of the fiscal year, June 30, 1917, show that we have unappropriated land in the continental United States to the amount of 230,657,755 acres. It is safe to say that not one-half of this land will ever prove to be cultivable in any sense. So we have no land in any way comparable to that in the public domain of '65. But we do still have millions of acres of undeveloped lands in the Northwest, lake states, and the South, and also swamp lands in the Middle West and South, which can be made available through the proper development. Much of this land can be made suitable for farm homes if properly handled.

It is required that each type of land be dealt with in its own particular fashion. The arid lands will require water, the cut-over land will require clearing and the swamp land must be drained. Without any of these aids they remain largely "No Man's Land." The solution of these problems is no new thing. In the admirable achievement of the reclamation service in reclamation and drainage we have abundant proof of what can be done.

Plans and investigations have been under way for some time. A survey and study have been made by the reclamation service on the great Colorado basin. That project, undoubtedly, will appeal to the new spirit of America. It would mean the conquest of an empire in the Southwest. It is believed that more than 3,000,000 acres of arid land could be reclaimed by the completion of the upper and lower Colorado basin projects.

It has been officially estimated that more than 15,000,000 acres of irrigable land now remains in the government's hands. This is the great remaining storehouse of government land for reclamation. Under what policy and program millions of these acres may be reclaimed for future farms and homes it remains for legislation to determine.

The amount of swamp and cut-over lands in the United States available for farming is extensive. Just how much there is has never been determined with any degree of accuracy. Practically all of it has passed into private ownership. For that reason, in considering its use, it would be necessary to work out a policy between the private owners and the government unless the land was purchased. It has been estimated that the total area of swamp and overflowed lands in the United States is between 70,000,000 and 80,000,000 acres. Of this amount about 60,000,000 acres can be reclaimed and made profitable for agriculture.

A plan whereby land is developed in large areas, subdivided into individual farms, then sold to actual, bona fide farmers on a long time payment basis, has been in force not only in the United States under the reclamation act but also in many other countries for several years. It has proved a complete success. In Denmark, Ireland, New Zealand and the Australian commonwealth it has completely changed the land situation. One of the features of this plan is that holders are aided in improving and cultivating the farm.

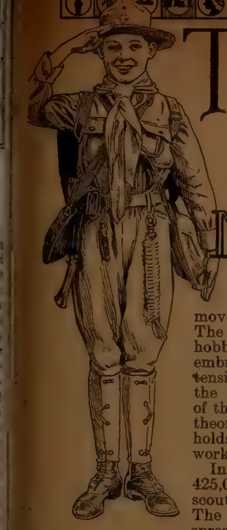
Its beneficial results have been well described by the Canadian commission which was appointed to investigate its results in New Zealand. There, the commission reported, the farmers had built better houses or remodeled the old ones, brought a large acreage of land under cultivation that would otherwise have remained idle, had bought and urged more labor-saving machinery on the farms and in the houses. They kept more sheep and pigs and had so largely increased the revenue from their farms that they were able to meet the payments on the mortgages and to adopt a higher standard of living and a better one. Throughout the country a higher and better civilization was being evolved; the young men and women who were growing up were happy and contented to remain at home on the farm and found ample time and opportunity for recreation and entertainment of a kind more wholesome and elevating than can be obtained in the cities.

It may be said that this country, outside of Alaska, has no frontier today. Of course, Alaska will still offer opportunity for pioneer life. And, of course, Alaska likewise has yet unknown remarkable agricultural possibilities, but unless we make possible the development of this land by the men who desire a life in that field, we will lose a great national opportunity. Furthermore, this is an immediate duty. The work of definite planning should be done now.

The plan outlined by Secretary Lane does not contemplate anything like charity to the soldier. He is not to be given a bounty. He is not to be made to feel that he is a dependent. On the contrary, he is to continue, in a sense, in the service of the government. Instead of destroying our enemies, he is to develop our resources.

The work that is to be done, other than the planning, should be done by the soldier himself. The dam or irrigation project should be built by him; the canals, ditches, the breaking of the land, and the building of the houses should under proper direction be his occupation. He should be allowed to make his own home, cared for while he is doing it, and given an interest in the land, for which he can pay through a long period of years, perhaps thirty or forty years.

The farms should not be turned over as the prairies were—unbroken, unfenced, without accommodations for men or animals. There should be prepared homes, all of which can be constructed by the men themselves and paid for by them under a system of simple devising by which modern methods of finance will be applied to their needs.



The Boy of Today and the Man of Tomorrow

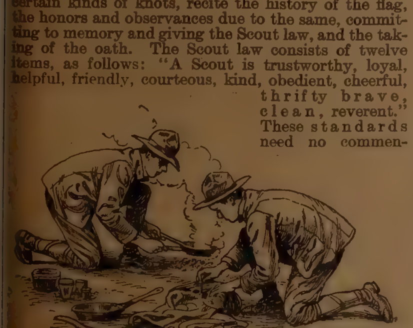
By Richard Braunstein

MANY as are the splendid efforts that have been made for citizen training, the Boy Scout movement is among the best. The movement is not a fad, hobby or experiment. It embraces a program of intensive training designed for the all-around development of the boy. It has passed its theoretical stage and now holds its place as a thing that works.

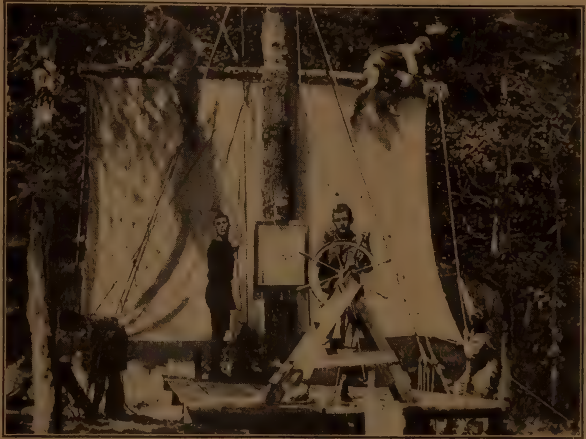
In America there are 425,000 registered scouts, scoutmasters and officials. The reason for this wide spread and growth is the willingness of men to give time, talents, study and money for its development. It is a golden opportunity for clergy, and social and church workers to identify themselves with that which will ultimately solve the boy problem, reduce juvenile delinquency and build up a citizenship that will make for the betterment of social conditions in the days that are ahead.

The scoutmaster is the key to the situation. It is necessary for him first of all to be genuinely interested in his work. He will fail if he adopts it as a mere pastime or avocation for his leisure hours. The scoutmaster is to be a specialist, a man of vision, training, patience, ideals. He is to be a picked man, one who is ready and willing to become an expert in the adolescent boy. Just how important a factor he is as a leader along these lines may be learned from the fact that universities and colleges, Y. M. C. A. training schools, Bible conferences and gatherings like Silver Bay, are outlining courses of instruction for his guidance and efficiency, and to enable him to better understand the plastic clay to which he is to take the relationship of potter. He studies woodcraft, first aid, signaling, code telegraphy, physical culture, nature in all its branches, chivalry, craftsmanship, psychology, and innumerable other things contributing to the sum of human knowledge. The scouting program embraces everything that is worth while. Of course it is flexible and may be used according to local conditions, equipment available, type of boy to be trained, and, in short, the whole scheme is in the hands of the scoutmaster for him to use as he deems best. A mine of information outlining the program may be found in the two handbooks—one for the leader and the other for the group. Other books and numerous bulletins may be had from the national headquarters in New York City.

TO GIVE in detail the entire program of the Scout movement is impossible. The type of boy to whom it will not appeal has not been found. There is something for every kind of boy. The first step is to become a tenderfoot. This requires the ability to tie certain kinds of knots, recite the history of the flag, the honors and observances due to the same, committing to memory and giving the Scout law, and the taking of the oath. The Scout law consists of twelve items, as follows: "A Scout is trustworthy, loyal, helpful, friendly, courteous, kind, obedient, cheerful, thrifty brave, clean, reverent." These standards need no commentary. They are foundation stones in interpretation and practice for character building. The Scout oath is: "On my honor I will do my best—to do my duty to God and my country and to obey the Scout law; to help other people at all times; to keep myself physically strong, mentally awake, and morally straight." The law and oath give steadfastness of purpose, highmindedness, gentleness and honesty.



The next step is the taking of a test for the Second Class rank. After this has been done the boy is a candidate for the First Class rank. The tests are not impossible for any boy, but they are meant to be difficult. They call for close application, hard study, initiative, self-confidence and self-expression. After these tests there are innumerable merit badges and honors to be won, leading to the ranks of Star, Eagle and Life Scout. The last-named are earned by specialization along lines of endeavor in which the contestant has proven himself efficient. He may strive to become expert in some craft, in which is included church and school. There is plenty of scope and opportunity for the boy to express himself along those lines that correspond to his natural ability and temperament. He may have talent for one thing. He is encouraged to develop that talent. It may be music, painting, woodcraft, carving, nature study, athletics, or anything else that may interest him. The Scout motto is "Be prepared." The Scout slogan is "Do a good turn daily." He is not permitted to capitalize his good turn or receive a tip for an act of kindness. His thrift is given an impetus, however, and he is required by his tests to earn and deposit a sum of money in some bank. It is also required that he earn the money for his uniform and other equipment. The uniform insignia of rank and other matters are only meant to be means to an end. The objective is the winning and holding of the boy. The boy is taught to protect the weak, succor the ailing and help those who need assistance.



These are no landlubbers, but seaman born

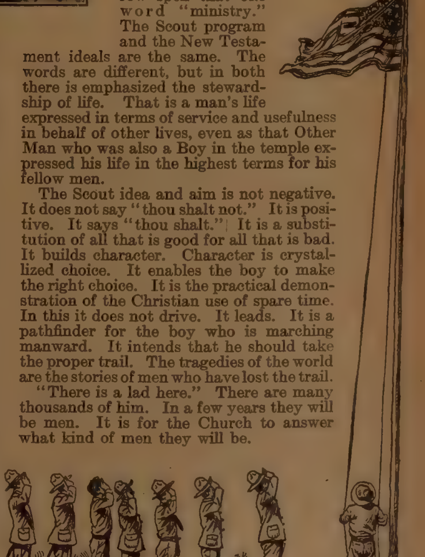
THE Boy Scout movement is not military but militant. It wages war against the natural enemies of the boy. It does this by keeping his head, heart and hand busy with the right things. The boy will be busy at something. He is active, alert, alive. This activity, alertness and virility must be given a sense of direction. He is looking for a good time. He is eager for fun. Scouting gives him guidance in the direction of his normal desires. It furnishes him healthy pastime for his leisure. It is an exhaust for his surplus energy. Steam will do much. Mastered, it will turn the wheels of industry.

The average boy is interested in the old swimming-hole, the trees, stars, wild flowers, rocks and hills. The things that creep, crawl, crouch, wriggle, squirm, fly and swim hold him. The camp-fire, the tent, "camping out," are his day and night dream. He has a longing to do the unusual. His is striving to do the unconventional. He craves adventure. Unless he is given these with the supervision of intelligent leadership, he will realize his ambitions, but the results will be painful for everybody involved. The hike, tracking, stalking, pathfinding are his delight. He wants to be an Indian, a deerslayer, a Daniel Boone, a Hudson Bay trapper. In all this he is perfectly normal. If he wishes to imitate the red brother, scouting gives him the opportunity to play Indian—an Indian in peaceful times, not an Indian on the war-path. It is not necessary to be dead in order to be a good Indian. In fact, we are all Indians. The primitive instinct is in us all. The wild calls. The answer is in our souls. The love of the outdoors is in our blood. The lure of the great silences, open spaces, broad plains, giant trees, wide ranges and deep waterways ever beckon. The Book of Nature is more interesting than the books about nature.

The boy as well as the man likes to excel. The man has learned in the school of experience. The boy is yet a learner. His is the spirit of the explorer. He likes to subdue and chain the elements. He wants to express himself in some big way but does not know how. This groping has led to the discovery of continents, the invention of things useful, the production of art and music, the founding of industries and empires, the building of nations and the framing of laws. It has given us the blessings and splendid accumulations of this twentieth century. It has been boy power, developed into man power, that has planted churches, hospitals, mission fields. It has built colleges, orphan asylums, libraries and museums. It has been man power, let loose in the right direction, curbed before it had gathered momentum, guided into the proper channels. It has been the spirit of the conqueror that has striven heroically to make things come to pass. Unless this spirit is led intelligently, history will have some more black chapters and repeat itself in some future Alexanders, Napoleons and Kaisers endeavoring to bring the world to their feet, not to make it better, but to lay tribute and humiliate. The fundamental principle is first of all to conquer self. The Scout movement teaches the boy to conquer himself. It is a process of self-mastery. It aims to make the manhood of tomorrow spell that one word "ministry." The Scout program and the New Testament ideals are the same. The words are different, but in both there is emphasized the stewardship of life. That is a man's life expressed in terms of service and usefulness in behalf of other lives, even as that Other Man who was also a Boy in the temple expressed his life in the highest terms for his fellow men.

The Scout idea and aim is not negative. It does not say "thou shalt not." It is positive. It says "thou shalt." It is a substitution of all that is good for all that is bad. It builds character. Character is crystallized choice. It enables the boy to make the right choice. It is the practical demonstration of the Christian use of spare time. In this it does not drive. It leads. It is a pathfinder for the boy who is marching manward. It intends that he should take the proper trail. The tragedies of the world are the stories of men who have lost the trail.

"There is a lad here." There are many thousands of him. In a few years they will be men. It is for the Church to answer what kind of men they will be.



Churches Organize for Unity

By H. K. CARROLL, LL. D.

THE movement for organic union of Evangelical Christian churches, begun by the Philadelphia Conference of December 4-6 last, is now definitely launched.

It will be remembered that the Conference, in which were representatives of fifteen or sixteen denominations, provided for the appointment of an Ad Interim Committee to invite other denominations to join the movement, to promote it, to prepare plans for organic union, and to make the necessary arrangements for the meeting of an interdenominational council not later than 1920 to consider and adopt such plan. The Ad Interim Committee held its first meeting in the Witherspoon Building, on Walnut Street, Philadelphia, February 4, and organized, appointed subcommittees and made plans for its work. It consists of about forty men, assigned to and appointed by the various denominations, on the basis of one member from each and one additional member for each 500,000 communicants, or major fraction thereof. A list of the members of this important committee, which has momentous duties and tasks to perform, follows:

Members of the Ad Interim Committee

Baptist Churches: Rev. Cornelius Woelfkin, D. D., Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, New York, N. Y. Rev. Arthur T. Fowler, D. D., East Orange, N. J.; Rev. Elijah A. Hanley, D. D., 94 Berkeley St., Rochester, N. Y.; Rev. H. F. Stilwell, D. D., 2387 Woodmere Ave., Cleveland, Ohio.

Congregational Churches: Prof. Williston Walker, Ph.D., 281 Edwards St., New Haven, Conn.; Rev. Raymond Calkins, D. D., 19 Berkeley St., Cambridge, Mass.; Rev. Hubert C. Herring, D. D., 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass.

Disciples of Christ: Rev. Peter Ainslie, D. D., Seminary House, Baltimore, Md.; Rev. F. W. Burnham, LL.D., Carew Building, Cincinnati, Ohio; Rev. F. D. Kershner, D. D., Stand Pub. Co., Cincinnati, Ohio; Rev. H. C. Armstrong, Seminary House, Baltimore, Md.

Evangelical Synod of North America: Rev. J. U. Schneider, 116 Lower 6th St., Evansville, Ind.

Friends, Society of: Mr. Alfred C. Garrett, York and Fishers Rd., Germantown, Pa.

Moravian Church: Rev. John S. Romig, D. D., 1411 N. 17th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Presbyterian Church, U. S. A.: Rev. Wm. H. Roberts, D. D., 513 Witherspoon Bldg., Philadelphia, Pa.; Rev. Wm. H. Black, D. D., Marshall, Mo.; Rev. Charles R. Erdman, D. D., Princeton, N. J.; Henry W. Jessup, Esq., 55 Liberty St., New York, N. Y.

Protestant Episcopal Church: Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D., S. Bethlehem, Pa.; Rev. Louis C. Washburn, D. D., 317 S. 11th St., Philadelphia, Pa.; Geo. Wharton Pepper, Esq., Land Title Bldg., Philadelphia, Pa.

Reformed Church in the United States: Rev. Geo. W. Richards, D. D., Lancaster, Pa.; Rev. Rufus W. Miller, D. D., 15th and Race Sts., Phila., Pa.

Reformed Episcopal Church: Rev. Robert Westly Peach, D. D., 271 Parker St., Newark, N. J.

United Brethren Church: Bishop G. M. Mathews, D. D., Dayton, Ohio; Bishop H. H. Fout, Indianapolis, Indiana.

United Presbyterian Church: Rev. W. M. Anderson, D. D., 1514 Master St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Welsh Presbyterian Church: Rev. R. R. Davies, D. D., 74 S. Meade St., Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Methodist Episcopal Church: Bishop John W. Hamilton, LL.D., Stoneleigh Court, Washington, D. D.; Bishop Luther B. Wilson, LL. D., 150 5th Ave., N. Y.; Rev. David G. Downey, D. D., 150 5th Ave., N. Y.; Rev. Geo. P. Eckman, D. D., Scranton, Pa.; Rev. Robt. Bagnell, D. D., Harrisburg, Pa.; H. K. Carroll, LL. D., Plainfield, N. J.; Rev. Frank P. Parkin, D. D., Germantown, Philadelphia, Pa.

Christian Union Church: Rev. A. C. Thomas, Milo, Iowa.

United Lutheran Church of America: Rev. J. Henry Harms, D. D., 1010 S. 45th St., Philadelphia, Pa.; Rev. Edwin Heyl Delk, D. D., 630 N. Broad St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Armenian Evangelical Church: Rev. H. Y. Yardumian, Perry Bldg., 16th and Chestnut Sts., Philadelphia, Pa.

The Ad Interim Committee, most of whom were present, was organized by the election of these officers: Chairman, Rev. Dr. W. H. Roberts; Vice Chairman, Bishop Ethelbert Talbot; Secretary, Rev. Dr. Rufus W. Miller; Historian, Rev. Dr. David G. Downey; Treasurer, Mr. Bonsall, Philadelphia.

It was very fitting that Dr. Roberts should be elected chairman. Union of the churches has long been in his heart and in his plans and thoughts. He is not a dreamer, though he has vision, but a planner and a worker who, as Stated Clerk of the Presbyterian General Assembly, has the business of that great body so arranged and systematized that not the smallest detail is beyond his capable grasp. Moreover, he is chairman of the Assembly's Committee on Organic Union and Cooperation, and was intimately related to the action of the General Assembly proposing the organic union of the denominations. He was born in Wales, and has had an unusually wide range of experience, as servant of the United States Government in the Treasury Department, teacher, pastor, secretary, moderator, etc. His speech in acknowledgment of his election as chairman of the Ad Interim Committee was a model of brevity. He said:

"I appreciate very deeply the honor you have done me by electing me by a unanimous vote as chairman of this committee. It is well known to you how deep an interest I have cherished for many years in every movement which had as an object the bringing of Christians closer together. The present movement in which we are engaged is in my opinion more important than any other to which the churches have given attention during recent years. While we are not prepared as yet to enter into any consideration of the details of a plan of union, it is vital to the success of our undertaking that as many of the Christian denominations as possible should consent to the proposed council to be held not later than 1920. What is proposed is organic union in some form or other without raising at present any question either as to doctrine, government or worship. Let us go forward unitedly in the effort to bring together the representatives of the Christian churches of our country, seeking to realize what has been in the minds of the majority of Christian persons, the one object of desire through many centuries, the bringing together into one our divided Protestant Christianity. We shall need to engage ourselves both in prayer and in work in this vital matter, and we must rely, above all other things, upon the power of God in Christ, and upon the influences of the Holy Spirit shed abroad in Christian hearts. With faith in God and confidence in our brethren, let us move forward in our work, seeking in all our efforts the will of Christ concerning his Church."

The Ad Interim Committee will meet monthly. In the meantime, half a dozen subcommittees will be active in shaping business for it and in carrying forward the work of preparation.

First of all, there is a committee of seven on Plan of Union. The committee will be guided by the general instructions of the December Conference, which in substance are these: (1) Keep in mind forces of vital spiritual life which alone give meaning to ou effort. (2) No mechanical uniformity must b sought or any form of organization which ignores o thwarts the free movement of the Spirit of God in th hearts of his servants. (3) The plans should b broad and flexible, so as to make a place for all th evangelical churches, "whatever their outlook of tradition, temperament and taste," or "their relationships racially or historically"; (4) Federal union after the order of our nation, not in the sense of "associated" or cooperative," may be considered. Withi these broad limits, the committee may formulate an recommend an acceptable plan, avoiding, on the on hand, the destruction of the denominational unit, and on the other, mere cooperation. The committee consists of Bishop Talbot, chairman, Bishop Wilson Professor Richards, Drs. Herring, Woelfkin and Ainslie, and Mr. Henry W. Jessup.

A Committee on Invitation, which is to extend invitations to other churches to join the movement consists of Dr. H. G. Mendenhall, chairman, and Drs Eckman, Washburn, Burnham, Delk, Garrett an Hanley.

A Committee on Publicity, which has to do with the promotion of the movement by conferences, meetings and publications, is composed of Dr. Peter Ainslie chairman, and Doctors Anderson, Kershner, Bagnel and Plack.

A Committee on Survey, consisting of Professor Walker and Doctors Roberts and Carroll, is to take cognizance of the whole fields of cooperation and union and report upon them.

A Committee of Reference, for questions of the evangelical status of some of the denominations—Professors Walker and Richards and Dr. Carroll—was also named, and provision made for a Finance Committee.

Addresses at a luncheon at the City Club, by Dr. Walker, Congregationalist, Dr. Kershner, Disciples of Christ, Mr. Alfred C. Garrett, Friends, Dr. Romig, Moravian, Dr. Black, Presbyterian, Dr. Washburn, Protestant Episcopal, Dr. Eckman, Methodist Episcopal, and others, indicated that serious thought i being given the subject of union in all the churches, and that it commends itself increasingly both to the ministers and the laymen. Mr. Garrett said the Society of Friends were greatly interested in the proposal and desired further information, directing him in the meantime to go "as far as they can and then stop." There is, it appears, a fear among the Friends and other denominations, that "organic union" means the swallowing up and disappearance of denominations, with their methods, practices and historic spirit. It should be known that no such plan is in contemplation, at least by the majority in this movement. The purpose, if one may interpret the spirit of the Conference and of its instructions, is to unite, not to destroy; to broaden, not to narrow, and to devise an elastic, not an iron-bound system, recognizing Paul's idea of diversities of gifts, of ministrations and of workings, but the same Lord and Spirit. The destruction of the denominations as units is not asserted in the instructions of the Conference, nor is it a necessary part of any acceptable plan of union. On the contrary, it is distinctly stated that our nation, while a Federal Union, "is not the less an organic union," and that "mechanical uniformity must not be sought."

The date of the council, to which the whole matter is to be submitted, has not yet been fixed; but it is hoped that it may be held some time in November next. Proposals of place of meeting have been received from several cities, including New York, The council, according to the basis of representation adopted, will be a body of about two hundred.

Was Teddy a "Fool"?

SOME fifty years ago, one very cold morning, a half-dozen or more boys were gathered closely around an old stove in the MacMillan School in New York City. One of those boys had poor health and especially weak eyes. An old gentleman always brought this boy to school. It was noticeable that the boy was always present and never failed to know his lessons.

While shivering around the old stove that morning, another boy, Fred McDaniel, a tall, awkward and unpurposeful-looking boy, came down the aisle, threw his skates on the floor and his books upon his desk, walked over to the old stove and said: "Ted, you're a fool!" Ted looked up quickly and said impulsively: "What do you mean?" "Oh, I don't mean what you think I mean," said Fred. "I mean that you're not able to come to school. Your eyes are weak, and you'll put them out and be blind. Your father is rich and you don't have to go to school. My father is rich and I expect to make the teacher expel me. I was expelled from school in Albany and they'll do it here. I'm simply not going to school." By this time Ted had risen to his feet.

"I may put my eyes out," he said, "but if I do, my father will send me to a blind school. I am going to be educated —I am going to be educated!"

Within three weeks, Fred succeeded in carrying out his determination, getting himself expelled from school. Another boy, Devolt, was present that morning. Devolt says: "Many years later I went to Albany, where Fred and I were born, to visit my parents. As I entered the depot, the wind was piercing, the snow was falling fast. I was attracted by the sight of a large man wearing coarse and untidy clothes. His face was haggard, his hair was streaked with gray. Across his shoulder was a large strap that held a heavy bundle of daily papers. 'Have a paper, sir?' I recognized the voice, and as I turned he said to me: 'Devolt, is that you?' 'Yes, Fred, old fellow, I'm so glad to see you.'"

After talking a few moments, the two old schoolmates stepped into a nearby café to have supper. Having ordered their supper, Devolt said: "Fred, do you remember—"

"Wait! Devolt, I know what you're going to say. You are going to tell me about the morning I told Ted he was a fool. Yes, Devolt, I remember it all, and it's the saddest memory of my life. For now he's our President, getting $75,000 a year, and I—I will sleep in a garret tonight."

HENRY C. RISNER, D. D.

God never divides sin into little parcels, after the manner of men. The one word "Sin" is singular, plural, comprehensive and all-inclusive with God.

Reverends
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
and
C. C. Albertson, D.D.

Daily Meditation

Reverend
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

Ours But to Do!

SUNDAY, March 2. Ps. 119 : 6. "Then shall I not be ashamed when I have respect unto all thy commandments." The first question to be asked concerning any task is not whether it can be done, but whether God has commanded it. We often begin to engross ourselves with what we call the "possibilities of the situation" when we have not stood still to hear the clear trumpet peal of the Almighty sounding forth the advance. When we get our eyes glued down to the peradventures of the road, to the "ifs" and "buts" and "perhapses" and "maybes," they are apt to dull the spiritual senses, and the bugle peal becomes a growingly faint echo and loses its note of imperative command. We begin to doubt whether we ever heard the sovereign mandate, and less exacting voices win and captivate our ears. Now in all matters of difficulty the first and supreme question is, What has God commanded? It is not ours to discuss the matter on the basis of possibilities and probabilities. It is ours to act on the basis that the voice has spoken from the throne.

It is in the daring path of God's commandment that the frowning difficulty becomes illumined. The way is lit up as we tread it. There is no such thing in life as a road blazing with light from end to end. The way of God's commandment never appears like some noble street, with all its lamps burning, making a line of unbroken radiance through the night. The lamps are lit one by one as the traveler arrives at each part of the road. Light is given for the immediate piece of the journey. It is not far-off issues that are illumined, but the place of my feet.

And so God never gives vision to cowards, and for the all-sufficient reason that they could not receive it. Courage makes the soul receptive. It opens the windows toward the sunrise. It prepares the way of the Lord, and the King of glory can come in. When a man dares to obey the summons of the Divine commandment, and takes the difficult road, his divine capacity begins to increase with the beginning of the journey. Moral courage is always an expansive ministry in the soul. It makes the soul porous toward the divine. The soul becomes apprehensive of the divine light, and it rejoices in hidden radiance and secret fires. The way of God's commandments reveals its lamps as brave men march along it. J. H. J.

Grace and Truth

MONDAY, March 3. John 1 : 14. "And we beheld His glory, . . . full of grace and truth." Grace is a gentle virtue; truth is rugged. Grace is distinctively feminine; truth is masculine. Your man who is all grace is never strong on truth. Your man who is all truth is square, and by so much as he is square, is angular and uncomfortable to live with. How few are those who preserve a fine balance between these two qualities, and how fine the character of these few! When seen, we say of them what some one said not long ago in tribute to a saint: "He measures half way up to God." But what shall we say of Christ, who was full of grace and full of truth? We cannot think of God as different from him. He measures all the way up to God. We beheld in him the glory of perfect Godlikeness. We beheld his glory? Nay, we behold his glory, for his beauty is changeless. "He is Ancient of Days yet ever new." He who was before Abraham is the contemporary of us all. He is the "Lord of glory." Do you know who calls him by that name? It is James, his brother. But James had no better chance to estimate the greatness of his Brother than have we, who, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even by the Spirit of the Lord. C. C. A.

The Doing of the Law

TUESDAY, March 4. Luke 10 : 30, 31. "A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead. And by chance there came down a certain priest that way: and when he saw him, he passed by on the other side." The Lord's answer concerning the doing of the law had left a sting in the conscience of the learned legalist. It was plain that the Lord questioned whether he had performed that law which he made his boast. He parried the blow by blurting out: "Who then is my neighbor?" implying that it was possible that he had not been fully informed on this point. The Lord now shows him that there was no need of asking even that question. Our neighbor is every one who is in need of our help. The common law of humanity says that to every man. One need not study great tomes of theology to know that much. The Lord purposely picks out the priest and the Levite to show that mere head knowledge is no proof of great religiousness. These two men surely knew that service rendered to people in distress is a fundamental requirement of the law. They had preached that principle and had expounded and illustrated it from many a passage in the Old Testament. Yet, when the occasion arose to put into practice their avowed principles, both of them failed miserably. As they came to the spot where the robbers' victim lay weltering in his blood, they started with quick apprehension, "This is surely a dangerous place," they whispered to themselves. "Those robbers may still be near." And prudence suggested: "If they come, they will slay you too. What is the use of allowing them to do that? You cannot save that life yonder; so save at least your own." Oh, yes, self-interest is a cunning reasoner. Its faint whispers even will drown the loud pleading of humanity, of compatriotship, of religion. Such is the heart of natural man, of every man; such is our heart. Try it, if you are not convinced. And for such men to prate about earning heaven by their works! W. H. T. D.

The Philosophy of Pain

WEDNESDAY, March 5. II Cor. 4 : 17. "For our light affliction, which is for the moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding, eternal weight of glory." It is known that the pearl is formed by a grain of sand getting entrance into the shell of the oyster, and thereby causing pain to its sensitive body. The oyster covers the strange body with a slimy secretion, rounding off all sharp angles, molding it into a polished pearl. What seemed a trial is converted into a jewel, radiating all the tints of light. Paul may have been thinking of his thorn in the flesh when he penned the text. He realized that a momentary trouble, quietly accepted, becomes a gem for the crown of glory.

So burdens of sand in a shell have produced pearls worth millions of wealth, adorning the crowns of emperors. Nature thus furnishes facts explaining the philosophy of pain. No chastisement at present appears joyous, but afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness in the glory of character that will shine on as the stars forever and ever.

The culture of suffering elevates the soul to the very heights of perfection, if it is a willing submission, a thankful service. Every one has his cross or burden, secret or visible, that will blossom into beauty like Christ's tree of the cross, if we can say, "Thy will be done." If a broken oyster mends its shell with a pearl, we should not wonder that a broken heart may be mended with the blood of Calvary, the ruby of redemption. We know that rocks do not make soil till crumbled nor the flint fire till smitten; that the angel does not come from the marble till it is chiseled.

E. W. C.

Pleasing Our Neighbors

THURSDAY, March 6. Rom. 15 : 2. "Let every one of us please his neighbor for his good to edification." It was said of a reformer who worked with greater intensity than success that he seemed to have inherited a perpetual quarrel with other people. He did not get along well with his neighbors. He was without tact. This word tact is a small one, but very significant. Tact means touch. One who is without tact is out of touch with his neighbors. In our daily relationships we come into touch with various people, but some people are entirely too "touchy." They are thin-skinned and over-sensitive. Some people are as hard to approach as a porcupine. There is no coming into contact with them with safety to our own feelings or to others'. The right kind of religion involves the cultivation of amiable relationships with our neighbors. Look at the Ten Commandments. A majority of them have reference to social relationships. The ethical code of the Old Testament and the New is rich in altruism. The three great problems of the soul are Self, Other People, and God. The great part of the world may be included under the category of Others. Christianity makes little of ceremony, but makes much of the cultivation of those graces which are primarily social and which tend to the proper treatment of the Other Self. Wise was that old philosopher who took as his motto, "I will make my enmities transient, my friendships eternal." The heaven toward which we make our way is not a solitary habitation. We shall dwell with our neighbors there. Were it not wise for us to get acquainted with them here, to learn to know them at their true value? Jesus spoke his parable of the Good Samaritan primarily to instruct his disciples in the principles of neighborliness. The early church was rich in the spirit of brotherhood. Dwellers in great cities tend to forget the primary virtues of friendliness. The human fellowships of the church are secondary in value only to the divine fellowship which is at the heart of the impulse to neighborliness. If the first maxim of philosophy is "Know thyself," the first ethical maxim of the Gospel is "Know thy neighbor." C. C. A.

Who Is My Neighbor?

FRIDAY, March 7. Luke 10 : 33, 34. "But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was: and when he saw him, he had compassion on him, and went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him."

Purposely, again, the Lord introduces the Samaritan as the third actor in this drama. He was apparently a layman, and belonging to a nation whom the members of the Jewish church regarded as castaways. But this half-heathen puts to shame the learned doctors of the law and renowned practitioners of religion. He was on a journey which required expedition, as we shall see; he had reason to hurry, but the sight of the unfortunate sufferer appeals to his sympathy with such force that he promptly abandons his journey for the time being, let the consequences be what they will. He administers the first aid to the sufferer by applying the customary remedies, and then conveys him carefully and tenderly to a place where more thorough aid can be rendered. At the inn whither he takes him he does not turn him over to other people, pleading haste as he might have done, but takes the tending of the patient upon himself. He spent that day and the night with him, watching with anxious concern the development of the wound fever and the chances for recovery of his ward. Here was true serving love seen. "Mark the beautiful climax," exclaims a divine: "first the compassionate heart, then the helping hand, next the ready foot, finally the true-hearted charge." Yes, these features are all there, and they are all things that we should wish to have done to ourselves if we were in like distress. He loved his neighbor as himself; yea, he set aside all thoughts of his interest and looked not upon his own things but upon those of another. The Good Samaritan's action appears still greater if, as is likely, the wounded man was a Jew. In that case he overcame also his national aversion. With the impulse of the true benefactor he viewed in this victim of violence not the Jew, but the unhappy man. In true love he gave him not only of his own but himself wholly. His love was not mere lip-profession and tongue service, but sterling deeds performed from honest conviction. W. H. T. D.

The Eternal Word

SATURDAY, March 8. John 1 : 1, 2. "In the beginning was the Word; the same was in the beginning with God." Christ is called the unbeginning beginning and the unending end—the Alpha and the Omega, the all and in all. From creation he saw the end of time and the cycles of eternity. He endured the cross for the joy of his coming universal kingdom. He viewed from afar the coming magnificent tapestry, the production woven by divine fingers, a perfect masterpiece of shadows and sunshine, of brilliant beauty upon a dark background of suffering. He saw this mosaic of human character adorning the galleries of eternity.

Christ is called the Word. Words express thoughts, action, life. Our Lord is the express image of the Father's thought in creation, nature, redemption and glorification. Words are close to mind and soul, inseparable from them; so Christ was with God, was God. We know his words better since he was made flesh. He thus translated divinity into humanity in a language all could understand.

Jesus did not begin to live at Bethlehem, for on both sides of Christ stretches eternity. He is contemporary with all history in this world and in all worlds. Take Jesus out of the Bible and it crumbles into dust.

Behold him; he breathes on men and they receive the Divine Spirit. He touches eyes and ears and whole bodies into life from the dead. He draws all men toward his bleeding arms and on his bosom the love and mercy of the All-Father is known and felt. Are you sheltered here under the shadow of the Almighty? Are you a friend of the Friend who sticketh closer than a brother, who, having loved you, will love you forever? E. W. C.

Marion Harland's Corner

Correspondents in the Chair

IT IS my intention to devote, now and then, an entire number of the Corner to the consideration of contributions from corresponding members of our great Family Circle. We solicit from them recipes which they can safely recommend to sister housewives; stories of successes and failures in the practice of their noble profession of home-making; queries and problems they would have solved by readers and friends, and bits of kindly counsel that will ease the burden of daily life for others.

A sheaf of letters lies ready to my hand today, and I earnestly entreat that the example of the writers may encourage other co-laborers and well-wishers.

No. 1.

(1) In making cake, or candy, does it make any difference how it is stirred? (2) In pulling taffy does it matter if one twists it while pulling?—Mrs. B. L. N. (Washington).

(1) So long as the ladle or spoon reaches the bottom of the bowl at each stroke and beats the contents evenly (always with an upward movement), it is of no consequence in what direction the strokes are made. The end to be gained is to force the air into every part of the mixture. If you can use first one hand, then the other, the work will be done more expeditiously and well than if only the right or the left hand wield the beater. The fancy that eggs, batter, etc., should be beaten in one direction is an exploded superstition.

(2) In pulling taffy, or any other kind of candy, use the tips of the fingers only. Butter or flour these lightly and do not allow the hot molten mass to touch the rest of the hand. And it is better to pull the ropes straight than to twist them. Skilled candy-makers will tell you that the product of the task will be lighter in weight and more porous and brittle than if it be "lumped" or twisted, or much kneaded, like dough, in the process.

No. 2.

My trouble is this: My cook-stove is a range in which I use wood, mostly pine, and it gets so badly choked up with soot that I have to clean it frequently. The chimney (stovepipe) also becomes clogged, and has to be taken down and cleaned. This is a lot of trouble, and I am asking you if you can tell me how to prevent this accumulation of soot. The stovepipe has an elbow in it, and enters a chimney at the end of the kitchen. Everybody in my community uses pine stovewood, but few have my trouble. Can you help me?—Mrs. W. (South Carolina).

In the "olden time," when everybody burned wood and in brick chimneys, it was customary to set fire to the wood-soot clinging to the bricks lining the chimney and burn it clean. Once in a while the inflammable soot took fire of itself and did the business voluntarily. Then wood-stoves were introduced into country-houses and chimney-sweeping became a trade. The cause of the trouble in your case is undoubtedly the elbow in the pipe. The soot accumulates there and cannot fall back down into the range. I know of no preventive to this serious annoyance, except to let the pipe get cold, disjoint it below the elbow, and with a long-handled brush remove the soot into a pan placed below. The soot that has clogged the chimney may be swept down from the top through the throat of the chimney. I grant that this is a laborious operation. And it is possible that a better informed reader than myself may tell us of some new discovery which may abate the nuisance.

I lay your appeal before a compassionate constituency, coupling it with an earnest request for help.

No. 3.

A short time ago, a cup of so-called "Vinegar Bees" was given me, with the following directions for making one gallon of vinegar:

"Four quarts of lukewarm water; four tablespoons granulated sugar; four tablespoons sorghum; one cup of 'vinegar bees.'

"Stir and let all stand in a warm place for six days. Then strain out the 'bees' (two cups full) and repeat the process. The 'bees' double in quantity every six days and should be kept busy. So a nice way to do is to give that next-door neighbor a 'start' and let the good work go on."

Now, will some one kindly give us the life history of these "bees," telling where they originated, how to preserve them from year to year, or how to obtain a fresh start?—Mrs. H. E. G. (Minnesota).

Careful research into encyclopedias and much questioning of experts in chemistry and entomolgy have driven me to the final resource of information that may reward our quest. In referring the matter to the constituency-at-large, I remind them of the possibility that "vinegar bees" may be the catchy name of a patented article. In which case our rule against the mention of proprietary drugs, etc., would forbid the publication of the title of the maker of the desired "starter." It is also possible that "vinegar bees" may be but another name for "mother" which gathers upon the surface of vinegar and is thus defined: "A stringy, mucilaginous substance that forms in vinegar during the acetous fermentation, which sets up and hastens this kind of fermentation."

But whence the "bees"?

No. 4.

Some time ago a member who believes in using lots of potatoes, milk and butter asked for a recipe for potato soup that would take the place of meat in a meal. You sent a recipe through the Corner, but I think mine is better yet. So I am sending it to you:

Four large potatoes; two quarts of water; one onion. Let them boil a long time, then pour off the water into a clean dish; mash the potatoes well; return the water they were cooked in to the potatoes, put in butter the size of an egg, salt and pepper to taste, then add one pint of cream or cream-and-milk, or all milk. Let it boil up and serve. I have used this recipe for years. It surely is good, especially on a cold day. Use your own judgment as to how thick you want the soup to be.—Mrs. C. B. (Illinois).

Here is a pleasing coincidence. From another section of the country and some hundreds of miles distant from the last speaker's home, comes—in the same breath, as it were—a letter and a recipe from a Cornerite who also "believes in using lots of potatoes, butter and milk," and carries her fondness for them into the manufacture of potato soup. Incidentally and unconsciously she also betrays a fondness which some may consider more uncommon, in bestowing upon her favorite soup a title we have especial pleasure in appending to another recipe. And—why not?—some day the weight of what I know of the subject may compel me to set my pen in rest to defend a much maligned body of women who have had a great flight of afflictions to endure since the beautiful idyl of Naomi and Ruth should have given a different keynote to all the generations following:

Mother-in-Law's Potato Soup

Cut raw potatoes in small pieces or slices, and boil in the usual way. Drain off the water, pour on sweet milk, add butter, salt and pepper, and let it get warm enough to eat. Some boil the milk, but I am never successful in doing that way. Some pour cream and buttermilk (or thin sour cream only) over potatoes, and thicken with flour to desired consistency. I have gotten more good out of the practical talks and recipes in this Corner during my short year and a half of housekeeping than from any others I have read.—Mrs. H. A. K. (Minnesota).

As a large percentage of said recipes were contributions by our splendid band of working Cornerites, I have no hesitation in allowing the closing sentence of the foregoing to appear as it is written, and attributing the complacency that warms my heart in reading (and in believing) it to maternal pride in my fine corps of housemothers.

Special and Important

Will J. A. H., whose queries respecting reading for children appeared in the Corner several weeks ago, send, without delay, address in full to Marion Harland, care of the Christian Herald? Valuable written and printed matter has been consigned to the Corner which will be forwarded upon receipt of directions as to parcel post, etc. There is a flaw in the address now in our hands.

Helps in the Home

Surprising but true, there are some housewives who try to get along without household scales.

The child from the wealthy home who comes to school having eaten a breakfast of doughnuts and coffee is only a little better equipped than the poor child who has had no breakfast at all.

Early hatches mean profit; almost any hen will lay in the spring, but it's the early bird that catches the high prices of winter eggs.

Instead of covering the top of the kitchen cabinet with oilcloth, try covering it with zinc. Hot dishes won't hurt it, it is easily cleaned and lasts a lifetime.

Famine and Plague Work Havoc in India

THE Methodist Episcopal Church has been called upon to send aid to its Indian members who are suffering from the double affliction of famine and influenza. For some time past letters from the missionaries have reported a food shortage, which, coupled with the epidemic of influenza, made the situation serious. From Bareilly, Rev. C. L. Bare writes:

"We are in the midst of a sore famine. Prices have been rising for the last four years, and now our monsoon rains have failed. As a result, prices of all commodities have risen until grain foods are more than twice as high as in the great famine of 1896-7. The ground is so dry and baked that the cultivators cannot plow and sow their wheat, barley, and other autumn crops. It is the most serious time I have seen since I came to India, forty years ago."

A letter from Allahabad says:

"The rains over a large part of India have totally failed this year, and famine conditions are widespread. Distress is becoming acute, prices are very high. Our poor people, particularly our workers, who live at great sacrifice most of the time, are in great distress, and we are much concerned for them. The influenza death rate is very high. Every worker writes of terrible conditions in his village, and many of the workers themselves are suffering from the disease. Last week I sent out to all the workers instructions as to how to treat the malady with simple Indian remedies which the ordinary villager can obtain, and this week medicines are being distributed through our workers as well as through other organized agencies. We are cooperating with the civil authorities in their efforts to combat the epidemic."

Bishop J. W. Robinson, of Bombay, says that the high prices are particularly hard on the mission workers, who are needed at their posts, and so cannot go into the government relief works. He writes:

"The epidemic of influenza is much more serious than the most virulent outbreaks of black plague or cholera we have ever had. In Bombay the daily death toll went up from seventy to as high as 780; in Poona it rose from ten to 260. The approach of the cooler season, which superinduces pneumonia, and the bodily weakness which follows famine conditions, will make the months ahead very trying. The government is doing all it can, as are all the missions and other philanthropic bodies; but ignorance, poverty, and fatalism make a condition difficult to remedy."

The Methodist Executive Board for India cabled to the Board of Foreign Missions asking if special relief to the extent of $30,000 could be sent to India. The Board decided that the most immediate method of meeting the need was through the special relief fund of the Centenary Department of War Emergency and Reconstruction. Ten thousand dollars were at once sent to the Executive Board for Southern Asia to be used in meeting the situation in India.

The Christian Herald Relief Committee in Bombay, under Dr. Hume's capable direction, is ready to make immediately effective every penny you can send. Address your gifts to India Famine Fund, care of Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City.

W. A. Doane	$2.00
Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Landgrabe	2.00
Mrs. Jennie Bonbrake	2.00
Mrs. Susie Boston	2.00
John E. Lee	2.00
Lydia V. Joseph	2.00
A Friend, Pueblo, Colo.	2.00
Mrs. J. C. Sturdivant	2.00
——, Strathmore, Mich.	2.00
Mrs. M. E. Lynd	1.50
Arthur Wald	1.05
Mrs. Sadie E. Pirtle	.50
Lizzie H. Sisson	.50
W. B. Morris	1.00
——, Ozeana, Va.	1.00
Mrs. Mary S. Ford	1.00
Miss L. Hawley	1.00
Bessie H. Ford	$1.00
Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Cline, Jr.	1.00
A Subscriber, Needham Hghts., Mass.	1.00
W. F. O., Rochester, N. H.	1.00
Mary J. Wenner	1.00
C. H. Heed	1.00
Mrs. H. M. Eliot	1.00
C. D. Leach	1.00
Mrs. S. A. Wellworth	1.00
Miss Rachel Davis	1.00
Mrs. Scott W. Phillips	1.00
Mrs. H. L. South	1.00
——, Cleveland, Ohio	1.00
Mrs. Callie Baker	1.00
Mrs. Howard Murray	1.00
Mrs. Sara Rea	$1.00
Mrs. E. J. McKernon	1.00
Miss L. Maurer and Mrs. Chas. Fosberg	1.00
Helen Stitt	1.00
Mrs. Jane Mackee	1.00
Mrs. H. F. Datesman	1.00
Mrs. E. A. Hull	1.00
Mrs. C. W. Wanamaker	1.00
Belle Reynolds	1.00
Mrs. C. A. Bell	1.00
Rev. H. M. Goodell	1.00
Howard Sisters, Lodi, Wisc.	1.00
Kate Shoemaker	1.00
Ray L. Netcott	1.00
Mrs. E. Homuth	1.00
Amelia T. Alvard	1.00
Mrs. W. A. Lucas	1.00
Lucy E. Palmer	$1.00
Florence Mote	1.00
Subscriber, Bethel, Vt.	1.00
Mrs. W. T. Hancs	1.00
Mr & Mrs Harry Sharp	15.00
Mrs Augusta Collins and Mrs Anna Fulton	15.00
C A Tody	8.00
Earl Johnson	2.25
Mr & Mrs G H Blocher	2.88
M C M	.25
C S Swink	4.00
J J Early	6.00
J F Lang	12.50
J F Ruehenager	1.15
Mrs Alice E Aiken	25.00

Additional contributions to be acknowledged later.

This Fashion Book shows 21 separate stores

The Blouse and Dress Store: Nearly 100 new models: all new materials and colorings.

The Coat and Suit Store: More than 300 original styles: exclusive designs shown by no other house.

Millinery Store—Veil and Scarf Stores: Contain a range of prices and styles which will amaze you.

Corset and Muslin Underwear Store: Containing a wide variety of styles, including special models for the trousseau. 17 pages are devoted to this one store alone.

Hosiery Store—Knit Underwear Store—Sweater and Bathing Suit Store: These stores carry over 3000 styles in the newest hosiery, knit underwear, sweaters and bathing suits at prices which will delight you.

The Glove Store: A store of this kind must carry a complete range of styles. That is the aim of this store. Dozens of glove styles are shown.

Maternity and Infants' Store: This store is under the care of specialists; every garment specially planned.

Misses' and Children's Store: Completely stocked to meet every need of youth.

Men's Store: ' There are 24,896 haberdashery stores in America, and the Charles William Store will hold its own fairly with any of them as to variety, quality and price.

Boys' Store: Where else in America is there a store devoted absolutely and completely to satisfying boys? 14 pages of exceptional bargains shown.

Shoe Store: 42 pages devoted exclusively to shoes. 10 in color.

Note These Prices

FOR WOMEN

Waists	$ .98 to $10.75
Dresses	3.69 to 23.98
House Dresses	1.69 to 4.98
Coats	7.98 to 22.98
Suits	12.98 to 30.00
Skirts	1.69 to 10.98
Hats	.49 to 5.98
Shoes	.69 to 8.49
Muslin Underwear	.39 to 2.19
Knit Underwear	.15 to 2.49
Ribbons	.05 to .49
Flowers	.29 to .79
Veils	.10 to 2.98
Corsets	.98 to 3.79
Aprons	.49 to 2.19
Kimonos	1.98 to 3.69
Colored petticoats	.98 to 5.98
Sweaters [including girls]	2.89 to 7.98
Bathing Suits	.79 to 5.00
Hosiery	.25 to 2.50
Gloves	.42 to 6.75
Maternity Corsets	1.25 to 3.19
Maternity Dresses	3.98 to 10.98
Raincoats	2.39 to 9.59

FOR CHILDREN

Infants' Layettes	$6.75 to $17.49
Infants' Dresses	.65 to 2.49
Infants' Coats	$1.98 to $3.98
Girls' Coats	$ 4.39 to $20.98
Girls' Suits	14.49 to 21.50
Girls' Dresses	1.69 to 18.98
Girls' Hats	.49 to 2.49
Girls' Shoes	.35 to 4.98
Boys' Shoes	1.79 to 3.98
Boys' Suits	.98 to 20.00
Boys' Work Clothes	.95 to 4.50
Boys' Shirts	.59 to 1.59
Boys' Caps and Hats	.49 to 2.49
Plush Coatees	2.89 to 13.59

FOR MEN

Suits	$5.00 to $40.00
Spring Top Coats	$15.00 only
Work Clothes	$1.69 to $12.50
Shirts	.89 to $ 7.50
Sweaters [including boys']	$1.49 to $4.90
Knit Underwear	.50 to $2.75
Shoes	$1.49 to $8.39
Caps and Hats	.79 to $6.50
Hosiery	.21 to $2.39
Bathing Suits	$1.69 to $6.49

Catalog No. 12
New York Styles
Spring and Summer 1919
Charles William Stores
New York City

These Styles and hundreds of others are illustrated in this New Catalog

FREE

Catalog No. 12
New York Styles
Spring and Summer
1919
Charles William Stores
New York City

370 pages of styles—56 in actual colors

BEFORE you get your spring clothes be sure that you examine our wonderful new Spring Catalog—"New York Styles"—370 pages—comprising a most interesting collection of late fashions for men, women and children. This book shows thousands of models for you to choose from—the new blouses, dainty undergarments, stunning gowns, smart suits, hats that are charming—ties, scarfs, gloves and silk hosiery—all styles that will be worn this spring in New York, the fashion center of the world. This merchandise is bought by our 21 specialty stores in America's biggest buying center. It is bought in enormous quantities, an advantage in purchasing power which saves money for more than 2,000,000 customers yearly!

Send for this free Style Book today

Let it guide you to better styles, greater convenience and greater savings.

The Charles William Stores
New York City

The Charles William Stores, 115 Stores Building, New York

Please send one copy of your new Spring Fashion Book to

Name..

Rural Route or Street No..

City and State...... ....

This New Range Is A Wonder For Cooking

Although it is less than four feet long it can do every kind of cooking for any ordinary family by gas in warm weather, or by coal or wood when the kitchen needs heating.

The Coal section and the Gas section are just as separate as though you had two ranges in your kitchen.

Gold Medal
Glenwood

Note the two gas ovens above—one for baking, glass paneled and one for broiling, with white enamel door.

The large oven below has the Indicator and is heated by coal or wood.

See the cooking surface when you want to rush things—five burners for gas and four covers for coal.

When in a hurry both coal and gas ovens can be operated at the same time, using one for baking bread or roasting meats and the other for pastry baking—It

"Makes Cooking Easy"

Write for handsome free booklet 162 that tells all about it

Weir Stove Co., Taunton, Mass.
Makers of the Celebrated Glenwood Coal, Wood and Gas Ranges, Heating Stoves and Furnaces.

6%

For nearly a quarter of a century

we have paid 6% on Time Certificates issued for $100 or more, and have never been a day late in mailing checks for semi-annual interest or withdrawals.

For 16 years we have paid 5% on Certificates issued for $25 or more and payable on demand.

Our Certificates are amply protected by first mortgage on improved real estate in which all our investments are made.

Booklet gives full information—write for it.

The Calvert Mortgage Company
863 Calvert Building, Baltimore, Md.

Become a Nurse

IF YOU cannot spend three years in hospital or are past hospital age limit, send name and address on postcard for yearbook explaining the C. S. N. Home-Practice Method of studying trained nursing. State age.

The Chautauqua School of Nursing
341 Main St. Jamestown, N.Y.

Earn Extra Money

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD needs additional representatives to procure renewal subscriptions. Experience not necessary.

A special proposition is ready for those who wish to build up a business of their own.

You can put your whole time on our work—or you can work during spare hours.

Send a postal today for complete information of our special offer to agents.

Agency Department, Christian Herald, Bible House, New York

Q. E. D. OR NEW LIGHT ON THE DOCTRINE OF CREATION
By PROF. GEORGE McCREADY PRICE. Cloth Only 75c
The Last Word of Science on the Oldest Problem of Religion
"Deals the death-blow to the evolution theory."—Evangelical.
F. H. Revell Co., 158 5th Ave., N.Y.; 17 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

The Search

By
GRACE LIVINGSTON HILL
(MRS. LUTZ)
Author of "The Witness," "The Measure of a Man," Etc.

CHAPTER IX—Continued

THOMAS was well trained. The cars were always in order. He was used to Ruth's hurry calls, and when she reached the garage she found the car standing in the back street waiting for her. In a moment more she was rushing on her way toward the village without having aroused the suspicion of the two young men who so impatiently awaited her return. Mrs. Cameron was ready, impatient and eager as a child, standing on the sidewalk with a great blanket shawl over her arm.

It was not until they had swept through the village, over the bridge, and out on the broad highway toward Chester that Ruth began to realize what a wild-goose chase she had undertaken. Just where did she expect to find John Cameron, anyway? It was now three minutes to five by the little clock in the car, and it was a full fifteen minutes' drive to Chester. The plan had been to delay him on the way to the train, and there had been mention of a short cut. Could that be the rough stony road that turned down sharply just beyond the stone quarry? It seemed hardly possible that anybody would attempt to run a car over that road. Surely John Cameron knew the roads about here well enough to advise against it. If they had gone down there they might emerge at the other end just in time to miss the train, and then start on toward Wilmington. Or they might turn back and take the longer way if they found the short road utterly impassable. Which should she take? Should she dare that rocky way? If only there might be some tracks to guide her! But the road was hard and dusty and told no tales of recent travelers. Oh that some higher power might guide her! In that moment her heart put up what was almost her first real grown-up prayer. They skimmed down the grade past the stone quarry, and the short cut flashed into view, rough and hilly, turning sharply away behind a group of spruce trees. It was thick woods beyond. If she went that way and got into any trouble with her machine the chances were few that any one would come along to help. She had but a moment to decide, and something told her that the long way was the safe one, and shorter in the end. She swept on, her engine throbbing with that pleasant purr of expensive, well-groomed machinery, the car leaping forward as if it delighted in the high speed. The little woman by her side sat breathless and eager, with shining eyes, looking ahead for her boy.

They passed car after car, and Ruth scanned the occupants keenly. Some were filled with soldiers, but John Cameron was not among them. She began to be afraid that perhaps she ought after all to have gone down that hilly way and made sure they were not there. She was not quite sure where that short road came out.

The two women sat almost silent, straining their eyes ahead. They had said hardly a word since the first greeting. Each seemed to understand the thought of the other without words. For the present they had but one common object, to find John Cameron.

Suddenly, as far ahead as they could see, a car darted out of the wooded roadside, swung into their road and plunged ahead at a tremendous rate. They had a glimpse of khaki uniforms, but it was much too far away to distinguish faces or forms. Nevertheless both women fastened their eyes upon it with but one thought. Ruth put on more speed and forged ahead, thankful that she was not within city limits yet and that there was no one about to remind her of the speed limit. Something told her that the man she was seeking was in that car ahead.

It was a thrilling race. Ruth said no word, but she knew that her companion was aware that she was chasing that car. Mrs. Cameron sat straight and tense as if it had been a race of life and death, her cheeks glowing and her eyes shining. Ruth was grateful that she did not talk.

They did not go into Chester proper at all, but veered away to the right, and Ruth followed, leaping over the road as if it had been a gray velvet ribbon. She did not seem to be gaining on the car; but it was encouraging that they could keep it still in sight. Then there came a sharp turn of the road and it was gone. They were pulsing along now at a tremendous rate. The girl had cast caution to the winds. She was hearing the complacent sneer of Harry Wainwright as he boasted how they would get John Cameron into trouble, and all the force of her strong little will was enlisted to frustrate his plans.

It was growing dusk, and lights leaped out on the munition factories all about them. Along the river other lights flashed and flickered in the white mist that rose like a wraith. But Ruth saw nothing of it. She was straining her eyes for the little black speck of a car which she had been following and which now seemed to be swallowed up by the evening. She had not relaxed her speed, and the miles were whirling by, but she had a growing consciousness that she might be passing the object of her chase now at any minute without knowing it.

Presently they came to a junction of three roads, and she paused. On ahead the road was broad and empty save for a car coming toward them. Off to the right was a desolate way leading to a little cemetery. Down to the left a smooth wooded road wound into the darkness. There were signboards up. Ruth leaned out and flashed a pocket torch on the board. "To Singleton, 10 Miles," it read. Did she fancy it, or was it really true that she could hear the distant sound of a car among the pines?

"I'm going down this way!" she said decidedly to her companion, as if her action needed an explanation, and she turned her car into the new road.

"But it's too late now," said Mrs. Cameron wistfully. "The train will be gone, of course, even from Wilmington. And you ought to be going home. I'm very wrong to have let you come so far; and it's getting dark. Your folks will be worrying about you. That man will likely do his best to get him to camp in time."

"No," said Ruth decidedly. "There's no one at home to worry just now, and I often go about alone rather late. Besides, aren't we having a good time? We're going a little farther anyway before we give up."

She began to wonder in her heart if she ought not to have told somebody else and taken Thomas along to help. It was rather a questionable thing for her to do in the dusk of the evening, two women all alone. But then she had Mrs. Cameron along, and that made it perfectly respectable. But if she failed now, what else could she do? Her blood boiled hotly at the thought of letting Harry Wainwright succeed in his miserable plot. Oh for Cousin LaRue! He would have thought a way out of this. If everything else failed she would tell the whole story to Captain LaRue and beg him to exonerate John Cameron. But that, of course, she knew would be hard to do; there was so much red tape in the army, and so many unwritten laws that could not be set aside just for private individuals. Still, there must be a way, if she had to go herself to some one and tell what she had overheard. She set her pretty lips firmly and rode on at a brisk pace down the dark road, switching on her headlights now to see the way here in the woods. And then suddenly she jerked on the brake and came to a jarring stop just in time, for ahead of her a big car was sprawled across the road; and the rising hurriedly from a kneeling postu before the engine, in the full light her headlights, blinking and frown with anxiety, stood John Cameron!

CHAPTER X

THE end of her chase came so un pectedly that her wits were co pletely scattered. Now that she w face to face with the tall soldier, she h nothing to say for her presence the What would he think of her? H could she explain her coming? She h undertaken the whole thing in su haste that she had not planned ahe Now she knew that from the start s had intended not to explain how s came to be possessed of any inform tion concerning him. She felt a kind responsible shame for her old playma Harry Wainwright, and a certain lo alty toward her own social set, that p vented her from that; and yet it w the only possible explanation that co make her coming justifiable. So n in the brief interval before he had reco nized her, she must stage the next a and she found herself unable to spe her throat dry, her lips for the insta paralyzed. It was the jubilant li mother that stepped into the crisis a did the most natural thing in the wor

"John! O John! It's really you she cried, and the troubled young s dier, peering into the dusk to disco if here was a vehicle he might presu to commandeer to help him out of predicament, lifted startled eyes to t two faces in the car and strode forwa abandoning with a clang the wren with which he had been working.

"Mother!" he said, a shade of de anxiety in his voice. "What is the m ter? How came you here?"

"Why, I came after you," she sai laughing like a girl. "We're going see that you get to camp in time. We' made pretty good time so far. Jump quick, and we'll tell you the rest on t way. We mustn't waste time."

Cameron's startled gaze turned Ruth now, and a great wonder and d light sprang up in his eyes. It was li the day he went away on the train, o more so; and it brought a rich flu into Ruth's cheeks. As she felt the h waves she was glad that she was sitti behind the light and not in its glare.

"What! You?" he breathed wo deringly. "But this is too much! A after the way I treated you!"

His mother looked wonderingly fro one to the other:

"Get in, John, quick. We must lose a minute. Something might del us later." It was plain she was deep impressed with the necessity for the s dier to get back to his camp.

"Yes, please get in quickly, and us get started. Then we can talk said Ruth, relieved to find somethi she could say that was appropriate.

His hand went out to the door open it, the wonder still shining in h face, when a low murmur like a gro went up behind him.

Ruth looked up, and there in the f glare of the lights stood two bu civilians and another soldier:

"Oh, I say!" drawled the soldier no very pleasant tone, "you're not g ing to desert us that way! Not af Pass came out of his way for us! didn't think you had a yellow streak

Cameron paused and a troubled lo came into his face. He glanced at t empty back seat with a repression his disappointment in the necessity.

"There's another fellow here that h to get back at the same time I do?" said, looking at Ruth hesitatingly.

"Certainly. Ask him, of course Ruth's voice was hearty and put t whole car at his disposal.

"There's room for you too, Cha bers," he said with relief. "And Pa more will be glad to get rid of us, I su pect. He'll be able to get home so There isn't much the matter with th gine. If you do what I told you to carburetor you'll find it will go right. Come on, Chambers. We ght to hurry!"

"No, thanks! I stick by my friends!" d the soldier shortly.

"As you please!" said Cameron, pping on the running-board.

"Not as you please!" said a gruff ce. "I'm running this party, and all go together. See?" A heavy nd came down upon Cameron's oulder with a mighty grip.

Cameron landed a smashing blow der the man's chin, which sent him lling, and sprang inside as Ruth threw the clutch and sent her car leaping ward. The two men in front were en by surprise and barely got out the way in time, but instantly revered their senses and sprang after e car, the one nearest her reaching the wheel. Cameron, leaning forrd, sent him rolling down the gully, d Ruth turned the car sharply to oid the other car, which was occupy- as much of the road as possible, and the third man scrambling to his es behind her. It was taking a big ance to dash past that car in the rrow space over rough ground, but th was not conscious of anything but e necessity of getting away. In an stant they were back in the road and shing along through the dark.

"Mother, you'd better let me help u back here," said her son, leaning rward and almost lifting his mother to the back seat, then stepping forrd to take her place beside Ruth.

"Better turn out your back lights!" said in a steady voice. "They might llow, you know. They're in an ugly ood. They've been drinking."

"We're not on the right road, did u know? This road goes to the Pine ee Inn and Singleton!"

Cameron gave a low exclamation:

"Then they're headed for more liquor. thought something was up."

"Is there a crossroad back to the pike?"

"I'm not sure. Probably. I know ere is farther on, almost to the Inn. his is an awful mess to have got you to! I'd rather have been in the guard-use than have had this happen!"

"Please don't!" said Ruth earnestly. It's an adventure! I'm enjoying it. m not a doll to be kept in cotton wool!"

"I should say not!" said Cameron with deep admiration in his tone. "You haven't shown yourself much of a doll tonight. Some doll, to run a car the way you did in the face of all that! I'll tell you what I think of it later when we get out of this!"

"They are coming, I believe!" said Ruth, glancing back. "Don't you see a light? Look!"

Mrs. Cameron was looking too, through the little back window. Now she spoke quietly:

"Wouldn't it be better to get out and slip up in the woods till they have gone by?"

"No, mother!" said Cameron quickly. "Just you sit quiet and trust us."

"Something awful might happen!"

"No, mother! Don't you worry!" he said gently. Then to Ruth:

"There's a big barn ahead there on your left. Keep your eye out for a road around behind it. If we could disappear it's too dark for them to know where we are. Would you care to turn out all the lights and let me run the car? I don't want to boast, but there isn't much of anything I can't do with a car when I have to."

Instantly Ruth switched out every light and with a relieved "Please!" gave up the wheel to him. They made the change swiftly and silently, and Ruth took the post of lookout.

"Yes. I can see two lights. It might be some one else, mightn't it?"

"Not likely, on this road. But we're not taking any chances."

And with that the car bumped down across a gully and lurched up to a grassy approach to a big stone barn that loomed above them; then slid down another bank and passed close to a great haystack, whose clutching straw reached out weird fingers to brush their faces; and so they swept softly around to the rear of the barn and stopped. Cameron shut off the engine instantly, and they sat in utter silence listening to the oncoming car.

"It's the boys, all right!" whispered Cameron. "That's Passmore's voice."

His mother's hand stole out to touch his shoulder and he reached around and held it close.

"Don't tremble, mother; we're all safe!" he whispered in a tone so tender that Ruth felt a shiver of pleasure pass over her for the mother who had such a son. Also there was the instant thought that a man could not be wholly "rotten" when he could speak to his mother in that tone.

There was a breathless space when the car paused on the road not far away and their pursuers stood up and looked around, shouting to one another. There was no mistaking their identity now. Ruth shivered visibly. One of them got out and came toward the barn. They could hear him stepping over the stony roadside. Cameron laid a quiet hand of reassuring protection on her arm that steadied her and made her feel wonderfully safe once more.

The man had stumbled across the gully and up a little way toward the barn. They could hear him swearing at the unevenness of the ground, and in a moment more he was fumbling about for the barn door and calling for a flash-light. Then, like the distant sound of a mighty angel of deliverance, came the rumble of a car in the distance. The men heard and took it for their quarry on ahead. They climbed into their car again and were gone.

John Cameron did not wait for them to get far away. He set the car in motion as soon as they were out of sight, and its expensive mechanism obeyed his direction almost silently as he guided the car around the barn, behind the haystack and back again into the road over which they had just come.

"Now!" he said, as he put the car to its best speed and switched on its headlights again, "now, we can beat them to it."

The car dashed over the ground and the three sat silent while they passed into the woods and over the place where they had first met Cameron. Ruth felt herself trembling again, and her teeth beginning to chatter with the relaxation from the strain. Cameron seemed to realize her feeling and turned toward her:

"You've been wonderful!" he said, flashing a warm look at her. "And you too, mother!" lifting his voice a little and turning his head toward the back seat. "I don't believe there's another two women in Bryne Haven could have gone through a scene like that and kept absolutely still. You were great!" There was that in his voice that lifted Ruth's heart more than any praise she had ever received for anything. She wanted to make some acknowledgment, but she found to her surprise that tears were choking her throat so that she could not speak.

They emerged from the woods and in sight of the pike at last, and Cameron drew a breath of relief.

"There, I guess we can hold our own with any one now," he said, settling back in his seat, but relaxing none of his vigilance toward the car, which sped along the highway like a winged thing. "But it's time I heard how you came to be here. I haven't been able to explain it during the intervals when I've had any chance at all to think about it."

"Oh, I just called up your mother to know if it would help you any to be taken to your train," said Ruth quickly, "and she mentioned that she was worried lest you would miss it, so I suggested that we try to catch you and take you on to Wilmington or Baltimore, or wherever you have to go. I do hope this delay hasn't spoiled it all. How long does it take to go from Baltimore to camp? Do you think we can make it?"

"But you can't go all the way to Baltimore!" he exclaimed. "What would you and mother do at that time of night alone after I go to camp? You see, it isn't as if I could stay and come back with you."

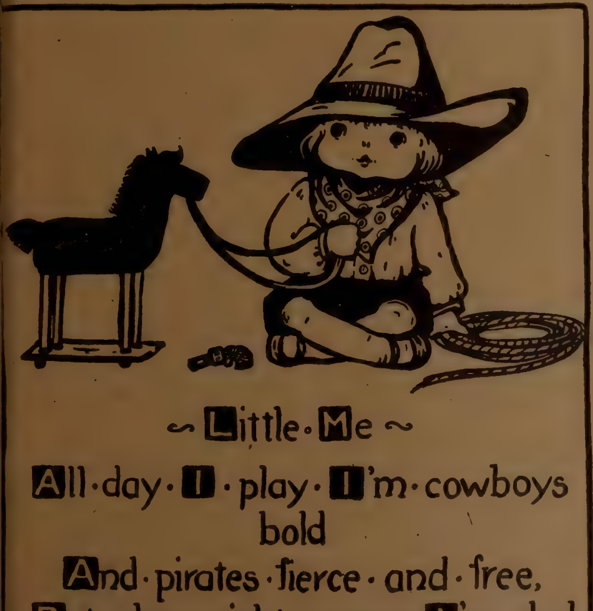
"Oh, we'll just go to a hotel in Baltimore, won't we, Mrs. Cameron? We'll be all right if we only get you safe to camp. Do you think we can do it?"

"Oh, yes, we can do it all right with this car. But I'm quite sure I ought not to let you do it just for me. What will your people think?"

"I've left word that I've gone to a friend in trouble," twinkled Ruth, "and I'll call them up when I get to Baltimore, and make it all right with Auntie."

Cameron turned and looked at her wonderingly, reverently.

To be continued



~ Little · Me ~

All · day · I · play · I'm · cowboys bold
And · pirates · fierce · and · free,
But · when · night · comes · I'm · glad I'm · just Dear · Mother's · little · me !

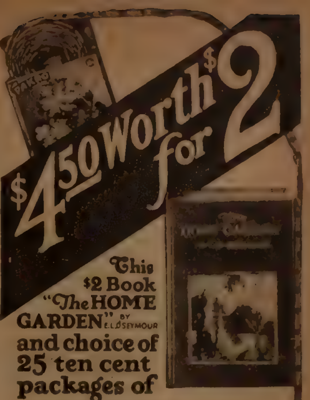
·Elizabeth·FitzHugh·



This $2 Book "The HOME GARDEN" BY E. L. D. SEYMOUR and choice of 25 ten cent packages of

PAKRO SEEDTAPE AND SEEDS FOR BETTER GARDENS

all for $2

VEGETABLES

Beets Crimson Globe
Beets Early Egyptian
Cabbage All Seasons
Carrots Danvers Half Long
Carrots Oxhart or Guerande
Endive Green Curled
Kohl Rabi White Vienna
Lettuce Big Boston
Lettuce Black Seeded Simpson
Lettuce Trianon Cos
Onion Prizetaker
Onion Red Wethersfield
Onion White Portugal
Onion Yellow Globe Danvers
Parsley Double Curled
Parsnip Hollow Crown
Radish French Breakfast
Radish Long Scarlet
Radish Scarlet Turnip White Tip
Ruta Baga Improved Purple Top
Spinach Long Standing
Swiss Chard Silver Leaf
Tomato Beauty
Tomato Earliana
Tomato Ponderosa
Tomato Stone
Turnip Purple Top Strap Leaf

FLOWERS

Alyssum Sweet
Aster Giant Mixed
Aster Queen of Market Mixed
Aster Semples Branching Mixed
Balsam Double Mixed
Candytuft Mixed
Hollyhock Double Mixed
Mignonette Grandiflora Sweet
Morning Glory Japan Mixed
Pansies Finest Mixed
Pinks Double Mixed
Poppy Californica
Sweet Peas Mixed

To prove to you that you can have a better garden—a more beautiful, luxuriant and profitable garden this year than you ever had before, we make you this extraordinary special offer:

Choice of 25 of the 40 ten-cent packages of PAKRO Seedtape listed on the left.

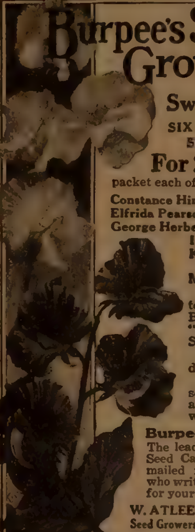
A $2 book, "The Home Garden," by E. L. D. Seymour, associate editor of "Garden Magazine" and "Country Life in America." Tells just how to plant a garden.

$4.50 worth in all for $2.00, $2.20 in Canada. Delivery charges prepaid. The handsomest seed catalog ever published — 40 pages of flowers and vegetables reproduced in actual colors, included FREE.

PAKRO Seedtape is a strip of thin tissue paper holding the seeds. The seeds are the finest prize-winning varieties, evenly and accurately spaced. A whole row is planted at a time—as fast as you walk.

The plants grow in straight rows — vigorously and fully. Practically no thinning out is necessary. The SEEDTAPE way is the sure, the scientific, the best way of planting ever devised. Take advantage of our special $4.50 offer for $2.00. Send check or money order TODAY. Satisfaction guaranteed.

American Seedtape Co.
360 Ogden Street, Newark, N. J.



Burpee's Seeds Grow

Sweet Peas
SIX STANDARD SPENCERS
For 25c we will mail one packet each of the following:

Constance Hinton, white
Elfrida Pearson, pink
George Herbert, carmine
Irish Belle, lilac
King Manoel, apricot
Mrs. Routzahn, [illegible]

together with the Burpee leaflet: "How to grow Sweet Peas."

Mailed to your door for 25c.

If purchased separately, the above collection would cost 60c.

Burpee's Annual
The leading American Seed Catalog will be mailed free to those who write for it. Write for your copy today.

W. ATLEE BURPEE CO.
Seed Growers Philadelphia

KNITTING WOOL

Direct from mill. All-wool, four-ply yarn—soft, durable, easy-knitting. Khaki, oxford, natural, white, black, navy, salmon, canary, turquoise, peacock. Sent postpaid, insured, day we get order. Used for soldiers' and sailors' sweaters, socks, helmets, wristlets. Now released for home use. Free samples sent. Two lb. carton (4 hanks to lb.) $3 per lb. Five lb. carton $2.80 per lb. Send money, money-order or bank-draft. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Immediate delivery Order now.

F. W. WALTER, Dept. F, 143 Letitia St., Philadelphia, Pa.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL
TROCHES

SORE throat, coughing, hoarseness, loss of voice, bronchial and asthmatic troubles are quickly relieved with Brown's Bronchial Troches.

Not a confection but a genuine remedy with seventy years of success back of it. Contain no opiates or other harmful ingredients, hence are especially fine for adults and children.

May be carried in vanity case or vest pocket.

Four sizes, 15c, 35c, 75c & $1.25 at all druggists.

John I. Brown & Son
Boston, Mass.

Safe Handy
Dependable

BANNERMAN Army Auction Bargains

Tents	$4.25 up	C. W. revolvers	$2.65	up
Leggings	.18 up	Army 7 shot carbine	2.95	up
Saddles	4.65 up	Army Haveracks	.15	up
Uniforms	1.50 up	Knapsacks	.75	up
Teamharness	26.85	Army Gun slings	.30	up

Colts Army Revolver cal. 45 at $8.45.
15 acres Army Goods. Large illustrated cyclopedia reference catalog—428 pages—issue 1917, mailed 50 cents. New Circular 5 cents.
FRANCIS BANNERMAN & SONS 501 Broadway, New York

MENDETS — WONDER MONEY MAKERS mend leaks instantly in all utensils, hot water bags, etc. Insert and tighten. 10c and 25c a package postpaid. AGENTS WANTED. Collette Mfg. Co. Box 444-A, Amsterdam, N.Y.

Wilson and Foch say

"A man has deprived himself of the best there is in the world who has deprived himself of intimate knowledge of the Bible."
—President Wilson

"The Bible is certainly the best preparation that you can give to an American soldier going into battle to sustain his magnificent ideal and faith."
—Marshal Foch to N.Y. Bible Society

You Have a Responsibility Too These two great leaders, who are willingly carrying a world responsibility, voice a direct appeal to intelligent men and women—to busy teachers, physicians, students, office, industrial and home workers, farmers, mechanics, soldiers—as well as to ministers, missionaries, evangelists, etc.

Answer this "Call to the Colors"
Be a Trained Christian Worker

Never was there so great a demand for those who really know the Bible—a demand likely to be overwhelming with the close of the war.

There is personal profit beyond anything you can imagine in prayerful systematic Bible reading and study.

GET READY! START AT ONCE—TODAY. The

Correspondence Courses

of THE MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE will give you a system to study by, direction, stimulus, a guide, a teacher—a training which will increase your usefulness in God's service to your great delight and enduring joy.

You will be a personal pupil—time, place and amount of study under your own control.

Examinations are written, assuring accuracy in your work. A president of a leading university has said that correspondence work is superior to that done by regularly matriculated students.

The expense is small—many times less than is charged for other correspondence courses. Over 5000 people last year took one or more of our eight different courses.

Write for free prospectus giving full information.

We Offer These Eight Courses

- Synthetic Bible Study
- Practical Christian Work
- Bible Doctrine
- Bible Chapter Summary
- Introductory Bible Course
- Evangelism
- Christian Evidences
- The Scofield Bible Correspondence Course

---- MAIL COUPON TODAY ----

THE MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE
Dept. 9562 153 Institute Place, Chicago, Ill.

Send me your prospectus giving complete information regarding your eight courses in Correspondence Bible Study.

Name..

....

City..............................State..................

Joshua, Patriot and Leader

International Sunday School Lesson for March 9
Joshua 1 : 1-9

The Task of Assuming Leadership

By Rev. George D. Allison, Ph.D.

IT IS always a difficult duty for any man to succeed to the place and work of a truly great leader, whether he be a president of a mighty republic, or the pastor of a powerful church, or an able head of a business house. Odious comparisons are apt to be made by people who are so thoughtless as to expect all men of quality to be alike. Besides, the new leader on the threshold of his task comes into inevitable contrast with his predecessor at the height of his career. Though we be but called to the modest but important place of teacher in the school or officer in the church we hesitate to assume our new post. Yet new leaders must continually be found, and our lesson for today shows some of God's methods in raising them up.

The Training of Joshua

The first qualification of Joshua to head the tribes of Israel was his long training and experience. God seldom has to fall back upon a raw recruit; he trains his generals in the ranks, and advances them step by step. God prepared to select Joshua by influencing Moses to use and develop him first. We have no account of the reasons for Moses' choice of this youth as his "right hand man," but such he became. He was preferred among thousands, many of them older than he. Perhaps because he was teachable! There is no doubt at all that Joshua knew how to obey orders, which is an excellent preparation for giving them. He was a successful follower before he became a successful leader.

Moses prepared his successor by personal contact and association. He even took Joshua with him up into the Holy Mount when he received the Law, which reminds us of Jesus' method with Peter and James and John. The Master bestowed his greatest gift when he "appointed twelve, that they might be with him" (Mark 3 : 14). To catch the spirit of a truly great leader is to have the essential worthiness to succeed him, though one be far less notable in ability. So it was with Joshua. Noteworthy illustrations of training by contact are found in the story of Socrates and Plato, or in modern life the inspiration of John Hay through serving Abraham Lincoln very much as Joshua served Moses at the outset of his career. In our smaller spheres we Sunday-school people have a like power of becoming the formative influence in the lives of our young disciples. We ought to be more numerously engaged in granting those who show promise more of our company, more of our hearts. That boy or girl will never forget a trip with you, or the privilege of helping you in Christian service.

It pays to take time to review Joshua's apprenticeship. See the account of his first battle (Ex. 17 : 8 ff.) when the Amalekites blocked the way, and the young Joshua selected and led the minute-men of Israel as Moses directed. The future general had absolute faith in his commander, and whenever Israel faltered he pointed them to that majestic figure on the hill-top holding up the rod of God in his hands. Moses realized his young follower's reliance upon him and had Aaron and Hur help him by holding up his hands. When victory was sure Moses gave the heroes an object lesson by erecting an altar which he called Jehovah Nissi, "the Lord is my banner," lest they put their trust in him instead of the God he served.

Again recall an occasion when Moses tactfully rebuked Joshua for narrowness in his zeal and for presumption (Num. 11). Eldad and Medad were prophesying in the camp, and Joshua rushed to Moses, saying, "My lord Moses, forbid them." How beautiful and memorable the answer of the meek man of God, "Art thou jealous for my sake? would that all Jehovah's people were prophets, that Jehovah would put his Spirit upon them!" That magnanimous attitude was surely effective in developing in Joshua a like unselfishness of service.

Finally, remember his experience as the companion of Caleb when the twelve spies explored the land of Canaan. It must have been very memorable to Joshua, especially if he reached as far as some of the localities known to all faithful Israelites from the stories of Abraham and Jacob. He knew himself to be the inheritor of a high tradition and a noble faith in God. Whatever were his experiences in the years of desert waiting, he must have been keenly anxious for the time to come, as he believed it surely would, when they could enter upon the inheritance promised to their ancestors long before. He, for one, was determined to prove worthy.

God's Promise and Charge

To a modest and sincere man like this one, it was no light thing to assume the place of Moses, and to head the enterprise which summed up the aspirations of the past and the hope of the future. He needed to sense the divine will very definitely in such a matter. And at the beginning of the book that bears his name we learn that he had a very clear call and conviction as to God's attitude and his responsibility. God made known to him beyond the peradventure of a doubt where his duty lay. The words are forever emblematic to us all: "As I was with Moses, so will I be with thee." We ought to feel the same thrilling assurance, that as God was with Peter and John and Paul, as he was with our Pilgrim Fathers, as he was with Great Reformers, so will he be with every one of us in the new tasks of his kingdom now. "I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee" is for us, whatever be our place and work for Him. "Be strong and of good courage, for thou shalt cause this people to inherit the land"—this charge is for us all, as we discharge some measure of responsibility for innumerable others who shall come after us.

Place of the Bible in the Life of a Successful Leader

One bit of practical counsel is given to Joshua, one of immeasurable importance for his success: "This Book of the Law shall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate thereon day and night." How limited were the Holy Scriptures that Joshua had compared with the treasures of God that are ours! Yet in that restricted record was the inspiration of his life. "Do according to all that is written therein, for then thou shalt have good success." It is no mere fancy that pictures this rugged soldier reading the Law in his tent, reading, too, the stories of Jacob and of Joseph, of God's hand in the ways of his fathers. Who shall say that God did not keep Joshua's purpose true by the power of the Book which he kept with all his honest heart? Nehemiah was another patriot of simple faith who loved the Law of God and prepared for his practical tasks by reading and meditating therein. Oliver Cromwell was one more; apart from his devotional life his career as patriot and general cannot be fully understood. Still another Joshua-like man was Chinese Gordon, who soldiered all over the world, but was ever a devout student and reader of the Book. Our own Lincoln was steeped in the ideals as well as the phrases of Isaiah, Jeremiah and Christ.

A secret of success not usually mentioned in the newspaper articles of the day is this: "Oh, how love I thy law! It is my meditation all the day." When Paul wrote to Timothy he included in his exhortation "give heed to reading," and we well know that he did not refer to light and entertaining fiction, but to "every Scripture inspired of God." The truly great leaders are not men who claim to be too busy to meditate, to read the Scripture and to pray.

The Challenge of a New Task

It was not for Joshua merely to continue what Moses had been doing. He was to take forward steps as well. Ev though he may not have been the equ of Moses in ability, he must attem things that Moses had not been priv leged to reach. "Arise, go over th Jordan." At last the day for wondro progress and adventure, toil and batt had dawned. Courage and faith inde were needed. They are needed sti For God calls anew to us, saying on more, "Behold, a new thing will I do and we must be ready, ready as w Joshua, a wholly dedicated man. Wit out Moses' unique genius, he had Mos utter consecration, and God could u him. God is not handicapped by lack of ability, but by the incomplet ness of our loyalty.

Finally, there is a lesson here for tim of bereavement and loss. "Moses m servant is dead; now therefore arise It is the part of true Christians to sha off sorrow's lethargy and to follow a Jesus Christ—to forego the selfish indu gence in griefs, and to serve the Kin dom of God. Not to let the loss of lea ers, in nation, church or school, result the lessening of the work, but in humble assumption of new burdens, dependence upon the strength and grac of our Father.

Sunday School Method

By FRANK L. BROWN

Joint General Secretary World's Sund School Association

Missionary Entertainments an Pageants

IN these days, when America's respo sibility to the world is being em phasized, it is good to know of som splendid ways of bringing a knowledg of that world and its needs to America Sunday-school children.

The pageant and the missionary pl and entertainment is a splendid way c teaching missions, both home a foreign. The following, issued by th Missionary Education Movement, 1 Fifth Avenue, New York, will furnis superintendents, teachers, and mi sionary committees with rich materi for week evenings that will intere parents and the community as well.

The Pilgrimage. By Helen L. Wilco A thrilling story of the first day of Moslem pilgrimage to Mecca. Abou two hours. 25 cents. 12 copies needed

Broken Chains. By Nellie C. Dodd The romance of a Turkish girl breakin the chains of custom. Forty to fift minutes. 25 cents. Ten copies needed

Slave Girl and School Girl. By Hele L. Wilcox. The home life of a well-to-d Chinese bookseller. Thirty to fort minutes. 25 cents. Ten copies required

Kosiki. By Amy Kellogg. The trans formation of a Korean village throug the influence of one Christian convert 15 minutes. 15 cents. 5 copies needed

Kanjundu. By Helen L. Wilcox Presents the conflict of Christianit with heathenism in Africa. About on hour. 25 cents. Fifteen copies required Sunlight and Candlelight. By Hele L. Wilcox. An American girl visits Japanese village and learns much abou the Japanese. Thirty minutes. 25 cents Five copies required.

The Heroine of Ava. By Helen L Wilcox. A tale of Burma in the days o Adoniram Judson.

The Test. By Helen L. Wilcox. Written in blank verse. A thrilling story of life among the Mohammedans. Forty-five minutes. 25 cents. Six copies required.

Just Plain Peter. By Janet Prentiss. For Juniors. The story of two Italian orphans in a tenement. Suggestions for playing the games of foreign children. Thirty minutes. 25 cents. Four copies.

El Dorado: a Pageant of South American Freedom. By Helen L. Wilcox. This pageant has a prelude and interlude which form connecting chronological links. The four episodes deal with the Spanish conquest; slavery in Brazil; the campaigns of San Martin; and the beginnings of religious liberty in Peru. Any episode can be used independently of the others. 25 cents.

The Missionary Education Movement will rent out any costumes needed in these pageants. Here is a fascinating and unique way of acquainting a community with its neighbors in every land.

The Y. M. C. A. and the Churches

By ROBERT P. WILDER

Director Bureau of Religious Work

WHEN it seemed that America would enter the war, I asked Dr. Mott about calling together a Cooperating Committee of Church leaders to assist in the religious work of the Young Men's Christian Association. They have been in diligent service ever since.

In each of the six military departments one man is responsible for the religious work in that department. In addition, each camp has a religious work director, and each Y. M. C. A. hut a religious work secretary.

The Bureau has a Committee on Religious Services in the Camps under the chairmanship of President Stevenson. This Committee has selected as speakers in the camps men who are evangelistic in aim, though not necessarily evangelistic in name. The services rendered by these speakers have been of untold value.

We have also stressed personal as well as public evangelism. Recently the Director of Religious Work in one of the camps told me that he knew between six and seven thousand men, who had passed through the camp or were there at present, that had been led to faith in Christ through personal evangelism alone. In connection with our public and personal evangelism, we have used the War Roll Card, which is as follows:

> "I hereby pledge my allegiance to the Lord Jesus Christ as my Saviour and King, and by God's help will fight His battles for the victory of His Kingdom."

We have instructed our secretaries not to use this card in the larger meetings, but only in after-meetings when it had been carefully explained, or in personal work. Last March only 54,000 had signed the War Roll, but we have now in our Bureau 301,000 cards signed by men in our Army and Navy. Our procedure is as follows: When a card reaches our office in New York, a letter is sent over my signature to the man who has signed it, urging him to join the church, if he has not done so already, and also to join a Bible class, and giving him a few practical suggestions with reference to the Christian life. The original card is sent to his nearest relative, and a copy to the pastor of the church nearest the man's home—a church belonging to the denomination for which the man has expressed a preference—with a request that the pastor visit the man's family and get them into fellowship with the church if they are not already church members. We also urge the pastor to write a few words of encouragement to the signer of the card. I wish you could read some of the hundreds of letters which have reached us from the mothers and wives of the men who have signed these cards, and some of the thousands of letters that have reached us from the boys themselves.

Four and a half million New Testaments and other Scripture portions have been circulated among the men under the colors.

In one of the Northern camps, when a man asked for a New Testament, the secretary would request him to sign up the "Comrades with the Book," the pledge of which is as follows:

> "My name signed here expresses my sincere purpose to carry and read this Book every day."

When he did this, it was tipped into his New Testament. Then he was asked if he was willing to have placed in the Testament the photograph of the person who meant the most to him, whether it be his mother, his wife or his sweetheart. Then the Secretary asked the man if he wanted a simple course of Daily Readings in the New Testament. Of this popular course we have published 890,000 copies.

The Bed Table That Dick Made

WHEN Dick heard that his friend Tom was sick and would be in bed two weeks, he began at once to rack his brains to think of something he could do to lighten the long hours for Tom. Dick was the kind of fellow who couldn't enjoy his own fun and freedom if he thought there was anything he could do which he hadn't done to make a sick friend happier.

At last he thought of making Tom a bed table which would go across his knees as he sat up in bed, and which would not only hold meal trays and provide a fine surface on which to write or play games, but would also save his knees from getting stiff because of the weight of things placed upon them.

The bed table was not hard to make. Dick simply took an uncovered oblong box and knocked off the two long sides. He then sawed the end pieces down to measure six inches in height and turned the thing upside down—the bottom of the box thus forming the top of the table. On the front of the table he placed two narrow strips of wood as braces, running from side pieces to top, one at each end (see diagram) and at the back of the table he nailed a strip of board which rose above the surface and which would keep pencils, etc., from rolling off out of Tom's reach. He then gave the little table two coats of white paint and it was finished.

"I'll bet other fellows would make them, too, if they knew about them," said Dick after he saw how much Tom liked his gift. "For everybody must know some person who is sick."

Dr. Dixon to Return to the U. S.

THE Bible Institute of Los Angeles, Calif., recently sent a formal invitation to Rev. A. C. Dixon of Spurgeon's Tabernacle, London, the plan being to have Dr. Dixon actively connected with the work of the Institute for three months in the year, the rest of his time to be devoted to Bible Conferences and evangelistic meetings throughout the country. Dr. Dixon has accepted the invitation and resigned his present pastorate, the resignation to take effect April 1. Prof. Torrey, dean of the Los Angeles Bible Institute, who supplies this information to the Christian Herald, also announced that there will be a Ministerial Institute from July 14 to 31 under the auspices of the Bible Institute of Los Angeles, followed by a General Conference August 1 to 10. The speakers at the Ministerial Institute will be Rev. A. C. Dixon, D.D., Rev. Ralph Atkinson, D.D., Rev. Melvin G. Kyle, D.D. For the Bible Conference the following speakers are announced: Dr. Griffith Thomas, Dr. William Evans, Dr. John M. MacInnis, and Dr. C. F. Wimberly.

◆

Houses for Birds

THE boy who is handy with his tools can help the birds by putting up bird boxes in the trees near his house. These can be built by covering a small wooden box, cutting a hole, and nailing it in a tree. A great many birds like such homes, particularly the house wren, which eats as many insects as the robin. Another bird which will keep your garden free from the insect pest is the bluebird. These bright visitors like a house that has been built for them.

SERVICE

Get the longest, best, and easiest service from your sewing machine by oiling it regularly with 3-in-One Oil. Put a drop in every single bearing from top to treadle. Then run the machine swiftly. This works the 3-in-One in and old caked grease and dirt out. Wipe off this greasy dirt and re-oil.

Put in some work and see how smoothly and easily the machine operates. You will hardly recognize it. You won't have to break your back and tire your legs any more.

3-in-One also prevents rust and tarnish on the bright metal parts; polishes the painted metal; restores the beautiful finish of the wooden case. Even eliminates all surface scratches.

All this is worth trying, isn't it? Make that 3-in-One trial today.

At all good stores. East of the Rocky Mountain States, 15c, 25c and 50c in bottles; also in 25c Handy Oil Cans.

B11

FREE Generous sample and Dictionary of Uses. To save postage, request them on a postal card.

THREE-IN-ONE OIL CO.
165 CS Broadway. :: New York

Obey Nature's Law

Nature is always at her best when her laws are being obeyed. Self-preservation is the first law of Nature and to millions is the first law to self-preservation. The rich, nourishing properties of Scott's Emulsion fortify the whole system, improve the blood-quality and conserve vitality by building up strength.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

Place your dependence upon Scott's Emulsion for strength.

Scott & Bowne, Bloomfield, N.J. 18-34

Heat Whole Home
Through One Register

And get the highest quality Kalamazoo Pipeless Furnace at low wholesale price.

Save $25 to $75
Get the New Book

Get our latest wholesale prices—Cash or Easy Payments and Unlimited Guarantee. We can save you money on Pipe Furnaces, Ranges, Kitchen Kabinets, Oil and Gas Stoves, Phonographs, Cream Separators, Refrigerators, Roofing, Paint and other home necessities. Ask for Catalog No. 927

Kalamazoo Stove Co., Mfrs.
Kalamazoo, Mich.

A Kalamazoo Direct to You

Don't Wear a Truss

Brooks' Appliance, the modern scientific invention, the wonderful new discovery that relieves rupture, will be sent on trial. No obnoxious springs or pads.

MR. C. E. BROOKS

Brooks' Rupture Appliance

Has automatic Air Cushions. Binds and draws the broken parts together as you would a broken limb. No salves. No lies. Durable, cheap. Sent on trial to prove it. Protected by U. S. patents. Catalog and measure blanks mailed free. Send name and address today.

C. E. BROOKS, 498 State St., Marshall, Mich.

LE PAGE'S
CHINA
CEMENT STANDS HOT AND COLD WATER

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 85
THE C. S. BELL CO., Est. 1858, Hillsboro, Ohio

PATENTS Send sketch or model for preliminary examination. Booklet free. Highest references. Best results. Promptness assured. Watson E. Coleman, Patent Lawyer, 624 F St., Washington, D. C.

"Say it with Flowers"

FOR THE SICK ROOM

Patronize your local florist. Send flowers. They are just the thing to brighten the sick room and cheer the sick.

Your local florist, within a few hours, can deliver fresh flowers in any city or town in the United States and Canada through the Florists' Telegraph Delivery service.

These Books Are Going Fast

WHILE book publishers generally are announcing substantial increases to their retail prices, we propose to have a clean-up sale of our surplus stocks at less than cost.

It is desirable to reduce stocks carried over on our inventories from last year to make room for new editions.

We think the best way to do this quickly is to make remarkably low price concessions direct to readers of the Christian Herald and give them the big end of the bargain before selling such items to the wholesale dealers.

All items are guaranteed and money back without question or quibble to any customer who is not satisfied.

No Thought of Profit to Us

Just David

By Eleanor H. Porter, Author of "Pollyanna"

This great book received immense popularity as soon as published and ran over 135,000 copies and was in the list of the six best sellers in the whole country. This was a $1.50 book. We have the balance of a special edition in fine cloth binding, illustrated linings, 324 pages.

Our price only 35c a copy, postpaid.

"Little Sir Galahad" and "Just David" are two charming books to give to any boy or girl or to add to the home library.

Shorthand

Without a Teacher in Twenty-four Lessons

This is a valuable little book for any one who wants to learn stenography without a teacher. It is founded on the Pitman-Graham system, universely used. The method is simple, comprehensive and practical.

1 vol., 12mo, cloth binding.

We will send a copy, postpaid, for only 15c.

Wicked John Goode

By H. W. Scandlin. Epilogue by Rev. J. G. Hallimond, of the Bowery Mission

"An astonishing narrative, far stranger than any work of fiction. John Goode is a very real man. He was everything that was evil. Today he is one of the leaders in the Bowery Mission. The story of his redemption is ablaze with the light of the Cross," "a great human document."

1 vol., 12mo, cloth binding, 208 pages, formerly $1.00 a copy.

Our price only 25c a copy, postpaid.

The Strange Adventures of Captain Quinton

Being a truthful record of the amazing and thrilling experiences and escapes of the Captain among the savage tribes of the South Seas.

1 vol., 12mo, cloth, 486 pages.

This is a fine clean book of adventure to give a boy, but grown-ups will be fascinated with its rapid-fire stories of thrilling adventures. As prices go today this book is well worth $1.00.

We will send a copy for only 40c, postpaid.

My Garden of Hearts

By Margaret E. Sangster

1 vol., 12mo., cloth, 349 pages and portrait.

Do you like short stories? Over 60 are included in this sterling volume, as well as 19 familiar talks on subjects that every woman should enjoy.

To move them quickly we make an absurdly low price of only 30c a copy, postpaid.

Real People and Dreams

By Margaret E. Sangster

1 vol., 12mo, cloth, 244 pages and portrait.

The best of her short stories and poems.

We will say now only 25c a copy, postpaid.

The Miracle of Answered Prayer

By Rev. John G. Hallimond, D.D.

1 vol., 12mo, cloth, 248 pages, and every page is a revelation on examples of answered prayer in signed testimonies from far and near.

While they last, only 25c a copy, postpaid.

The Complete Dressmaker

With Simple Directions for Home Millinery, by

CLARA E. LAUGHLIN

1 vol., 12mo, cloth, illustrated

The publisher's price is $1.00 a copy.

We will send a copy for only 35 cents, postpaid.

This is a valuable guide to home dressmaking and every woman can find money-saving suggestions in its 350 pages that will pay for its small cost many times over.

Thousands of copies of the books in this list have been ordered in the past few days. Please hurry your order.

These are remainders of editions, and in first-class condition. Readers wanting good books at bargain prices should speak quickly.

Address Book Department, Section D,
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bib e House, New York

Our Mail-Bag

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the writer, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

E. R. T., St. Louis, Mo. Faith will lead to assurance. The apostles were absolutely sure that Christ had redeemed them and was their Friend. Many, who have the strong, simple faith that saves, possess the same experience. They can say, "One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see." They know how formerly they used to fear and mistrust God; now they know they love and trust him. They began by believing his promises because others had found them true; now they believe them because they themselves find them true. They feel in their hearts the certainty of the inalienable love of God, of preservation, continuance in grace, comfort in affliction. As to your children, if you have led them to Jesus as Saviour, and they are professing Christians, and leading lives in accordance with such a profession as far as the young can do so, you may take comfort from the Saviour's promise that no one shall be able to take them away from him (John 10 : 28).

Anxious. You have quoted an old argument, but one that has no force. While it is very true that God can save all, and hence does not need our prayers to help him do so, he has enjoined us to help in the salvation of others by our prayers. "If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and he shall give him life" (I John 5 : 16). The position of the Church is that prayers for others, offered in the name of Jesus, are effectual and always helpful.

J. J. J., Aberdeen, Wash. Praying to the Son and praying to the Father are one and the same. Prayer is that divine service in which we call upon the true and living God in true faith, through our Mediator, Jesus Christ, for those things that we need, and give to him praise and thanks for the blessings received. We pray in the name of Christ because we do not trust in our own righteousness or works, but wholly upon the merits and righteousness of Jesus, the Mediator, and humbly implore the mercy of God for his sake

A. M., Utica, Ill. You may have noticed from the press reports that at the Peace Conference an official interpreter takes down the French speeches in shorthand, and then delivers them in English. This would seem to indicate that some, if not all, the members of our delegation are unable to follow the French sufficiently to fully understand the important discussion.

Chaplain George Hyman, 326th Infantry, with the American forces in France, writes a vivid description of the recent Christmas celebration: "Under orders from Senior Chaplain C. H. Brent, plans were made and successfully carried out in the territory of the 326th Infantry for brightening the lives of the French children. Christmas trees were erected in four villages. At Leuchey and Aujeurres the festivites were under the direction of Chaplain Frederick W. Helfer, of the Second Battalion. An opportunity was given the men of the companies in the villages of Esnoms and Courcelles to volunteer gifts. An ample fund was thus provided to take care of every child fourteen and under. A trip was made by the chaplains to Dijon, where presents were purchased—toys, dolls and workboxes. In addition each child was given a horn and an American flag. Two of the enlisted men were dressed as Santa Claus, and on horses visited the villages. At each place the entire population assembled The chaplain, as master of ceremonies, expressed appreciation of the friendship of the French civilians, and gave to them the best Christmas wishes of our army. Santa Claus then took charge of the occasion and brought joy and happiness to the little ones. At Esnoms the regimental band played selections, the French children sang their national songs, and a bright little girl speaking in French thanked the men of the 326th for their kindness and their gifts. She ended with these words: 'The children will never forget your generous thoughts. Christmas, by your grace, this year is a day of joy for all of us, children and grown people, rich and poor. We wish to assure you that we know it is you who have made us happy. You have all our best thanks. Long live America! Long live France!'"

R. C. D., Clovis, Calif. God is a Spirit who is eternal, almighty, omniscient and omnipresent. The psalmist says of him: "Before the mountains were brought forth . . . thou wert God," and "Thou hast searched me and known me. Thou understandest my thoughts afar off." And so with the affairs of nations and of the world. God knows them all. The prophets wrote under his inspiration and command. Jesus came and then again Jesus foretells the ending of things. Of the day of our final deliverance, as Christ tells us in Matt. 24 : 36, knoweth no man, "no, not the angels of heaven, but the Father only."

J. E. S., Roscoe, N. Y. There is a point reached by those who have long persisted in wicked courses which is known as judicial blindness, a point at which, God's restraining Spirit being withdrawn, they become unable to distinguish right from wrong, or good from evil. They grow hardened and morally incorrigible. Under such circumstances, the offender turns even blessings into sin by abusing them, and unless overtaken by some great adversity, continues in his course blind to consequences. This was probably the case with Pharaoh. Long accustomed to the abuse of power, he steeled himself against all sense of justice and mercy, and this "the permissive act of providence" allowed in order that the culminating punishment should be more severe. God permitted Pharaoh to harden his own heart—an awful example, and one that should be a warning to others.

J. S. H., Hudson, N. Y., writes: "Why sink the German fleet? Has there not been too much wasted already? Why not anchor the fleet in the Atlantic Ocean, build aviation platforms on them, and utilize them for resting-places as we fly over the ocean? Impracticable, say you? So was the Atlantic cable, and other inventions, including flying. In this way they could be used by all nations."

The proposition is a novel one, but we must leave it to others to decide whether it be practical or the reverse. Certainly, it has the merit of interest.

J. M. D., Tallahassee, Fla. Dr. Karl Liebknecht, who was killed during the recent civil disturbances in Germany, was regarded by many as a hero and a patriot. When Germany entered the war, Liebknecht protested strongly and publicly with pen and voice. He was arrested and sentenced to a term of imprisonment. When the revolution broke out, he became one of the leaders in driving out the Hohenzollerns. Later he was the head of the movement against the constitutional socialistic government, and became the leader of the rabble. His extreme attitude lost him many friends who at one time had great hopes of his future, but who abandoned him when he emulated the Bolshevists. They now regard him as having been mentally unbalanced, especially during the last two years of his life.

Reader, Oak Park, Ill., writes: "I think the editorial, 'Let Them Work Hand in Hand,' in the Christian Herald of January 15, comes to the point on Church Unity when it says: 'Unity, not uniformity, is needed.' A few—at least I hope it is only a few—of our ministers and religious leaders are striving overmuch to cram their particular brand of religion down the throats of a long-suffering people, and also endeavoring to keep other ministers who fail to agree with them in every particular from offering the Bread of Life to famishing souls in the form they believe most nourishing. I think if it were left to the city church, unity would come speedily, providing all ministers would seek prayerfully to lead their people to consider their differences in a Christian spirit, and, above all, to search the Scriptures for the truth. Let there be more free and open discussion, not behind closed doors, but either at the prayer meetings or on some public forum, insisting always that those taking part preserve a Christian attitude toward each other."

E. B. W., Mystic, Conn. Noting "The Nineteens of the Bible" in the Christian Herald, I cannot help relating my experiences regarding 19. At the age of 19 I was captain of the City of Rome, the biggest steamboat afloat on the Great Lakes, with 19 men and 19 x $10,000 under me, the responsibility of which made me sick. I have been doctoring steadily twice 19 years and isolated from my dear family 19 years. I have read and enjoyed your valuable paper 11 years."

M. E. K., Marina, Ill. The only means we have of identifying the day of Christ's resurrection is its relation to the Jewish Passover. That festival was held in the lunar month Nisan. After much controversy, the Council of Nice, held in 325 A. D., made an effort to combine the three dates of the day of the week, the lunar month and the solar year. It decreed that Easter should be celebrated on the first Sunday after the first full moon which happened after the vernal equinox of March 21 in any year. Easter this year is on April 20.

J. H. S., Monson, Mass. In Luke 11 : 25 and Matt. 13 : 20, the condition of both of the men described was not that which is properly called conversion, but rather the temporary turning away from sin which sometimes precedes conversion, and sometimes a return to the world. Such men, being rendered indifferent by a superficial experience of religion often become worse than before.

A Queer Fight

WO saintly souls, scrapping, and at the breakfast table! My! how they spit fire! Both were honest and both re right.

'm persuaded that if people knew re they would war less. It was a venly guided man, full of good se, who wrote: "Add to your faith tue, and to virtue knowledge."

'Last night, when I could not sleep, watched the stars come down and appear below the window sill."

'You crazy Jane, the stars don't ne down, they rise; for I watched m myself last night after my first ."

'You are a dreamer, Mary. The rs do not rise, they set, or go down, atever you call it."

"No, they don't! I was not dreaming. y come up, the same way as the ."

'What you see you know, and I saw m go down, so that settles it."

'No, it don't settle it, for I saw them up."

oor fools, both of them, to fight over stars! You see, one slept in an east m and the other west.

◆

he Bell that Came Home

WO hundred years ago a fine, big bell was cast and hung in the tower a Buddhist monastery about ten les from Tsinan, China. For many ades the notes of this bell sounded oss the country, but the monastery s finally deserted. About forty years a descendant of the man who cast bell was converted and soon won ers of his clan to worship God. Soon had a Christian school opened in his lage. After the Boxer days, when indemnity was paid to Christians o had lost property, he succeeded in ting the local Christians to contribute one-tenth of this to the building a church to the honor and praise of God who had heard. Then the bell s brought from the temple of the d who could not hear, and hung in nt of the church of the God who did ar. This Christian man afterward died and became an evangelist, and hough over eighty years old is still thfully witnessing to a large circuit.

The Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

WHEN the flood was gone and the Lord had called Noah and his sons from the ark to repeople the earth, it is written that Noah builded an altar unto the Lord and offered burnt offerings on the altar. The incense of that offering stood before God as Noah's prayer for his presence and favor, as evidence of Noah's sorrow for sin and of Noah's realization of his need of God. And God answered Noah's prayer with the rainbow of promise, setting the arc of color athwart the sky as an earnest to all the generations that by Noah's altar God had entered into a covenant with men.

And we, as we come down from our Ararats, as God calls us forth to serve him, let us build our altars and offer, not the blood of beasts, but, claiming the benefit of the blood of the risen Saviour, let us offer ourselves, our wills, our hearts, our hands and feet unreservedly for his service, and we will find that we, too, have made a covenant with God. And then, as we see the glowing emblem of God's promise, it will stand not only for the century-old covenant with Noah, but it will be God's message to us. God has kept his covenant with men, man has often failed. Shall we?

Individual requests for prayer are as follows:

Forty-six ask prayer for bodily healing for themselves or others.

Thirty-eight ask prayer for spiritual blessing for themselves or others.

Ten ask prayer for mental healing for themselves or others.

Eight ask prayer for the granting of various desires and needs.

Four ask prayer for divine aid in financial difficulties.

Three ask deliverance from the tobacco habit for themselves or others.

Three ask for restoration of friendship.

Three ask for restoration or improvement of sight.

Two ask to be delivered from the liquor habit.

One asks prayer that the influenza plague may be stayed.

Six parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons; one wife, for the conversion of her husband; two each, for the conversion of brothers-in-law, nephews, nieces and grandsons; one for the conversion of a daughter, and one for the conversion of a grandfather.

Prayers for revivals and reforms are requested from Torrance, Calif.; Selden, Miss.; Markesan, Wis.; and Lyme Center, N. H.

Acknowledgments of answered prayer have been received from Mrs. W. T. B., Arbala, Texas; Mrs. J. W. T., Rogersville, Mo.; A California Reader, Chino, Calif.; Mrs. A. M. C., Buffalo, N. Y.; Mrs. P. L. I., Elizabeth, Pa.; Mrs. J. L. C., Louisville, Ky.; Mrs. S. D. C., Glen Karn, Ohio; A. B., Gastonia, N. C.; J. W. K., Harlan, Ia.; L. L. M., Chillicothe, Ohio; A. B., Zanesville, Ohio; D. L., Greenville, Ill.; Mrs. H. D. O., Clay Center, Kan.; A. I. S. L., Rochester, N. Y.; A. M. B., Sherman, Texas; Mrs. J. G. McC., Booneville, Miss.; Mrs. L. E. A., Bonesteel, S. D.; Mrs. C. G. O., Assumption, Ill.; Mrs. S. E. P., Evansville, Ind.; L. B. C., Bourbon, Ill.; Y. D. M., Greenville, Pa.

How Molly Made a Picture Puzzle

ONE rainy day Molly came home from school and found her little sister asking her mother what she should do.

"We mustn't bother Mother when she is busy," Molly told Edith. "But come, and I will make you something to play with."

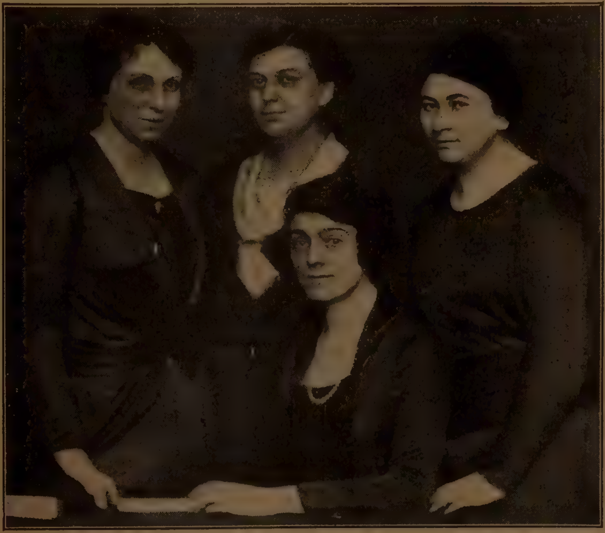
So Molly made Edith a picture puzzle.

This is how she did it: she took an old magazine cover which had a pretty picture on it, and pasted it on a large piece of stiff cardboard. Then she stood the picture on the back of the kitchen stove to let the paste dry.

When the paste was dry, Molly took a ruler and a pencil and ruled the entire picture into two-inch squares, after which she cut along the lines with a large pair of shears.

Little Edith had such fun mixing up the pieces and putting them together again, that she forgot all about the rain and having to stay indoors.

LAURA A. KIRKMAN.



© Underwood & Underwood

Women Advocates of "Jury Service for Women"

THE above pictured women (from left to right) are: Miss Janet G. Brill, Mrs. Ida Schleiden, Miss Amy Wren, and Miss Helen McCormick, stanch New York advocates of the cause of women serving on juries. They have promoted a campaign towards securing legislative measures to this end, their arguments being that women through their intuition and fairness are the equal of men on any "jury of peers." Miss McCormick helped draw up the bill which its friends will endeavor to put through the New York State legislature.

YOUR EARS

MAKES YOU HEAR — SUCCESS AND HAPPINESS

Science Does Wonders For The DEAF

It's as easy now to correct your hearing as it is the eyesight. And equally absurd not to.

THE Magniphone A Wonderful New Sound Magnifier

ATTUNABLE to every ear—is the latest triumph of Science in its effort to aid failing ears, overcome deafness and restore hearing. Priceless in value; low in cost. Try it free; test your ears Ask for information.

THE MAGNIPHONE CO., Dept. 65, Chicago
29 E. Madison St., Room 1303, Cor. Wabash

ASH FOR OLD FALSE TEETH

We now pay higher prices whether broken or not. Send now. Cash sent by return mail. Packages returned at our expense if our offer is refused. Highest prices also paid for OLD GOLD JEWELRY, GOLD CROWNS, BRIDGES, DENTAL GOLD, PLATINUM, DIAMONDS and SILVER. Send for latest catalog of new jewelry.
ed States Smelting Wks., 344 Goldsmith Bldg., Milwaukee, Wis.

YOU CAN MAKE MONEY

elling our exclusive Dress Goods, Suitings, Waistings, Handkerchiefs, Hosiery, Silks, etc., latest and most tylish designs. Profitable, congenial employment of pare time for ladies of refinement. No money or experience necessary. Samples FREE. Write to-day.
Mitchell & Church Co., 122 Water St., Binghamton, N.Y.

hance of a Life Time

nake Big money. Nothing like it on the market. kes BLUE Monday ROSY. Not sold in stores. lusive territory for proper parties; write for free ples.
T. H. SNYDER & CO.,
EAST THIRD ST., CINCINNATI, O.

REE · Lintex COLLAR REVERSIBLE

e will send FREE starch-finished Lintex collar so u can prove comfort and economy State size wanted EVERSIBLE COLLAR CO., Dept. T Boston, Mass.

Vapo-Cresolene

USED WHILE YOU SLEEP

Established 1879

The Inhalation Treatment for Whooping-Cough, Spasmodic Croup, Colds, Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, Coughs.

Simple, safe and effective, avoiding internal drugs.

Vaporized Cresolene relieves the paroxysms of Whooping-Cough and Spasmodic Croup at once: it nips the common cold before it has a chance of developing into something worse, and experience shows that a neglected cold is a dangerous cold.

Mrs. Ballington Booth says: "No family, where there are young children, should be without this lamp."

The air carrying the antiseptic vapor, inhaled with every breath, makes breathing easy and relieves the congestion, assuring restful nights.

It is called a boon by Asthma sufferers.

For the bronchial complications of Scarlet Fever and Measles, and as an aid in the treatment of Diphtheria, Cresolene is valuable on account of its powerful germicidal qualities.

It is a protection to those exposed.

Cresolene's best recommendation is its 39 years of successful use.

Sold by Druggists. Send for descriptive booklet. Try Cresolene Antiseptic Throat Tablets for the irritated throat, composed of slippery elm bark, licorice, sugar and Cresolene. They can't harm you. Of your druggist or from us, 10c. in stamps

THE VAPO-CRESOLENE CO., 62 Cortlandt St., New York
or Leeming-Miles Building, Montreal, Canada

RAISE MORE CHICKS

Well Known Baby Chick Expert Tells How to Raise 98% of Each Hatch

If every poultry raiser would get a copy of Bessie B. Carswell's book on baby chicks (and she is sending out a limited number of free copies) they would have no trouble in raising practically every chick hatched. There is no excuse for the big losses that occur every year as she shows how easy and simple it is to hatch strong chicks and how to prevent and treat white diarrhœa and other chick diseases that kill millions every year. By all means write Bessie B. Carswell, 572 Gateway Station, Kansas City, Mo., at once and have her send you FREE her big 50c book before they are all gone.

BESSIE B. CARSWELL
THE POULTRY WOMAN

RO-SAN Indoor Closet

The original chemical closet. More comfortable, healthful, convenient. Takes the place of all outdoor toilets, where germs breed. Be ready for the long, cold winter. Have a warm, sanitary, comfortable, odorless toilet right in the house anywhere you want it. Don't go out in the cold. A boon to invalids.

GUARANTEED ODORLESS

The germs are killed by a chemical in water in the container. Empty once a month as easy as ashes. Closet guaranteed. Thirty days' trial. Ask for catalog and price.

ROWE SANITARY MFG. CO.
1602 6th St., Detroit, Mich.
Ask about Ro-San Washstand—Hot and Cold Running Water Without Plumbing.

HOOSIER STOVES & RANGES FREE

To try in your home 30 days free no matter where you live. Show your friends, send it back at our expense if you do not want to keep it. Million members of families enjoying the comforts and pleasures of "Hoosier" Stoves & Ranges, perfect bakers and heaters, beautifully finished, smooth latest design, guaranteed for years. Write for our big free book showing photographs, describing large assortment of sizes and designs of Steel and Cast Ranges, Cooks, Soft and Hard Coal Heaters, to select from, explaining our free trial. Send postal today.

HOOSIER STOVE CO.
164 State St., Marion, Ind.

Cuticura Soap
Best for Baby

Soap 25c., Ointment 25 & 50c., Talcum 25c. Sample each mailed free by "Cuticura, Dept. M, Boston."

CASH FOR OLD FALSE TEETH, DISCARDED JEWELRY, ETC.

Mail us useless false teeth, (with or without gold fillings), discarded or broken jewelry, watches, magneto points—anything containing gold, silver or platinum—and we will send you the full cash value by return mail (and hold your goods 10 days pending your acceptance of our remittance.) Dun and Bradstreet References.

OHIO SMELTING & REFINING COMPANY
902 Park Building, Cleveland, Ohio

BARGAINS IN SEEDS

Hundreds of special offers in surplus stock of seeds and plants at bargain prices. Don't buy until you have seen our beautiful illustrated catalog, mailed free if you mention this paper.
IOWA SEED CO., Dept. 46 Des Moines, Iowa

SPECIAL MAGAZINE CLUBS

ORDER the magazines you want for winter reading with your Christian Herald. If the particular magazines you desire are not given below send us your order. We will fill it at once and advise you the cost. The prices below are the lowest possible. Subscriptions are for one year, new or renewal. Magazines can go to different addresses, unless stated otherwise. Canadian and foreign postage extra.

Remember: The subscription price of the Christian Herald is now $2.50 a year.

Christian Herald People's Home Jnl.	$2.50 1.00	$3.00
Christian Herald McCall's Magazine	$2.50 1.00	$3.00
Christian Herald Little Folks	$2.50 1.50	$3.25
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla	$2.50 1.50	$3.25
Christian Herald Boys' Life (Scouts)	$2.50 1.50	$3.25
Christian Herald Etude (Music Lovers)	$2.50 1.75	$3.50
Christian Herald Today's Housewife McCall's Magazine	$2.50 1.00 1.00	$3.50
Christian Herald McClure's Magazine	$2.50 2.00	$3.50
Christian Herald Mother's Magazine	$2.50 2.00	$3.50
Christian Herald Pictorial Review	$2.50 2.00	$3.50
Christian Herald McCall's Magazine People's Home Journal	$2.50 1.00 1.00	$3.75
Christian Herald Youth's Companion	$2.50 2.00	$4.00
Christian Herald Everybody's Magazine	$2.50 2.00	$4.25
Christian Herald Woman's Home Companion	$2.50 2.00	$4.25
Christian Herald Pop. Science Mo.	$2.50 2.00	$4.25
Christian Herald American Magazine	$2.50 2.00	$4.25
Christian Herald Delineator	$2.50 2.00	$4.25
Christian Herald Pictorial Review McCall's Magazine	$2.50 2.00 1.00	$4.50
Christian Herald McCall's Magazine Youth's Companion	$2.50 1.00 2.00	$4.75
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla Pictorial Review	$2.50 1.50 2.00	$5.00
Christian Herald McCall's Magazine Woman's Home Companion	$2.50 1.00 2.00	$5.00
Christian Herald Review of Reviews	$2.50 4.00	$5.25
Christian Herald *Delineator *Everybody's (*Must go to same address)	$2.50 2.00 2.00	$5.25
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla Woman's Home Companion	$2.50 1.50 2.00	$5.25
Christian Herald *Woman's Home Companion *American Magazine (*Must go to same address)	$2.50 2.00 2.00	$5.25
Christian Herald Pictorial Review Woman's Home Companion	$2.50 2.00 2.00	$5.50
Christian Herald Pictorial Review Mother's Magazine	$2.50 2.00 2.00	$5.50
Christian Herald Woman's Home Companion American Boy	$2.50 2.00 2.00	$6.25
Christian Herald Woman's Home Companion Review of Reviews	$2.50 2.00 4.00	$6.50

EASY CLUBBING PLAN

To Find the Price of Any Club

You can make up your own combination of magazines from the list below. Add the Class Numbers of the Magazines selected, multiply the sum by five and the result will be the cost. The price of a club cannot be less than the regular price of any one of the magazines in the club.

Magazines preceded by an asterisk (*) are not clubbing magazines and must be added at full subscription price. Figures in bold face denote a special unit price less than the regular clubbing price.

EXAMPLE

Christian Herald . . . . Class 45
American Magazine . . . Class 40

Total Class numbers 85
Multiply by 5

Price of Club $4.25

Class No.	Publication		Reg. Price with Chris. Her.	Our Price with Chris. Her.
19	American Agriculturist	W	$3.50	$5.25
40	American Boy	M	4.50	3.20
40	American Magazine	M	4.50	4.25
60	American (2 yrs.)	M	6.50	5.25
10	American Messenger	M	3.00	3.00
80	Atlantic Monthly	M	6.50	6.25
25	Boys' Life	M	4.00	3.25
25	Boys' Magazine	M	4.00	3.50
35	Camera	M	4.50	4.00
80	Century Magazine	M	6.50	6.25
40	Christ. Endeavor World	W	4.50	4.25
45	Christian Herald	W	...	...
80	Christian Herald (2 yrs.)	W	...	...
50	Collier's Weekly	W	5.00	4.75
50	Continent	W	5.00	4.75
*	Cosmopolitan	M	4.50	4.50
*	Country Gentleman	W	3.50	3.50
80	Country Life in the War	M	7.50	6.25
55	Current Opinion	M	5.50	5.00
40	Delineator	M	4.50	4.25
60	Delineator (2 yrs.)	M	6.50	5.25
30	Designer	M	4.00	3.75
30	Etude	M	4.00	3.50
40	Everybody's	M	4.50	4.25
60	Everybody's (2 yrs.)	M	6.50	5.25
40	Expositor	M	4.50	4.25
3	Farm and Fireside	S-M	2.75	2.40
35	Garden Magazine	M	4.50	4.00
*	Good Housekeeping	M	4.50	4.50
8	Green's American Fruit Grower	M	3.00	2.65
80	Harper's Magazine	M	6.50	6.25
*	Hearst's Magazine	M	4.50	4.50
60	House Beautiful	M	5.50	5.25
35	Illustrated World	M	4.50	4.00
80	Independent	W	6.50	6.25
75	John Martin's Book	M	6.50	6.00
100	Judge	W	7.50	7.25
*	Ladies' Home Journal	M	4.25	4.25
100	Leslie's Weekly	W	7.50	7.25
100	Life	W	7.50	7.25
*	Literary Digest	W	6.50	6.50
25	Little Folks	M	5.00	3.25
20	McCall's Magazine	M	3.50	3.00
35	McClure's	M	4.50	3.50
60	McClure's (2 yrs.)	M	6.50	5.25
60	Metropolitan Mag.	M	5.50	5.25
30	Modern Priscilla	M	4.00	3.25
32	Mother's Magazine	M	4.50	3.50
25	Musician	M	4.00	3.50
45	Nat. Geog. Mag.	M	5.00	4.50
40	Nat. Geog. Mag. (to Members)	M	4.50	4.25
*	Needlecraft	M	3.00	3.00
25	New Success	M	4.00	3.50
27	Normal Instructor	M	4.00	3.60
80	Outlook	W	6.50	6.25
20	Pathfinder	W	3.50	3.25
20	People's Home Journal	M	3.50	3.00
10	People's Popular Mo. (2 yrs.)	M	3.00	2.75
35	Physical Culture	M	4.50	4.00
40	Pictorial Review	M	4.50	3.50
60	Pict. Review (2 yrs.)	M	6.50	5.25
40	Popular Science Mo.	M	4.50	4.25
35	Record of Christ. Work	M	4.50	4.00
40	Red Book	M	4.50	4.25
60	Review of Reviews	M	6.50	5.25
60	St. Nicholas	M	5.50	5.25
*	Saturday Evening Post	W	4.50	4.50
70	Scribner's Magazine	M	6.50	5.75
30	Sunday School Times	W	4.25	3.75
15	Today's Housewife	M	3.50	3.00
25	Today's House. (2 yrs.)	M	4.50	3.50
40	Woman's Home Companion	M	4.50	4.25
60	Woman's Home Companion (2 yrs.)	M	6.50	5.25
20	Woman's Mag.	M	3.50	3.25
10	Woman's World	M	3.00	2.75
60	World's Work	M	6.50	5.25
40	Youth's Companion (new sub)	W	4.50	4.00

CHRISTIAN HERALD, 1799 Bible House, NEW YORK, N. Y.

Young People's Topics for March 9

Our Relation to God: Serving

Epworth League Topic. Matt. 20 : 20-28

JESUS said, "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you. Henceforth I call you not servants, but friends." Thus he, who took upon himself the form of a servant, called the world to service. And what greater boon could we ask than the friendship of the risen Son of God? What will we not do to gain the good will, the favorable opinion, the notice even, of those who govern or direct affairs of men? The writer once knew a man whose only claim to honor was that he had shaken hands with every President since Lincoln. The hand grasp of the great had thrown a mantle of distinction over the common clay. But we have touched more than a human hand. By faith we have grasped the hand of Christ, our Redeemer and Friend. As friends, he asks of us service. He asks us to tell the story of his love and sacrifice, to heal the sick, to succor the distressed, to feed the hungry, to educate the ignorant, to set new goals before the discouraged, to be comrades to the lonely, to give new courage to the downtrodden and oppressed. He asks us to be friendly toward all the world about us in order that our friendliness may testify of him. And if we serve him faithfully he will write out the name "servant" in our eternal record and write in "friend."

Lost by Looking

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic. Prov. 23 : 29-35

(Temperance Meeting)

THIS meeting might well become a Thanksgiving service, a triumphant celebration of the coming deportation of rum from our shores as an unde able citizen. We shall need to keep teaching temperance until the abse of rum becomes the evident boon in nation which it has always proved it in smaller communities. The time come when we will not need to tell story of the deadly enemy of alcohol. But there are other ene and "Look not" is a timely cautio those who might look once too and through looking fall into sin. passing of alcohol will not banish Men who are sober, covet; those never saw wine to look upon it lust, unkindness springs from lesser than those of alcohol, and dishon convicts many who may never known the taste of drink.

To be sure these sins are often looked upon until wine dulls the se and impels to action. But it was "He that looketh . . . to lust sinneth." We might therefore p phrase the Scripture thus, "Look upon the sin when it allureth, for at last it will destroy thy soul." Sin quently presents the face of innocer We can never tell where the tem will meet us. The dance which t or thrice has brought only fun pleasant exhilaration of spirit, may the fourth indulgence mask the very itself. The cards which have ser to while away a leaden evening m finally lead, through cheating in game, to dishonesty and disgrace. T friendship of careless folks who lau gaily at sacred things and refuse to t the world seriously, may blunt our c science and plunge us into doubt, worse. The world has no boon t can repay a Christian for the loss of ardent fervor of his faith. It isn't nec sary to be a clam to be good; but live well, it is necessary to keep "E Right," when sin takes form before and temptations gather.

My First Glimpse of the Marne

Continued from page 239

with the marks of suffering stamped indelibly on their faces—I saw men who had known shell fire, and little babies who were born into a world of hate and terror. And I heard stories as I went through the wards, stories of old people who will have no homes to go back to when they are dismissed from the hospital, and of young people who must learn to take up the broken threads of life and weave them into a new pattern.

I spent the night at the hospital and early in the morning I went over the grounds with the same doctor who had brought me up from the station. She it was who told me of the German aeroplanes that had passed over the hospital—passed over while the wards were darkened and even the sick babies were afraid to cry—she it was who took me into a meadow and pointed out to me a low stone wall with curious round holes in it— "It's a trench," she told me, "that was thrown up last summer. The openings are for the guns. . . ."

Later she took me to a garden spot, shut away from the rest of the grounds by a tall hedge, and showed me twelve narrow graves—each surmounted by a wooden cross and a red, white, and blue flag.

"They are the American boys who died at the hospital," she said softly, "yes, they were wounded in the fighting near Château-Thierry." And as I bent above the mounds I could see, but dimly, the good American names that were set on each cross.

"There are always flowers here," the doctor told me after a minute—"the little children steal up, from the villa to decorate the graves——"

OH, FRIENDS of mine, there ar great many people in our coun who will say that it isn't necessary us to have hospitals in France—n that the actual fighting of the war over. But let me tell you that Fra still has many grim battles to fight battles with disease and famine a plague that are the direct result of w conditions—battles that must be w before ever the reconstruction of Fra may be accomplished. And we, as t allies of France, are her logical helpe

"They need us," one of the docto told me simply, "and we must stay. you could see them, intimately; if y could know them, you would not qu tion our decision. They don't thank —these people that we are working for they don't need to! They radiate th thanks!"

The village children of Luzancy a keeping sweet the graves in the gard of the American Woman's Hospit And all over France other village ch dren are keeping sweet other grav For those graves are more than ju graves—they are the lasting pledge America's faith and idealism. An even though the armistice has be signed, the Americans who are worki for France and in France, as the wom at that hospital are working, are also pledge! They are the living cement th will hold France and America togeth and make of them a wall that will stan against all invasion, for humanity a peace.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Graham C. Patterson, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Edward S. Babcox, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.50 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, January 25, 1909, as Second-class Matter under Act of March 3, 1879

Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

The World's Fight With Famine

HUNGER—pitiless, gnawing, wasting hunger—is the portion of thousands, yes, millions of men, nen and children on the earth today. in America have enough and to re. But in Poland, in Rumania, in bia, in the new nations that have en upon the ruins of Austria, the at of hunger is ever present, and in ia and Armenia millions wait upon giving. Eagerly they crowd the ions where American relief is offered. must not disappoint them. And in a whole provinces, almost one-half hat great country, are hungry, and help must be immediate if disaster is to be averted. Already substantial sums have been sent by the Christian Herald to all these fields, but the need of today exceeds all the giving we have done. Send your gifts, to the Christian Herald Relief Funds, to Room 93, Bible House, New York City. You may specify the particular field to which your gift is to be sent; Widows and Orphans of the War, India Famine Relief, Armenia and Syria, China Orphans, Palestine Orphans, or Poland Relief through Paderewski Fund. The following recent gifts are acknowledged:

Keon	$42 45
S G. Mc- all and Ruth nd Kenneth	1.60
H. Hoke	20.00
I N. Ken- edy	6.00
arlotte Barker	4.00
etta B Lucas	7.00
Young	1.50
Gertrude evens	9.00
s. A. E. ggleston	4.00
Burns	4.00
hel S. S. of oward Co., Io	63.15
J. Krueger nd Friend	1.75
tty's Bridge eighborhood	10.50
lfred Regier	1.50
F. Sanders	7.00
W. A. Mac- art	4.00
J. Vander- erp	2.90
F Hornell, Y	4.00
and Mrs. W. Lewis and mily	6.35
Jas. Cource and Marrie A. Cource	1.50
M. A. J., aurel, Mo	1.50
E. Townsend	19.00
Lulu Robin- n	7.00
Stewart	12.50
e R. Farns- orth	6.00
N. Keffsmith	13.16
a Chaplin	4.00
s. H. Mann	1.72
Bodenham	32.00
and Mrs. G. Giddings	4.00
s. John rueger	1.10
Bert Peter- on	3.50
e E. Felix	7.00
S. A. Dixon	4.00
olyn Persun	11.00
A. Means nd C. J. uante	4.00
Nesbitt	4.00
s. George yman	500.00
and Mrs. W. Blanken- aken	300.00
and Mrs. S. Murphy	60.00
C. Emkee	50.00
Wilson	50.00
Harris Fried	50.00
L. Mead	25.00
Turner	25.00
s Anna orris	25.00
an S. Gilmore	25.00
M. S., Rom- ey, N. H.	25.00
Friend, Sou- an, Minn	25.00
Elvina D. ichards	25.00
M. Bare	25.00
Pelham	25.00
s. Dwight myth	25.00
ry P. Mol- nouer	25.00
s. Wm. rooks	20.00
N. Blackman	20.00
s. Margaret Gage	20.00
thia Sullivan	20.00
Willems	15.00
Osves	15.00
L. B. Porter	15.00
R. W. Frey	10.00
Neely	10.00
and Mrs. B. Mann	10.00
and Mrs. aston	10.00
—, Columbus, hio	10.00
J. E. Young	10.00
man E. Mar- ns	10.00
s J. H. Larson	10.00
A. Lucas	10.00
W. Merrill	10.00
—, Lyons, N.Y.	10.00
s Clara An- erson	10.00
C. Cox	10.00
ar Baker	10.00
h M. Artz	10.00
G. T. Sco- eld	10.00
v. McGarvey	10.00
Ives Larsen	10.00
W. B. Hedge	$10.00
Dr. R. W. Frey	10.00
M. E. and F. G. Peck	10.00
John N. Eneroth	10.00
Herbert and Margaret Douglass	10.00
Edna Stormont	10.00
Miss M. E. Ringer	10.00
Theodore Patchen	10.00
G. A. Kirkland	10.00
Mrs. Walter J. Williams	5.00
John G. Brooks	5.00
G. H. Hurtt	5.00
M. W. Wheeler, Wis.	5.00
Mary Fisher	5.00
Stella V. Cox	5.00
E. C. Goy	5.00
Mrs. B. Wendt	5.00
Mrs. John E. Collins	5.00
Mrs. R. R. Heill	5.00
Mrs. E. H. Mock	5.00
Mrs. James Holmes	5.00
John H. Geiser	5.00
Mrs. E. J. Hughes	5.00
Miss Lisha Robinson	5.00
J. G. Ramsey	5.00
Mrs. R. D. Boice	5.00
Delsie Phinney	5.00
Mrs. Carrie Seaton	5.00
Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Springer	5.00
P. C. Hiebert	5.00
B. Hales	5.00
Mrs. Ella Baldwin	5.00
Mary Shoemaker	5.00
Lucy and Hope Miller	5.00
R. M. Thomson	5.00
Lydia Jolitz	5.00
Silas D. Crane	5.00
Louise Niblack	5.00
Lula B. Berry	5.00
Mrs. Mary Banner	5.00
Minnie S. Gregg	5.00
Mrs. Hatonia Scott	5.00
Mr. and Mrs. J. Bowman	5.00
A Friend, Bristol, Vt.	5.00
Mrs. Jennie Brokaw	5.00
—, Mahomet	5.00
Eleanor M. Owen	5.00
Mrs. M. H. Tompkins	5.00
Mrs. F. L. Harrell	5.00
Wesley A. Miller	5.00
Mrs. Wesley A. Miller	5.00
Miss Lottie E. Miller	5.00
Herbert M. Hodges	5.00
Mrs. Peter Hannah	5.00
Mrs. C. J. Bourne	5.00
Mrs. Myrtle Hodson	5.00
H. S. Scales	5.00
Mrs. Mary E. Richardson	5.00
Mary E. Gilson	5.00
Samuel T. Miller	5.00
Mr. and Mrs. G. B. W., Saginaw, Mich.	5.00
Mrs. A. J. Eslinger	5.00
Mrs. M. H. Tompkins	5.00
Mrs. Birdie B. Sanders	5.00
Mrs. Anna B. Tanner	5.00
Mrs. G. F. Pylant	5.00
Mrs. W. C. Ford	5.00
W. M. Herring	5.00
Lydia Schoolbridge	5.00
An Easton Friend, Easton, Pa.	5.00
Miss Grace H. Wilson	5.00
Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Edwards	5.00
Mrs. Thos. Davis	5.00
Mrs. A. B. S., Mansfield, Ohio	5.00
Susanna Trower	5.00
Mrs. Geo. Burdick	5.00
Mrs. J. W. Broxton	5.00
Mrs. J. C. Rodeheaver	$5.00
J. Hinderman	5.00
Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Geiger	5.00
L. U. Hulin	5.00
W. M. Chestnut	5.00
Hubert and Mildred Bales	5.00
J. E. Marsh and family	5.00
A Friend, Connellsville, Pa.	5.00
F. C. Frese	5.00
Bertha King	5.00
Mrs. Maggie Martindale	5.00
R. W. Miller	1.00
Mrs. L. H. Watts	1.00
Mrs. L. P. Paige	1.00
Mrs. E. G. W., Poultney, Vt.	1.00
C. P. Lansdown, Md.	1.00
Minnie M. Leach	1.00
Mrs. L. H. Parkes	1.00
A Reader, Cumberland, Md.	1.00
—, North Adams, Mass.	1.00
Mrs. H. L. Gibson	1.00
A C. H., Reader, Bellevue, Pa.	1.00
R. L. B., Orange, N. J.	1.00
Martha McAllister	1.00
Mrs. Carrie Moore Clark	1.00
J. L. Church	1.00
Alice E. Nutt	1.00
A Friend Peotone, Ill.	1.00
Ruth H. Banghu	1.00
A. M. Patteson	1.00
E. Cook	1.00
Mrs. M. J. McQuiston	1.00
Mrs. Alice M. Ludden	1.00
R. W. Miller	1.00
Mrs. R. B. Wilkins	1.00
A Friend, Ironwood, Mich.	1.00
John Fellow	1.00
S. H. Stevens	1.00
Mrs. W. H. Agnew	1.00
A Friend, Mt. Airy, Pa.	1.00
W. J. Dixon	1.00
Mrs. Richard Smith	1.00
Mrs. G. H. Davies	1.00
—, Rising Sun, Ind.	1.00
Ever Ready S. S. Class, Muscatine, Iowa	1.00
Mrs. L. C. Stewart	1.00
A Reader, Bellevue, Pa.	1.00
Mary Lewis	1.00
Mrs. Laura Altman	1.00
H. F. Dutcher and Family	1.00
A Friend, North Brookfield, Mass.	1.00
Mrs. Koningswood	1.00
A Friend, Chain Bridge Road, D. C.	1.00
Mrs. L. K. Erlenmeyer	1.00
Caroline E. Smith	1.00
Sarah A. Woodworth	1.00
A Subscriber, Colorado Spgs., Colo.	1.00
A Reader, Mt. Pleasant, Pa.	1.00
Mrs. L. E. Bender	1.00
Mrs. J. D. Herron	1.00
Mrs. H. K. Durand	1.00
Mrs. J. E. Lunsford	1.00
Della Savage	1.00
Mrs. S. N. Dawson	.50
Mrs. S. A. Whitehurst	.50
Miss Mary E. Killman	.50
Mrs. A. C. Davis	$.50
—, Hillsdale, Mich.	.50
E. Scranton	.25
C. R. Brewster and family	60.00
Peter Lindholm—The Swedish Christian Church of Big Stone Lake, Minn.	63.30
German Cong. Churches of Elgin, N. Dak.	26.00
Geo. A. Neff, Supt. Muhlenberg Twp. Schools, Williamsport, Ohio	35.00
Mrs. Grace E. Johnson	25.00
C. D. McAfee	25.00
S. D. Guengerich	25.00
T. J. Bentley & Son	15.00
Wm. Ranft & wife	15.00
Jas. H. Morgan	11.00
Miss Glading	10.00
Mrs. May Stitt	10.00
F. B. Detrings	10.00
W. H. Goldsmith	10.00
H. M. Butler	10.00
Mrs. S. E. Ballore	10.00
James E. Lincoln	10.00
C. M., Daytona, Fla.	10.00
Carol Lee Van Nuys	10.00
Geo. N. Brain	10.00
Minerva Thayer	10.00
Mrs. B. Wendt	6.00
Mrs. A. Bingham	6.25
Georgia Brown	5.00
Mrs. Rachel Stark	5.00
Mrs. A. M., Rankin, Ill.	5.00
Mrs. S. T. Riffell	5.00
Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Wilson	5.00
Gale Forest Reinertsen	5.00
A Friend, North Tonawanda, N. Y.	5.00
C. W. Burgin	5.00
Miss Jeannette Dekker	5.00
Mrs. Anna B. Sprow	5.00
Mrs. C. Smith	5.00
Mrs. Adolph Ludwig	5.00
Mrs. C. Smith	5.00
J. F. Adams	5.00
Rev. and Mrs. S. K. Skinner	5.00
L. A. Rogers	5.00
—, Caldwell, Idaho	5.00
Mrs. Jno. Wagner	4.00
J. M. Watkins	4.00
Mrs. H. H. Kirkpatrick	4.00
F. E. Nitzche	4.00
Jonas Warrenfelt	4.00
Miss Catherine Rees	4.00
Mrs. H. Marshall	4.00
Miss A. Meima	3.00
Mrs. Susan Brown	3.00
Emil Lervig	3.00
Sallie B. McMurtry	3.00
A. H. Dugdale	3.00
Mrs. J. W. Wright	3.00
Mrs. A. Farnsworth	3.00
John M. Bender	3.00
In the Lord Jesus' Name—Hancock, Md.	3.00
Mr. and Mrs. V. T. Langsea	3.00
Mrs. Elsie A. Jones	3.00
Mrs. Pauline Harrington	2.00
A. C. Hart	2.00
John Young, Sr.	2.00
D. J. Stack	2.00
Mrs. Ada Pieker	2.00
Mrs. Eunice Sheff	2.00
Miss Edna E. Buch	2.00
Wm. W. Pearsall	2.00
J. W. Ackerson	2.00
Mrs. Nancy M. Moses	2.00
Mrs. M. Gilson	2.00
Mrs. J. A. Hight	2.00

Additional contributions to be acknowledged in subsequent issues of the Christian Herald.

No Punctures or Blowouts

Eliminates Need for Spare Tires Spare Rims Tubes Jacks Pumps, Etc.

Essenkay is the final solution of the tire problem. It makes punctures, blowouts and tire troubles impossible. No air is used, therefore no inner tubes. Its use by over 50,000 automobilists proves it to be an economy in that it gives from two to five times as much tire mileage as air; yet it rides like air and has all the advantages of air. No spare tires, spare rims, tubes, pumps or jacks are required. The delays, discomforts and expense incident to the use of air are entirely done away with.

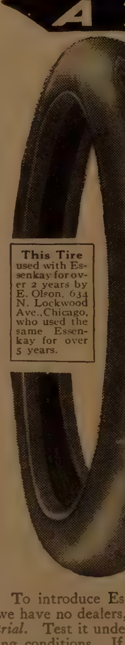
Essenkay is a highly resilient, flexible material made by a secret process. It is not affected by heat, cold or pressure. It will not flatten, oxidize or bloom. The perfection of Essenkay is a fitting climax to the magical development of a colossal industry which in a few short years has grown from practically nothing to one of the largest industries in the world.

Essenkay A TIRE FILLER

Rides Like Air

Not a Liquid

"OVER 50,000 USERS"



This Tire used with Essenkay for over 2 years by E. Olson, 634 N. Lockwood Ave., Chicago, who used the same Essenkay for over 5 years.

Guarantee

Essenkay is guaranteed not to be affected by heat, cold, water, friction, atmospheric or climatic conditions;—not to flatten, not to crumble and not to change its consistency in any way.

Mr. E. B. Rouse, 1636 Neal St., San Diego, Calif., drove this Ford from Chicago to San Diego, 3,483 speedometer miles. Tires filled with Essenkay. "One of 50,000 users."

First Cost—Last Cost

Essenkay does not wear out like tires. It can be used over and over again. As tires wear down to the last layer of fabric and are discarded, the Essenkay may be taken out and transferred to new tires. Therefore Essenkay is an investment and not an expense. Many of our users have used the same Essenkay for over 5 years.

10 DAYS' FREE TRIAL

To introduce Essenkay in territory where we have no dealers, we ship on 10 days' free trial. Test it under your own road and loading conditions. If your passenger car carries 5 people crowd in 8. If your truck carries a ton, put on 2 tons. Ride over smooth or rough roads including hilly or sandy country. Stand the car loaded on concrete floor for 2 or 3 days to prove that it will not flatten. Make any other test you see fit. If you are not convinced Essenkay rides like air, that it will double tire mileage, that you cannot be troubled by punctures, blowouts or slow leaks—that it will not flatten, crumble or deteriorate—send it back—the test will cost you nothing.

Write for Booklet and particulars of our ten day free trial offer

THE ESSENKAY PRODUCTS COMPANY
224 West Superior Street Chicago, Illinois

"Member American Tire Filler Industry (Inc.)"

How to Build NOW at Before the War Costs

Eliminate the Usual 18% Lumber Waste and the Usual 40% Labor Waste!

$1548 for this Aladdin Home

$1213 for this Aladdin Home

The Aladdin System of Home Building has been practicing for 13 years the principle the World has only learned during the war—the elimination of waste. By saving the usual 18% lumber waste and the 40% labor waste in home building as effected by the Aladdin System, it is possible to build now at Before the War Costs.

How to Beat the Present High Cost of Building

Saving waste is more important when prices of material and labor are high. The Aladdin System of Construction has reduced lumber waste to less than 2%. This means in saving to the home builder an amount that approximately brings the cost of a home built this year to what it would have cost before the war. Because the Aladdin System of Construction prepares all the lumber in our mills ready to be nailed in place, you can pay the present high wages and still keep the labor cost where it was before the war. One man will do in six days with Aladdin materials what it requires ten days to accomplish without Aladdin's System. The Beautiful Aladdin Catalog explains this very completely and thoroughly.

"One of the Best Uses for Money Earned During the War Is to Set It to Work on Building a Home of Your Own"

—Secretary Wilson, U. S. Dept. of Labor

Secretary Wilson further says: "During the war it was patriotic not to build. Now, we can best show our patriotism by building a home." The great Aladdin organization is planned, arranged and operated to serve home builders. Every phase of the home building project from the excavation to the completed home is in charge of experienced brains. This service becomes a part of every transaction and smooths out the usual difficulties and troubles ordinarily encountered by the home builder.

Aladdin's Dollar-a-Knot Guaranty Proof of High Quality

Knotless lumber, the purest and clearest that ever came out of the forest is the kind that Aladdin houses are made of. This is evidenced by our famous Dollar-a-Knot guaranty which has now been in effect for over four years. Better quality lumber does not grow. The highest grade paints, hardware, doors, windows, mill work, etc., are all included with every Aladdin house. The same grade, the best, is furnished for the small as for the large houses.

$970 for this Aladdin Home

The Lumber That's Wasted Costs Just as Much as the Lumber That's Used

A better home for less money! That's the verdict of thousands upon thousands of Aladdin customers. Certified records of 25%, 35%, 40% saved by the Aladdin System of Construction are on file in our offices. Ask for copies of these records in your own community. Talk with your neighbors who have built Aladdin homes. Get the facts at first hand. Waste saving is the chief reason. Valuable high-priced lumber is saved from the waste pile by the Aladdin Readi-Cut System, and this money stays in your pocket. "The lumber that's wasted costs just as much as the lumber that's used." Read all about this remarkable system in the Aladdin Catalog.

Write for 100-Page Aladdin Book Today

The Aladdin Book of Homes has a message for you. Amongst its pages, profusely illustrated in colors, leading home designs are represented to you. Aladdin houses are cut-to-fit—no waste of lumber or labor. The Aladdin price includes all materials cut-to-fit as follows: Lumber, mill-work, flooring, outside and inside finish, doors, windows, shingles, lath and plaster, hardware, locks, nails, paint, varnishes. The material is shipped to you in a sealed box-car, complete, ready to erect. Safe arrival of the complete material in perfect condition is guaranteed. Send today for a copy of "Aladdin Homes" No. 240.

THE ALADDIN CO., Canadian Branch, The Canadian Aladdin Co., C. P. R. Bldg., Toronto, Ont. 335 Aladdin Avenue, Bay City, Mich.

ALADDIN

Mail Now for a Copy of the Book of Homes

THE ALADDIN CO.,
335 Aladdin Ave., Bay City, Mich.

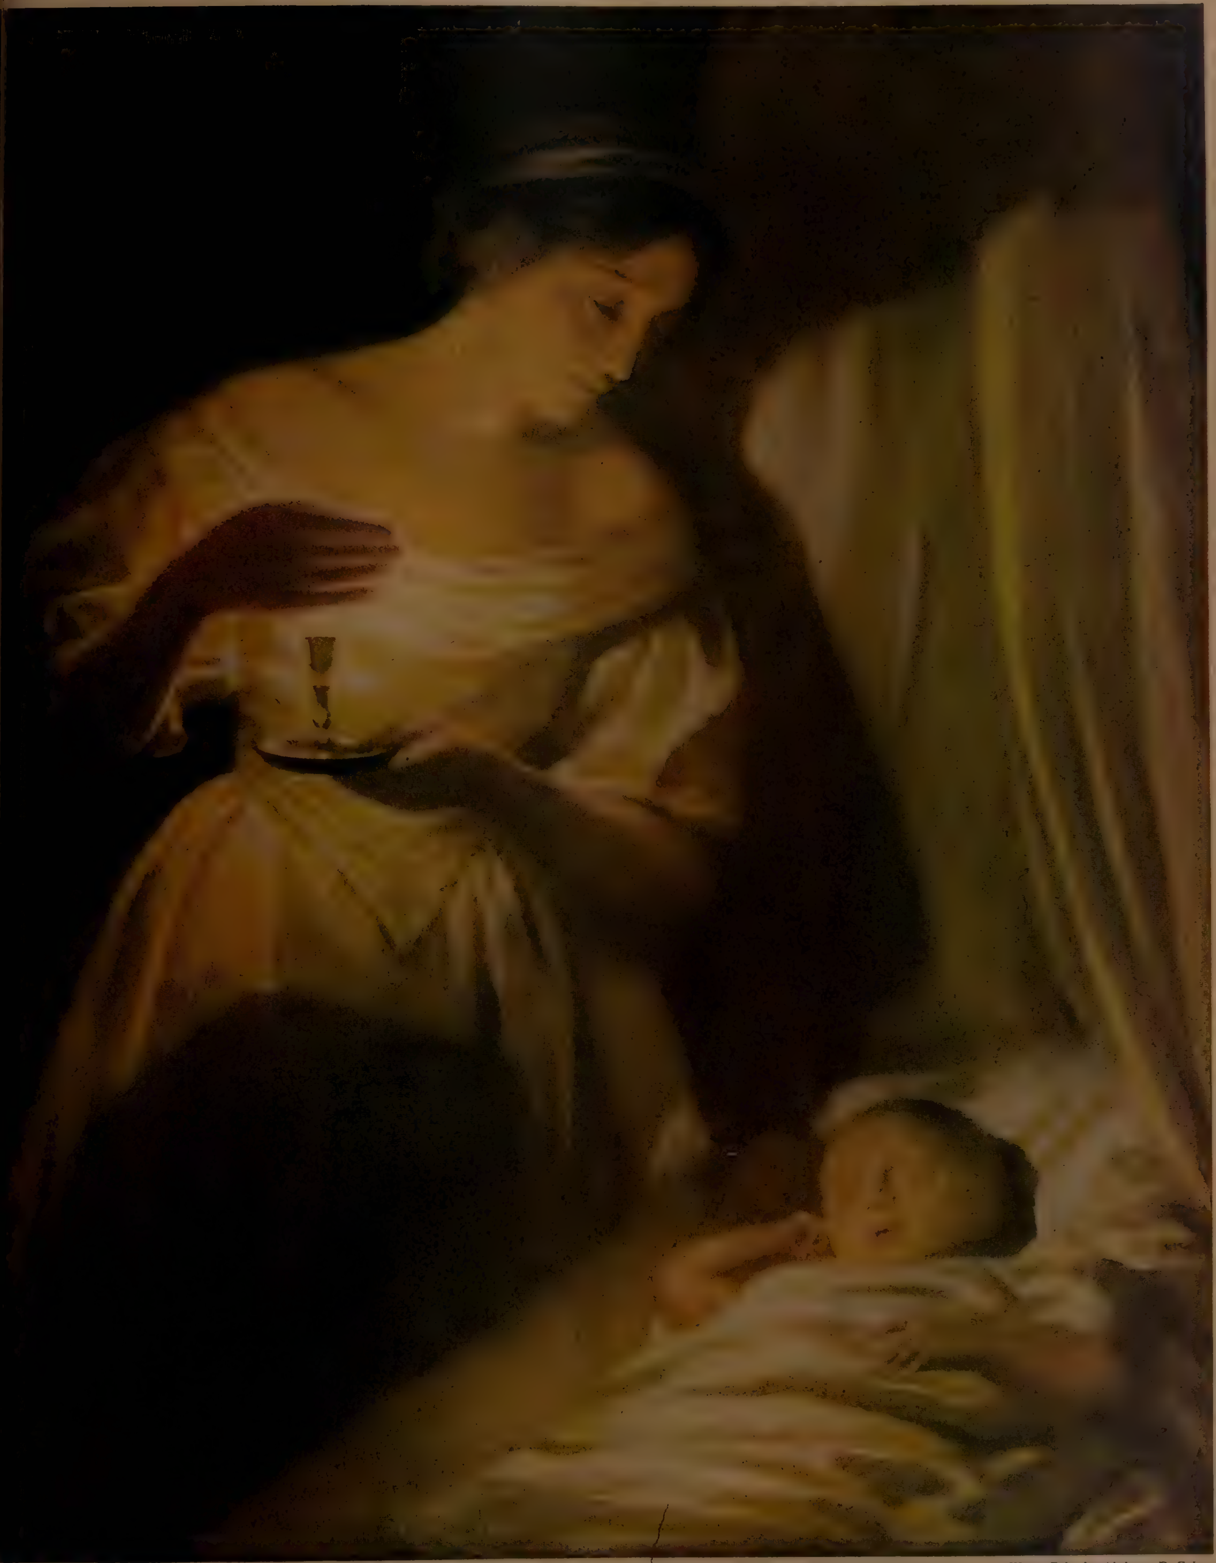
Enclosed find stamps for your book "Aladdin Homes" No. 240.

Name..........
Street..........
City..........
State..........

Christian Herald

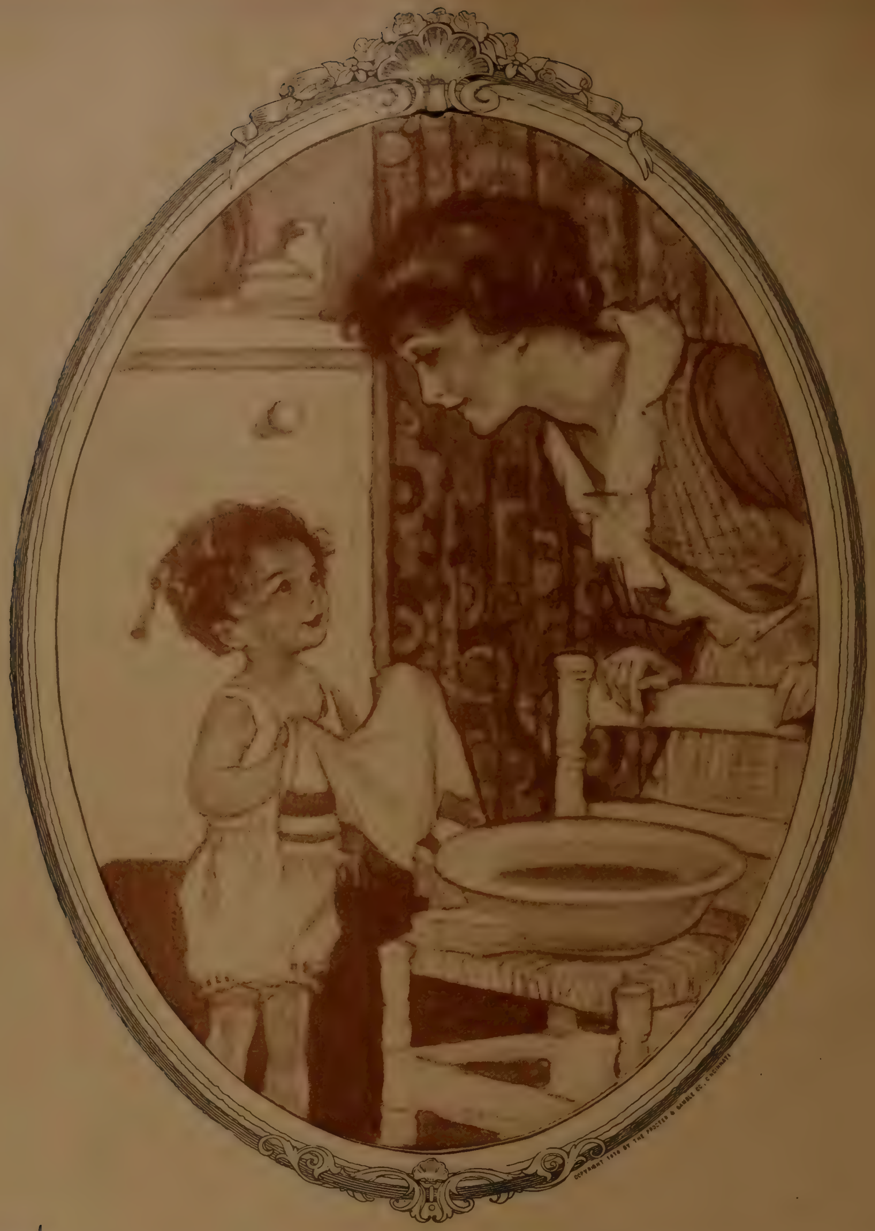
COPYRIGHT, 1919, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, MARCH 8, 1919



Water Color by Alphæus P. Cole

IN THE SILENCE OF THE NIGHT



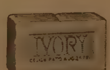
COPYRIGHT 1916 BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO. CINCINNATI

AND now little Mary Louise has acquired the proud privilege of washing her own rosy face and hands, without a bit of help from mother.

She finds it's lots of fun to chase the big floating cake of Ivory Soap around the wash bowl, making just mountains of fragrant cleansing suds to rub into her radiant cheeks. And mother knows that no matter how vigorously daughter scrubs, this pure mild lather can not irritate her tender skin.

Even though the rinsing be rather hurried—because of the reward to follow—there will be left no trace of soapy smell or unsightly gloss. Firm pink cheeks will be sweetly clean, ready for mother's kiss.

IVORY SOAP. . . . . . .



. . . . . . $99\frac{44}{100}\%$ PURE

IT FLOATS

PROCTER & GAMBLE STANDARD PRODUCTS

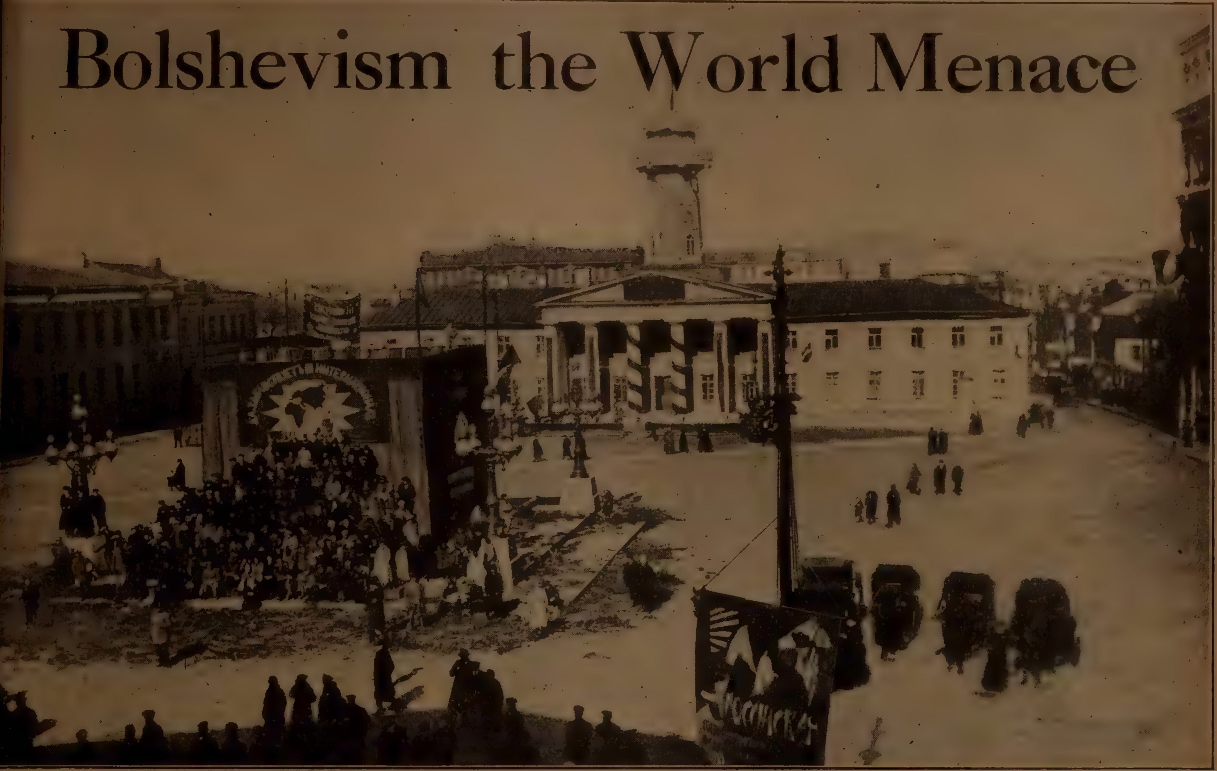
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

ENTERED AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER JANUARY 25, 1909, AT THE POST OFFICE
AT NEW YORK, UNDER THE ACT OF MARCH 3, 1879

VOL. 42—NO. 10. PRICE 10 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Bolshevism the World Menace



© Underwood & Underwood

In the square in front of the headquarters of the Moscow Soviet a huge box draped in red has replaced a statue of Skobeleff. The banner in the foreground is in honor of the International Conference

THE Bolshevism that is showing its disorganizing effects in many lands is beginning to be understood in all its full horrors as it exists in Russia.

The astounding disclosure is now made of utter epravity in the Bolshevist program for the nationalization of women, the annulment of marriages and the eign of free love.

The narrator of these horrors was Roger E. Simmons, the former representative in Russia of the United States Department of Commerce, who spent weeks in Russian jails and who left Archangel for this country last November. Mr. Simmons testified for hree days before a committee of the United States Senate. He told the senators that he had been inormed on the highest authority not only that Germany had promoted Bolshevism in Russia, but also that the Bolsheviki entered into an alliance with the Germans to fight the Allies in the north and the Czecho-Slovaks in the west, and in that same agreement Germany agreed not to interfere with the work of the Soviets.

The ages for service in the Red Army are from sixteen to fifty-two years. It is an army organized by force and at the point of bayonets.

Another phase of Bolshevism is what the Bolsheviki call the "Leveling of Intelligence." Persons under the regulation who are considered to have more intelligence than is considered healthy for the cause of Lenine and Trotzky are arrested, thrown into prison, and in great numbers of instances put to death simply because they were considered of higher intelligence than the leaders approve of.

MR. SIMMONS emphasized the assertion that it is through the use of arms that men and women are compelled to work at any labor that the Bolshevist authorities assign them to do. Great numbers of these people are old or frail, persons utterly unfit for such work as they are forced to do at the point of bayonets or guns. They are lawyers, office men, and other persons whose work in normal time was of what we may term a mental nature. The women suffer the same fate. They are forced into the heaviest sort of manual labor.

"In Russia," continued Mr. Simmons, "there are no police as we know them. The Red Guards handle it all. And, furthermore, the crimes committed and the terrorism practiced by the Red Guards are the results of organization. The robberies are systematic, and pocket-picking is one of the best organized features of the Red Guard work.

"In Moscow I drew 14,000 rubles, and when I left the bank I was followed and within three blocks my pockets were picked by guards, and I never got a cent of my money back. The treasurer of the International Harvester Company told me of four different occasions when money he was to use for paying his men was picked from his pockets by guards. I know members of our military mission, men who were with the Red Cross and the Y. M. C. A., who also lost their money and other valuables as a result of organized and approved pocket-picking."

Another instance cited of terrorism was a protest meeting held by employees of a textile mill. While the meeting was in progress the Red Guards entered the room and killed the speakers and leaders on the spot.

MR. SIMMONS read two official decrees for the control of what may be termed the "free love" policy in two Russian cities. These documents are certainly startling. The first decree, dated March 15, 1918, was issued by the Anarchist Soviet, which was charged by Lenine and Trotsky with the government of the city of Saratov. Summarized, it proclaims, in the name of the Free Association of Anarchists in Saratov, and in compliance with the decision of the Soviet of Peasants and Soldiers and Workingmen's Deputies of Kronstadt, "the abolition of the private possession of women," the motives as stated being that social inequalities and legitimate marriage having in the past served as an instrument for selfish and monopolistic purposes in the hands of the bourgeoisie, the Soviet therefore made an edict abolishing the existing marriage rights and the recognized laws on the subject, and introducing after March 1, 1918, a new system under which women between the ages of seventeen and thirty-two are "exempted from private ownership and proclaimed the property of the whole nation." The decree provides for the distribution and management of the unfortunate women who are thus "appropriated." A "Black Committee" is organized to carry it into effect, and citizens themselves are directed to cooperate with the committee. Much of the document is too revolting to be quoted in the Christian Herald. The whole decree is evidence of the power that runs to madness in the hands of lawless men who, suddenly acquiring authority, employ it as tyrants and libertines, to upset the entire social system and gratify their own passions and those of their followers.

The second decree read by Mr. Simmons was issued by the Soviet of the city of Vladimir. It is very similar in character to the Saratov decree, giving full rein to free love in the community. In both decrees, the provision is made that the offspring of such revolting unions is to be cared for by the State. Similar decrees have been put in operation at Luga, Kolpin, Hvelinsk and other places.

"Gentlemen," added Mr. Simmons, as he finished reading the Vladimir decree, "these documents speak for themselves. God and morality are unknown to the Bolsheviki, and everything that makes life decent and worth living is in jeopardy, if this thing is permitted to go ahead."

Madame Breshkovskaya, who is telling America about Russia

MME. BRESHKOVSKAYA, who knows the Russian people as her own self and has suffered a lifetime of imprisonment and martyrdom for Russia, says that even the old monarchical autocratic régime, under which she spent more than thirty years in Siberia, would be preferable to the present equally autocratic reign of terror.

Arno Dosch-Fleurot was one of the last of the correspondents who, notwithstanding the promising splendor of the Soviet experiment in Russia, has found it uncomfortable to remain there. In the March World's Work Mr. Dosch-Fleurot says the French Revolution was a bloodless affair compared with what is now taking place in Russia. Whereas the deaths of the French Revolution, from the fall of the Bastille to the beheading of Robespierre, were only about ten thousand, he says the deaths in Russia in the autumn of 1918, by one kind of terrorism or another, "must have averaged a thousand a day."

In the investigation of the Bolshevist rule, now going on in Washington, much important testimony other than that of Mr. Simmons is being given. Men with large business interests and much experience in Russia, who have come in close contact with workmen, testify that the Russian workmen and peasants as a whole are not on the side of the Soviet government, which is only made up of "the riffraff of the industrial and peasant world." Ernest Poole has given testimony that the Russians of the country and villages are anti-Bolshevik.

Mrs. John Reed, who writes under the name of Louise Bryant, and who was in Russia in the first ten weeks of the Bolshevist régime, stated that the decree of Saratov which nationalized women and which was issued by the council of that city was never indorsed by the Bolsheviki. In answer to questions about the attitude of Mme. Breshkovskaya, the grandmother of the Revolution," she said that the aged woman was being used by the counter-revolutionary parties among the monarchists of Russia.

Jerome Davis, who was a Y. M. C. A. worker in Russia, has said in a newspaper interview:

"I am absolutely opposed to the Bolsheviki, but I believe that it never pays to make charges that are untrue. It so happens that I was in the city of Samara, not far from Saratov, shortly after the decree which Mr. Simmons read was published. In order to ascertain the truth of this decree, I went to the headquarters of the anarchists in Samara and asked if such a decree had been published. They denied absolutely that any anarchist group had ever published such a decree and stated that the decree had been published by the rich, who were trying to discredit them. Soon after this they published a handbill denying the decree read by Mr. Simmons and stating that it was prepared by counter-revolutionary elements. I have a copy of this decree in my possession. Soon after this one of the wealthy men in the town admitted to me that the decree nationalizing women had been prepared as a joke by some of the rich young men of the town. The second decree purporting to come from the city of Vladimir I never heard of."

What the United States and the Allied nations can do for Russia is yet a puzzle. Our own governme has shown strong opposition to all intervention in t Russian drama. This opposition forces the oth powers to renounce the project of an expedition in Russia, from which country our soldiers will co back in the near future. It would seem, therefor that the nations will all allow the Bolshevik monst to tire himself out in his convulsions, with the ho that the man for the situation will rise up either i Petrograd or Moscow in order to reconstitute a ne Russia, or that the small nationalities of that immens agglomeration of people in the northeast of Europ will reorganize according to the geographical needs o national aspirations.

Albert Rhys Williams, who heads a Bolshevist bureau of information in this country, was before th committee on February 22. He painted the Bolshevists as fine idealists who abhorred murder, and wh were seeking to erect a Utopian form of government He said the first decree of the Bolshevist governmen was one abolishing capital punishment, which late was revoked. He placed the total casualties due t civil war in Russia at 45,000, and declared anarchy i Russia to be due to the plotting of bourgeoisie, o whom he admitted some thousands were in jail. Whe asked whether he preferred changing the constitutio by force or by recognized legal means, he said he preferred the legal way and did not approve of the mean the Bolsheviki had been forced to use in Russia.

The efforts of the Peace Conference to solve the Russian riddle appeared on February 24 to be nearing success. The Government of North Russia had accepted the invitation to the Princes Island Conference and while the Omsk and Esthonian Governments had at first refused hope of a comparatively representative conference appeared brighter. The Ukrainians and Cossacks in the week had scored considerable successes against the Bolsheviks.

Bourbonism and not Bolshevism is the thing to fear in this country, says Governor Lynn J. Frazier, of North Dakota. "In our state," he writes, "we believe the best protection against revolution is to assist rather than retard evolution, and in this state it is the intention of the Administration to remove discontent and prevent disorder by remedying the legitimate economic complaints of the people instead of trying to stamp out just grievances.

"Personally, I feel that Bolshevism is not the only peril to this country. In my opinion the spirit of Bourbonism is even more threatening to the security of our institutions, for, scanning back through history, it seems to me that Bourbonism always precedes and is the cause of Bolshevism."

American Red Cross Organizes for Peace

DR. LIVINGSTON FARRAND assumed leadership of the American Red Cross when, on March 1, it passed from a war-time to a peace-time basis. The War Council appointed by President Wilson at the entrance of America into the war was a temporary body of men appointed solely for the purpose of meeting the war-time emergency, and went out of existence as soon as possible after fighting ceased.

The Red Cross will continue to exercise its traditional functions as the great organ of mercy and humanity, always ready, as in the past, to succor the suffering and relieve the distress of the destitute, especially in time of disaster. Its plans for a more active participation in health education are already under way.

Since the entrance of the United States into the war, Dr. Farrand has been the director of the tuberculosis work of the International Health Board in France. While abroad he came in close contact with the Red Cross work in many branches. He knows the situation thoroughly, and was chosen for the position to which he has just been appointed, not only because of his executive qualifications, but because of his intimate knowledge of the work that must be carried on in the foreign field.

Even prior to Dr. Farrand's work in France his training had been along better health lines. After he was graduated from Princeton University in 1888, where he received his master's degree, he went to Columbia University, where he received his medical education, and spent three subsequent years in study abroad. From 1905 to 1914 Dr. Farrand, as executive secretary of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, conducted anti-tuberculosis campaigns which logically fitted him to direct that great campaign for America in France and Italy. The story of the anti-tuberculosis campaign conducted under Dr. Farrand's direction is one so brilliant that the American people can rest secure in the ability of such a leader for the vast amount of ameliorative work America is prepared to do for humanity at large.

"The American Red Cross saved the day for the French people and made American intervention real. When it went over first in June, 1917, things were very dark," Dr. Farrand said recently. "France was discouraged. They knew America had entered, but the soldiers were not there. Disaster was everywhere, the sky was blue. The first sign that American intervention was anything more than a paper intervention was the appearance of the Red Cross. It made American intervention a living thing."

In sketching the after-war program of the American Red Cross Dr. Farrand stresses the point that even as a war organization, brought up to its present pitch of efficiency to deal with emergency, the task is by no means ended. There will still remain problems to be solved, distress to be met, which are going to call for the activity of the Red Cross abroad and at home for a considerable time to come. It is not going to be ended this year, and Dr. Farrand doubts if it will be next year. It must live up to its name as the largest living force for mercy in the world.

America is now faced with the biggest problem of all, in Dr. Farrand's estimation; and this is to preserve, for the future welfare of our communities and of the world, the present efficiency of the Red Cross. To allow an organization of the size and universal acceptance of the Red Cross today to drop, to deflect, without carrying it through and accomplishing in peace greater deeds than in war, would be a shame. This means the delicate task of changing from a war basis to a peace basis.

Public health lies at the base of the problems which the Red Cross will be called upon to meet in the interests of the American people. "For the first time in the history of the world we have an organism really and thoroughly expressive of the will and wish of the American people to deal with its fundamental problems," said Dr. Farrand. That doesn't mean that we are not going to hold ourselves ready to deal with emergencies, but the Red Cross may conceive itself as something far broader.

One of the most successful American innovations introduced into Europe under Dr. Farrand's direction was the traveling exhibits which moved by motor from city to city, from village to village, with moving pictures, posters, appropriate literature, lecturers, nurses, bringing America's message of health to war-stricken France.

The largest and best-known of the Red Cross tuberculosis centers in France are the Ste. Eugenie Hospital, near Lyons, the city that ranks next to Paris in importance in this work, and the Edward L. Trudeaux Sanatorium for women and children down at Plessis Robinson. The Bligny Sanatorium at Brüssous Fouges takes care of tubercular French soldiers; the château at Yerres, known as the Edith Wharton Sanatorium, was turned over to the Red Cross by "Tuberculeux de la Guerre." St. Joseph's Hospital, one of the finest in the city of Paris, was enabled, through Red Cross funds, to build a sanatorium of 125 beds capacity. A new chapter in the war on tuberculosis has been written.

Dr. Farrand has also served as treasurer of the American Public Health Association, is a member of many scientific societies, and is the author of several books, including "The Basis of American History." He is fifty-two years old.

Dr. Livingston Farrand

Boston Welcomes Wilson Home

WOODROW WILSON, first citizen of the United States, and by virtue of his merit and leadership, citizen now of Rome and of the world, set feet once more on his native soil at Boston, on February 24. His ship, the transport George Washington, anchored safely in he harbor at 4 P.M. on Sunday, after arrowly missing the fog-hidden rocks ff Marblehead. The President left he ship about eleven o'clock Monday morning in the Court Guard cutter Ossipee and stepped on Commonwealth Pier at 11.24. The pier was canopied with flags and lined with the national olors. The pier was filled with representatives of the city and state, and the President was received informally by Mayor Peters.

Half an hour after landing the President and his party entered automobiles and paraded across the city through streets banked with cheering thousands o the Copley Plaza Hotel, where he had unch.

At 2.30 Mr. Wilson appeared at Mechanics Hall, where those fortunate enough to secure tickets were awaiting him, and where he was again received with cheers and riotous applause.

The President began by saying: "I wonder if you are half as glad to see me as I am to see you"; and he assured his audience that in all his work abroad he had sought "to recall what I was sure would be your counsels with regard to the great matters which were under consideration." He said too that he saw in the welcome he had received a greeting to America rather than to himself.

"I have not come" he said "to report the proceedings or the results of the proceedings of the Peace Conference; that would be premature. I can say that I have received very happy impressions from this Conference, the impression that, while there are many differences of judgment, while there are some divergencies of object, there is nevertheless a common spirit and a common realization of the necessity of setting up new standards of right in the world. . . .

"The conference seems to you to go slowly; from day to day in Paris it seems to go slowly; but I wonder if you realize the complexity of the task which it has undertaken. . . .

"What we are doing is to hear the whole case; hear it from the mouths of the men most interested; hear it from those who are officially commissioned to state it; hear the rival claims, hear the claims that affect new nationalities, that affect new areas of the world, that affect new commercial and economic connections that have been established by the great world war through which we have gone. I have seen earnestness, I have seen tears come to the eyes of men who plead for downtrodden people whom they were privileged to speak for; but they were not the tears of anguish, they were the tears of ardent hope. . . .

"And in the midst of it all every interest seeks out first of all, when it reaches Paris, the representatives of the United States. Why? Because, and I think I am stating the most wonderful fact in history—because there is no nation in Europe that suspects the motives of the United States. . . . Was there ever any fact that so bound the nation that had won that esteem forever to deserve it?

"I would not have you understand that the great men who represent the other nations there in conference are disesteemed by those who know them. Quite the contrary. But you understand that the nations of Europe have again and again clashed with one another in competitive interest. It is impossible for men to forget those sharp issues that were drawn between them in times past. . . . They resort to that nation which has won the enviable distinction of being regarded as the friend of mankind. . . .

"I have been searching for the fundamental fact that converted Europe to believe in us. Before this war Europe did not believe in us as she does now. . . .

"When they saw that America not only held ideals but acted ideals, they were converted to America and became firm partisans of those ideals. . . .

"When they saw men in khaki coming across the sea in the spirit of Crusaders, and they found that these were strange men, reckless of danger, not only, but reckless because they seemed to see something that made danger worth while. Men have testified to me in Europe that our men were possessed by something that they could only call a religious fervor. . . . They had a vision. They had a dream. And they were fighting in the dream. And fighting in the dream, they turned the whole tide of battle, and it never came back. . . .

"And now do you realize that this confidence we have established throughout the world imposes a burden upon us —if you choose to call it a burden. It is one of those burdens which any nation ought to be proud to carry. Any man who resists the present tides that run in the world will find himself thrown upon a shore so high and barren that it will seem as if he had been separated from his human kind forever. . . .

"And now these ideals have wrought this new magic, that all the peoples of Europe are buoyed up and confident in the spirit of hope, because they believe that we are at the eve of a new age in the world when nations will understand one another, when nations will support one another in every just cause, when nations will unite every moral and every physical strength to see that the right shall prevail.

"If America were at this juncture to fail the world, what would come of it? I do not mean any disrespect to any other great people when I say that America is the hope of the world; and if she does not justify that hope the results are unthinkable. Men will be thrown back upon the bitterness of disappointment not only, but the bitterness of despair. . . .

"Suppose we sign the treaty of peace, and that it is the most satisfactory treaty of peace that the confusing elements of the modern world will afford, and go home and think about our labors, we will know that we have left written upon the historic table at Versailles, upon which Vergennes and Benjamin Franklin wrote their names, nothing but a modern scrap of paper; no nations united to defend it, no great forces combined to make it good. . . .

"Do you believe in the Polish cause, as I do? Are you going to set up Poland, immature, inexperienced, as yet unorganized, and leave her with a circle of armies around her? Do you believe in the aspiration of the Czecho-Slovaks and the Jugo-Slavs, as I do? Do you know how many Powers would be quick to pounce upon them if there were not the guarantees of the world behind their liberty?

"Have you thought of the sufferings of Armenia? You poured out your money to help succor the Armenians after they suffered; now set your strength so that they shall never suffer again.

"The arrangements of the present peace cannot stand a generation unless they are guaranteed by the united forces of the civilized world.

"When I think of the homes upon which dull despair would settle were this great hope disappointed, I should wish for my part never to have had America play any part whatever in this attempt to emancipate the world. . . .

"And so, my fellow citizens, I have come back to report progress, and I do not believe that the progress is going to stop short of the goal. The nations of the world have set their heads now to do a great thing, and they are not going to slacken their purpose. And when I speak of the nations of the world I do not speak of the governments of the world. I speak of the peoples who constitute the nations of the world. They are in the saddle, and they are going to see to it that if their present governments do not do their will, some other governments shall. And the secret is out and the present governments know it. . . .

"I have come back for a strenuous attempt to transact business for a little while in America, but I have really come back to say to you, in all soberness and honesty, that I have been trying my best to speak your thoughts. . . .

"And, therefore, probing deep in my heart, and trying to see the things that are right without regard to the things that may be debated as expedient I feel that I am interpreting the purpose and the thought of America.

"And in loving America I find I have joined the great majority of my fellow men throughout the world."

. . .

Senator Borah, who, with Senator Fall, asked to be excused from attending the President's luncheon, at which Mr. Wilson was expected to take the Congressional leaders into his confidence on February 26, on the floor of the Senate, attacked the plan for a League of Nations, declaring that it meant a departure from the policies of Washington and Monroe. He said that membership in the League involved surrender of our sovereignty and demanded that the people be given an opportunity to vote on the question. Senator Reed, of Missouri, on the 22nd condemned the League idea as "infamous." Senator Reed said the League would involve the United States in entangling alliances and would put our foreign relations under the domination of "an alien group."

Assassin Fires at Clemenceau

A YOUNG anarchist, Emile Cottin, attempted at 8.55 A.M. on February 19 to assassinate Premier Clemenceau of France. For several days Cottin had shadowed the Premier's house having been noticed by Clemenceau, who said he had remarked to himself, "Hello, that fellow is up to no good." The Premier had just noticed again the evil looking man, when he saw the arm raised, revolver in hand, and the first shot fired at the door of the automobile which was turning the corner of the Boulevard Delessert, a short distance from the Premier's residence. The first shot shattered the windows in the automobile. Four other shots were fired, three of the five touching the Premier, two merely scratching the skin, the other one entered near the right shoulder blade, lodging in the lung under the left shoulder, where it was located by x-ray. In its passage across the Premier's back it missed the spinal cord. M. Clemenceau jumped out of his automobile, the door of which he tried to open after the first shot, and grappled with his assailant, after which he walked home, being assisted up the steps by a servant, to whom he said, jokingly: "It is nothing."

The assassin was severely handled by a crowd which gathered rapidly, women shoppers pummeling him with their umbrellas, while the men practiced on him with their fists. The French police had difficulty in extricating the man. Another man, who appeared to be with the assassin was also roughly handled and put under arrest, but claimed innocence.

The assassin, who was a Frenchman, twenty-five years of age, and a carpenter, declared himself a solitary and scientific anarchist, and was inclined to boast of his act. He declared that he thought of killing Clemenceau "as the greatest enemy to humanity" seven months before, but had determined on the actual project only a few days previously, that he had watched him to identify his house and learn his habits, and that he "had shot the man who was preparing for another war." He called the day the "red letter day" of his own career. While Cottin claimed to have acted alone, the police suspected a plot and sought for conspirators.

Premier Clemenceau was on his way to a conference with President Wilson's friend Colonel House, British Foreign Minister Balfour and the Italian Foreign Minister Sonnino. There had been no meeting of the Peace Conference scheduled for the 19th. Messages expressing the horror of humanity at such a dastardly deed poured in upon the stricken Premier, from the King of England, the President, who got the news by wireless, and heads of all the other governments associated with France in the making of peace.

When it was found that he was not greatly injured, delegates to the Peace Conference and his associates in the French Government called to pay their respects, and wish him well. In spite of his wound he had three conferences during the day with Foreign Minister Pichon. To Marshal Foch, who hurried to the Premier's residence at about ten o'clock, Clemenceau said of the bullet that hit him: "I have dodged larger ones than that at the front."

Premier Clemenceau on February 21 continued to receive numerous callers and to transact business connected with the Conference. But, because the visitors had been too numerous the Premier passed a bad night and, to give him rest and to prevent irritation of the lung, his doctors attempted to keep him quiet on the 22nd. He was forbidden to talk, but received several callers on matters of State. On February 24 he was pronounced out of danger by his physician.

The Paris police seized large quantities of stores and anarchistic material in publication offices and clubs frequented by associates of Cottin, but found no evidences of accomplices. It was announced that the assassin would be court-martialed.

Premier Lloyd George of England was summoned hurriedly from London. After several conferences between the delegates it was decided to hold a session of the Supreme Council of the Peace Conference on February 21, with Stephen Pichon and Captain André Tardieu representing France, and Secretary Lansing in the chair. Hearings were scheduled on the Hungarian-Roumanian frontier question, on the extension of recognition to the new government of Poland, on the question of Danish Schleswig, and on Albania, and a report was ready from the Economic Commission charged with the provisioning of the devastated districts, on the question of the commercial policy to be adopted as regards neutrals, and the economic relations between the Allies.

The Allied delegates to the Peace Conference on February 21, voted to recognize the Polish Government of Ignace Jan Paderewski, and steps were also taken to speed up the work of the Conference.

It was reported on February 20 that the Allies, although feeling that Germany's payments in reparation for the war should cover all Allied war costs, were ready to leave the final decision to President Wilson. The American delegates have insisted on assessing no greater debt than Germany could pay in 15 to 20 years. To pay the whole war debt would possibly require 100 years.

GOD'S ARMY -UNDER FIRE

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

A doughnut lassie

© Col. E. J. Parker

"IF YOU want to give credit to some folks who deserve it," an American doughboy told me, "write a story about the Salvation Army. They've had less backing, in every way, than any other organization. They've had less encouragement, too, and less publicity. But that hasn't bothered them. They've just gone ahead and worked, worked hard, to make things easier for us!

"There have been times, just after our cook wagons have been shelled, that the men of the Salvation Army have brought food into the trenches to keep us from being hungry. There have been other times when the girls of the Salvation Army have come as near to the front as the second line of defense, to make pies and doughnuts for us. When they haven't had anything to cook we've brought in eggs—and they've fried 'em for us.

"They're real people, the Salvation Army are! And you, back in the States, haven't heard half enough about them!" So spoke the American doughboy.

CURIOUSLY enough, the Salvation Army headquarters are in my hotel. I didn't know it until I had been in the hotel for several days, although I had noticed members of the organization in the dining-room at breakfast time each morning. I had noticed them often and had wished that we might be friends, for they were a smiling people, with happy voices and clear eyes.

And then, one day, one of their women stopped at my table on her way out of the dining-room.

"You look like an American girl," she said to me, "and you seem to be alone. And somehow I couldn't help speaking to you!"

"I am an American girl," I answered, "and I am alone. And I've wanted, ever so much, to know you all. I want to talk with you about the work that you've been doing for our boys at the front."

The woman patted my shoulder with a kind, motherly hand, and all at once I knew why the doughboy had called the Salvation Army "real people."

"We'll be glad to see you at any time," she said, "and if you're lonely, or want some one to take you about Paris—why, remember that we're all in the same hotel, and that we'll be glad . . ."

IT WAS about a week later that I went up to the offices of the Salvation Army. Unpretentious offices they are—offices built for work. It was a quiet, rainy afternoon, and I wandered in, quite unannounced, and gave my name to a pleasant blond girl with dimples, who was busily writing on a typewriter.

"Perhaps there is some one in today," I ventured, "who can tell me something about your work at the front. You've had some good recommendations from our soldiers—and I've heard them. Those same soldiers are going home soon, and I want their mothers and their sisters to know what you have done for them!"

The blond girl smiled. But she hesitated for a moment before she answered me.

"There's no one especially important here, just now," she said at last. "But one or two of the girls who have just come in from the front might help. Would you like to see them?"

"I certainly would," I answered with a great deal of warmth and no hesitation. And so it came about that I found myself sitting in the little reception room, a few minutes later, talking with Miss MacLeod, who is a captain, and Miss Williams, who is an ensign.

Miss MacLeod has been a member of the Salvation Army for a good many years. And she has been in France, also with the Salvation Army, for fourteen months. Miss Williams, another Salvationist of long standing, has served at the front for nine months. Both are real American girls with ever-ready laughter and understanding—typical American girls with an infinite store of tact and resource and humor. They have need of all of these qualities in their work—particularly the humor. I realized that when one of them told me about her first experience in a building that was being bombed.

"I was in bed," she told me, "when the Germans began to fire on the house. I was fast asleep, for we don't often get a bed or a house to sleep in; but the noise woke me and I sat up suddenly and stared across the footboard of the bed at two pictures on the wall. They were crayon portraits of a dignified old man and his wife; but they ceased to be dignified when the first shell struck the roof, and the pictures began to dance. I couldn't help laughing, they looked so funny! I laughed and laughed. Then another shell seemed to explode directly over my head. And I jumped out of bed and threw on a coat and went down to the ground floor. I don't think I used the stairs—I probably slid down the banisters. . . .

"When I reached the street, everything was in confusion. Folk were running madly about, dogs were barking and babies were crying. I leaned against the side of the doorway and tried to think clearly. As I leaned there, a shell banged against the corner of the house and a brick fell down. It hit me on the temple and rather stunned me for a moment. . . . When I got over being dizzy I started to run—just as madly and senselessly as the rest were running. Somebody called out for me to wait a minute. But I kept right on running. There wasn't a movie machine in the world that could have made a picture of me—I was going so fast! A French poilu was in my path. He threw out his hands and exclaimed:

"'Qu'est que c'est, mademoiselle?'

"'Nothing!' I answered, 'get out of my way!'"

I LOOKED at the girl in wonder. Being shelled didn't present any humorous side to me.

"You mean to say that you could laugh?" I questioned. "That you weren't half frightened to—"

The Salvation Army tent was pitched in France almost as soon as the first canvas of the A. E. F. was spread

Photos, copyright, Col. E. J. Parker

A field hut of the Salvation Army in France

The other girl interrupted.

"When you're being shelled," she told me, "you haven't time to be frightened. I wasn't a bit scared the first time I was under fire. I hadn't been in Paris a day after landing, before they sent me to a sector at the front line. It had always been a very quie sector, they told me—there had never been any actio
So I went up with three other girls and opened a ca teen in a little house. We arrived at about fi o'clock, and that night, at about nine, the German opened fire on us. One of the first shells struck ou kitchen and wrecked it. But we weren't scared. W were only excited. Every time we heard an explosio we'd dash out into the street to see what had bee hit!"

"Working under fire"—it was the first girl agai who spoke—"is, after all, our job. We're used to it—we can't allow ourselves to mind it! We've cooked fo the boys under all sorts of shelling. And we've ha fun doing it.

"I remember one time when they wanted doughnut—
I was following a machine-gun battalion then—I been with them for a good many months—and th boys were fine fellows. There had been some awfull hard fighting, and they were coming in every day fron
the front line and going out again. We hadn't a stov or any materials to make their doughnuts with; bu when we told them, they were so disappointed that w decided to manage somehow.

"We sent two of the boys back to our commissar for lard and flour and sugar. And while they were gon we went out and hunted for a stove. What we foun at last was an old forge outside of a ruined blacksmith shop. And while some of the boys kept a fir going, we made doughnuts on that forge. We mad them from nine o'clock in the morning until eight-thirty at night—and then the order came to move on
And so we held a little religious meeting that laste until nine-thirty and then packed up our goods and we were out of town by daylight.

"We're used to cooking like that. Once some boys from the front came into a little torn-up village wher we were stationed. It was so primitive there that w hadn't even a tent or good cooking utensils. But th boys were hungry, and in a few hours they were going back. And so we built a fireplace out of old lemon-drop cans and made a fire under them and fried pancakes as fast as the boys could eat them. Pancakes and doughnuts! If I ever see another doughnut when I get back to the States . . ."

"The doughnut idea certainly was an inspiration!" I commented. "I wonder how you ever happened to think about it?"

"Oh"—it was the second girl—"I can tell you that!
One of the generals in our army asked our leader to have dinner with him. And for dessert there was a pie that the general's cook had baked. It was an awfully bad pie—so bad that they laughed at it. And while they were laughing our leader suggested that one of the girls in his organization should bake a real pie for the general. One of the girls did, and it was such a good pie, and the general was so pleased, that he said he wished every one of his men might have something just as good to eat. And—well, the doughnut idea just naturally evolved from that!"

There was a pause during which I tried to figure

Off for the day's work

© Col. E. J. Parker

ut just how many oughnuts those girls ust have baked. As if answer to my unpoken question, an anwer sounded from the oorway.

"The girls are talking oughnuts, aren't they?" id a voice. "Well, ey've a right to talk oughnuts! I've seen m bake as many as ,000 in a day!"

I turned quickly in e direction of the door. man was standing ere, a short man with road shoulders and eyes hat held the shade of a winkle in them.

"If you're writin' anyhing for th' folks back ome," he told me, "give hose girls all the credit ou want to. You can't ive 'em too much! I've een 'em do things I idn't think women ould do. Why, they've een right on th' spot very minute. There as Salvation Army irls up at the front hen the Americans put heir first drive over.

"It was up in th' oissons sector—round Montdidier way—that h' first battle was ought. Th' first thing hat you heard much bout was th' big fight in une; but we saw action, an' plenty of it, in Cantigny n th' twenty-eighth of May. I remember it all just s clear—how I was takin' a couple o' 'tin Lizzies' up o th' front—th' first with supplies in it, th' other oldin' a couple of th' girls—when I got my first hint hat there was trouble up ahead. That first hint was gang o' Boche prisoners that some doughboys was ringin' back.

"I suppose when I saw those prisoners I should've urned those Lizzies around—an' started home. But omehow I didn't want to, an' th' girls were game and —well, we kept on goin'. We kept on goin' until we ost th' road, an' then, all at once, it was night. An' n th' black darkness we came to a place that was all woods, an' we stayed there. An' th' girls slept in one th' Lizzies an' I sorter kept walkin' around. An' then it was morning. An' as soon as it was light we pushed on . . .

"Pretty soon—almost sooner than it takes to tell —we were in th' thick of it. I can't explain to you what it was like! But there was wounded men lyin' all about—and dead men. An' it was hot—for May. And th' wounded men were askin' fer something to drink. We had a lot of lemons in with th' supplies. An' when we heard th' men callin' we emptied those lemons out on th' ground an' while I went back to a spring fer water, th' girls was squeezin' th' juice out of them an' puttin' sugar with it. An' they had it ready when I got back with th' water. An' we went down th' line with it in buckets. We had gallons of it—more lemonade than I ever saw at once before.

"I hadn't gone far when a man touched me on th' arm. 'Say,' he asked me, sorter choked up like, 'you're with th' Salvation Army, ain't you? Well, I'm about through . . . Do you reckon you can say a few words . . .?' I looked at him. An' then I set down th' bucket. An' I knelt beside him. . . . He had some pictures in his pocket. There was a wife, an' a baby. He didn't last long—not with two bullets in his chest. . . . I talked with nine like that in th' first twenty minutes. . . .

"We saw a good bit of action up around there. Th' Germans recaptured th' town nine times before our boys took it for keeps. Th' girls an' I was on th' outskirts of th' town with a car full of oranges. We gave 'em out to th' boys as they hurried past—"

I interrupted.

"Would you mind," I questioned, "giving me your name?"

The little man blushed.

"I didn't do any more than th' rest," he mumbled, "if you say anything, you'd oughter mention th' McAllister sisters. They were in at th' first—an' Staff Captain Coe, an' Captain Margetts, an' Captain Corless, an' Adjutant Carey, an' Envoy Foster. . . . I'm Adjutant Billy Hale."

"Billy Hale"—it was one of the girls—"sometimes known as Shorty."

Adjutant Billy Hale laughed. The Salvation Army people are always ready to laugh.

"Once, way up at one end of th' line," he told me, "I'd been workin' awfully hard an' I was hungry. An' so I salvaged some grub—a loaf of bread an' a can of tomatoes—an' sat down beside th' road with 'em, and began to eat. An' while I was eatin' a doughboy came along. An' he was hungry, too. An' he sat down beside me an' we went halves. Three months later, down at th' other end of th' line, I was helpin' out at an emergency hospital where they was bringin' th' wounded in. I was pretty much on th' job an' not payin' any attention to folks, when somebody called out: 'Hey, Shorty! What you doin' here?' An' I looked up an' saw them carryin' in th' feller that had eaten bread an' tomatoes with me. It's those little things—"

ONE of the girls began to laugh. "Little things is right!" she exclaimed; "cooties, and rats, and mice! You know," she turned to me, "our billets were usually pretty old places, and they were full of—about everything. I remember one night I was sleeping with one of the girls and she said to me, all of a sudden, 'Is that your foot that I feel?' I jumped. 'I was just going to ask you the same thing,' I answered. 'We'd better get out the flash light!' And when we did we found that there was a big rat in bed with us—under the covers—"

"Shells, and wounded men, and doughnuts, and rats—under the covers!" I exclaimed.

"And mud up to their knees, and gas attacks," finished another voice, the voice of a man who had been reading silently in one corner of the room. "And rheumatism and grippe and other little things like that. They're the little things that the girls don't tell about."

It was to the new man that I appealed.

"I'm wondering," I questioned, "how many of you are over here?"

The man laid down his book, and, turning to me, answered.

"The most we've had here at one time," he told me, "is a hundred and sixty. About two-thirds are girls. But," he added, "the Salvation Army has a hundred thousand of its men in the fighting ranks!"

I gasped at the unbelievably large number of Salvationists in the army, and at the unbelievably small number standing back of the army. For the organization (ask any returned doughboy) has done the work of thousands!

"How soon did you get over here after the war started?" I asked.

The answer came promptly.

"The English Salvation Army," he told me, "had a hospital in Belgium nine days after the first gun was fired. The American branch sent us over with the first troops. We've been here ever since."

A CYNIC, a while ago, publicly criticized the Salvation Army.

"They appeal," said the cynic, "to the soldier's stomach—not to his soul. When a man goes into battle, he should have his spiritual self attended to—not his physical self."

It was the "Stars and Stripes," the official newspaper of the A. E. F., that answered the cynic. It answered him editorially and it didn't say much. It didn't have to.

All it did was to quote a certain chapter from the New Testament in which Christ wrought a miracle to keep a multitude from being hungry.

The Interchurch World Movement of North America

IN the issue of January 22 the Christian Herald reported a meeting at Delmonico's, in New York, at which the preliminary steps were taken for a country-wide effort for the coordinating of the strength of all the churches upon their common task, the preaching of Christ to those who know him not and the development of a better country through the power and love of God expressed in the lives of men. On December 17, at the call of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church, 135 leaders in American Protestantism came together at 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City, to consider the advisability and feasibility of a united campaign. After a day spent in prayer and consultation it was agreed that the time was ripe for such a campaign, and a committee of twenty was appointed to outline a plan and to report.

The committee reported on February 5 and 6 at a meeting at Wallace Lodge, Yonkers, N. Y., at which a permanent organization was perfected. In this permanent organization, the campaign planned on December 30 and the one initiated on December 17 are united. Cyrus H. McCormick, of Chicago, was elected chairman of the movement; Fred B. Smith, of New York, vice-chairman, and William B. Millar, of New York, recording secretary. Dr. John R. Mott was elected chairman of the Executive Committee, and Dr. S. Earl Taylor chief executive officer with the title of General Secretary. The purposes of the Interchurch Movement are thus expressed in the report of the Committee of Twenty:

"To present a unified program of Christian service and to unite the Protestant churches of North America in the performance of their common task.

"While primarily a Home and Foreign Missionary Movement, the movement is to be broad enough to cover all those interests in the United States and Canada outside of the local church budget which are naturally related to the missionary enterprise.

"There will be organized throughout the country in each state and local community some form of interchurch committee or federation.

"A thorough united survey will be made of the home and foreign fields of the world for the purpose of securing accurate and complete data as to what ought to be done by the combined churches to meet the needs of the hour, and of at least the next five years.

"A thoroughgoing educational and publicity campaign will be organized to carry the facts of the survey to the entire Protestant church constituency in America and to every mission station throughout the world where the churches of North America are at work.

"A field campaign will be conducted for the purpose of arousing the church to a realization of the urgency of united effort in meeting the needs of the community, the nation and the world, and of inspiring and organizing the Christian forces to undertake an adequate world program. This field campaign to include a series of regional conferences, followed by conventions and training conferences throughout the country."

The plan also contemplates a united budget, which is, however, not to displace the autonomy of cooperating agencies, and a drive for funds in the spring of 1920 to cover the expenses of the movement for five years. The expense is to be covered by voluntary contributions of individuals and not by assessment upon the participating bodies.

The Foreign Missions Council, the Home Missions Council, the Council of Church Boards of Education, the Sunday School Council, the Federation of Women's Boards of Foreign Missions and the Council of Women for Home Missions are all supporting and participating in the Interchurch World Movement.

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

Secretary. EDWARD S. BABCOX
President and Publisher GRAHAM PATTERSON
Vice Pres. and Mgr. Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON

The President's Welcome

NOW that the League of Nations is fairly spread before the world and can no longer be treated as "a bodiless, viewless thing of air," it is interesting to note how many of those who opposed it as visionary and impractical are running to cover. In France and England it is almost universally conceded that the President's plan is one to which these nations can heartily accord support. Philip Gibbs, the famous British correspondent, the other day remarked: "To many of us in England the Wilsonian ideal is the only possible escape from the jungle law of Europe which led to the war." The opposite view has persisted almost exclusively on this side of the Atlantic. Even the conservative New York Evening Post, which some weeks ago questioned the wisdom of President Wilson's visit abroad, is now convinced that it had misjudged not only the likelihood of the League ever taking tangible form, but whether it was really worth the President's while to leave this country for the experiment. It now gives him credit for his splendid struggle with a great problem, and for attaining a result which could not have been brought about otherwise.

Success is a wonderful transformer of stubborn minds. When President Wilson tells the story of his European experiences to Congress in his own straightforward way, we do not doubt that what has been called "the live wire of his personality" will prove quite as effective in Washington as it did in Paris. The thing has been done which the partisan critics had declared was not only impracticable but impossible. There are, it is true, some people so constituted that they find it hard to restrain their eloquence for a single day. They simply must talk, or they will explode. To their way of thinking, restraint of the personal freedom of debate is worse than the war itself and all the troubles it has wrought in the world. Their eloquence is a safety-valve, and when pressure is relaxed they will feel better, and will probably be surprised to find that the world has given such little heed to their attitude that it forgot to listen.

As the President returns home the whole heart of the nation goes out to him in admiration at the high ability he has shown and the straightforward, open manner of his campaign, which has won the nations of Europe. This is the reason why the majority of those who were lately ranged in opposition now ungrudgingly give him their tribute and join with all good, loyal Americans in welcoming him home.

Food Prices Coming Down

WITH the growing glut in all kinds of foodstuffs, prices have begun to tend slowly downward. They will have to drop a good way yet to get down to reasonable figures. Just now it would seem that the whole schedule of charges is left pretty much to the conscience of the retailers—a very fragile dependence! The result is that people are charged all sorts of figures for commodities without any attempt at regulation or uniformity. Meats vary as much as 25 per cent. The law of supply and demand seems to be generally ignored. Dealers claim that, having laid in their stocks of certain articles at figures formerly prevailing, they cannot now be expected to sell them at a loss. Good logic, but altogether one-sided. In big cities prices are more uniformly lower than in the rural districts. Some time ago the Federal Food Board attempted to standardize food prices, making a rather poor job of it. Now that the Board has ceased its activities, prices are at sixes and sevens. Among the wholesalers affairs are better regulated, and there is a certain degree of uniformity. It takes a long time for anything like reasonable reductions to penetrate the consciences of the retailers, and the public meanwhile is the sufferer. The present situation would warrant our municipalities in taking steps to secure some degree of uniformity in prices among the retailers, who do not seem to realize that the war is over, or that the nation has a superabundance of all kinds of food on hand, even after helping the starving multitudes abroad.

Speculation and Liberty Bonds

IT IS asserted upon good authority, and as the result of careful compilation, that six out of every seven who speculate go "broke."

Every man who looks about him with open eyes can see that speculation wrecks fortunes, destroys business abilities and undermines character. They who take to the gambling route embark on a toboggan that glides swiftly down to destruction.

There are many allurements, but the most specious and dangerous ones of all are those now being held out by dishonest brokers to the holders of Liberty bonds.

Swindling games are reported from all sections of the country, whereby affable scoundrels are seeking to separate bondholders from their good-as-gold bonds in exchange for questionable or worthless stocks.

It is well for us all to bear in mind that the man who offers to give us as a business proposition infinitely more value than he gets from us is either a fool or a swindler—maybe both.

Liberty bonds are of sound value and pay fair returns. In their possession lie honor and security. Worthy self-interest as well as patriotism requires that we hold on to them. Common sense loudly warns us against all gambling schemes.

When the Mists Rise

UNSUSPECTED qualities have been brought out in many individuals under the strain of the war. Some of our soldiers in the ranks in their letters home have shown a power of spiritual vision and indications of latent genius that excite wonder and admiration. Here is a letter from a doughboy to his parents in a little town in Illinois:

> "For two generations our country has had a monopoly of liberty. Now France, Italy, Belgium and others, by their immortal struggle, have proved their right to walk with us in the search for the Holy Grail of Freedom. American genius must furnish many new ideas. If we have understanding and sympathy for other nations and are willing to accept their cooperation, the democracy and natural and spiritual resources we may develop will be unlimited.
>
> "The gloom is penetrated by one great light—the hope that America and the whole world shall some day approach an ideal state, the Kingdom of Heaven on earth. High on a hill, across the fields in front of my camp, is a great tree, rising many times above the others, so tall that it seems to look over all France, the whole world, and to touch heaven, communing with God. It seems to speak to me, and says: 'Courage, young man! For two thousand years I have stood here. I have seen flames from Cæsar's burning villages; Joan of Arc led an army past me; the thunders of the Revolution stormed about me. All this seems a long time to you. But no; it is merely the beginning. As each morning the mists rise from this valley between us, so all that has gone before is but the mist rising at the dawn of civilization.'"

This from a doughboy shows the splendid spirit that has animated our men at the front. They have fought for an ideal. They have "followed the star." Such thoughts ennoble the calamity of the war.

Road-Making

WITH unemployment possibly impending on account of demobilization of troops and war industries, there is a growing demand for resumption of public work projects interrupted by the war.

The most important and pressing of these projects is road-making. The development of the motor vehicle, which every day is displacing more and more the railroad and other means of transportation as a carrier of freight, is a strong argument for good roads. Quite apart from the pressing feature of unemployment is the broader one of permanent and profitable investment.

The Federal government has approved of 760 state road projects, for which there already has been appropriated some $48,000,000, with $200,000,000 more to be available in the next few years. Although the program involves a total of 7,869.01 miles, or 44.96 miles have thus far been constructed.

When we consider that less than forty-five out nearly eight thousand miles of new roads authoriz have been completed, it does not seem amiss to su gest that we stop talking about the unemployme problem long enough to do something really practic toward its solution.

The fact that the cost of construction may higher than under pre-war conditions ought not prevent getting under way. Approximately half t cost will be met by the Federal government, and ev if this were not so, state governments ought to reali the value of road-building as a means of lighteni reconstruction period problems.

The Boy Scout and the Church

TODAY, as never before, the nation has beg to realize the potentiality of its boyhood. O instinctively wonders whether the boys of th day are being properly prepared for the unparallel responsibilities so soon to be theirs.

Of all the many good movements for boy trainin there is none quite like the Boy Scouts of Americ This movement has mapped out a thoroughly feasib plan, practical in every application, whereby boy will be inspired with a real desire to become goo Christian citizens.

The plea of those who have this movement neare at heart is not so much for more boys—it is for leade ship for the many boys who are eager to becom Scouts. The need for scoutmasters was never s urgent as it is now. If Scouting is to expand until i becomes a factor in the development of the America youth, leaders of the highest caliber must step for ward.

The Church is the obvious place to turn for suc leadership, and the Church need have no fear that it i directing its energies in the wrong direction. It i clearly incumbent upon the churches of America t answer the appeal now being made by Scouting off cials for Christian leadership. It is an opportunity fo the churches to make their influence felt in a tangibl way.

Stay in School

ARE the children of America getting the educa tion we like to think is within the reach of ever one of them? In the Central Northwester states three out of every four children between th ages of six and eighteen go to school. This is the high est attendance record in the United States. The Sout Atlantic states have the lowest. There, one child i three is not in school.

The proportion of children out of school is smallest among the eleven-year olds, 91.2 per cent. of whom g to school at least part of the year. From twelve on attendance drops steadily until at the age of eighteen little more than one-fifth of the boys and girls are a their studies.

These facts and other similar facts have inspired the national "Stay-in-School" drive which has been undertaken in an effort to return to school some of the thousands of children who left to do war work. It is hoped that many of the children who might otherwise leave school this year will be persuaded to stick to their books a while longer.

Experience has shown that boys and girls who are restless and dissatisfied with school and even those who feel that they can ill afford further training are often ready to make sacrifices to remain in school, once they realize the value of an education. The Stay-in-School campaign accordingly is designed to show both children and parents that school may mean the difference between a position with a future at steadily increasing wages, and a life of unskilled labor and low pay. It is intended to emphasize the fact that every year of training after a boy or girl has reached the legal working age has a value in dollars and cents and in health and capacity for enjoyment as well.

Communities that make an effort and succeed in keeping their children in school will find education profitable because it will mean for them more efficient workers and better citizens.

Through Armistice to Peace

THE Supreme Allied War Council on February 17 proposed to the Germans the indeterminate renewal of the armistice, subject to termination on three days' notice, and was expected that permanent armistice conditions would later be offered, which would become the basis of an ultimate treaty of peace. While the terms were not made public in detail, the correspondents reported that they included a demand for the reduction of the armed forces of Germany to about twenty or twenty-five divisions, or about 50,000 men, the destruction of the fortifications at Heligoland and the Kiel Canal, the surrender for purposes of destruction of the German warships now interned at the Scapa Flow, and the complete compliance by the Germans with the previous armistice terms. The German Government of Herr Ebert was reported, after a long session, to have voted to refuse to sign the new armistice, but after another session, occupying most of Saturday, in which the heads of the German parties were in consultation with the Cabinet, the possibility of the Allied occupation of Germany as a result of a refusal to sign caused a reluctant ordering of the armistice commission to place its signature upon the document.

Herr Erzberger reported on the 18th to the National Assembly at Weimar, which was said to have listened in silence to the reading of the terms. He told how he had attempted to obtain a modification, and how Marshal Foch had sternly insisted upon the acceptance of the terms, but that he had finally succeeded in securing a revision of the Polish boundary, leaving Silesia in German territory.

Herr Erzberger was reported to have declared that the armistice, with its present terms, can never be the foundation for "a good and lasting peace."

Troops, fully armed, escorting a transport wagon in Glasgow during the strike

© Underwood & Underwood

The Week in the World's News

BAVARIAN PREMIER MURDERED. Kurt Eisner, Premier of Bavaria, was shot and killed, on February 21, by Lieutenant Count Arco-Valley. Eisner, when at Berne, in a speech to the Socialist conference, had clearly outlined the war guilt of Germany and had admitted that this statement of the truth might cost him his life. The assassin was lynched by the people. Later in the same day, while announcing the Premier's murder to the Diet, Minister of the Interior Auer, was shot by a spectator. The Soldiers' and Workmen's Council in Munich on the same day declared Bavaria a Soviet Republic, and proclaimed a state of siege. A general strike was called of all workers in Bavaria.

TO TAKE AMERICAN TROOPS OUT OF RUSSIA. It was announced at Washington on February 15 that the American troops in Russia would be withdrawn at the earliest possible moment, and that all Allied troops would leave Archangel in the early spring.

BOLSHEVISM IN GERMANY. On February 8 Spartacide troops were reported to have occupied Muhlheim, Hamborn and Dorsten, in the Rhine industrial district. Marshal Foch permitted the German Government troops to enter the neutral zone to put down the Spartacide disturbances. The majority of the workers were said to be loyal to the goverment.

REFERENDUM ON PROHIBITION. The National Association of Distillers and Wholesale Liquor Dealers announced on February 18 that the action of the legislatures of fourteen states, in ratifying the Prohibition amendment, would be referred to referendum elections, the states being: Arkansas, California, Colorado, Idaho, Maine, Michigan, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, Ohio, Oregon, Utah and Washington. The Attorney-General of Arkansas decided that the amendment to the constitution could not be submitted to a referendum.

THE VICTORY LOAN. The House Ways and Means Committee on February 19 finally decided that the Victory Liberty Loan in April should consist of short term notes, maturing in from one to five years, with a maximum authorization of $7,000,000,000, the notes to be issued in one of four classes, distinguished from each other by the provisions for exemption from taxes, the rate of interest to be fixed by Secretary Glass. A provision was also written into the bill increasing the amount of treasury certificates authorized from $8,000,000,000 to $10,000,000,000. The Bill, as reported to the House on February 22, provided that bonds of the "Victory issue should not be available as a basis for National Bank circulation, and provided also for further credits to our Allies in the war, these being expected to facilitate the sale of supplies on hand in Europe, also of the United States built docks and railways; and a provision was inserted to promote foreign commerce permitting the War Finance Corporation to extend credits to a total amount of $1,000,000,000 to exporters.

50,000 BARRED FROM CITIZENSHIP. It was announced on February 15 that between 50,000 and 100,000 subjects of neutral nations, who had withdrawn their declaration of intention to become citizens in order to avoid military service, would be forever barred from becoming citizens of the United States.

TO BUY WHEAT. The House, on February 22, passed the bill authorizing the President to buy wheat at the Government guaranteed price and to sell it at the market price, $1,000,000,000 being appropriated to finance the operation.

LIBERTY BONDS STILL SELL. The total of sales of the Fourth Liberty Bonds has increased over $4,000,000 since the loan closed. The total sales, on February 22, were $6,993,073,250.

DR. MARY WALKER DIES. Dr. Mary Walker, army surgeon in the Civil War, lifelong exponent of women's rights and suffrage leader, the only woman granted by Congress the right to wear male attire, died February 22, aged 87 years.

BERGER GETS TWENTY YEARS. Victor L. Berger, convicted of conspiracy to obstruct the war program of the United States, was sentenced, on February 20, to serve twenty years in prison.

ARMY BACK TO PEACE BASIS. The House of Representatives, on February 18, passed the Army Appropriation Bill carrying an appropriation of $1,070,000,000 for the military establishment during the year, beginning July 1, 1919. An amendment was adopted limiting enlistments during the next twelve months to one year but with no service required in the reserve. Another amendment provided for the continuance of the present pay of thirty dollars a month to recruits. The Military Committee's plan for a temporary army of 509,000 men and 28,500 officers was abandoned and the measure as passed provided for an army of 175,000 men, the limit set for the army in 1916.

OIL IN BRITAIN. American drillers have located vast supplies of petroleum on the estate of the Duke of Devonshire at Chesterfield, England.

THE LABOR SITUATION. Premier Lloyd George of Great Britain conscious that the labor situation threatened a crisis in the life of Britain, issued a call for a meeting of representatives of trade unions and employers to create a continuing body for the settlement of industrial disputes. The representatives of the Transport Workers Federation and Sir Robert Horn Minister of Labor held a conference on February 18, at which the Federation representatives held out rigidly for a forty-four hour week and a twenty per cent. advance in wages. A speaker at a session of the American Institute of Mining Engineers in New York on February 18 declared that labor rebelled at being a machine and that "the labor problem could only be solved when capital and management relinquish the right to a final say on matters entirely affecting the welfare and even the self-respect of a very numerous class whose loyal cooperation is as essential to the success of their industrial enterprises as their own." As a result of the nation-wide strike in the building industry affecting 100,000 men, called on February 17, because of differences between certain unions and contractors in New York City, a conference was called at Washington on February 19 between Secretary Baker, Secretary Wilson, representative of the unions and of the Building Trades Employers Association. The Conference was without result, but was resumed on February 24.

NEW AMBASSADOR TO FRANCE. Hugh C. Wallace of Seattle, Receiver of Public Moneys for the State of Utah under President Cleveland, was, on February 15, appointed Ambassador to France.

THE GERMAN DEBT. Dr. Schiffer, Minister of Finance in the New German Government, in an address on February 15, declared that the German war debt amounted to $35,000,000,000, over two-fifths of the total wealth of Germany.

AUSTRIA VOTES FOR UNION WITH GERMANY. 9,000,000 German-Austrians will become a part of the new German republic as a result of the voting in Austria on February 17. In the voting for the National Assembly the Socialists elected 100 members, the Christian Socialists 80 and the Liberals 70.

Into All the World

"THE Church is awake. The dry bones are living!" Thus Richard Braunstein introduces next week an inspiring outline of the world-girdling plans of the churches to till the field of men's hearts everywhere and to preach Christ in every dark corner of the earth.

The League of Nations is essentially Christian according to Dr. Chas. E. Jefferson. He proves it next week in the article originally announced for this issue.

"The Church and the World" next week's sermon by Dr. A. E. Keigwin carries further the wide impetus of the spirit of the day.

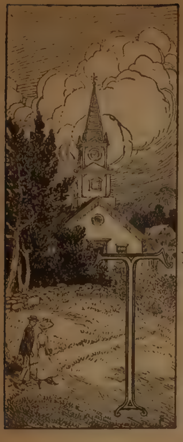
John Cameron, who has become an intimate friend as Mrs. Lutz has told his story, week by week, joins the church and spends two wonderful days with Ruth Macdonald before he leaves for France.

TOO MUCH ELNATHAN

A Short Story That Is a Slice Out of Real Life

By GEORGE GILBERT

Author of "King of the Shillibers," "A Prophet—Not Without Honor," etc.



THE church on the hillside overlooks an average North Pennsylvania countryside—meadows; rocky pasture lands with huge boulders besprinkled over them, beside which the cows like to linger in the shade; neat farmhouses, big red barns, orchards and a murmurous little river of rejoicing, talking in liquid overtones to its shallows, eddies and reaches. When I visited Laurel Run Valley on my vacations in former years, I always looked forward to attendance upon the worship of the church. Not that the sermons were extraordinary, the singing so good that it smacked of professionalism or the church itself one of rare beauty. No; the pastor, Rev. Frank Nornquist, was just a plodding, conscientious healer of souls; the choir was the usual serviceable countryside handful of self-taught singers; the church building of wood, painted white, with a stumpy timber steeple. The pews of hard maple, the slightly splintery floor of hemlock, the tag-eared hymnals, the dumpy little organ with a tendency toward polite asthma upon such occasions as the church became a bit damp during the late summer rains—but why particularize further? It is not best to draw too minute a picture when the details are so familiar.

Nor was Rev. Frank Nornquist a remarkable man. In fact, he was just such an average, workaday, soul-saving pastor as the Lord must love, else he would not make so many of them, fitting each into that precise place where he may best serve, and so bind fast to the Church the average folk like themselves, who really keep the world moving. Yes, keep it moving though the spasmodic efforts of the occasional geniuses among us fail and the said geniuses thereupon flit away upon the gossamer wings of spreading, sudden fancy to nibble at some new effort that is attractive just because it is new.

Frank Nornquist was about thirty-five years old when I first knew him. He was rather heavy upon his feet, slow of speech. His eyes, gray, kindly, reminded you of how patient a real man can be, yet held at times a glint of impatience at the little problems of pastoral life. Already a few gray hairs showed in his crisply curling brown thatch that his restless fingers kept well curried up.

Then what attracted me to the church on the hillside when my yearly visits brought me within its wide and scattered parish during my yearly rest spells? It was the people of the little valley—just folks. No other word will describe them—so sociable, neighborly, clean-lived, helpful are they that you have to love them.

"I know just what you mean," Nornquist agreed one evening when, my fishing for that day done, I chatted with him in the study of the little parsonage the flock provided for him. It was a comfortable house, well furnished, cozy.

"My people are a goodly flock," he went on, emphasizing his words with swinging blows of fist upon cupped hand, "but——"

"There is a but, even here?" I interrupted.

"Yes. Here, as everywhere else, it is the same old question: money. I spend my hours, minutes, days, months, years, ding-donging on the same theme. Oh," with a wide gesture of protest, "I wish there was enough money in sight for this church to run it for ten years, without a thought of where the next dollar was to come from. Enough to keep the church in good repair as it is, to buy coal, oil, all supplies; to pay my salary without any secret nips off it; to pay something toward the upkeep of choir and organist; to provide a nice new organ and wipe off the nagging little mortgage——"

"And then?"

"I'd have time, freed from all worries and cares over money matters, to throw myself into the community's life as never before, prepare ennobling sermons, prepare programs of social betterment, and so on. Mrs. Nornquist, freed from the need for doing many harrassing things that fall to her lot now, would be able to back me up in those larger works, and together we two would——"

He snapped erect, his eyes blazed, then paled to their usual mildness. I had had a glimpse of another man behind the quiet pastor of every-day life. I had caught his enthusiasm. I yearned then for money—that I might place it in his hands to carry on the program he had so beautifully outlined.

Two weeks later, at home again, I had, through the mail, a letter, brief, from Nornquist:

> "Read this clipping from the North American and then tell me that we have not been blessed up here! I am throwing myself into the work up to my chin, so I can not write more now. The news article tells it all."

The news article, in part, said:

> "By the will of Elnathan Barton, late of this city, but who was born in Laurel Run Valley, this state, the church in his native place has been left the perpetual income from a sum sufficient to earn interest amounting to $2,500 a year. This money is to be divided as follows: Pastor's salary $1,500, up-keep of church property $250, choir and organist $600; the remainder to be distributed each year among the Ladies' Aid Society, the Christian Endeavor and Sewing Guild. In addition, a lump sum is to be paid over to the church's pastor, sufficient to place the church property in the finest condition. A new pulpit, baptismal font, new seats, new flooring, a fine carpet, new dishes for the church parlors—everything, in fact, that a church can use—is to be furnished and paid for and a new organ given, together with a set of small chimes. In fact, the testator has endowed the Laurel Run Valley Church so completely that it never can want for money again. The salary of the pastor will be above that paid in many small cities, and all the other money matters of the church are in proportion. The fund provided under the will is to be known as the Barton Memorial Fund."

"There," I thought, after reading that, "Nornquist has his chance, and I'm glad of it. He is a sterling man, and will make the most of it."

The remainder of that summer passed, the autumn, the winter and the spring—and it was time to go to the hills again for strength.

Before the stage brought me to Laurel Run Valley I could see that Elnathan Barton's money had been used to advantage. The church's weather-vane, newly gilded, flung back the rays of the westering sun. The new steeple, white-leaded, was emphatic in its skyward thrust. New windows, as the stage neared, spoke to me the language of wise selection. The very handle of the front door shone from recent polishing. The lawn, neatly clipped, was set out with pretty beds of flowers. The protecting elms were trimmed precisely as to their lower branches. The roof of the edifice, newly shingled, gave off a pleasing incense of cedar. The parsonage, newly painted, likewise was pleasing to the eye. Nornquist, warned of my coming, met me, shook hands warmly, invited me to the services on the morrow.

Inside the church, as I found upon entering next morning, all had been done well, with taste. The matched wood flooring, the neuter-toned carpet, the rubbed-finish seats, the fine mahogany pulpit, the new organ, by one of the best makers, the new baptismal font of Italian marble—everything was of the best. With the means furnished him Nornquist had worked wonders, in a material sense.

I was early. As the congregation came in I noticed there were more young people, but that a few of the older folk were missing. The choir, well drilled, sang some music beyond that attempted by the usual country church. The organist, a new one, not Betty Warton, who had played the organ for so many years for the love of it, not a small salary, made her instrument to murmur, whisper, talk, shout, command, at will. Seldom have I heard a better musical program, even in churches in cities of considerable population.

The sermon revealed to me new depths in Nornquist's mind. It showed learning, research, even profundity, with a slight touch of humor here and there. His peroration was thrilling, his closing prayer appealing.

As I went out, after the benediction, I found myself exclaiming, mentally:

"Oh that more men who leave the country for the city would remember the churches wherein their souls were born anew and endow them as Elnathan has endowed this one!"

It was then that I remembered something. So wrapt had I been in observing the new things, the evident things, that one thing that was not on the program had failed to attract my attention through its lack:

No collection had been taken.

Nornquist, after dinner, told me of his joys. H was organizing work for the boys and girls. He wa reaching over into the next valley for some unchurche there. He had a long list of activities sketched ou for the coming winter season.

"We have no bank here," he said, "so every wee there comes from the executor of the Barton estate registered parcel containing the cash for our week' work. I distribute it. It is new money coming int the region, not simply the money of our own peopl turned over and over. That counts, too. We ar on a cash basis; no begging, no pleading, no time los running after pennies, no collections and tithings I manage, out of the added sum the executor had power to give us at his discretion, to pay the church' proportion of benevolence to the General Board So we are provided in all ways. Isn't it wonderful?"

I noticed, however, that he put it in the form of a question, not as an assertion of dogma, or personal belief.

The next year I found things as before, except that there were not so many middle-aged folks in the church. I learned, quite by accident, that some of the older pillars had withdrawn from membership. But the work was going ahead, full steam. It covered more ground—but was thinner.

The following year I found that the church on the hillside had lost half its congregation.

And the next year—

Nornquist was still preaching his fine sermons; the church edifice was in fine condition; the organist played her best and sweetest; the choir had taken a prize in a state-wide competition only a week before.

"Something is wrong," Nornquist said to me that afternoon as, according to custom, he had me in to dinner with him. I had seen his trouble growing on him and had refrained from questioning him—generally the surest way of learning what a troubled man or woman has on his or her mind.

"What is it?"

"It took me a long time to get at it," he sighed. "It is just this: Elnathan Barton's money has proven a millstone about the neck of this church."

"How can that be? It was clean money; you've done well with it."

"Having nothing to pay in, the people have come to look upon the church as something apart from their lives. They have no part in it. It goes on as well, seemingly, when they stay at home as when they come. It has come to me in various ways that this is so. Barton's money is paying for everything and they have come to look upon it as Barton's church. There is no volunteer feature about the work. My salary is paid. If I were to ask for more for serving this parish I should be laughed out of the valley, and rightly so, as a lover of mere lucre. The organist and choir are over-paid, according to the usual standards. If I spoke of enlarging the edifice or improving it, I should be talking foolishness, as everything has been provided for—beyond our real needs even. And the Barton executor has sent me word that I have only to ask and more will be forthcoming under a note of instructions found among Mr. Barton's papers and which has been admitted as part of the will under a reopening of the probate. I haven't even dared tell my people of that new handicap——"

I started at that last word. It would have been comic if it had not been so tragic.

"But what are you going to do?" I asked him.

"I don't know," he exploded; "I am tied here. Mrs. Nornquist's mother's home is near here. Her mother is a chronic invalid. My wife must remain near her. I can not leave—now. Then, again, suppose some other man came to take my place and administer this trust? Matters might go worse under him than under me."

I could give him no solace, but left him, knowing that he was doing the best he could under his "handicap."

The next year I found matters worse still in Laurel Run Valley. And the year after, when I had been there three days, I came upon Nornquist, leaning against the big elm in front of the church, sobbing.

Now, it is not a nice thing to hear a strong man cry; moaning as if every sob came from the roots of his being, in great gasps, terrible, soul-shaking. But he had a reason:

In Nornquist's hand was a bit of stained glass. He held it up to the moon glow for me to see, as the sob-storm conquered him again. On the glass was the head of Christ. I recognized it then. It was a part of one of the new windows provided for from the Barton Memorial Fund.

"Who broke the window?" I asked.

"I do not care so much for the window, but I do are for what it means," and he mastered himself with winning effort. "There has been a whisky-hole et up down at the lower end of the valley. Oh, yes, t is the direct result of our spiritual decay here. It never would have existed an hour in the old days—he bagging, collection days," with a note of self-ccusation in his heavy bass voice that had taken n a menacing rumble.

"And a party of my boys, boys from this flock, ave been down to Whisky Lou's tonight, caroused nd returned home. On their way they stopped here nd, led by Nelse Titus, formerly our Christian Endeavor leader, stoned the church! I'm sure it was Nelse's first visit to a saloon. But where will it end?"

He paused again to master a recurring storm of grief, then squared his shoulders back again.

"I went out to protest," he concluded, "and they heard me call to them, and Titus stood up in his buggy and yelled:

"'What do we care for your old church? It isn't yours any more. And what do you care whether we care? Your pay goes on just the same. The church doesn't need us; it'll run without us. What do we care?'"

"And now, what?" I asked; "have you tried revivals?"

"There can be no revivals in an endowed church like this," he flared. "I know; I have tried and tried myself as by fire beforehand in supplication for showers of blessing. But they did not come——"

"What are you going to do?"

"What? What can I do? I am going to go into my chamber and pray myself out of this trouble—and my people with me."

Observe, please, that he still said "my people." I observed it and it gave me great comfort.

From my room in the Tervale home I could see the pastor's house and the windows of his upper room. A light burned there late, and as I was up twice in the night with an aching tooth I saw that it was there until early morning. I knew that Nornquist was carrying his burdens before the Throne.

"Have you seen any light yet?" I asked of him as we walked together toward the post office next morning. It was about time for the daily stage to arrive. It was the morning the moneys for the church came, too, I remembered.

"No," he said, rather shortly.

I stood with my mail while Nornquist got his. Together we walked back toward his house.

"Come in while I open the letter from the Barton executor," he invited. "I'd like to have you see how an endowed church gets its money."

In his study I sat, while he, at the other side of his little desk, snapped open the smug legal envelope. But instead of money he pulled out a long letter and began to read it, at first with puzzled brow, then with growing pleasure.

"Hurrah!" he yelled, slamming the letter down before me. "Read that while I jam this typewriter of mine out into the open and begin to work."

I rustled the paper toward me as his typewriter began its mounting crescendo of syncopated rhythms. I read:

"Rev. Frank Nornquist, Laurel Run Valley.

"Dear Sir: James Parsons, the executor under the Barton will, had fled to South America with the remnants of the many trust funds under his charge. He has been speculating for years and, fearing exposure, has gone beyond reach of extradition. Your weekly remittances, therefore, must cease from this date," etc., etc., to the extent of many hundreds of words of details. It was from a noted Philadelphia bank.

I finished the fateful missive to find Nornquist, his face glowing, waving at me a newly typed sheet that he had just snapped from his machine. He read from it:

"THE PEOPLE OF LAUREL RUN VALLEY:

> "The executor under the Barton will has absconded. Our church no longer is endowed, but depends, as in former years, upon the labor and love and sacrifice of its members.
>
> "There will be a meeting of the whole congregation next Wednesday evening, after the prayer meeting, to devise ways and means for carrying on our work in the old-time fashion. The church needs you all. We need a volunteer organist, choir, volunteer workers of all classes.
>
> "A Collection Will be Taken Up.
> "Everybody Come!
> "We Need You All."

"I'm going to get the session together and have them ratify the call for this meeting," Nornquist yelled, racing out and leaving me in gleeful possession, "and I'm too busy to visit now. But come to the meeting. We need you—everybody. Hurrah!"

And he was gone, running like a boy out for a holiday.

That afternoon a volunteer corps of boys—the re-enlisted Scouts—took the message by wagon, bicycle, on foot, to every part of the valley.

And the meeting on Wednesday?

Betty Warton, in her old place, played the opening hymn. Of course the new organ remained, and the other new things the Barton money had bought, but they seemed to be more "homey" that first night under the new-old régime. And the choir, down to the common level again, put a world of feeling into the old hymns that every one seemed to know were just suited to the occasion. Nornquist's prayer was one of great depth and moving in its power and his little evening talk brought tears to many an eye long dry. The other prayers of that evening were noteworthy and the after-meeting was glorious. Pledges were made to carry on the work. The collection box was patted, smiled at, openly welcomed by many as they saw it being passed again, and tears fell into it along with the small coins that really are the life-blood of more religious work than the critics ever can understand, else they would not be critics. As his part, Nornquist put his salary at $1,200. The pledge-total was ample for everything needful and to spare.

Yet I saw a cloud on Nornquist's brow, and was at a loss to understand it until I edged near enough to have a word with him as the meeting was breaking up.

"Isn't your cup of blessing full yet?" I asked, chidingly.

"Not quite," he rumbled, bending over to put his mouth to my ear; "Nelse Titus and his young friends from the end of the valley didn't come, and I wanted him to come so I could tell him nothing was to be done about that broken window——"

"Everybody stay a minute" a bull-like voice from the door bellowed. I knew it for that of rough-riding, rough-fisted, loyal Nelse Titus. In he stormed, with ten others at his back—the men who had been with him when the window was broken, Nornquist whispered as he faced them.

"We want our pledges down on that list," Titus called the length of the room, "and, Mr. Nornquist, we would have been here sooner, only we had business on the way up——"

"Business?" Nornquist called, puzzled.

"Yes, important business for Laurel Run Valley and the Lord! When I got your call for the meeting I'd just heard that Whisky Lou, who keeps the hell-hole down below, had applied for a license for another year and that his old license would run out in a few days. I rallied the boys here and proposed that we call on Lou on our way up——"

"Call on him——"

"Yes, to serve notice on him that if he didn't quit and get out we'd throw him and his whisky kegs clear over the range into Kingdom Come. And to make sure that he'd go we escorted him half-way to the railroad station in Jessmine, with the order to keep on going; and we said that we'd break his whisky kegs open, pour out the stuff onto the ground, sell his place at a fair price, and send him the money. And we told him never to come back—No more whisky in this valley——"

I glanced toward the organ, where there was a little stir. It was Betty Warton, who had left it for the door before the boys had arrived, making her way back toward the instrument.

Betty sat down before any one had time to move and crashed down onto the keys:

"Praise God, From Whom All Blessings Flow!"

And that Doxology?

It almost raised the roof of the church on the hillside.

The New Internationalism

By
H. K. CARROLL, LL.D.

CHRISTIAN unity is taking on so many phases that it is difficult to keep in touch with them. It seems as though it were developing spontaneously out of an abundant spiritual life, which seeks to manifest itself in united effective service. Recently, the Foreign Missions Conference, representing the Protestant boards of America, gave an entire session, at New Haven, to the new internationalism in the endeavor to discover the opportunity of the united Church of Christ in its world work to promote peace, justice and righteousness among the nations. Four men—a pastor, Dr. W. P. Merrill; head of a missionary board and educator, Rev. Principal Alfred Gandier; a college professor, Mr. Hull; and a university president, Rev. Dr. W. H. P. Faunce, discussed the subject, all as high idealists, from different standpoints, and all agreed that the ideal is the only satisfactory and practicable method of securing the highest interests of the nations, great and small, and of humanity.

Pastor Merrill showed that there was no peril to national patriotism in broadening it so as to embrace other nations. The man who loves his family best loves his nation best. The Americans who went to France to fight against the Germans fought no less for their own homes and nation than for the rest of the Allies.

Professor Hull showed how the beatitudes of the Sermon on the Mount apply to nations as to individuals, and Principal Gandier, of Canada, gave a philosophic view of the development of the nation from the tribe, insisting that Germany had not got beyond the tribal condition in morals and religion, the tribe making its own existence and general welfare the end, regardless of those of the individual and of other tribes. German nationalism is un-Christian because it makes the state the end, and sacrifices the interests of humanity to the organized national life. True Christian internationalism makes a man the end, and not any institution, either Church or State. It thinks of the nation as a means, and not as the end.

President Faunce, of Brown University, came last on the program, but his clear, ringing sentences, forceful illustrations, and, above all, direct drive at the heart of the subject, won him a delighted hearing. Dr. Faunce condemned the attitude of the German state as essentially pagan, the worship of Odin and Thor. Christian nations, he said, reject and abhor that theory, but have they been quite saintly in their international relations? We have Christian ethics for individuals, we have curbed corporations, Christianized industry, commerce and civilized life; but we do not carry the same principles into the international realm. For example, (1) any war, undertaken for any reason or purpose, is legal in the international view. (2) Neutrality by any nation, in the presence of a struggle between other nations, is right and proper, according to international custom, and international law does not condemn one nation for going to war with another, if the usual formalities are observed. A nation may remain neutral, no matter how atrocious a war may be. If it feels that no self-interest is involved in a war "3,000 miles away," it may close its eyes, maintain neutrality carefully, and let the carnage go on. Our old system of international law does not consider that neutrality may be a crime against the world order, but regards all wars as legal and all neutrality as moral.

He insisted that this system must be changed. We put Christian principles behind the home, the school, society and the Church; we try to infuse them into the relations between labor and capital; we must now write them in the world order, or confess defeat for the Christian religion. The principles which should be incorporated in the new internationalism, he declared, are these:

We are members one of another. Nations are also members one of another, united by the lasting bond of participation in a common life. Shall the hand say to the foot, "I have no need of thee?" If Austria or Spain says, "I am not responsible to any world society," is it, therefore, not responsible? If we are members one of another, we shall cherish respect for unlikeness. The differences between the Occident and the Orient are not perilous, but precious assets of civilization. The French tongue seems preposterous to our troops, but by its clarity and precision it is better fitted for the peace table than our own. It is not toleration we want—toleration implies superiority and condescension—but mutual respect. Mutual respect means brotherhood of intellectual understanding, not of sentiment, for sentiment may vanish tomorrow. Love in the last analysis is not emotion, but perception—perception of values beneath the surface of personality, or the strange customs or speech of another people. We can not like all, but we can and must love all.

Under Christian principles, inequality of men, of nations, of races, means not a chance for exploitation, but an opportunity for service. Inequalities are recognized by the New Testament, and the American Declaration of Independence, that all men are created free and equal, means equal in civil rights and opportunity. The sixty-eight nations of the world are very unequal. Siberia cannot have the leadership of Britain. Britain's greatness is the greatness of obligation. If she should use her power to rob and crush, she would be the enemy of the human race. If she uses it to serve small and weak states she serves humanity.

Moral force is superior to physical force. International robbery unsettles the world order, and curses him that loses and him that takes. It is not the might of the bayonet that wins ultimately. The nation having the best-trained, best-equipped and largest force of fighters lost because the unrestrained use of her physical force roused against her the moral force of the world.

The teachings of Christ apply everywhere, or nowhere, continued Dr. Faunce. Christian ethics are binding on a nation of 100,000,000 as upon a lone peasant. Our American troops did not forsake Christianity, but obeyed the law of love, when they crossed the ocean to help cut the cancerous growth out of the German soul.

Having won the war by moral force, the nations must proceed to rebuild the world on moral principles. Having shown that the nation that appeals to Cæsar goes down in defeat, we must show that the society that appeals to the Nazarene rises in peace, power and happiness. The best society of national defense is the united and purified Church of Christ. The only fortress that can never be taken is the City of God.

Triumphant Trust

*A SERMON BY EDGAR DEWITT JONES, D.D.

TEXT—Habakkuk 3 : 17–19.

THIS noble Scripture is a rich discovery in an unexpected place. For that matter, life is full of surprises. How often we come unexpectedly upon new discoveries! We take up a book more or less familiar; we think we know it by heart; and lo! among its score of chapters and thousands of words we find in some obscure paragraph a passage of extraordinary worth. We set out to journey over a familiar road; we think we know its every landmark, and then, to our surprise, we come suddenly upon a landscape of great beauty. We enjoy the association of a dear friend, of such long standing that we believe we know him thoroughly, only to discover some day as by a flash of lightning a new trait, a surprising courage, or some talent we never dreamed of his possessing. Thus it is with this Book of books; we think we know it fairly well, only to discover, sometimes in the most casual way, new riches, new beauties, new wisdom.

Comparatively few readers of the Bible are familiar with the book of Habakkuk. An exceeding great number would find it difficult to turn to it promptly. We know nothing of Habakkuk save what may be inferred from this book that bears his name. He probably flourished in the reign of Jehoiakim, that evil king who deliberately cut to pieces certain portions of the Scriptures that were disagreeable to him. Habakkuk is known as one of the minor prophets, yet here is an utterance worthy of a Jeremiah, an Isaiah or an Ezekiel. Thank God, minor prophets may sometimes be majors in the army of the Lord!

While it is true that Habakkuk is unknown to most readers of the Scriptures, his brief but valuable book has rewarded many diligent students of the Word. Daniel Webster, in a conversation with some friends, was asked his preference as to portions of the Bible. In reply he said, "The masterpiece of the New Testament, of course, is the Sermon on the Mount. As to the Old Testament writings, my favorite book is that of Habakkuk; and my favorite verses in chapter three—seventeen and eighteen: 'For though the fig tree shall not flourish, neither shall fruit be in the vine; the labor of the olive shall fail, and the field shall yield no food; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stall; yet I will rejoice in Jehovah, I will joy in the God of my salvation.' This," continued Webster, "I regard as one of the sublime passages of literature; and often have I wondered that some artist equal to the task has not selected the prophet and the scene of his desolation as the subject of a painting."

The fact that this unusually fine passage is in an obscure book of the Bible suggests that other undiscovered jewels are scattered throughout the Scriptures. Every one who searches the Scriptures for worthy goals may expect to be amply rewarded. One would hesitate to say that we are too familiar with the fourteenth of John or the thirteenth of First Corinthians; but it is lamentably true that we are unfamiliar with many portions of the Scriptures wrongly deemed unimportant and commonplace.

THESE winged words of Habakkuk, in which he vows that, whether or not his fields prosper or his flocks increase, he will rejoice in Jehovah, approach a definition of the nature of real religion. Religion is a difficult term to define, and many misleading definitions have been written. In Acts, the seventeenth chapter, Paul in his speech in Athens tells his hearers that they are very religious, but the word literally means "superstitious" or "demon-fearing." In James, the first chapter and twenty-seventh verse, "pure religion and undefiled before our God and Father" is described as "visiting the fatherless and widows in their affliction and keeping oneself unspotted from the world." This is not a definition of religion, but a description of a practical expression of the same, and a good one, too. In attempting to define religion, we usually fall into the error of selecting an aspect of religion and defining the whole by a part.

There is, for example, a ceremonial religion—a view of God that expresses itself in punctilious observance of form. The Pharisees stressed this kind of religion—they made the form an end instead of a means. Forms have their places in religion and ceremonies their uses. We may properly think of forms and ceremonies as the "A B C" of religion. One should use them as he uses the alphabet; that is, having learned the alphabet, he passes on to the creation of sentences, paragraphs and the formation of a vocabulary. But there are those who use form and ceremony as goals, instead of vehicles to the goal.

There is also a propositional or creedal religion, an intellectual assent to a truth or doctrine. Now, correct thinking is good; yea, more, it is necessary; but it is not of itself sufficient. The Scriptures tell us that "even the demons believe and tremble." The assent of the mind to a doctrine, even a Christian doctrine, may or may not be really religious. Intellectual acceptance of Christian doctrine is the beginning of a saving faith in God through Jesus Christ, but belief itself is not trust save as the bud is the flower.

FOR though the fig tree shall not flourish,
Neither shall fruit be in the vines;
The labor of the olive shall fail,
And the fields shall yield no food;
The flock shall be cut off from the fold,
And there shall be no herd in the stalls;
Yet I will rejoice in Jehovah,
I will joy in the God of my salvation.
Jehovah, the Lord, is my strength;
And he maketh my feet like hinds' feet,
And will make me to walk upon my high places.

Still again, there is a devotional religion. A worshipful service makes a direct appeal to the nature of some persons whose lives are not really righteous, but who are charmed by the esthetic effect of prayer or preaching and the mystery and spiritual romance that haloes the house of God. The devotional spirit enters largely into real religion, and yet it is not all of religion.

HABAKKUK was not a stranger to ceremonial religion. As a devout Jew the various ceremonies of purification, the numerous sacrifices, the tithing of even the smallest herbs, the likelihood is he was an observer of all the forms and ceremonies of his faith. Undoubtedly he had given intellectual assent to the truths that were in the Decalogue. We may well believe that he found pleasure in the temple service. The stately order of worship, the antiphonal choirs, the praises to Almighty God—we may well believe that these found and fed the soul of the prophet. But the essence of his religion is declared in this great hymn of faith to be not in any of these things—though perhaps all of them had a part in producing it—but in a triumphant trust, a love that would not let him go!

Habakkuk avers, in this personal confession of faith, that his trust in God does not depend upon the flourishing of the fig tree, nor the abundance of grapes in his vineyard, nor the jar of olives that may be gathered from the trees, nor his flocks, nor his herd He may lose all his flock, his herd, his crops; but tha will make no difference in his devotion to God. How ever untoward his experience, his faith shall triumph He exclaims, "I will joy in the God of my salvation. He goes still further, although it would seem that h had reached the climax of trust already. He mak use, in the closing verse, of what is perhaps the mo beautiful of poetic expressions in all the Scripture Referring to his trust, despite afflictions and cro failures and loss of possessions, he exclaims, "Go maketh my feet like hinds' feet, and will make m to walk on my high places."

HABAKKUK must have been familiar with th mountain stag or deer—one of the most nimbl of animals and fleetest of creatures. These gazelle or hinds have their homes in the farther heights of th mountains, but they come down to the mountainsid to feed on the vegetation. When disturbed in thei grazing, they disappear as if by magic—their fee fairly twinkle in flashes of speed; and when next on sees them they are away up the mountain in the hig places, safe from harm. Habakkuk means to say that when the world seems against him and everythin has gone wrong, his spirit bounds as the hind and i carries him up into the high places where he worship Jehovah and is satisfied. There is an echo of the sam thought in Isaiah, where he says, "They that wai upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shal mount up as with the wings of eagles." It is exaltin faith, it is triumphant trust, it is real religion, wher God is loved for his own sake.

One sees, in this seraphic passage of Scripture, spiritual declaration of independence. The soul is n longer in bondage either to the letter, the ceremony or the form of religion. The world, the flesh and th devil have lost their power to enthrall. The last vestige of selfishness and self-seeking is destroyed. The child of God loves his heavenly Father and serves him, not for anything that can be seen of men. Material prosperity no longer binds like a fetter; intellectual pride has no power over the free soul which bathes itself in the atmosphere of communion with the Invisible. Here is a religion with all of self washed out; the heart is aflame with love of God and consecrated to his service; and such religion, instead of being divorced from practical, everyday ministrations, is linked with them in mighty service for God and man. Habakkuk, who thus sings this hymn of triumphant faith, is the same brave soul who wrote, "Woe to him that getteth an evil gain for his house, that he may set his nest on high, that he may be delivered from the hand of evil!" "Woe to him that buildeth a town with blood, and establisheth a city by iniquity!" "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink!"

HERE is real religion—no artifice, no hypocrisy, no mistaken emphasis or reversing of the divine order. Here is the top round of the ladder of faith. This is the kind of religion that Paul had in mind when he wrote: "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, self-control. Against such there is no law."

We praise God for Habakkuk, that brave soul of the long ago. We know so little about him; we know less of him than the world knows of Shakespeare, and that is precious little. We do not know how this prophet looked; the color of his eyes, the profile of his face, the tone of his voice. Yet we can almost feel the throbbing of his heart as we read his great hymn of faith. Across the centuries he speaks to us and bids us to be brave; he calls upon us to love God for his own sake and to serve him without fear, regardless of the storms that beset us and the doubts and difficulties that pursue us.

---

*Minister, First Church, Disciples of Christ, Bloomington, Illinois.

Notes from Many Fields and Workers

ANOTHER chapter in cooperation between humanizing organizations opened on January 1, when Miss Margaret B. White of Minneapolis, Minn., as special representative for the National Y. W. C. A., joined the Armenian and Syrian Relief Unit. Miss White is the daughter of the Rev. J. E. White, D.D., of Minneapolis, who has been engaged in missionary work in Turkey for some years. She was a teacher in Turkey in 1913–14, and much of her youth was passed in that country. To discover the needs of women and girls in Armenia and Syria will be the special purpose of Miss White's going with this unit. She will report to the Y. W. C. A. from time to time, and it is probable that the War Work Council of that organization will follow up her investigations with the establishment of lines of work designed to meet the needs of women in those countries.

REV. NORMAN H. CAMP, evangelist and Bible teacher of Chicago, has recently accepted the invitation of the Chicago Hebrew Mission to become its superintendent. This mission has been faithfully laboring among the Jewish people for the past thirty-one years in its endeavor to give them the Gospel. Mrs. T. C. Rounds will remain in the work as honorary superintendent and treasurer.

A. R. STARK, missionary in Chile, Argentina, Peru, Bolivia, Ecuador and Colombia, writes to the Christian Herald that the past year has been one of trials and triumphs in Chile. The total circulation of Bibles for the year, through the Valparaiso agency, will reach 60,000 copies. Public interest is growing in the circulation of the Bible in South America.

WHILE the late ex-President Roosevelt did not make an unseemly parade of his religion, he was known to his intimate friends as a sincere, earnest Christian. The turn of his mind was shown by his choice of favorite hymns. One of these, "How Firm a Foundation, Ye Saints of the Lord," was read on the occasion of his funeral at Oyster Bay.

Reverends
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
and
C. C. Albertson, D.D.

Daily Meditation

Reverend
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

The Unknown Christ

SUNDAY, March 9. John 1 : 10. "He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not." The past tense sometimes deludes us. The things we look at seem o be so far away. We are spectators of events and not ctors. We are critics of the faults of others, and not heir fellow culprits. When we read of the doings of ar-off yesterdays we so easily assume the voice of he judge on the bench instead of taking our place at he side of the prisoner in the dock. We express ourlves in stern judgment and fiery indignation. We uild ornate sepulchres in honor of the prophets whom ur fathers murdered. Therefore it is a good thing to hange the tense of the record, to convert it into the resent, and to read it as a transcript of what is happening in our own time. Let us do so with this great ord from the Gospel of John: "He is in the world, nd the world is being made by him, and the world nows him not." The change in the tense makes the appening immediate. The event is going on. We re actors in the scene. The words beat with the ulse of the present day.

"The world knows him not." The unrecognized Christ! He is in our streets. He is busy in our common life. He is making a new world. And we do not now him! Perhaps he is busy destroying things as preparative to more constructive work, and we do ot detect his presence as these old strongholds of niquity crumble away. Or perhaps he is working way from the accepted spheres of power and influnce and we have not looked for him in such unlikely places. We have not expected any good thing to ome out of Nazareth. We do not anticipate that he great Renewer will be attended by a retinue of ishermen.

One of the most precious endowments in the Christian life is an apprehending spirit, a healthy delicacy of soul, which can detect the hidden presence of the Lord.
J. H. J.

A Christian and His Books

MONDAY, March 10. 1 Tim. 4 : 13. "Give attendance to reading." I have just come from the home of one of the best men I have ever known. I was with him when he died. He was a friend of Henry Drummond, Dwight L. Moody and Theodore Cuyler. He has been the good friend of multitudes of ministers and missionaries. There is no doubt that the great inspiration of his life was his fellowship with Jesus Christ. His library was particularly rich in two directions. Shelf after shelf was full of biography. The lives he loved to read were the lives of the truly great, honored servants of God, saints in the household of faith. There were biographies of Tennyson and Gladstone, Phillips Brooks and General O. O. Howard. One section of his library was entirely given to biographies of Abraham Lincoln, of whom in youth he was a contemporary.

The other section of this good man's library, whose amazing fulness helps to explain the qualities of his religious life, is made up of books of devotion. George Matheson's books are there, "Moments on the Mount" and "Voices of the Spirit." Dr. Jowett's sermons are there, and those of many another preacher of the Word. Collections of prayer are there, and many, many volumes of meditations on the spiritual life. This man gave attendance to reading. He literally wore out Bible after Bible. He was a man of many books in order that he might be supremely a man of one Book. "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace."
C. C. A.

Doing Good Anonymously

TUESDAY, March 11. Luke 10 : 35. "And on the morrow when he departed, he took out two pence, and gave them to the host, and said unto him, Take care of him; and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again, I will repay thee." If distress of the neighbor is the occasion on which love is called into action, that love, if its service is to be adequate, must continue while the distress continues. It must be persistent to the finish. Many a good deed is spoiled because the good beginning is not followed up by a continued effort. The Samaritan makes his charity complete by engaging a deputy who is to minister to his unfortunate ward while he must necessarily be absent. He has foreseen that after his departure a difficulty might arise from the selfishness of the inn-keeper on the score of the payment for the patient's medicine and nursing. With the entire cost of this the Samaritan charges himself, and declares that he will call again at the same place to see how his ward has fared. We cannot always minister personally to distress that has been brought to our notice, or if we began the service we cannot always complete it. It is therefore a praiseworthy arrangement that agencies have been created through which we can render our service systematically, persistently, and thoroughly by proxy. The charitable institutions which have been established the world over for this end are not meant to relieve us of our personal duties, but to aid us in discharging them wisely and well. The best of them are, in fact, products of the inventive genius of Christianity, and their willing and liberal support is also a mark of a Christian spirit.

Now, who was this Samaritan? What was his name? His name was Mr. Anonymous. He has always borne that name, and you hurt his feelings if you push your inquiry further. He does not want to be known; he quietly comes along, does his work, and quietly disappears.
W. H. T. D.

Beginning Right

WEDNESDAY, March 12. Matt. 6 : 33. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God." A good beginning means a good ending, and a beginning should always consider the ending. Christ should be yours first, last and all the while. All else of life is the scaffolding of character. Do not give God an inferior place in your life. Deathbed repentance is only trying to save the wreck on the rocks; it will not restore the lost opportunities of the voyage, the youth and manhood of the life. Today the Saviour calls; hear him now; those who seek him early shall find him. Human character is cumulative; begin early to grow in grace if you would reach toward the full stature of the Christ. Early days lost can never be recovered. Perform what you ought at the time you ought and avoid failure.

The men who went to work in the Lord's vineyard at the eleventh hour accepted the first offer they had, like the thief on the cross. How unlike those who have rejected all pleadings throughout a long life! Remember God's words, "Because I have called and ye have refused, when your fear cometh I will not answer."

Our Lord came to save the world at the right period of human history, in the fulness of time. Christ was promised at the beginning of creation; he has always been ready to receive prodigal souls, but how often we cry, "Go thy way for this time; when I have a more convenient season, I will call for thee." He came that we might have life. How can it be that men will choose death instead of life?
E. W. C.

Conquering Pain

THURSDAY, March 13. II Cor. 12 : 10. "I take pleasure in infirmities." The natural thing is to rebel against infirmities. A dog will bite his tormentor. A mettlesome horse will bite or run away and throw his rider or dash the vehicle to pieces if things are not to his liking. That is natural. But we are something more than animals. So human nature has the capacity to submit. The human will may set itself at a noble figure and resolve to suffer and be silent, to suffer and grow strong. An admixture of the stoic element in character is not incongruous in the Christian's plan of life. Most of us make too much of pleasure and too much of pain. There are those—mostly the young—who measure the value of an experience by the pleasure they derive from it. There are those who are awfully afraid of pain. They shrink from even temporary discomfort. Pain is a great bully. He tyrannizes over those who are afraid of him, but face him, and he shrinks into his proper dimensions. Paul knew, as his Master knew, that there are ways of meeting life's grimmest aspects. The animal way is to rebel. The human way is to submit. The divine way is to enjoy the unwelcome experience, to employ it, welcome it for its potential value, and revel in it for reasons which the soul justifies itself in discovering. That which seems evil may contain unsuspected good.

A year ago a woman underwent a very painful surgical operation. The pain lasted for days. Then she was told the operation and all the consequent suffering must be undergone again. The prospect appalled her. She was not so much afraid of pain or of death as she was of giving way to fear. She felt a horror rather than a fear. She had not before been at all sure of the existence of God, but she began to pray. This was the burden of her prayer: "I can not go through with it decently; I simply can not." Suddenly she became conscious of the presence of God. She could almost see him. It was as if a great Invisible Friend had put his hand on her and said, "I will be with you all the time; I will see you through." Even then she could not say her mind was free from fear, but she was comforted, and she slept. Next day the fear was gone, and the horror. When they put the operation robe on her and wheeled her to the room where she was to be anesthetized, she felt as if she were being carried like a child in strong arms. She was not unhappy. The doctor asked her if she "enjoyed that sort of thing." She found it as easy to jest there as if it had been in her mother's drawing-room. In the light of such an experience can we not read new meanings in the words, "Count it all joy when ye fall into divers trials; think it not strange, but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings." Partakers? Yes, partners. Partners of Christ? Yea, of Christ. This is the secret of the possible pleasure in apparent ills.
C. C. A.

The Lesson of the Parable

FRIDAY, March 14. Luke 10 : 36, 37. "Which now of these three, thinkest thou, was neighbor unto him that fell among the thieves? . . . Go, and do thou likewise." After a good sermon comes the application, and that should always be direct, personal, clinching. The preacher cannot always make it, for in most cases he does not know to whom in his audience he has preached most effectually; it is likely he never does. Therefore the listener must do himself the favor to make the application, and by doing so make the sermon which he has heard really fruitful to himself. In the present instance the Lord made the application; his striking story had carried conviction to the heart of his erstwhile conceited questioner. He saw the point of the Lord's argument: it had been made so plain that there was no possibility of mistaking it. Let us hope that he also saw where he had failed hitherto, and that this searching of heart and conscience discovered to him, as no doubt it has discovered to us, how far he was yet from having achieved that righteousness which the holy law of our God demands.

If this story has had the effect on us of humbling us, making us see our shortcomings, warning us against spiritual pride, revealing to us our innate selfishness, subduing our self-confidence, in short, putting us in a contrite and penitent mood, it has had the effect it ought to have. In our subdued state of mind we shall better appreciate the unparalleled service that was rendered us by the great Good Samaritan, who came from heaven, found us bleeding from many wounds dealt us by the enemies of our soul, dressed our wounds with the oil and wine of his comforting Gospel, brought us to the safe shelter of his Church, and has ever since been giving us his tenderest attention, in order that we might be wholly restored to the life that is of God. And when we have found him and have relished his service, there will awake in our heart the feeling of gratitude, which is one of the expressions of love, and a daughter of true faith. And in love and gratitude we will begin to serve after the pattern of that love which served us perfectly.
W. H. T. D.

The Light of Love

SATURDAY, March 15. Rev. 21 : 6. "And he said unto me, It is done. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end." God rested on the seventh day of creation. Not that he was weary, but as a lawyer rests his case after the argument is presented. God ceased at that time building worlds. On Calvary's cross Jesus cried, "It is finished." Here the redemption of a race was accomplished. At the second coming of our Lord the records will be closed, destiny sealed, justice take the place of mercy, and earth's millions will come to judgment. This is the divinely appointed end toward which the whole creation moves.

In the beginning, God; in the ending, Christ. "Even so, come, Lord Jesus." Earth's incompleteness will reach perfection when we see him as he is, face to face. The whole Christian world looketh for this hour, and the whole creation waiteth for this redemption.

When moral probation is thus completed, the tabernacle of God will be with men. The flood finished the career of men in Noah's time. The world of mankind reveled in sinful pleasure till Noah entered the ark. Will it not be so when the last trumpet sounds? Many will awake from their dream of security in everlasting shame and contempt. God's government must be the same in all worlds. He is the unchangeable One. When his Son comes to reign, how small will appear the trivial things of this life, which have drawn us away from the true, the beautiful and the good!
E. W. C.

A Garden Letter

Photo from Press Illus.

Who wouldn't leave a breakfast to work in such a paradise?

THE spirit moves me to write you a letter, dear Gentle Reader, and the theme of that epistle shall be the controlling outside interests in the lives of business and professional women—those mighty interesting influences in life apart from one's regular work.

My profession itself, Gentle Reader, is one of the oldest and most honorable in all the great world, although, strange to say, it is only recently that men and women have learned to think of it as a profession. But such it is. Like agriculture, the science (and art, as well) of housekeeping, of home-making, has at last come into its own. For more than fifty years, my work, that of caring for the family and making the house the fittest kind of home, has been my profession, strenuous, exciting, worth while.

Along with this, there has been an absorbing interest, an interest of the kind that grows and grows. And that interest, too, is of an ancient and honorable variety. Indeed, it is more ancient than my regular work, older than any other profession or business. For the first thing our lamented parents, Adam and Eve, did, when the insistent angel sent them out into the world, was to dig and to "tend things." Kept out of a garden which had grown, heaven-made, for them, the best thing they could try to do was to make another.

I haven't any apples in my garden and snakes are unheard of. Not so the squash-bug, commonly called by a fouler name. Not so the busy sparrow and the cheerful robin. Yet these two latter, although they prey upon my small preserves, I do not account as pests. Far from that. They earn whatever they are able to get, after I have protected my lettuce beds, as far as I can, with discarded window-screens. As to the one real pest, squash-bugs, I have solved that problem very nicely. Do you wonder how? Simply by not having squashes in my garden. Why should an intelligent and efficient gardener such as I try to be, with only a small domain to rule over, choose to raise squashes when the space they would make worm- and bug-infested can be used for tender lettuce, for nice, clean peas and heavenward-climbing beans, for which no poles are long enough, and when our friend, Farmer Goodman, can bring to our doors, in October, any number of squashes, finished products, wormless and bugless?

Ah, yes; it is absorbing, this side interest of mine. The neighbors say I am foolish about it and some of my friends assure me that a real woman's place is inside the house, taking care of the four walls which shut her in from out-of-doors. Maybe, for them. My husband, comrade of many years, was a better minister, I am sure, for being the best gardener in town. Now that he has gone where no one grows weary, I love to work until I am tired, using his rake and hoe and remembering how he used to flop the beans down into the hills and press them into place with a practiced thumb, how he used to align his beets and carrots and plant his Mexican corn deep, so that it would have strong roots to keep it alive during the inevitable summer drought.

Oh, yes; I know that it is often to the confusion of old-time housewifely ideals that I rush out, even at my age, which I won't call old, and which shall not be of the chimney-corner variety, into the garden, before breakfast, to see how many Lima beans have come up over night. For when I come back, the fire is apt to be out, a capital sin, of course. But the daughter who is with me through the year is just as fond and foolish, when it comes to a garden, as I, and quite as apt to neglect inside affairs for outside. As no one else is with us, no one is hurt. Then, when vacation time comes, and with it the husky younger daughter, home for a change, she tactfully usurps my place in the household; and the stay-at-home daughter and I don't have to make a fire, even, much less get the breakfast.

On a before-vacation morning, after I have come back from the bean-inspection to find the fire gone out, and have remade it, I simply have to go again to squint at the "up and coming" cucumbers, for it is my "bounden duty" to get them along so that the home-coming daughter may have them for salads and pickles. That makes me think of the lettuce and the radishes and the young onions with their green needle-spires. By the time I have peeked at them and pulled out by their detestable roots some of the most audacious and hostile weeds, I go in to find the breakfast burning, the water out of the oatmeal-boiler and the tea-kettle fairly bursting its throat, preliminary to going dry.

Never mind; I know what is in the garden. As soon as breakfast is over, I slip out once more, just long enough to see whether the new wistaria at the sunshiny end of the porch is doing well, and its neighbor, the white clematis. These and some other new plants have to be protected from marauding cats and dogs.

A little later, unless it is an especially strenuous day, such as those which come during the semi-annual orgy of house-cleaning, I temporize with my conscience and defy convention and the neighbors by working for several hours in the soft, warm soil, with the tender plants. Whether it is beans and strawberries in the garden, lilies and roses on the lawn, gladioli and clematis and wistaria by the porch, Madeira vines and the rambler by the front steps, or the lovely new privet hedge which encloses our modest bit of land, it is all a delight.

This work isn't drudgery. Nor is it really dirty work. For dirt is clean, such dirt as I have in my garden, nice, sandy loam, with never a stone in it, or a bit of sticky clay. I feel almost like a chemist as I try to proportion the amount of fertilizer and select the right seeds for the soil and the location. And I am as proud as Lucifer of my luxuriant onion patch, wisely placed in the heart of the richest part of my kingdom, while the peas have been thriftily planted where the soil is poorer. Proud am I, too, of my lustily growing young tomatoes, nineteen in number, with never a sign of a cut-worm about them.

I have always planted beans helter-skelter, deep and wide but not always right-side up. This spring along came an experienced gardener who told me, most sagely, that they would never grow unless they were planted near the surface and always with thei eyes down in the soil, and their humped backs on top. He smiled sadly at my carelessly and deeply plante legumes and passed on, wiser, I knew, than I. Yet could not remember that my husband had ever take such extreme care of his beans. And we waited. I rained and rained and rained; then the sun shone a little, a very little; then it rained and rained som more and shone again. Meantime, I had droppe one more bean in each hill. Then, presto, they al came bobbing up through the wet, brownish-yellow soil, the first beans and the newer, both. I had fel that Nature would attend to that little matter. She was wise enough to turn their roots down and their tops up. Nature, like religion, is a mighty good thing to trust in. That is why I have a garden.

Out-of-doors is the growing-place for mind and soul. Hope and peace spring up with the corn and beans. And life is richer for the owner of even a small garden.

When the melons come and the canteloupes, when the crisp cucumbers weight the vines and when the gleaming scarlet of the tomatoes shines through their musky foliage, when the stately lines of corn shade the rest of the plantation, when the cabbages grow lusty and strong, when the wistaria and the clematis and the Madeira vines and the morning-glories beautify the porches, when the petunias and the sweet alyssum and the cosmos and the nasturtiums give the yard their beauty and their fragrance, when the cannas and the hollyhocks keep their brave, old-fashioned straight row against the back of the colonial yellow cottage, when the Niagara and the Delaware grapes, the Concord and the Cayuga, begin to make a grape-arbor, and when the ramblers, like the onions and the radishes, have done their best, then I shall feel that, in my garden and in my life, there is the richness and the strength of the great goddess Nature. That way, every year, more and more of the loveliness of life and the charm and wonder of it comes to the garden-lover.

Worth while? Worth while! It makes everything else the more worth while. A gardenless life would be like an untrimmed hat, an unmade gown. It would be like a child without a smile, a woman without charm.

Out in the garden, in the good, warm sunshine, the soul grows. So, Gentle Reader, here is a toast to all the gardens that ever were and to all that shall ever be. May there always be more and more of them!

In closing, let me hope that your garden, if you have one this year, will be the best that ever grew.

Most sincerely, ELIZABETH GIBBS.

China's President Honors Our Work

Miss Hartwell, Founder of the Christian Herald Industrial Homes at Fukien, Receives a Medal and Boards—A Unique Ceremony

(See Pages 270 and 271 for Additional Illustrations of the Work for Our Orphans)

Governor Li Hou Chi

THE new year has opened in a most auspicious way for the Christian Herald Industrial Homes at Fukien, China—the institution founded by tnat wonderful American woman, Miss Emily S. Hartwell, nine years ago. Many Christian Herald readrs will remember the humble beginnings of her xperiment among the poor, ignorant, destitute hinese orphans, how she gathered them lovingly nto her care, sheltered them in a building which was pened in 1910, and began work wholly on faith. The funds needed for this experimental work were ontributed by readers of this journal and transmitted hrough our Interdenominational Orphanage Comnittee at Chinkiang. Under Miss Hartwell's busy ands the work grew rapidly, and soon she had 200 rphans in her care—the largest number then under ny missionary in China. It was often a hard task to nd the means to support the enterprise, but Miss Iartwell never for a moment lost confidence in God's oodness, and she struggled on bravely.

From the outset she had a Chinese superintendent or the children. Noting her pluck and her wonderful uccess both in educational and industrial training, number of Chinese became friends of the work and ltimately supporters. Her present board of mangers includes six missionaries and six Chinese and he number of children under training is increased to 00, many being sent to her from long distances. Vhen China became a republic, the provincial governnent turned over to her still more children, some of vhom had been kidnapped and all trace of their parnts lost. Others were from homes desolated by sickess or ruined through opium. The churches, too, ent her many little waifs, some from distant heathen illages.

Amid all of these additions to Miss Hartwell's lready big responsibilities, the readers of the Chrisian Herald stood by her faithfully. They helped her o enlarge the Homes, to furnish them, to procure a lant for training the boys in carpentering, cabinetnaking, gardening, etc. She was also helped by many ther friends, including the Foochow Chamber of ommerce, and by native officials. But food prices ose steadily, gifts became more precarious, and hard imes came to the Fukien Homes. Still the little voman who founded the work was undaunted. She elt that it was only a question of time when the hinese officials would all be won over to her side. At first indifferent, they had become friendly, and now hey were gracious and approving. They saw that the Homes were accomplishing wonders in a field which ad been neglected and which now gave promise of mportant results. The Provincial Assembly, the hamber of Commerce, the Commissioner of Educaion, the Minister of Law at Peking, and many others gave evidence of this new interest, and decided to help the work in practical ways. The Foochow Chamber of Commerce pledged $5,000 (Mex.) to be applied toward assuring the permanence of the institution. Additional land was purchased and new buildings erected, the largest of which is Klopsch Hall, named in memory of the former proprietor of the Christian Herald, who had befriended the enterprise from the outset. The mother of Governor Li was among the list of benefactors, and the Anglo-Chinese College in Foochow and other institutions also gave material help. A great advance has been made both in the educational and industrial training methods at the Homes in recent years. The teaching forces have been strengthened and results have been extremely satisfactory.

DURING all this period of progress and struggle, the Homes, which were originally founded with the aid of Christian Herald readers, have continued to receive material support through this paper. Many of its subscribers have had the pleasure of knowing that the little Chinese waifs, whom they had adopted and for whose maintenance and training they had supplied the necessary funds, gave promise of becoming fine intelligent, self-supporting Christian men and women. It has been a real pleasure to these friends to keep in regular touch with their protégés, and to note their gradual development. Bishop Wilson S. Lewis, of the American Methodist Episcopal Church, writing of it, said: "I have worked with those who are interested in the industrial school enterprise at Pagoda Anchorage, and know of their methods and plans for the industrial plant. A splendid orphanage, called the Fukien Industrial Homes, has been built under their direction and managed very successfully. I believe that the Chinese are in great need of such help as this industrial plant promises to give. There are literally millions of people in Fukien province to whom such work would be an unspeakable blessing. We help save the souls of people by teaching them habits of industry, and placing within their power the ability to secure an honest and competent livelihood."

So favorable was the impression made among the leading Chinese in Fukien province—officials, gentry, educators, merchants and others—that, wholly unknown to Miss Hartwell, the matter at last was brought to the attention of the President of the Chinese Republic. This has just resulted in an event which took the Homes and their management completely by surprise. Miss Hartwell received a notification that the government had decided to signify its high approval of her work by bestowing upon her, as a mark of honor, a medal and "boards." The date for this ceremony was fixed for December 19, 1918, being the anniversary of the birthday of Miss Hartwell's father, who was a distinguished missionary there and gave nearly fifty-two years of his life to Christian service in that country. Her father, mother and three sisters all rest in the American cemetery at Foochow.

When news of the coming event was received, it was the beginning of a busy time in the Homes, for the highest honor that could possibly come was about to be conferred. The great day came at last. There were gathered at the presentation a number of notables, including the Military Governor, General Li Hou Chi, Mr. U, and Hon. Mr. Kwo, both leaders of the "gentry," the mother of the governor and her youngest son; the Mayor of Foochow, the Rev. Lyman F. Peet, Rev. W. S. Pakenham-Walsh, Rev. Geo. H. Hubbard, Mr. and Mrs. Ni, Mr. Belcher, Professor Newell, the French Consul and British Vice-Consul, and many leading merchants and educators, together with the pastors and preachers of Foochow College and their wives, Bible women and teachers and Chinese women physicians. The officials of the Homes were there also, together with all of their pupils, including the boys from the Christian Herald Fukien Industrial Homes, the Homes Kindergarten children, and the Beacon Hill Farms Association and Orphanage girls.

THE dignitaries occupied the platform with Governor Li, who was the official speaker of the day. In his presentation address, he spoke substantially as follows:

"Today the President of the Republic of China presents to Miss Hartwell of the United States of America an honorary board inscribed with the characters 'Li Shan Hao Shih,' and the Military Governor is happy to come here himself on this festive occasion.

President Hsü of China

"He has heard it said, 'One who gives to others is called gracious; one who teaches others is called loyal.' The Military Governor has been six years in Fukien and feels ashamed because he has done so little. Miss Hartwell, living in Fukien, has carried on the good work begun by her parents over sixty years ago, establishing the orphanage, and an agricultural school and girls' industrial school, the cost of which has been tens of thousands of dollars. She has twice collected funds for the relief of sufferers, helping many thousand people. She has devoted herself to philanthropy, so she may be called gracious and loyal.

"Therefore the Military Governor wrote to the Board of the Interior, requesting it to beg the President to present an honorary board to Miss Hartwell with these four characters. The Board of the Interior itself decided as customary to present a medal also, so the Military Governor now presents this board and medal as tribute to Miss Hartwell's merit.

"Today all classes come to honor Miss Hartwell's work. The Military Governor has also come, because this lady never tires of doing good, whether she receives honor or not. Those who do good should be rewarded if they are our own countrywomen; how much more if they are foreign guests in our country! The Military Governor has found Miss Hartwell doing good works, both in collecting funds for relief so that in work on a large scale she has made up in times of distress for the deficiencies of our official arrangements, while in work on a small scale she has set an example to society in general.

"It is fitting that this honor should be paid today not only to celebrate the merits of Miss Hartwell, but also that all the people of Fukien should learn a lesson from her example. The Military Governor speaks these few words to express his appreciation of Miss Hartwell's virtues."

THE British Vice-Consul. W. W. Myers, of Pagoda, read an address by Consul Wilkinson. Mr. Wilkinson, who could not be present in person, paid a tribute to the admirable work Miss Hartwell had done for the poor and especially for the destitute orphans of Fukien, for which she richly deserves official recognition. We quote the following from the address: "To me it has always been a kind of grievance that the immense good done in China by missionary institutions such as industrial homes like these, orphanages, blind schools, hospitals and similar charities, have not been adequately appreciated by the officials and people of this country; and it is therefore all the more gratifying to come across a case like Miss Hartwell's, in which the self-sacrificing labors of a missionary in the interests of the poor have earned the genuine gratitude of all classes of people among whom she has thrown her lot.

"It is in token of this gratitude that the distinctions of which Miss Hartwell is the happy recipient today have been conferred on her, but appreciation felt by the Chinese of this city, from the Governor downward, for her work here was shown long ago by the

Continued on page 272

①

②

③

At the Chri
Indust
Fuk

㉑

⑳

⑲

Presentation to Miss Emily S. Hartwell, at F her father's birthday, of medals and "Honora
Republic of China. At the right of the table, Chi; at his right the Provincial Treasurer, at Hanson. Miss Hartwell (indicated by x) i

Boys of the Industrial Ho Association garden. The buildings were made by t ruins of structures left aft

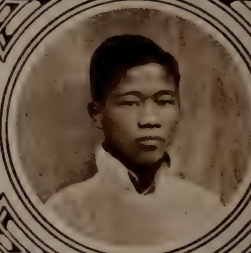
⑱



⑰

⑯

⑮

For the names

Herald
Homes,
hina.

④

⑤

⑥ er 19, 1918,

ident of the eral Li Hou onsul, G. C. oo pillar

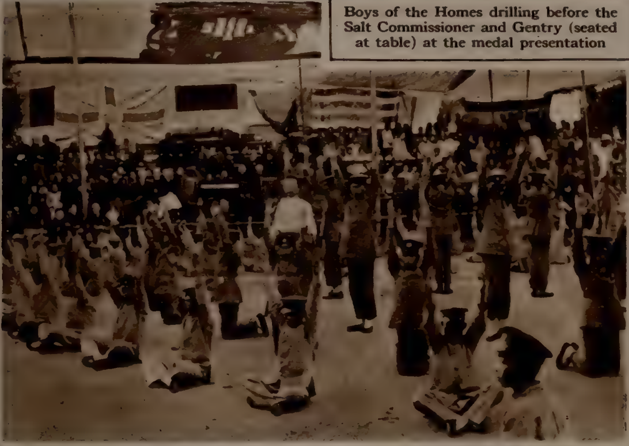
"Klopsch Hall" and some of the boys of the Fukien Homes

⑦

⑧

Below, the Governor's Band at the medal presentation. Above the center windows the President's "Honorary Board"

Boys of the Homes drilling before the Salt Commissioner and Gentry (seated at table) at the medal presentation



⑨

⑬

⑫

⑪

⑩

see page 272

China's President Honors Our Work

Continued from page 269

generous contributions which they have made to the support of the Industrial Homes and other institutions with which Miss Hartwell's name is connected; for although these very practical charities were originally started with funds provided by the Christian Herald newspaper and other benevolent people in the United States, it is not perhaps as well known as it should be that they entirely depend for their continued existence on monthly gifts from the various Fukien government departments and such voluntary contributions as Miss Hartwell is able to collect for them by the help of her friends.

"The honor done to Miss Hartwell is, I believe, unique in the history of Christian missions in China, and is one of which she has good reason to be proud. She deserves the heartiest congratulations of us all, and not any the less because she thoroughly merits the honor. She has asked me today to express on her behalf her deep sense of obligation to the President of China, for the compliment which he has paid her work by bestowing these distinctions on her in appreciation of the good it has done. I would beg General Li to convey her grateful thanks to the President, as well also as the thanks of the foreign community here, for this generous recognition on his part of the good work which foreign missionaries in this and other ways are doing at Foochow."

THE Governor then presented the medal, with an accompanying certificate, to Miss Hartwell. The first presentation consisted in Miss Hartwell's bowing three times in succession to the Governor, taking three steps in advance (accompanied by Mrs. Ni Wen Shiu, to whom she passed the gifts); and then, stepping back, she bowed again three times. The second presentation required only one bow before and one after the gifts were received.

After appropriate remarks from the Governor, the American Consul, G. C. Hanson, made an address in Mandarin. He said: "I wish to take this opportunity to thank the Military Governor for the honor he has bestowed upon Miss Hartwell on this occasion. Many times before he has shown his appreciation of and sympathy for good deeds, and his present act shows that he is grateful for the good work which Miss Hartwell, following in the footsteps of her well-known father, has done in the provincial capital. We are all aware of the energy and efforts Miss Hartwell has put forth to help the orphans of Fukien, and we desire to congratulate her on the successful results obtained. That her work has earned the thanks of the Chinese community in which she has worked so many years is made evident today. I again thank the Military Governor for making known, by bestowing upon her a medal and honorary board, in a public way the thanks of the officials for her good work."

PRESENTATIONS of testimonials were then made by Hon. Mr. Kwo, head of the Gentry, and by the Presidents of the Chamber of Commerce and of the Education Board, with appropriate remarks by each. In response, Rev. Lyman P. Peet, managing Director of the Industrial Board of the Homes, spoke briefly as follows:

"Inasmuch as my knowledge of Mandarin is limited, let me ask your indulgence if I speak in the Foochow Colloquial. Permit me at the outset to express what I am sure Miss Hartwell would express, were she speaking for herself, that the honor today bestowed upon her is more than 'she can bear.' She has but done what was her duty, and a large share of the credit of accomplishment must be ascribed to those many associates, both Chinese and foreign, who have nobly stood by her during all these years of effort, and without whose assistance the success thus far attained could not have been achieved."

He made a plea in behalf of the proposed Industrial Department of the Fukien Homes. The time is near, he said, when many of the youths in the homes must go out into the world of work. It would be a serious misfortune if they went out with no certain means of earning a livelihood. He quoted the saying of Confucius: "A youth is to be regarded with respect," because of the possibilities wrapped up in his young life. The boys and girls of China today are to be the men and women of tomorrow, and as the men and women are, so will the nation be. "Such considerations should make us pause, lest unconsciously we make a mistake and bring calamity upon the country we love. "This conviction lies at the root of this appeal for the establishment of an Industrial Department in connection with the Christian Herald Fukien Industrial Homes. Fukien needs industrial leaders and needs them badly. She needs them now! The undeveloped natural resources of the province, its gold, silver, lead, iron and coal mines, its waterways, presenting enormous engineering possibilities, all invite the best efforts of an industrial enterprise, and with leaders trained under Christian auspices Fukien will be able to take care of her own natural sources of wealth without danger of interference from any outside nation. In this way Fukien may become a powerful part of great China, and will materially aid China in securing that position among the nations of the earth which is her due."

Miss Emily S. Hartwell

Superintendent Yeh then gave a brief report of the Fukien Homes Orphanage, and Superintendent Chen of Beacon Hill Farms Association told of the Manchu relief which had grown into the Manual Training and Girls' Industrial School.

A FEW American Board children, representing the Red Cross, then sang a verse of the "Star-Spangled Banner," after which Miss Hartwell spoke a few closing words of thanks, in which she expressed her sense of unworthiness to receive this recognition because the real credit was due the kind friends in America, China and Canada who had so generously given to the support of the work. The Boards of Management include both Chinese and Western nationals, showing the close cooperation in all matters. Moreover, while the Orphanage was started by Christian Herald and other gifts for two hundred children for seven years, at present it is dependent upon the monthly gifts from the various Fukien government offices. She regretted the lack of time to tell of the devotion of Mr. Lau and Mr. Siek, who had given their lives to the work until called to their heavenly reward, but could not omit Miss Wiley, who carried on the relief for the Manchus during the days of danger and difficulty introducing the large weaving industry for women and children, while she herself was on furlough helping raise funds. The great help of the editor and readers of the Christian Herald, and Mrs. Douglas Smith, treasurer of Beacon Hill Farm Association, deserved very special mention. The crying need of the hour is enlarged industrial work for the boys fast becoming young men, and for this she begged all to do their utmost that this heaviest burden of her heart might be lifted.

While afternoon tea was served to the guests, the Orphanage boys had sports on the tennis courts. All the distinguished visitors were invited to inspect the work in cabinet-making, carpentry, masonry, manual training, sewing, weaving and kindergarten work. This memorable afternoon came to an end with races in the large garden of the Homes, which had been transformed from a wilderness of tumble-down ruins into a beautiful display of flowers and vegetables, through the efforts of the boys under Superintendent Chen's clever supervision. In this way the "day of days" for the Christian Herald Industrial Homes and the Beacon Hill Industrial Association Training School and the Memorial Girls' Industrial School reached a happy close.

MISS HARTWELL has sent to the Christian Herald a number of invitations, in Chinese and English, which are to be forwarded to the various contributors who have helped in supporting the Homes. She has also sent to the Christian Herald a number of photographs of Chinese children who have been turned over to the Home to be trained and educated. She requests that we should ask our readers to adopt them as individual protégés and to undertake the responsibility of their support while training. Photographs of several of these children appear on another page. Their names are given below:

1. Mu Siuk Ging. 2. Lau Ling Bo. 3. Hu Dien Goi. 4. Ding Seu Cong. 5. Lau Kai Sung. 6. Ding Lang Ding. 7. Dang Iok Saik. 8. Ding Tieng Uong. 9. Li Sang Muoi. 10. Ma Soing U. 11. Co Tieng Ong. 12. Dieu Ngi Sung. 13. Dang Muk Huak. 14. Iek I Ne. 15. Sien Bo Tai. 16. Li Long Du. 17. Ngu Daik-guoh. 18. Dang Gu Ming (has a patron). 19. Diong Dong Muoi. 20. Diong Chieng Gu. 21. Iong Muk Guok.

These are all available for choice by patrons with a single exception. There are many more, whose photographs we may print hereafter.

. . .

We commend this beautiful work to our Christian Herald Family Circle, because we believe it is one in which they are certain to take a warm personal interest. Every reader who adopts a child can come into personal contact by mail, not only with Miss Hartwell herself and the teachers, but with the little protégé, as soon as the child can be taught to write a simple letter. All applications for adoption should be sent to the Christian Herald, and will be submitted to Miss Hartwell with as little delay as possible. We have photographs of all on the eligible list, and will be glad to send these to any one of our readers who may wish to become the godfather or godmother of a little Chinese boy or girl.

The New Commandment

AT THIS time much is being said about the unity of the denominations of the Church of our Lord and Master Jesus Christ. No one church ought to differ from another. We have the New Testament of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; that is very plain, so plain that every one can understand. I was talking to a friend one day and she invited me to her church, the Episcopal. She told me that her brother-in-law was brought up in the Presbyterian Church and she invited him to her church, and he united with them, for he said, "Now I am on the right road." I answered her with these words, "There is but one way. Jesus says, 'I am the Way, the Truth and the Life; no man cometh unto God but by me.' Again he says, 'I am the Door; if any man enter any other way he is a thief and a robber.' And Jesus tells us to come to him. He says, 'Come unto me and I will give you rest.'"

I have traveled past the eightieth milestone. I was brought up in the Scotch Presbyterian Church; I united with it in 1856. Since then I have united with different denominations convenient to my home, and I have tried to do just as Jesus has told us to do.

My belief is, that we should read our New Testament and pray that we may accept the teachings of our Lord as a little child, simply believing and trusting, and taking the new commandment as our rule, for Jesus says, "I did not come to destroy the commandments, I came to establish them, but this new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another as I have loved you, yea I say unto you, love one another, do unto others as you would have others do unto you, love your neighbor as yourself; on this hangs all the law and the prophets."

Now this new commandment is, I take it, to be given by our Lord to be taught in the church. It is a commandment that ought to be repeated in unison at the opening of the Sunday school and explained. You see that Jesus says that all the teachings are embodied in this commandment. The Ten Commandments and this commandment ought to be together and given to each child and explained why we have the Ten Commandments; they are the Law, the Law we have today; without this Law we could not govern our country.

Jesus says he came to establish the Ten Commandments, and this new commandment is our rule, given to us, teaching us how to live. I have spoken to children about the commandments, and they told me that they did not know any of them; the new commandment they do not know. Now I think that if the new commandment were taught and explained all would be well.

ANNIE BAIN LISTHARDT.

Ossining, N. Y.

Willard
STORAGE
BATTERY
Willard Threaded Rub
1
2
3
4

For a Quicker Start

When you start your car, don't try to do it all with the starter button, for that only wastes current. Prime your cylinders and then:—

① Set your controls right, with retarded spark, and throttle slightly open.

② Use your choker to get a richer mixture and quicker explosion.

③ Throw out the clutch and take some of the load off the engine.

④ Then—and not till then—step on the button, and away she'll go.

There are lots of other little wrinkles that prolong your battery's life and make car operation easier. Drop in at the Service Station and let us post you on battery care in winter.

Willard Service.

The Search

By
GRACE LIVINGSTON HILL
(MRS. LUTZ)
Author of "The Witness," "The Measure of a Man," Etc.

CHAPTER XI

"IT'S wonderful that you should do this for me," Cameron said in a low tone, quite low, so that the watching, wistful mother could not even guess what he was saying.

"It's not in the least wonderful," said Ruth brightly. "Remember the hedge, and Chuck Woodcock!" She was beginning to get her self-possession again.

"You are paying that old score back in compound interest," said Cameron.

That was a wonderful ride, rushing along beneath the stars; going back to childhood's days and getting acquainted again where they left off. Ruth forgot all about the cause of her wild chase, and the two young men she had left disconsolate in her library at home; forgot her own world in this new beautiful one, wherein her spirit really communed with another spirit; forgot utterly what Wainwright had said about Cameron as more and more through their talk she came to see the fineness of his character.

They flashed on from one little village to another, leaving one clustering glimmer of lights in the distance only to pass to other clustering groups. It was in their favor that there were not many other travelers to dispute their way, and they were hindered very little. Cameron had made the trip many times and knew the roads well. They did not have to hesitate and inquire the way, and so it came about that the city clocks were striking ten when they reached the outskirts of Baltimore.

"Now," said Ruth in a sweetly imperious tone, consulting her timepiece to be sure she had counted the clock-strokes correctly, "do you know what you are going to do, Mr. Corporal? You are going to land your mother and me at the nearest hotel, and take the car with you back to camp. You said one of the fellows had his car down there, so I'm sure you'll be able to find a place to put it over night. If you find a way to send the car back to us in the morning, well and good. If not, your mother and I will go home by train and the chauffeur can come down tomorrow and bring back the car; or, better still, you can drive yourself up the next time you get leave off."

There was much argument about the matter within a brief space of time, but in the end (which came in five minutes) Ruth had her way, and the young soldier departed for his camp in the gray car with ample time to make the short trip, leaving his mother and Ruth at a Baltimore hotel; after having promised to call up in the morning and let them know what he could do about the car.

Ruth selected a large double room and went at once to the telephone to call up her aunt. She found to her relief that that good lady had not yet returned from her day with a friend in the city, so that no explanations would be necessary that night. She left word with the servant that she was in Baltimore with a friend and would probably be at home the next day some time. Then she turned to find to her dismay that her companion was sitting in a low-armed chair with tears running down her cheeks.

"Oh, my dear!" she exclaimed, rushing over to her. "You are all worn out!"

"Not a bit of it!" sobbed the mother with a smile like sunshine through her tears; "but I was so happy I couldn't keep from crying. Don't you ever get that way? I've just been watching you and thinking what a dear beautiful child you are, and how wonderful God has been to send you to help my boy. Oh, it was so dreadful to me to think of him going down to camp with those men! My dear, I smelt liquor on their breath when they came for him, and I was just crying and praying about it when you called up. Of course I knew my boy wouldn't drink, but so many accidents can happen with automobiles when the driver is drunk! I never can thank you enough!"

They were both too excited to sleep soon, but long after the mother slept Ruth lay awake going over the whole day and wondering. There were so many things about the incidents of the afternoon and evening, now that it was over, that were utterly out of accord with her whole life heretofore. She felt intuitively that her aunt would never understand if she were to explain the whole proceeding. There were so many laws of her little world of conventionalities that she had transgressed, and so many qualms of a belated conscience about whether she ought to have done it at all. What would Cameron think of her, anyway? Her cheeks burned hot in the dark over that question. Strange she had not thought of it at all, either beforehand or while she sat beside him during that wonderful ride! And now the thing that Wainwright had said shouted out to her ears: "Rotten! Rotten! Rotten!" like a dirge. Suppose he were? It couldn't be true. It just couldn't! But suppose it were? Well, suppose it were? How was she hurt by doing a kind act? Having taken that stand against all her former ideas, Ruth suddenly had peace and drifted into dreams of what she had been enjoying, the way suddenly lit by a sleepy remembrance of Wetherill's declaration: "He won't drink! You can't make him! It's been tried again and again!" There was evidence in his favor. Why hadn't she remembered that before? And his mother! She had been so sure of him too!

The telephone bell wakened her with a message from camp. His voice greeted her pleasantly with the word that it was all right and he had reached camp in plenty of time, and found a good place for the car. It would be at the hotel at nine o'clock. Ruth turned from the phone with a vague disappointment. He hadn't said a word of thanks or good-by or anything, only that he must hurry. Not even a word to his mother. But then, of course, men didn't always think of those little things, and maybe it was just as well for him to take it all as a matter of course. It made it less embarrassing for her.

But when they went down to the car, behold, he was in it!

"I got leave off for the morning," he explained smiling. "I told my captain all about how you got me back in time when I'd missed the train, and he told me to see you back as far as Wilmington and catch the noon train back from there. He's a peach of a captain. If my lieutenant had been there I wouldn't have got a chance to ask him. I was afraid of that last night. But for good luck he has a two days' leave this time, and so I got off."

Ruth looked at him musingly. Was Harry Wainwright that lieutenant?

They had a golden morning together, and talked of many things that welded a friendship already well begun.

"Weren't you at all frightened last night?" asked Cameron once, looking at the delicate beauty of the face beside him and noting its strength and sweetness.

Mrs. Cameron was dozing in the back seat, and they felt quite alone and free. Ruth looked up at him frankly:

"Why, yes, I think I was for a minute or two while we were behind that barn; but—did you ever pray for anything when you were in a trying situation?"

He looked down earnestly into her face, half startled at her words:

"Why, I don't know that I ever did. I'm not quite sure if it was praying."

"Well, I don't know that I ever did before," she went on thoughtfully, "but last night when those men got out of their car in front of the barn so near us again, I found myself praying." She dropped her eyes half embarrassed: "Just as if I were a frightened little child I found myself saying: 'God help us! God help us!' And right away we heard that other car coming and the men went away! It somehow seemed—well, strange! I wondered if anybody else ever had an experience like that."

"I've heard of them," said Cameron gravely. "I've wondered sometimes myself. Do you believe in God?"

"Oh, yes!" said Ruth quite firmly. "Of course. What use would there be in anything if there wasn't a God?"

"But do you believe we humans can ever really—well, find him? On this earth, I mean?"

"Why, I don't know that I ever thought about it," she answered, bewildered. "Find him? In what way do you mean?"

"Why, get in touch with him? Get to know him, perhaps. Be on such terms with him that one could call out in a time like last night, you know; or —well, say in a battle! I've been thinking a lot about that lately—naturally."

"Oh!" gasped Ruth softly. "Of course. I hadn't thought about that much, either. We've been so thoughtless—and—and sort of blindly happy you know, just like butterflies, we girls! I haven't realized that men were going out to face death!"

"It isn't that I'm afraid to die," said Cameron proudly, lifting his chin as if dying were a small matter. "Not just the dying part. I reckon I've been through worse than that a dozen times. That wouldn't last long. It's—the other part. I have a feeling there'll be a little something more expected of me than just to have tried to get the most fun out of life. I've been thinking if there is a God he'd expect me to find it out and make things straight between us somehow. I suppose I don't make myself very plain. I don't believe I know myself just what I mean."

"I think I understand just a little," said Ruth. "I haven't ever thought about it before, but I'm going to now. It's something we ought to think about, I guess. In a sense, it's something that each one of us has to think about, whether we are going into battle or not, isn't it?"

"I suppose it is, only we never realize it when things are going along all right," said Cameron. "It seems queer that everybody that's ever lived on this earth has had this question to face sooner or later, and most of them haven't done much about it. The few people who profess to have found a way to meet it we call cranks, or else pick flaws in the way they live; although it does seem to me that if I really found God so I was sure he was there and cared about me, I'd manage to live a little decenter life than some do."

They drifted into other topics and all too soon they reached Wilmington and had to say good-by. But the thought stayed with Ruth more or less during the days that followed, and crept into her letters when she wrote to Corporal Cameron, as she did quite often in these days; and still no solution had come to the great question which was so like the one of old, "What shall I do to be saved?" It came and went during the days that followed, and now and again the fact that it had originated in a talk with Cameron clashed badly in her mind with that word "rotten" that Wainwright had used about him. So that at last she resolved to talk to her cousin Captain Larue the next time he came up.

"Cousin Captain," she said, "do you know a boy at your camp from Bryne Haven named John Cameron?"

"Indeed I do!" said the captain.

"What kind of a man is he?"

"The best young man I know in every way," answered the captain promptly. "If the world were made up of men like him it would be a pretty good place to live in. Do you know him?"

"A little," said Ruth evasively, with a satisfied smile on her lips. "His mother is in our Red Cross now. She thinks he's about right, of course; but mothers usually do, I guess. I'll have to tell her what you said. It will please her. He used to be in school with me years ago. I haven't seen much of him since."

"Well, all I have to say is, improve your acquaintance if you get the chance. He's worth ten of one of your society youths that loll around here almost every time I come."

"Now, Cousin Captain!" chided Ruth. But she went off smiling, and she kept all his words in her heart.

Corporal Cameron did not soon return to his native town. An epidemic of measles broke out in camp just before Thanksgiving and pursued its tantalizing course through his special barracks with strenuous vigor. Quarantine was put on for three weeks, and was lifted but a few hours when a new lot of cases came down. Seven weeks more of isolation followed, when the men were not allowed away from the barracks except for long lonely walks, or gallops across camp. Even the mild excitement of the Y. M. C. A. huts was not for them in these days. They were much shut up to themselves, and latent tendencies broke loose and ran riot. Shooting craps became a passion. They gambled as long as they had a dollar left or could get credit on the next month's pay day. Then they gambled for their shirts and their bayonets. All day long, whenever they were in the barracks, you could hear the rattle of the dice, and the familiar call of "Phoebe!" "Big Dick!" "Big Nick!" and "Little Joe!" When they were not on drill they would infest the barracks for hours at a time, gathered in crouching groups about the dice, the air blue with cigarette smoke; while others had nothing better to do than to sprawl on their cots and talk, and from their talk Cameron often turned away nauseated. The low ideals, the open boasting of shame, the matter-of-course conviction that all men and most women were as bad as themselves, filled him with a deep boiling rage, and he would close his book or the paper with which he was trying to while the hour, and fling forth into the cold air for a solitary ride or walk.

He was sitting thus a cold cheerless December day with a French book he had recently sent for, trying to study a little and prepare himself for the new country to which he was soon going.

The door of the barracks opened le ting in a rush of cold air and close again quickly. A tall man in uniform with the red triangle on his arm stood pulling off his woolen gloves and looking about him. Nobody paid any attention to him. Cameron was deep in his book and did not even notice him. Off at his left a new crap game was just starting. The phraseology beat upon his accustomed ears like the buzz of bees or mosquitoes.

"I'll shoot a buck!" cried one, flinging down a dollar.

"You're faded!" cried another, and flung down a second bill.

Then the shooter stooped caressingly to his task, speaking with pathetic persuasion:

"Come on now there, dice! Remember the baby's shoes!"

Continued on page 276

Are You Getting the Most From Your Trucks?

Give "Ship by Truck" a Broader Meaning in Your Own Fleet

By Harvey S. Firestone, President, Firestone Tire & Rubber Co.

THE sooner you realize that your trucks are more than substitutes for horse-drawn vehicles, the sooner you will obtain the broader, more important, more valuable returns from motor trucking.

You can and should exact duties from your trucks that are entirely beyond the capabilities of horse-and-wagon transportation.

Apply the "Ship by Truck" idea to your own fleet. Give your trucks new transportation duties, a wider radius, special responsibilities that no other transportation method can assume.

In the far West trucks are forcing their way into the forests and with the aid of trailers bearing out the logs to the mills. Timbermen have reported as high as 50% saving over any other method of logging. This is only one of a long list of truck activities in the lumber industry.

The freight embargoes of the War taught a wholesome lesson. They showed business men new, unsuspected uses for trucks.

For example, a large eastern corset manufacturer used his trucks to solve stringent labor conditions.

The town in which his factory is located was a center of munition work. When labor costs became prohibitive he opened plants in three neighboring towns at distances of 23, 30 and 40 miles. Labor was obtained in these communities at much more reasonable rates. Raw materials were transported from the factory warehouse to these new plants by truck. The return load was made up of finished or partly finished goods. The promptness and low cost of haulage between these four plants enabled him to continue business profitably in the face of serious labor shortage.

Trucks have proved invaluable in the last year in moving labor from the towns to the fields during the rush of harvesting.

Truck haulage between plants located in different cities is rapidly coming to the fore as a means of speeding manufacture, relieving labor conditions, reducing raw-material stocks and lending needed assistance to the overburdened railroads.

"Ship by Truck."

The power of the idea lies in the universal adaptability of this new method of transportation.

Set your mind to the problem of extending the usefulness of your truck or truck fleet. Get the values that other truck owners have proved can be obtained. Consult your Chamber of Commerce and Return Loads Bureau as to the latest developments in trucking.

Don't let transportation difficulties reduce the high manufacturing efficiency of your plant.

"Ship by Truck."

Reproduction of photograph of truck owned by Fred Johnson, Portland, Ore.

Half The Truck Tonnage of America is Carried on

Firestone TIRES

The War's Religious Perils

The World War convulsed religion, as it did everything else. Many are saying, "So much the better for religion." Even a great evangelist, known the world around, came back from the front and wrote in a magazine of national circulation:

> "I have learned from these boys what religion is . . . This war is reconstructing the old theological ideas."

Are we intelligently alive to the perils that the war injected into the religious thought of the world? You cannot afford to miss the exposure of these perils that will be made in the following articles in The Sunday School Times:

Does Men's Supreme Sacrifice Save Them?

Rehabilitating the Doctrine of Hell

A New View of Immortality

Is Deed Now Greater Than Creed?

Is There a New Virility in Religion?

Communicating With Our Loved Dead

Mistaking Helpfulness for Religion

May We Now Have Universal Brotherhood?

May We Pray for the Dead?

Has This Baptism of Blood Cleansed the World?

Is Patriotism Religion?

Will the War Unite All Creeds?

Is Most Human Nature Good, Not Bad?

Is Orthodoxy Now Obsolete?

This wholly unique and challenging series will appear in The Sunday School Times, and will continue for several months.

And this is but a single feature in the richest year's program that has ever been planned for

The Sunday School Times

The best thing about this every week interdenominational journal for adults in Bible Study and Teaching, Sunday-School management and the Christian Life and Service is that it stands for the whole Bible as the infallible Word of God, and the shed blood of Jesus as the only way of Salvation.

Our "Get-Acquainted" Offer—
10 Weeks for 25 cents

The Sunday School Times Company, Room 226
1031 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

For the 25 cents enclosed please send The Sunday School Times for 10 weeks

Name..............................

Address..............................

40136

The Search

Continued from page 274

Cameron had ceased to hear the voices. He was struggling with a difficult French idiom.

The stranger took his bearings deliberately and walked over to Cameron, sitting down with a friendly air on the nearest cot.

"Would you be interested in having one of my little books?" he asked, and his voice had a clear ring that brought Cameron's thoughts back to the barracks again. He looked up for a curt refusal. He did not wish to be bothered now, but something in the young man's clear eyes held him. Y. M. C. A. men in general were well enough, but Cameron wasn't crazy about them, especially when they were young. But this one had a look about him that proclaimed him neither a slacker nor a sissy. Cameron hesitated:

"What kind of a book?" he asked, somewhat shortly.

The boy, for he was only a boy though as tall as a man, did not hedge but went straight to the point with his clear eyes fixed on the soldier:

"A pocket Testament," he said earnestly, and laid in Cameron's hand a little leather book with limp covers. Cameron took it up half curiously, and then looked into the other's face coldly:

"You selling them?" There was a covert sneer in his tone.

"Oh, no!" said the other quickly. "I'm giving them away for a promise. You see, I had one of my eyes put out a while ago, so they wouldn't take me for a soldier, and the next best thing was to be all the help I could to the fellows that are going to fight. I figure that book is the best thing I can bring you."

The manly simplicity of the boy held Cameron's gaze.

"H'm! In what way?" Cameron was turning the leaves curiously, enjoying the silky fineness, the clear-cut print and the soft leather binding. Life in the barracks was so much in the rough that any bit of refinement was doubly appreciated. He liked the feel of the little book, and had a curious longing to be its possessor.

"Why, it gives you a pretty straight line on where we're all going, what is expected of us and how we're to be looked out for. It shows how to know God and be ready to meet death if we have to."

"What makes you think any one can know God on this earth?"

"Because I have," said the astonishing young man, quite as if he were saying he was related to the President.

"You have! How did you get to know him?"

"Through that little book, by following its teachings."

Cameron turned over the pages again, catching familiar phrases here and there as he had heard them sometimes in Sunday school years before.

"You said something about a promise. What was it?"

"That you'll carry the book with you always, and read at least a verse in it every day."

"Well, that doesn't sound hard," mused Cameron. "I guess I could stand for that."

"The book is yours, then. Would you like to put your name to that acceptance card in the front?"

"What's that?" asked Cameron sharply, as if he had discovered the fly in the ointment of which he had all along been suspicious.

"Well, I call it the first step in knowing God. It's your act of acceptance of the way God has planned for you to be forgiven and saved from sin. If you sign that you say you will accept Christ as your Saviour."

"But suppose you don't believe in Christ? I can't commit myself to anything like that till I know about it."

"You'll never know till you do. You see, that's the first move in getting to know God," said the stranger with a smile. "God says he wants you to believe in his Son. He asks that much of you if you want to get to know him."

Cameron looked at him with bewildered interest. Was here a possible answer to the questions of his heart? Why did this curious boy have a light in his face that ordinary mortals did not often wear? What was there about his simple earnestness that was so convincing?

Another crap game had started up on the other side of them. A musically inclined private was playing ragtime on the piano, and another was trying to accompany him on the banjo. The air was hazier than ever. It seemed strange to be talking of such things in these surroundings.

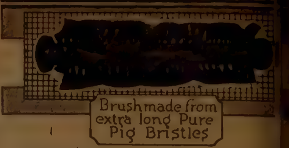
"Let's get out of here and walk!" said Cameron suddenly. "I'd like to understand what you mean."

For two hours they tramped across the frozen ground and talked, arguing this way and that, much drawn toward one another. At last in the solemn background of a wall of whispering pines that shut them away from the stark gray rows of barracks, Cameron took out his fountain pen and with his foot on a prone log opened the little book on his knee and wrote his name and the date. Then he put it in his breast pocket with the solemn feeling that he had taken some kind of a great step toward what his soul had been longing to find. They knelt on the frozen ground beside that log and the stranger prayed simply as if he were talking to a friend, and thereafter that spot was hallowed ground to Cameron, to which he came often to think and to read his little book.

That night he wrote to Ruth, telling in a shy way of his meeting with the Testament man and about the little book. After he had mailed the letter he walked back again to the spot among the pines and standing there looked up to the stars, committing himself again to the covenant he had signed. It was then that he decided that if he got home again after quarantine before he went "over," he would unite with the church. Somehow the stranger's talk that afternoon had cleared away his objections. He went back to the barracks across the open field, up through the woods and over the crest of the hill toward the road, thinking deeply as he walked. Suddenly from down below on the road a familiar voice floated up to him. He parted the branches of oak underbrush that made a screen between him and the road and glanced down to get his bearings the better to avoid an unwelcome meeting. It was inevitable when one came near Lieutenant Wainwright that he should overhear some part of a conversation. He had a carrying voice which he never sought to restrain.

"You're sure she's a girl with pep, are you? I don't want to bother with any other kind. All right. Tell her to wait for me in the Washington station tomorrow evening at eight. I'll look for her at the right of the information booth. Tell her to wear a red carnation so I'll know her. I'll show her a good time all right if she's the right sort. I'll trust you that she's a good-looker!"

Cameron could not hear the response, but the two were standing silhouetted against a distant light, and something in the attitude of the other man held his attention. For a moment he could not place him, then it flashed across him that it was the soldier Chambers, who had been the means of his missing the train at Chester on the memorable occasion when Ruth Macdonald had saved the day. It struck him as a strange thing that these two enemies of his, whom he would have supposed to be strangers to one another, should be talking thus intimately. To make sure of the man's identity he waited until the two parted and Wainwright went his way; then at a distance he followed the other one until he was quite certain. He walked back thoughtfully, trying to make it out. Had Wainwright then been at the bottom of his trouble that day? It began to seem quite possible. And how had Ruth Macdonald happened to be so opportunely present at the right moment? How had she happened to turn down that road, a road that was seldom used by people going to Baltimore? It was all very strange and had never been satisfactorily explained. Ruth had evaded the question most plausibly every time he



Brushmade from extra long Pure Pig Bristles

That's Why on BISSELL
outlasts so man
brooms

YOU KNOW how a good bristle cl brush will outlast many whisk broo it's because the bristle is tough and doe break off like the brittle broom corn. It same way with the Bissell sweeper and br

THEN "Cyco" Ball Bearings, be making the sweeper run easy, automati take up the wear of other parts so the B sweeper continues to do good work many years.

AT the present high prices, broom an extravagance to use on carpets and One Bissell's "Cyco" Ball Bearing sweeper will outlast 50 brooms and at tenth the cost.

BROOMS scatter dust, and are hars floor coverings. The Bissell brush, of sel bristles, is thorough, yet gentle. It confine dust and will not harm the finest rug.

Prices $4.25 to $7.50 Bissell's Va
Sweepers for periodic use in getting the d lying dust and grit $8.00 to $14.50—depe upon style and locality. At dealers everyw Booklet "The Care of Rugs and Carpets request.

BISSELL CARPET SWEEPER C
Oldest and Largest Sweeper M
Grand Rapids, Mich. Made in Ca too.

THROA
LUDEN'S
GIVE QUICK RELIEF
NAM ON EVE DRO

When You're Out-of-Doo take Luden's along and keep yo throat free from dryness, hus ness and irritation. N coloring, no narcoti
Carry Luden's wi
you always.

Look for the Luden yellow, dust-proof package.

Wm. H. Luden, Reading, P

LUDEN'S
MENTHOL COUGH DROPS

BLYMYER CHURCH BELL
Bring people to church. Their clear, beautif sustained, far-reaching tones are a power f good. Your church should have one. Durability gu anteed. Inexpensive. Art catalog & buying plans fr
The Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co. Dept. B51 Cincinnati.

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION CU
Should be used by every Church. Trial free.
THOMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO., Box 150, Lima

d-brought it up. Could it be that ainwright had told her of a plot ainst him and she had come to help n? His heart leaped at the thought. ien at once he was sure that Wain- ight had never told her, unless per- ps he had told some tale against him, d made him the butt of a great joke. ell, if he had, she had cared enough defend him and help him out without er giving away the fact that she knew. it here too lay a thorn to disturb him. hy had Ruth Macdonald not told n the plain truth if she knew? Was e trying to shield Wainwright? Could e really care for that contemptible oundrel?

The thought in all its phases tore his nd and kept him awake for hours, for e crux of the whole matter was that was afraid that Ruth Macdonald was ing to marry Lieutenant Wainwright. ot only for his own sake, but also for rs he did not want this. It was agony en to contemplate it. The man was t fit to be her mate.

He told himself of course that his in- est was utterly unselfish. That she is nothing to him but a friend and ver would be, and that while it might hard to see her belong to some fine an and know he himself never might more than a passing friend, still it uld not be like seeing her tied to a tten, unprincipled fellow like Wain- ight. The queer part of it was that at word "rotten" in connection with s enemy played a great part in his oughts that night.

Somewhere in the watches of the ght a memory came to him of the cove- nt he had made that day, and a gue, wistful reaching of his heart after e Christ to whom he was supposed to ve surrendered his life. He wondered a Christ such as the stranger had imed he was would take an interest the affairs of Ruth Macdonald. rely, such a flower of a girl would be otected if there was protection for y one! And somehow he managed a eer little prayer for her, the first he d tried to put up. That helped m some, and toward morning he fell leep.

A few days later, in glancing through s newly acquired Testament, he came on a verse which greatly troubled m for a time. His eye had caught it random, and somehow it lodged in s mind:

"Forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any: even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye."

Somehow the principle of that verse did not fit with his proud spirit. He thought instantly of Wainwright's distasteful face and form. It seemed to loom before him with a smug triumphal sneer. His enmity toward the fellow had been of years' standing, and had been deepened many times by unforgetable acts. There was nothing about Wainwright to make one forgive him. There was everything about him to make one want to punish him. When the verse first confronted Cameron he felt a rising indignation that there had been so much as a connection in his thoughts with his quarrel with Wainwright. Why, anybody that knew him knew Wainwright was wrong. God must think so too. That verse might apply to little quarrels, but not to his feeling about the way Wainwright had treated him ever since they were children. That was not to be borne, of course. Those words he had called Cameron's father! How they made his blood boil even now! No, he would not forbear nor forgive Wainwright. God would not want him to do so. It was right he should be against him forever! Thus he dismissed the suggestion and turned to the beginning of his Testament, having determined to find the Christ of whom the stranger had set him in search.

On the flyleaf of the little book the stranger had written a few words: "And ye shall find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart." Jer. 29 : 13.

That meant no half-way business. He could understand that. Well, he was willing to put himself into the search fully. He understood that it was worth a whole-hearted search if one were really to find a God as a reward.

That night he wrote a letter to the minister in Bryne Haven asking for an interview when next he was able to get leave from camp.

To be continued

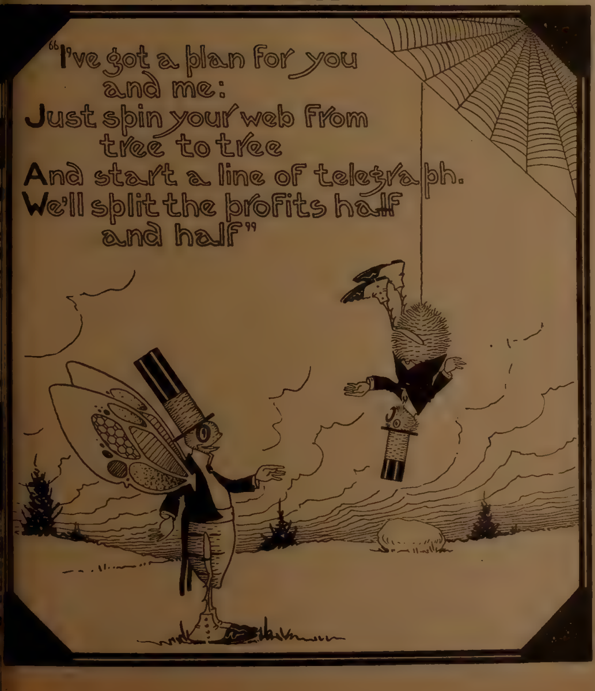
◆

YOUR Christian Herald has been in our home for the last thirty or forty years. Back home, when I was a boy, we had the Herald on the table. It is A-1. E. L. MOORE.

Oregon City, Ore.

SPIDER AND THE FLY

BY WALTER WELLMAN



"I've got a plan for you and me:
Just spin your web from tree to tree
And start a line of telegraph.
We'll split the profits half and half"

We Pay Any Price For a Soup

Some Years Ago

There came to the Van Camp kitchens a famous Parisian chef. He had won prizes for soup making in French culinary contests. The exquisite soups served at Hotel Ritz had been of his creation.

He made for us samples of those soups—perhaps the finest soups in the world. And we employed him for our chef-in-chief.

Our Culinary Experts

Then went to work with him. These are scientific cooks—men with college training in modern dietetics.

They tried out countless blends and methods to add savor to these soups. They fixed standards for every ingredient, and accurate ways to insure them.

They spent as high as three years on a single soup. They evolved scores of ways to add flavor or zest, and recorded every step in a formula. Thus, when they attained the ideal soup, every later dish was made like it.

Some Van Camp Soups cost a fortune to perfect—soups which millions now enjoy for a trifle.

A 3-Year Soup in 3 Minutes

Now the Van Camp Soups they spent years in creating are at your command in a moment. They cost no more than ordinary soups, and all you do is heat them. You have the choice of 18 kinds, each soup a masterpiece.

Compare a Van Camp Soup with the best liked soup you know. Taste the delights which our experts have added. You will gain a new idea of good soup.

VAN CAMP'S Soups 18 Kinds

Other Van Camp Products Include
Pork and Beans Evaporated Milk Spaghetti Peanut Butter
Chili Con Carne Catsup Chili Sauce, etc.
Prepared in the Van Camp Kitchens at Indianapolis

Van Camp's Pork and Beans

A scientific dish, baked as beans should be in modern steam ovens.

Van Camp's Spaghetti

The supreme spaghetti, the formula for which we value at $500,000.

Van Camp's Peanut Butter

A new grade made from blended peanuts with every bitter germ removed.

(505)

GOLF
The Game That Keeps You Young

Play golf and vanquish the "old age" bugaboo.

The invigorating exercise, out under the open skies, the mental relaxation, the good fellowship of the golf course, will build up your reserves of health, energy and ambition, give you a new lease-on life.

Whatever your score, you win!

This grand old game has a wonderful fascination. The zest of friendly rivalry, the very uncertainties of golf, invest the game with surpassing interest.

The golf enthusiast, whether beginner or expert, will play a better game, with greater enjoyment, when provided with just the right clubs, etc.

WILSON
Golf Equipment

Is a source of satisfaction to the player because it embodies the great essentials of scientific design and perfect workmanship.

The Wilson line is endorsed by the leading professionals and recognized leaders in golf.

The Wilson "W" trade-mark on Sporting Goods and Athletic Equipment is firmly established as the symbol of quality and dependability.

Reliable dealers everywhere can supply you with genuine Wilson equipment and assist you in making the selection best suited to your individual requirements.

We publish "The Wilson Athletic Library"—a series of valuable booklets on Golf, (How to Drive, How to Approach, How to Put) Tennis, Swimming, Football and Basketball. Any book you wish will be sent you upon receipt of 25 cents. Address Thos. E. Wilson & Co., 701-735 No. Sangamon Street, Chicago, Illinois.

CHICAGO THOS. E. WILSON & CO. NEW YORK

YOUR EARS

SUCCESS and HAPPINESS

Science Does Wonders For the DEAF

It's as easy now to correct your hearing as it is the eyesight. And equally absurd not to.

THE Magniphone A Wonderful New Sound Magnifier

ATTUNABLE to every ear-is the latest triumph of Science in its effort to aid failing ears, overcome deafness and restore hearing. Priceless in value; low in cost. Try it free; test your ears Ask for information.
THE MAGNIPHONE CO., Dept. 68 Chicago
29 E. Madison St., Room 1303, Cor. Wabash

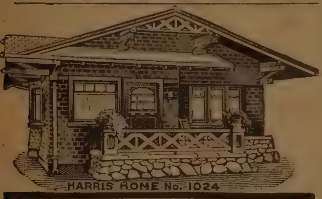
MAKE BIG MONEY

Introducing and selling new gas generating coal oil lamp. 300 candle power, brilliant, yet soft and easy on eyes. Can't explode, safe in any position.

Used by U. S. Government—Army Camps—Forestry Service

Recommended and used by county and state officials. Wonderful seller, low price makes sales easy. Tice sold 18 in 5 days. Hollman's average 20 a week. Hart sold 200 in one month. No capital needed. Credit given. Sample outfit free to workers.

Thomas Lamp Co.
1724 Gay St. Dayton, Ohio



HARRIS HOME No. 1024

$1133 BUYS THE MATERIAL TO BUILD THIS HOME

Improved Sensibly. Cut-to-Fit. Approved by Carpenters. When You Build "THE HARRIS WAY" you build to stay. Exclusive cutting and bundling features—special advantages for the careful Home Builder. It is the best, safest and most sensible way to build your ideal home right, without the waste of a single penny.

LOW PRICE STILL IN FORCE

If you are needing a house, either for investment or for a home, write us.

$10,000 FREE Plan Book

Write today for our beautiful $10,000 HARRIS HOME PLAN BOOK now ready. 100 Designs, with floor plans, prices, etc.; explains how we save 25 to 33 1-3% on finished cost. Write Today

Get our FREE Blue Print Plan offer

Your protection—Every sale iron clad guaranteed

HARRIS BROS. CO. Dept. CX-202, Chicago

Lift Corns out with Fingers

A few drops of Freezone applied directly upon a tender, aching corn stops the soreness at once and soon the entire corn or callus loosens and can be lifted off with the fingers without even a twinge of pain.

Freezone

Removes hard corns, soft corns, also corns between the toes and hardened calluses. Does not irritate or inflame the surrounding skin or tissue. You feel no pain when applying it or afterward.

Women! Keep a small bottle of Freezone on your dresser and never let a corn ache twice.

Small bottles can be had at any drug store in the U.S. or Canada

THE EDWARD WESLEY CO., Cincinnati, Ohio

Backed His Faith With a Gift

IT WAS a surprising story which Assistant Superintendent A. C. Baker, of the Bowery Mission in New York, sent to the Christian Herald a few days ago. This is Mr. Baker's statement:

"With all our Christian faith here, with all our fervent belief in prayer, there are certain things that come up in the course of the day's work that amaze us—events that absolutely show God's hand. There can be no possible way of accounting for it otherwise.

"On Friday about noon I was with Dr. Hallimond, and we were talking to a man who had been sent to us for assistance. While this man was destitute, his poverty was due to a chain of circumstances over which he had no control and was not a result of drunkenness or other dissipations. He was quite a talented man and had a splendid knowledge of music. He needed clothing, he needed money, and he needed work.

"While we were talking, a letter came addressed to me from a city in one of the Pacific coast states. Why it should be addressed to me personally I cannot tell, as I have no acquaintances there and naturally friends of the Mission would address their letters direct either to the Mission or to Dr. Hallimond. This inclosed $5, with an unsigned letter. On reading it you will see how remarkably this letter fitted the particular man we were then talking to.

" 'The man who accepts this money is not accepting charity. It came to me from an unexpected source. With it came the thought of the Bowery Mission, and I feel that somewhere in New York there is a man who has forgotten God, or perhaps, because of disappointments or trials, thinks God has forgotten him. But his heavenly Father re his heart and alone knows the desire better things. This is a very sm amount of money, but you see God not trust me with much until he s what I will do, and he may not tr him with much until he sees what will do. My prayers go with this an feel the Mission will somehow be rected to the right man.

" 'Please give this letter to the m who gets the money. He will ne know who sent it and I will never kn who got it; but God has planned it and some time we will meet in the ho prepared for us.

" 'The first five dollars the man spare, he is to give the Bowery Miss to start another man, and he in turn to do the same. On this man rests responsibility of many things. He is know every day a woman is praying him, and with his own prayers and fa in God he cannot fail. It is not all life to live, nor all of death to die.'

" 'A FRIEND.

"Well," added Mr. Baker, " money helped to piece out the ma wardrobe that we could not furn here, give him a considerable bala to tide him over two or three days, just as he was about to leave the te phone rang and a job was opened which he could fill. Just think of t case! It is only one out of hundre but here is a man, dirty, clothele homeless, moneyless, jobless, and three days every one of these ne has been supplied. I know it sou threadbare, but I cannot help repeat to you in a spirit of rejoicing that "G moves in a mysterious way his wond to perform.' "

Why Parents Need to Know English

THE influences that make the child the master of the house sometimes have a strange origin.

A Syrian family lived in a tenement on the East Side, New York City. There was the father and mother, a boy of nine and two younger girls. The father had learned how to read and write English, the mother talked only Syrian. The father got a position in Chicago for six months, and sent money to his family to support them until such time as he could send for them. The letters were given to the boy of nine to interpret.

"The mother," said a Syrian woman who served as an interpreter in one of the International Institutes established by the Young Women's Christian Association to take care of foreign-born women, "came to me one day to say that her husband had written her that she must give half of every month's allowance to the boy, that he might put it in the bank. She had done it for four months, and as he sent her only enough to live on, she had not been able to pay the rent, and they had been evicted. I asked to see the letters, and found that the father had written nothing of the kind. I went home with her and talked to the son. He confessed he had translated the letters that way to get money for himself, all which he had spent on candy and m ing picture shows. I investigated, a found in other homes the children h gained a mastery of the household translating to suit themselves ev message that came written in Engl into the home. This is a danger t we are constantly facing and fighti The most effectual way is to induce parents to study the English languag

◆

Every Question Answered

THE Christian Herald Information Bureau at Washington is conducted for direct service to our readers and will promptly and accurately answer any inquiry on any subject.

If there is any information you want to get quickly and to get it right, send your question, or any number of questions, to this Bureau, and get your answer, at no cost except a stamp enclosed for return postage.

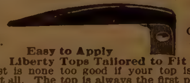
Address
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
INFORMATION BUREAU
Washington, D. C.
FREDERIC J. HASKIN, Director.

Forman Farm Mortgages

netting from 5½% to 6½% have been sold by us for over 34 years to an ever growing number of satisfied clients.

Write for our March 1919 list of offerings.

George M. Forman & Co.
Investment Bankers
Founded 1885
11 S. La Salle St. Central 6020



AUTO TOP COVERS

$8.00 and up.
Parcels Post Paid.

30 x 3 tires $15.0 Other si in propo tion

Easy to Apply
Liberty Tops Tailored to Fit

The best is none too good if your top is worth covering at all. The top is always the first part to w out. Don't buy any old makeshift. Get our new cat with samples and prices of NEW TOPS, TOP COV —SEAT COVERS, TIRES and TUBES.

LIBERTY TOP & TIRE CO., Dept. K CINCINNATI

ORNAMENTAL FENCE

6 Cents per Foot and up. Costs less than wood. 4 designs. All steel. For Lawns, Churches and Ceme teries. Write for free Catalog and Special Prices
Kokomo Fence Machine Co. 498 North St., Kokomo, Ind

7% City, 6%-Farm—First Mortgages. own money invested in all mortgages fered investors. Our farm mortgages made only on Central Texas, black w hog-wallow lands. Not more than of value loaned—usually less. Twe years in business. Write for booklet, "Safe Investmen

R. O. CULP & COMPANY, Mortgage Lo TEMPLE, TE

Marion Harland's Corner

Our Girl of the Future

A SOPHOMORE who plumed himself upon the discovery and free use of short cuts in the paths of rning was descanting upon his success his pet economy.

“You would hardly believe that I y set down to my account an average two hours per diem during the past o months!” he boasted to an elderly end who had left his alma mater ty years behind him. “The sum tal is something to be proud of—eh?”

“Ye-e-s!” assented the other reflec- ely. “But what are you going to do th what you've saved?”

The anecdote came to my mind and s lingered there teasingly ever since I tened last week to the talk of a party young girls exchanging what might called “war experiences,” eight of the zen having crossed the ocean within e past two years.

Training for the Real Things and acticing what the training has taught em have drawn most of the workers vay from home. Hospitals; canteen ubs; camp community service; am- lance-driving; how to put an auto- obile together and to drive it after construction—are some of these same eal Things. “First aid to the injured,” eding the uniformed hungry, and othing ragged and cold boys, were ghtly esteemed works of necessity and ercy. Before going further I would xpress emphatically and unreservedly y reverence for the patriotic labors of merican women throughout the days at have tried the bodies and souls of others, wives and sisters as cruelly as ey have tested the glorious mettle of r soldiers in trench and field.

The girl of the day has borne her full are in the terrible ordeal. In reckon- g up her varied experiences, she might dapt to the summary the poet's eclaration of another mustered force:

> 'Twere worth ten years of peaceful life,
> One glance at that array.”

Yes! Our girl has learned more of the ighty realities in her one—two—three ears of training than her mother reamed of in seventy years of “peace- l life.”

What is she going to do with it?

Peace, and the return of our warriors home and the avocations laid aside at heir country's call, discharge from duty housands of women,—a vast majority f whom are so young that they may ok forward to home-making as the atural and honorable profession of the est of their lives. Housekeeping must ake rank as a necessity to the comfort, ealth and strength of the “soldier re- urned from the war” who, if not ctually demoralized by the different anner of life and action, is not yet uite fit to resume the old routine. He ould tell you that “a fellow is a bit usty and stiff in the joints” after all hat he has done and endured. Even hould his job be ready for him, he oes not handle it so dexterously as of ere. It is a good deal like marking ime, while waiting for marching or harging orders.

Our girl has yet to learn something he might class in metaphysical jargon s “one of the eternal verities”— amely, that the masculine half of the uman unit has never, single-handed, nade a home worthy of the honorable itle. It was not good for Adam to be lone in Eden. It would have wrecked im and the race had not Eve—the “mother of all the living”—brought woman's love and feminine wit to the ask of home-making and housekeeping n the sin-smitten waste outside of the ost paradise.

Granted that our girl is so fortunate as to find her own home ready and waiting for her. To some households inancial reverses have added to the dismal gaps in the line of whilom wage-earners and other of the calamities of “battle, murder and sudden death.” The long list of women widowed by the fall of gallant young husbands “somewhere in Europe,” albeit not printed among “casualities,” is one of the most harrowing side issues of the World's War. Our girl may have been spared this stage of the curriculum.

“The heart may break, yet brokenly live on,” wrote a soldier's widow to me. “I am trying to gather up the remnants of my life and make then into something worthy of his wife.”

She could design no worthier monument to the memory of a patriotic martyr.

Do any of us comprehend fully what desolations have been wrought in our own land by the tempest that has devastated the fairest of foreign countries? Lost fortunes, crippled energies, high prices and scarcity of food; abridged salaries with one class, and exorbitant wages to be paid to another; the shortage of laborers and the incompetence of substitutes for skilled workmen—why prolong the dreary list of agencies that have cut down what was comfortably regarded by the owners as a sufficient provision for a rainy day?

Our girl is fortunate if she meets with no such changes at home. In any event she is sure to feel the sharp transition from her late career to comparative monotony, and be appalled by that most disheartening prospect of “nothing particular to do.” Sometimes imagination subjoins “so far as I can see, for the rest of my natural existence.”

What then is she to do with the earnings of camp, club, and community that have enriched heart and mind and contented her aspirations during the training? Has she thrown all into the compost heap?

Setting aside for the time the manifold advantages of acquiring habits of law and order; of accepting without quibble that which her superiors in her adopted profession decree shall be done; the rigid adjustment of time and the arbitrary assignment of unfamiliar duties—come we to the fact that, if she have worked well and steadily, she has gained in bodily strength and ability to sustain a steady strain upon nervous forces she would not have deemed possible three years agone. We have read of the excellent farming done during the last twelvemonth by farmer's daughters in the absence of drafted men. Agricultural journals are preaching the advantages of poultry raising throughout regions where this has heretofore been taken hold of in an amateurish and desultory way. Why leave the field to elderly women who drag out “egg and chicken raising” after the manner of foremothers of the century before the last? If your home is in the country, bring to bear upon this industry, as upon other branches of scientific farming, the mental and physical forces you have gained by the strenuous processes of your life in what you like to name “the service.”

You made time and developed strength sufficient to compound nourishing broths for invalids, and racked your brains to devise palatable sandwiches for canteen distribution. You wore the tips of your fingers raw in folding bandages and knitting socks for the boys in khaki.

Now that they are, thank God! safely housed in their respective quarters —which you women are to transform into homes—let the sick and poor in your church and neighborhood profit by the skill you have manifested so worthily in time of national distress. Seek out the suffering in country hut and city slum, as if this were but another limb of that service. Without the delay of a day begin your mission in almshouse and back street.

And let this “intensive examination” of sphere and capabilities be conducted prayerfully along the principles that guided and sustained you in the “career.” The future of America depends more truly upon those who are to make the homes and train the generation that is to fill these, than upon foreign conferences and domestic legislation. Never before since the beginning of time have women held so much power; never has their theater of action been so wide.

Will they be found wanting in the supreme crisis?

People Must Have Cleaner Teeth

All Statements Approved by High Dental Authorities

That Film Must Go

Teeth cleaning methods must be changed, as every authority knows.

It is not sufficient to remove food debris. A clinging film causes most tooth troubles, and that must be combated.

Stop and think. Millions of people brush their teeth twice daily. Yet teeth discolor and decay. Tartar forms on them, pyorrhea is not prevented. Statistics show that tooth troubles are alarmingly increasing.

The reason lies in a film—in that slimy film which your tongue reveals. It clings to the teeth; it gets into crevices, hardens and stays and resists the tooth brush.

That film is what discolors—not the teeth. It hardens into tartar. It holds food substances which ferment and form acid. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth to cause decay.

It is such a germ-breeder that dentists call it “bacterial plaque.” And germs, with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea. Thus nearly all tooth troubles are nowadays traced to that film.

There is where old methods fail. Many a dentifrice even tends to make the film more resistant to the brush.

You must use a method to combat that film to ever have clean, safe teeth.

See What Pepsodent Does

Science has found an efficient way to combat that film. There is no question about it. Able authorities have proved it by many clinical tests. Leading dentists everywhere are urging its adoption. And anyone can prove it in a week.

This method is embodied in a dentifrice called Pepsodent. We send a 10-Day Tube to anyone who asks, and we urge you to make this test.

Pepsodent is based on pepsin, the digestant of albumin. The film is albuminous matter. The object of pepsin is to dissolve it, then to constantly combat it.

Pepsin alone is inert. It must be activated, and the usual method is an acid harmful to the teeth. That fact for long made pepsin seem impossible.

But science now has found a harmless activating method. Five governments have already granted patents. That method has made active pepsin possible in Pepsodent.

A new dental era has opened with this discovery. Few things have ever aroused so much dental enthusiasm. Now we ask you, for your own sake, to see just what it does.

Send this coupon for a 10-Day Tube. Use it like any tooth paste. Note how clean the teeth feel after using. Mark the absence of the slimy film. See how the teeth whiten—how they glisten—as the fixed film disappears.

That means that the great tooth wrecker has been conquered. You will never clean teeth in the old way when you know that.

Cut out the coupon now.

10-Day Tube Free

THE PEPSODENT CO.,
Dept. 412, 1104 S. Wabash Ave.,
Chicago, Ill.

Mail 10-Day Tube of Pepsodent to

Name ....

Address ....

Return your empty tooth paste tubes to the nearest Red Cross Station

Pepsodent REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

The New-Day Dentifrice

A Scientific Product—Sold by Druggists Everywhere (156)

Mother: Keep a jar of Musterole handy

Sometimes, in the night, Pain comes to your house. Then is the time, most of all, when you rely on good old Musterole. No fuss, no bother, no worry—no messing about with plasters or waiting for water to heat.

Quickly you go to the Musterole jar. A bit of that clean white ointment on little Bobbie's chest, and lightly you rub it in. A gentle tingle of skin puts Doctor Nature to work, and soon a healing warmth reaches the congested spot. Then comes a soothing coolness, and Bobbie drowses off to sleep.

For coughs, congestions, bronchitis and croup, Musterole is uncommonly effective. It is good, too, to drive away the pains of rheumatism, lumbago and neuralgia.

Musterole relieves — without discomfort.

It is better than a mustard plaster, with all the virtues of the old-time plaster but none of its disadvantages.

Musterole does not blister. And it is easy to apply. Just rub it on. Rub it on—for little Bobbie's cold—for Sister's bronchitis—for Grandma's pains in chest or back. It's an old-fashioned remedy in a new-fashioned form.

Keep a jar handy.

Many doctors and nurses recommend Musterole. 30c and 60c jars. $2.50 hospital size.

The Musterole Co., Cleveland, Ohio

BETTER THAN A MUSTARD PLASTER

MUSTEROLE
WILL NOT BLISTER

"I Would Not Part with it for $10,000"

So writes an enthusiastic, grateful customer. In like manner testify over 100,000 people who have worn it. Conserve your body and life first.

The Natural Body Brace

Overcomes WEAKNESS and ORGANIC AILMENTS of WOMEN AND MEN. Develops erect, graceful figure.

Brings restful relief, comfort, ability to do things, health and strength.

For Children Also

Wear It 30 Days Free at Our Expense

Does away with the strain and pain of standing and walking; replaces and supports misplaced internal organs; reduces enlarged abdomen; straightens and strengthens the back; corrects stooping shoulders; develops lungs, chest and bust; relieves backache, curvatures, nervousness, ruptures, constipation. Comfortable and easy to wear.

Keep Yourself Fit

Write today for illustrated booklet, measurement blank, etc., and read our very liberal proposition.

HOWARD C. RASH, Pres. Natural Body Brace Co.
171 Rash Building SALINA, KANSAS

Snug Comfort for Tired Feet

A seasonable gift for the army or navy man

Parker's Arctic Socks
Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Warm, restful, healthful, for bed-chamber, bath, sickroom. Easier than stiff-sole slippers. Worn in rubber boots absorb perspiration. Made of knitted fabric lined with soft wool fleece. Washable, unshrinkable. Parker's name in every pair. In all sizes at dealers or sent postpaid for 50 cents a pair.

J. H. PARKER CO., DEPT. C, 25 JAMES ST., MALDEN, MASS.

Trees—Roses—Vines

in small or large lots at half agents' prices. Catalog and Green's Fruit Book—FREE. Green's Nursery Co. 69 Wall St., Rochester, N. Y.

The Cities of Refuge

International Sunday School Lesson for March 16
Joshua 20

Our Responsibility Toward Offenders

By Rev. George D. Allison, Ph.D.

THE establishment of the cities of refuge deals with the ancient custom of blood revenge in a practical, constructive way. It ameliorated the fierce primitive justice of the desert and the pasture lands while conserving the value of human life and reemphasizing the guilt of murder. It shows how gradually and step by step God's children have been led to higher ideals of human responsibility. Joshua did not attempt to sweep away old and deep-rooted convictions, but to modify them.

Today's lesson deals with an upward step in the slow substitution of law for force, of considered and wise redemption instead of ruthless vengeance. A like problem is engaging the attention of the great Peace Conference in the planning of a League of Nations. We are too apt to think of the Mosaic Code as a harsh and rigorous set of statutes. In its inception it lifted the Hebrew commonwealth far above the crude principles of the Bedouin and the Canaanite. God was educating his people. The Law was a schoolmaster to lead us to Christ.

So in the 20th of Joshua we see accidental homicide put on a different plane from wilful murder, the duty of a relative to secure vengeance modified by the duty of society and the church to secure fair play. We see here the beginning of juries, of courts, of the orderly hearing of a case, of a wise social policy in the hard matter of guilt and penalty.

The Duty of the Church Toward Offenders

Society as a whole has suffered terribly from the natural human instinct to get revenge. Not only are many wars fundamentally due to this reaction of human nature, but we have the vendettas of southern Italy and the feuds of mountaineers as illustrations of the retardation of whole communities by this evil. Each of these conditions, now passing away, was possible under a form of Christianity imperfectly understood! Yet we still have to contend with the widespread tendency of judges and juries, and even legislatures, to think of our system of justice as essentially penal, "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth," under modern restrictions. But happily the atmosphere of the teachings of Christ has secured a hearing for a larger view, and everywhere the necessary punishments that are to deter the evil and safeguard society are modified by measures looking toward the redemption of the offender and his possible rehabilitation as a useful member of the human family. It is still the duty of the Church of Christ to protest against cruel punitive measures, unwholesome and demoralizing jails and courts, and the exploitation of the prisoner by the hirelings of political rings.

Some one has said that the last place for an erring girl or a wayward boy to go for help is to the church! Surely this cannot be true, or the spirit of the Master has not been manifested by his disciples. I would rather believe that the men of the shepherd heart, the followers of the Friend of sinners, had made possible the Juvenile Court as a city of refuge for the very young when overtaken by folly and sin. The manufacture of criminals out of juvenile delinquents has got to be stopped.

On the other hand, there is a streak of sentimentality in the attitude of many good people toward the wrongdoer. There is a large measure of unpunished crime that tends to break down public justice. This very subject of murder is still an acute problem in our own United States. It is horrible to read of the thousands of cases that occur annually. "Thou shalt not kill" is still deserving of emphasis in the rehearsal of the Ten Commandments. In our land it seems harder to convict a murderer than a misdemeanant, just as it is harder to punish a wholesale plunderer of the people than a petty thief. Through the ancient code of the Bible runs a passion for justice that we must cultivate in our communities: justice for the accused prisoner and justice also for the injured victim of malice or of greed.

The Attitude of the Christian Believer

We all share the social responsibility for offenders, but we frequently have a more personal and less vague duty as individuals as well. Jesus in his commendation of the righteous in the parable of the judgment includes "I was in prison and ye came unto me." A great many people believe in visiting the sick who draw the line at extending Christian ministry to wrongdoers. We have an immense prison population nowadays for the exercise of this Christian grace, that is sure. And it is undoubtedly true that a small percentage of prisoners have the benefit of any personal Christian visitation in the name of Jesus—not that of professional chaplains or prison visitors, but of loyal friends who have learned of Jesus to cherish the sinner without condoning his sin. That is a difficult art indeed. Yet our Lord sets us the example of a perfect charity and sympathy without the slightest lowering of moral standards.

It is a moving thing to visit a convicted acquaintance and to see the ravages of self-loathing, of shame and discontent, which go on in countless human souls. "What, you came to see me, you are still willing to recognize me?" exclaimed one tortured woman to her neighbor. "I don't know why I did it; I don't know what I could have been thinking of!" has been the cry of many a youth sitting disconsolate in his cell. How such need to be helped when they attempt to resume social life again, with all the inevitable suspicion they encounter! Others, too, stubbornly refuse to repent of evil, or even to visualize their own guilt and responsibility. Verily, we need the wisdom of our Master if we would fulfil this Christlike task aright. May love and tact go hand in hand with uncompromising loyalty to justice and obedience to the laws of God, when one of us who has studied this world-old problem tries to win a soul that has gone astray.

By the way, how do we treat those who have committed petty personal offenses against us? There is a lot of friction in human intercourse, but it is accentuated by the spirit of retaliation that animates so many otherwise decent citizens. Many are almost as implacable over some petty offense of speech or conduct in a friend as the ancient avenger of blood seemed to have been over the murder of his nearest and dearest relative! Countless men and women are lost to the Christian Church because some of our best members are not skilled in the gentle art of forgiveness. How dare we repeat so often, "Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us"?

Our City of Refuge

We are all offenders in one way or another. "Unwittingly and unawares" we are constantly violating the wise principles of the Kingdom of God. "Who can understand his errors," indeed? Yet God is our refuge and our help. Like the ancient fugitive, our souls flee to the city that hath the foundations. We need his wise justice, chastening, healing, redeeming. He does not spare us all the consequences of our sins, but even his strokes are redemptive. "He hath not dealt with us after our sins, nor rewarded us after our iniquities."

He hides us in his pavilion from the strife of tongues. He prepares a table before us in the very presence of our enemies. The city of refuge for every human soul is God our loving Father, "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ."

KNITTING WOO

Direct From Mill

Extra fine quality four-ply woolen y just released for home distribution. T wool was used extensively during the for soldiers' and sailors' sweaters, so helmets and wristlets. Unusually soft warm—easy knitting with comforta "give." Khaki, oxford, natural, wh black, navy, salmon, canary, turquo peacock. Sent postpaid, insured, the d we get your order. Free samples on request. 2-lb. carton (4 hanks to $3 per lb. 5-lb. carton $2.80 per lb. Se money, money order or bank draft. Sat faction guaranteed or money refunde

Immediate delivery—Order today

F. W. WALTER
Dept. F 43 Letitia St., Philadelphia,

Paint Without O

Remarkable Discovery That Cu Down the Cost of Paint Seventy-Five Per Cent.

A Free Trial Package is Mailed to Everyone Who Writes

A. L. Rice, a prominent manufacturer of Ada N. Y., has discovered a process of making a n kind of paint without the use of oil. He call Powdrpaint. It comes in the form of a dry powd and all that is required is cold water to make a pa weather proof, fire proof, sanitary and durable outside or inside painting. It is the cement pr ciple applied to paint. It adheres to any surfa wood, stone or brick, spreads and looks like paint and costs about one-fourth as much.

Write to Mr. A. L. Rice, Manufacturer, North Street, Adams, N. Y., and he will send a free trial package, also color card and full in mation showing you how you can save many doll Write today.

KEEPS SHOES SHAPEL
HIDES LARGE JOINT

FOR MEN OR WOMEN

10 DAYS FREE TRIAL

Fischer PROTECTOR

Affords instant relief for bunions and large join hides irregularities of foot form. Worn in any sh no larger size required. Over one half million use. Ask your shoe dealer or druggist. Write t day for special free trial offer. No pay if no reli State size of shoes and if for right or left foot.

THE FISCHER MANUFACTURING CO.
First National Bank Building, Dept. 50, Milwaukee, W

HOOSIER STOVES & RANGES FRE

To try in your home 30 days free no matter where you li Show your friends, send it back at our expense if you do want to keep it. Million members of families enjoying comforts and pleasures "Hoosier" Stoves & Range perfect bakers and heaters, be tifully finished, smooth la design, guaranteed for years. Write for our big free book sho ing photographs, describing lar assortment of sizes and desi of Steel and Cast Ranges, Cooks, and Hard Coal Heaters, to select fr explaining our free trial. Send po today.

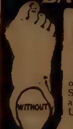
HOOSIER STOVE CO.
164 State St., Marion, In

STRAIGHTEN YOUR TOES
BANISH THAT BUNION



ACFIELD'S
Perfection Toe Spring
Worn at night, with auxiliary appliance for day use Removes the Actual Cause of the enlarged joint and bunion. Sent on approval. Money back if not as represented. Send outline of foot. Use my Improved Instep Support for weak arches.
Full particulars and advice free in plain envelope.

C. R. ACFIELD, Foot Specialties Estab. 1901
MARBRIDGE BUILDING
Dept. 348, 1328 Broadway (at 34th St.), New Yor

Keeps Skin Smooth, Firm, Fres Youthful Lookin

To dispel the tell-tale lines of age, illness or worry—to overcome flabbiness and improve facial contour—there is nothing quite so good as plain

Powdered SAXOLITE

Effective for wrinkles, crowsfeet, enlarged pores, etc., because it "tightens" and tones the skin and underlying tissue. No harm to tenderest skin. Get an ounce package, follow the simple directions—see what just one application will do. Sold at all drug stores.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 8
THE C. S. BELL CO., Est. 1858, Hillsboro, Ohio

The Companion of the Healthy

BAKER'S COCOA

tastes good and is good

It is a great aid toward the maintenance of health and strength, as it is absolutely pure, wholesome, and possesses real food value, more than one quarter of it being a pure and easily digested fat.

Booklet of Choice Recipes sent free

Walter Baker & Co. Ltd.
Dorchester, Mass.
Established 1780

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

How Can I Earn Some Money?

In These Days of Readjustment

How can I, a woman absolutely without previous experience, earn the money so necessary to the welfare and happiness of myself and those dependent upon me?

We are answering this question most satisfactorily to thousands of women. They are now engaged in a pleasant, dignified and profitable business, as our representatives selling

World's Star
Hosiery and Kleen-Knit Underwear

to their friends and neighbors. As we have shown them, we can show you, the fine independent way to have more money to spend—to meet the increased cost of living—to help support the family—to educate the children, etc.

More Than 17,000 Women Helped

They are now enjoying constant increasing sales. Their incomes are growing larger every day. You can do the same as they have done.

Write today. We will send you our beautifully Illustrated Catalogue—shows how easy it is to become a World's Star Money Maker.

WORLD'S STAR KNITTING CO.
DEPT. 111 BAY CITY MICH
Over 24 Years in Business

The Broom Rack That Harry Made

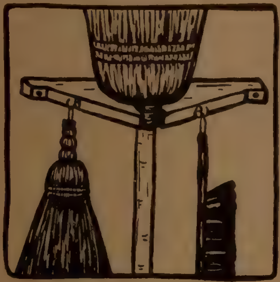
By Laura A. Kirkman

One day Harry's baby brother crept into the kitchen closet and knocked over the broom which stood, turned upside down, in one corner.

Harry comforted the little fellow, who was more frightened than hurt, and then set his wits to work to make a rack upon which the broom could hang. This is the kind he made:

He sawed a piece of heavy wood the shape of the piece in the illustration, cutting out a block in the center 1½ inches square into which the broom would fit. On each of the sloping front edges of the rack he put little hooks for smaller brushes. He attached the rack to the wall by two screws, driven in, one at each end.

"There! Baby won't ever frighten himself again with the broom," he said as he finished the work, "and Mother won't be bothered by picking it up every time it topples over."



◆

O Boys! Boys!

A great special treat is coming for you next week. "Leif the Lucky" is a thrilling account of the boldest adventurer that ever sailed the seas. It's a true, gripping tale of the first discovery of America, away back 500 years before Columbus. It's written and pictured to meet the boy's natural love for true nobility and brave deeds in a noble cause. Girls will like Leif too, and so will grown-up people.

◆

A conference of the Presbyterian and United Presbyterian denominations has been called to be held in Pittsburg March 11 and 12, with the idea of an organic union of these churches, and 200 ministers and laymen from different parts of the country have agreed to take part in such a conference. The United Presbyterian Church was formed in 1858 by the merging of the Associate and Associate Reformed churches. The one big difference between the Presbyterian and the United Presbyterian churches is that of music. The United Presbyterian Church has used exclusively the Psalms, although recent acts of its General Assembly have permitted the use of other parts of the Scriptures, and the latest issue of songs from its board of publication contains a number of choruses not found in the old book. The union will probably allow congregations to settle for themselves the music to be used in the worship of praise. Pittsburg is the center of Presbyterianism, the Board of Home Missions, the Board of Church Extension, the Board of Freedmen's Work, the Board of Publication and its largest seminary being located there. The union would make the new church the largest denomination in the Pittsburg district.

◆

State Legislatures.—No less than forty-three state legislatures are meeting this year. With only two exceptions these bodies are already in session. Legislatures of Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi and Virginia will not meet during 1919.

RECEIVING TELLER
"YOU CAN SAVE MONEY BY WEARING W. L. DOUGLAS SHOES"

W.L.Douglas
"THE SHOE THAT HOLDS ITS SHAPE"

$4.00 $4.50 $5.00 $6.00 $7.00 & $8.00

FOR MEN
FOR WOMEN
W.L.DOUGLAS $5.00 SHOE

BOYS' SHOES
Best in the World
$3 $3.50 $4

If you have been paying $10.00 to $12.00 for fine shoes, a trial will convince you that for style, comfort and service W.L.Douglas $7.00 and $8.00 shoes are equally as good and will give excellent satisfaction. The actual value is determined and the retail price fixed at the factory before W.L.Douglas name and the retail price is stamped on the bottom. The stamped price is W. L. Douglas personal guarantee that the shoes are always worth the price paid for them. The retail prices are the same everywhere. They cost no more in San Francisco than they do in New York.

Stamping the price on every pair of shoes as a protection against high prices and unreasonable profits is only one example of the constant endeavor of W.L.Douglas to protect his customers. The quality of W. L. Douglas product is guaranteed by more than 40 years experience in making fine shoes. The smart styles are the leaders in the fashion centres of America. They are made in a well-equipped factory at Brockton, Mass., by the highest paid, skilled shoemakers under the direction and supervision of experienced men, all working with an honest determination to make the best shoes for the price that money can buy.

CAUTION—Before you buy be sure W.L.Douglas name and the retail price is stamped on the bottom and the inside top facing. If the stamped price has been mutilated, BEWARE OF FRAUD.

For sale by 106 W.L.Douglas stores and over 9000 W. L. Douglas dealers, or can be ordered direct from factory by mail, Parcel Post charges prepaid. Write for Illustrated Catalog showing how to order by mail.

W.L.Douglas

President W.L.DOUGLAS SHOE COMPANY,
165 SPARK STREET,
BROCKTON - - MASS.

In-Woven Durability

Silk hosiery, bought for its appearance, is judged by the length of service it provides.

Black Cat
Reinforced Silk Hosiery

is made doubly strong at strain points where the wear comes—heels, toes, soles and hems. Extra extended toes, high spliced heels and strengthened silk-lisle garter tops add long life to its sheer beauty.

Dealers who offer utmost value will be glad to show you the Black Cat line—not only for women, but also for men and children. Always look for the Black Cat on the toe.

Black Cat Textiles Co.
Makers also of Cooper's-Bennington Underwear for Men Kenosha, Wis.

The Easter King
A Story-Cantata

Combines in one service the attractive features of a "Story and Song Service" an Easy Grade Cantata and a Carol Service. Send 25 cents for a complete copy and one each of our new Easter Carol Services entitled "Morn of Light" and "Victory Divine."
Money back if you want it

TULLAR-MEREDITH CO., 249 W. 36th Street, New York

YARN AT A SAVING. Superior Quality Germantown Zephyr and Knitting Worsted, direct from the mill at lowest prices. All the popular colors. Send for free samples. Agents wanted.
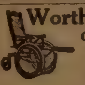
AMERICAN SPINNING CO., 33 N. 4th St., Philadelphia



Worthington Quality
Chairs and Tricycles
The Colson Co.
925 Cedar St., Elyria, O.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

Every reader of The Christian Herald will be glad to learn that The Christian Herald will publish soon

A HISTORY of THE GREAT WAR
1914—1919

In addition to the volume on the Great War all purchasers of this new history will receive later

FREE OF CHARGE

a separate cloth bound supplement giving the final PEACE TERMS and a series of Colored Maps and other valuable war information.

READ THE FULL DETAILS IN THE PHOTO-GRAVURE SECTION
MARCH 22
The CHRISTIAN HERALD

MARVEL FREE TRIAL COMPLETE BATH OUTFIT HOT WATER
BIG BATH TUB
No Sewer or Plumbing—Move Anywhere
The Thermotub, combined bathtub and water heater. Gives all comforts of modern bathroom. Full length tub. Plenty hot water quick. Write today. Ask also about our Odorless Indoor Closet and Washstand. Make any room complete bathroom.
HOM-EQUIP NAT'L HOME EQUIPMENT CO.
103 Nat'l Building, Detroit, Mich.

Our Mail-Bag

NOTICE

The editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the writer, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

F. B. F., Swissvale, Pa. In the issue of the Christian Herald for September 25 (Questions and Answers column) the following sentence occurs, which I take to be an answer to a question asked by "Reader, Tivoli-on-Hudson," "There are things that cannot be explained by intellectual processes, yet we know them to be facts." Would you oblige a reader by stating what these things are? Do you mean the universe, or life, or consciousness?

The remark might be applied to all three. Life itself is a miracle and an enigma, and the universe an insolvable mystery, surpassing human comprehension, although it has been the study of reverent minds from the days of Enoch (according to tradition the first to build a tower for the study of the heavens) until the present time. Geology, zoology, astronomy, chemistry present fields of study for man which serve to make him realize more and more his own littleness and incapacity. We are conscious of many things we cannot explain. The processes of the mind themselves are a study which baffles us, although we recognize them as actualities. At times, when the mind is on some particular quest, and seems on the verge of discovery, we find it halted by our limitations, and we feel as though our intellectual horizon did not extend beyond a small circle—one might almost say that its boundary is like the rim of a saucer contrasted with infinity. In theology, too, we find inexplicable things. Of the love of Christ, which we feel to be real, it is well said that it passeth knowledge (Eph. 3 19). Even assuming that there are many minds gifted with large vision, we know that these too have their limitations. Paul expresses this very finely when he says that there are many things which we now see through a glass darkly (I Cor. 13 : 12) (meaning that we cannot now comprehend them), but which, by and by, with enlarged spiritual vision, we shall see clearly for ourselves. Job, too, expressed the same thing when he said: "For I know that my Redeemer liveth . . . whom I shall see for myself and not another" (Job 19 : 25). See the thought also expressed in Heb. 11 : 1, which the Revised Version better translates "faith in the assurance (i. e. certainty) of things hoped for, the proving of things not seen."

Mrs. E. M. G., Knoxville, Pa., writes: "A few years after the Civil War closed, I read a certain poem, and have many times since wished I could know the name of the author and could bring to mind the forgotten lines. I send you what I can remember, in hopes that some of your readers can furnish what is missing, and the author's name.

"They say war's o'er; that peace has come,
And bid my heart rejoice . . .
Must I rejoice? Perchance I might,
Were this but all the price.
Ah! did my jewels, did my tears,
My broken heart suffice?
Go, count upon the battle-field,
Ten thousand nameless graves,
Call on the wandering winds for sighs,
Go tell the ocean's waves
To yield their dead; the prison walls
To shriek their sick'ning tales."

N. E. P., Fryeburg, Me. Mr. Hoover may have made such a remark, but it is more likely a mere sensational newspaper report.

Rev. L. G., Cortez, Colo. The passage, "Death rides on every passing breeze," is from the verses by Bishop Heber, entitled "At a Funeral."

Rev. D. H. Klinefelter, pastor Methodist Episcopal Church, Honolulu, T. H., writes thanking all readers of this paper who responded to his appeal for copies of the Christian Herald. He says: "I cannot send individual letters to each, and so ask that you should thank them for us."

Mrs. N. H. W., Glens Falls, N. Y. The house in which President Wilson lived while in Paris, No. 28 Rue de Monceau, is the residence of the Murat family, many members of which family are listed in the Paris directory as residing at that address. The member of the Murat family who lived in America was Prince Achille Murat, eldest son of the king of Naples and Caroline, sister of Napoleon I. His wife, who was known as Madame Murat, was a Miss Kate Grey, daughter of a widow Grey who afterward became Mrs. Willis, which has led to her daughter being erroneously known as Kate Willis. Miss Grey was a niece of George Washington, and by her marriage she became niece of Napoleon I. The Murats lived in and near Tallahassee, Florida, where Prince Murat was known for his eccentricities. They lived for two years in Brussels, which place they were forced to leave for political reasons. Prince Murat died two years before the coup d'état of Napoleon III, after which event Madame Murat visited France and was received as a member of the imperial family, and the sum of 125,000 francs was given to her by the emperor. The Prince and Princess Murat are buried in the Episcopal Cemetery in Tallahassee.

Rev. H. E. Marsland, of Amityville, N. Y., writes: "I was interested in the account of the work of Mr. Anthony Demo, '84 years young,' of the Presbyterian Church, Caledonia, Minn., which appeared in the columns of your January 22 issue. In answer to your query if your readers could match this record, I would like to call your attention to the case of Mr. Isaac Valentine, of Simpson M. E. Church, Amityville, N. Y. Mr. Valentine has been a Christian for over seventy years, and a member of the M. E. Church for nearly as long. He is a class-leader, conducting a class every Sunday morning at 10 o'clock. He is also a trustee, a steward, and sexton of the church. He fires and attends the furnace, cleans the church, rings the bell, saws and splits the cordwood. He is the most active man in the church and is in the ninety-first year of his youth."

Our nonagenarian friend is a wonder and a fine example of the cheerful, helpful worker. We are puzzled to know whether his counterpart is to be found. Perhaps some pastor knows.

T. H. M., Adairsville, Ga. 1 and 2. The office of general exists only when specially created by Congress. Before the recent war there had been but four generals— Washington, Grant, Sherman and Sheridan. There are now two generals—Peyton C. March, Chief of Staff, commissioned May 20, 1918, and John J. Pershing, commissioned October 6, 1917. 3. While Mohammedanism is increasing, especially among the pagan tribes of Africa, its increase in the world at large is slower than that of Christianity, and its importance as a world force is very much less, as is shown by the failure of the "holy war" proclaimed by the Turks at the behest of the Kaiser, and the readiness of Mohammedan troops to fight for England and France against their Turkish coreligionists.

W. H. H. A., Albuquerque, New Mex., writes: "In the Mail-Bag I noticed an article from I. C., Utah, in which it is claimed the Mormon cult now holds the balance of power in the State of New Mexico and some other Western states. Not being acquainted with political matters in these states, other than New Mexico, I am unable to pass judgment; but I will say the writer's assertion in regard to New Mexico being even in the least dominated by the Mormon cult, is entirely without foundation. There are a few Mormons living in this state, in two or three small settlements, but their numbers are so small as to render them powerless in the political affairs of our state. Should I live until July 4, I will have completed a residence of forty years in New Mexico. In all that time I never have once heard the word Mormon used in connection with political affairs."

Constant Reader, Ozeana, Va. We would recommend that you correspond with the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, Ill.

Old Subscriber, Fort Plain, N. Y. The gifts that have been showered upon our President by the different nationalities of Europe are tributes of love and gratitude for what he, as the representative of this republic, is doing for the welfare and future happiness of Europe and the world. We think it would be a most ungracious thing to refuse these tributes, and would offend and hurt many who have taken this as the only means of expressing their appreciation.

Subscriber, Franklin, Me. The passage in Rom. 11 : 29 is better translated "The gifts and calling of God are not to be repented of," or "cannot be repented of." It means that the calling is that sovereign act by which God, in the exercise of his free choice, called Abraham to be the father of a peculiar people. Paul applies this to the descendants of Abraham, both Jews, and Gentiles who are redeemed under the Gospel, and who, through the divine pleasure, receive the very same love which chose the fathers, in the form of a gift.

W. P. L., Mulvane, W. Va. In Rev. 8 : 9, we have the statement that "the third part of the creatures which were in the sea and the third part of the ships" were destroyed, and W. P. L. asks if one would be justified in estimating that the total shipping lost during the war from all causes was equal to one-third of the world's tonnage? We have sent his letter to Dr. Gray, who may have some views to express on the matter.

Christian Issues in RECONSTRUCTION BOOKS WITH PURPOSE AP
NEW BOOKS
Marks of a World Christian
DANIEL JOHNSON FLEMING, Ph.D.
An "Everyday Life" Book. Cloth, 75
Shows in a vigorous way that real Christians must be world Christians.
World Facts and America's Responsibility
CORNELIUS H. PATTON Cloth, $1.0
America's new international obligations in view of the world situation.
International Aspects of Christianity
OZORA S. and GRACE T. DAVIS Cloth, $1.
The growth of the world point of view is traced throughout the ages.
Standard Books with a NEW Application
The Social Principles of Jesus
WALTER RAUSCHENBUSCH Cloth, 75
A unique approach by one who stood high in the field of social Christianity.
Christianizing Community Life WARD-EDWARDS Cloth, 75
Strikingly useful in a Reconstruction library; gives simple, practical directions for discussion and for ACTUAL WORK in bettering conditions.
At your Book Store or from us
Write for Folder: Reconstruction Books ASSOCIATION PRESS
Publication Department
International Committee, Y. M. C. A.
347 MADISON AVENUE - NEW YORK

Church Organs
LATEST APPROVED METHODS. HIGHEST GRADE ONLY. ESTABLISHED 1827.
Main Office and Works: Kendal Green, Mass Hook & Hastings Co.
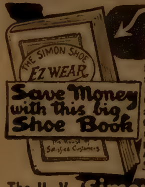
BRANCHES
Boston, New York, Phila., Chicago, Louisville, Dalla



THE SIMON SHOE
EZ WEAR
Save Money with this big Shoe Book

This FREE Shoe Book
is crowded with photograph and descriptions of Ez Wea Shoes for Men, Women an Children. Ez Wear shoe are sent postpaid, guaran teed to combine comfort style and quality, to fi perfectly or money back Amazingly low prices.
Send for your copy today
The H. V. Simon Shoe 1589 BROADWAY BROOKLYN, N.Y

Cuticura Heals Itching Burning Skin Troubles
All druggists; Soap 25, Ointment 25 and 50, Talcum 25. Sample each free of "Cuticura, Dept. M, Boston."

Put on with common pen

PAYSON'S INDELIBLE INK
Friend of the thrifty housewife. In use 84 years. Identifies all laundry pieces—linens, cottons, woolens, etc. Will not run, fade or wash out. At stores everywhere or sent postpaid for 25c.
Payson's Indelible Ink Co., 726-728 Henshaw Ave., Northampton, Ma

A High School Course In Two Years!
Learn in your own home. Here is a thorough, complete, and simplified high school course that you can finish in two years. Meets all college entrance requirements. Prepared by leading members of the faculties of universities and academies.
Write for booklet. Send your name and address for our booklet and full particulars. No obligations whatever. Write today—now.
American School of Correspondence, Dept. H 2493, Chicago, U. S. A.

Q. E. D. OR NEW LIGHT ON THE DOCTRINE OF CREATIO
By PROF. GEORGE McCREADY PRICE. Cloth Only 75
The Last Word of Science on the Oldest Problem of Religion
"Deals the death-blow to the evolution theory."—Evangelica
F. H Revell Co., 158 5th Ave., N.Y.; 17 N. Wabash Ave., Chica

Engagements of the Evangelists

THE following engagements of workers belonging to the Interdenominational Association of Evangelists have been furnished by Rev. Parley E. Zartmann, general secretary, Winona Lake, Indiana:

Steve Burke and Harry Dixon Loes—March, Montpelier, Ida.

Callis-Gossett party—Until March 23, St. Lawrence, S. D.; March 26–April 13, Oldham, S. D.; April 16–May 4, White, S. D.; May 7-25, Burke, S. D.; June 1–22, Chemung, Ill.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold C. Clase—March, New Castle, Ind.; April, Detroit, Mich.

The Conners—Until March 9, Piqua, O.; March 10-30, Weston, W. Va.; April 6-27, Belle Center, O.

O. L. Cotterell—March, Fall River, Kan.

John W. Erskine-Breaw party—Until March 9, Marseilles, O.

W. A. Erwin party—March, Ferris, Tex.; April, Seymour, Tex.

Eric A. Fernlund—March, Grantsburg, Wis.; April, Minneapolis, Minn.

Clyde Lee Fife—March, Duquoin, Ill.; April, Sour Lake, Ind.

E. J. Forsythe party—March 30, Detroit, Mich.

Joseph W. Hakes—Until April 1, Center and E. Brunswick, N. J.

Herbert C. Hart—March, Philadelphia, Pa.; March-April, New Jersey.

Andrew Johnson—March 16—April, Hazard, Ky.; May, Collingswood, N. J.

John M. Linden—Until March 9, Hillsboro, Ore.; March 12–30, Tulare, Calif.

H. J. Magonigal—Mar., Preston, Md.

Harry Maxwell—Until March 9, Mattoon, Ill.; March 16-23, Rushville, Ind.; March 30–April 20, Mt. Vernon, Ind.

W. C. Mealing and wife—March, Lancaster, Pa.; April, Halifax, Pa.

Sara C. Palmer party—March, Canton, O.

W. A. Pugsley—March, Eureka, N. Y.

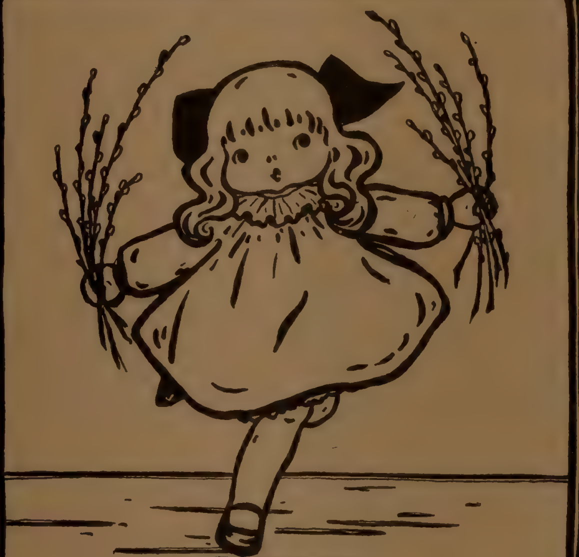
Harold F. Sayles—Until March 16, Otsego, Mich.; March 23-April 6, Irving, Ill.; April 13-27, Woodland, Mich.

Myrtle Saylor and singer—March, Sully, Iowa.

William A. Sunday party—Until March 9, St. Augustine, Fla.; March 11–16, Tampa, Fla.; until May 4, San Antonio, Tex.

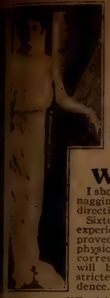
Von Bruch party—Spring 1919, Evansville, Ind.; Buffalo, N. Y.; New Castle, Pa.; Los Angeles, Calif.; Chicago, Ill.; Wolverton, Minn.

John E. Zoller—March, South Jackson, Mich.; April, South Bay City, Mich.



I·found·these·Pussy-willows
When·I·went·out·to-day,
And·heard·a·Robin Redbreast
So·Spring·is·on·the way!

·Elizabeth·FitzHugh·



Weigh What You Should!

I positively build you up—or I reduce you to normal. I have done it for 87,000 women. I improve your figure; strengthen your nerves; increase your vitality, make you happier; help you to think aright. And you can

Be Well Without Drugs

I show you how to free yourself from nagging ailments. You follow my easy directions in your home.

Sixteen years experience. Approved by leading physicians. Your correspondence will be held in strictest confidence.

te me your difficulties in health ure. I'll also send you FREE lustrated Health Book telling ow to stand and walk correctly.

Susanna Cocroft
Mich. Ave., Dept. 18, Chicago, Ill.

Cocroft is nationally recognized as authority on conditing women as training camps have conditioned our men.

SEND US YOUR
Old Carpets
Rugs and Old Clothing

We reclaim the wool in them by our special process of cleaning, combing, carding, and respinning. Then we dye it and weave new

Velvety Rugs

in plain, fancy or Oriental patterns—any color you want, any size—the equal of the high-priced store rugs.

You Save $10 to $30

and get beautiful, reversible, seamless, soft, bright, new rugs, guaranteed to wear many years. We pay you for your material if not satisfied. Every order completed in three days.

FREE Write for book of designs in colors — liberal freight or express payment offer and full information.

OLSON RUG CO.
Dept. D-24 36 Laflin St., Chicago, Ill.

More Heat—Less Expense

AT the whole home through one register and cut the fuel bills in . Let us show you how to save o $75.

ist Write For Free Book our wholesale prices. Cash or y Payments. Unconditional Guare. We can save you money on Furnaces, Ranges, Kitchen Kabi-, Oil and Gas Stoves, Phonographs, am Separators, Refrigerators, fing, Paint and other home neces-s. Ask for Catalog No. 927

Kalamazoo Stove Co., Mfrs.
Kalamazoo, Mich.

Kalamazoo Direct to You

Extra Uses From Any Socket

You don't have to unscrew light bulbs to use electric appliances. The

BENJAMIN TWO-WAY PLUG

Gives two outlets to any socket. Doubles its service. At your dealer's

3 FOR $3.50 $1.25 each

Made only by BENJAMIN ELECTRIC MFG. CO.
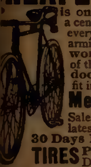
Chicago
New York
San Francisco



HEAPEST WAY TO GO

is on a bicycle — a dozen miles for a cent. That's why in Europe one in every six persons rides a bicycle. All armies use them by thousands. It is the workman's street car, with the cost of the rides saved. A complete outdoor gymnasium that keeps you fit in mind and muscle.

Mead's Factory to Rider

Sales Plan Saves you $10 to $20 on all latest war approved Ranger models. 30 Days Free Trial and Free Delivery.

TIRES Parts, Repairs at half usual prices. Don't buy until you get our Big ree Catalog describing all the wonderful new fers, liberal terms and low prices. Write a postal now.

MEAD CYCLE COMPANY
Department G-71 CHICAGO

Enjoy Foot Comfort

Forget your feet. Make walking easy and enjoy solid comfort by wearing

Pneumatic Perfection Arch Cushions

Prevent Flat Feet and Fallen Arches. Make your shoes easy as old slippers and ve quick relief to tired, aching feet. No metal, light, durable. or men and women. Fit any shoe. (State size and width.) angeable at will. Send for Free Catalog.

llow Shoe Co., Dept. 3, 184 Summer St., Boston, Mass.

ENTERPRISE
FENCING All-Iron or Chain-Link

Protects and Beautifies

Churches Factories Public Bldgs.
Cemeteries Parks Schools
Hospitals Colleges Asylums Homes Estates Etc., Etc.

and enhances their value

Enterprise Fencing is backed by 34 years of specialized experience in building and erecting All-Iron and Chain-Link Fencing. Prices are again moderate and seem to have reached a point at which they will stay. Our catalog describes and pictures styles and designs, and gives complete data. Write today for this free catalog, mentioning purpose for which fencing is desired.

Write for this Free Catalog to-day

ENTERPRISE IRON WORKS
2461 Yandes St. INDIANAPOLIS

ENTERPRISE FENCING

A WOMAN FLORIST

4 Hardy Everblooming Roses 25c
On their own roots ALL WILL BLOOM THIS SUMMER

Sent to any address post-paid: guaranteed to reach you in good growing condition.

GEM ROSE COLLECTION
Melody, Pure Yellow.
Warrior, Blood Red.
Ophelia, Salmon Flesh.
Aurora, Bright Pink.

SPECIAL BARGAINS
4 Carnations, the "Divine Flower," all colors, 25c.
3 Choice Ferns, - - 25c.
5 Chrysanthemums, 25c.
5 Beautiful Coleus, - 25c.
3 Flowering Cannas, 25c.
3 Choice Dahlias, - 25c.
3 Choice Hardy Iris, 25c.
8 Lovely Gladioli, - - - - - 25c.
8 Superb Pansy Plants. - - - - 25c.
10 Pkts. Flower Seeds, all different, 25c.

Any Five Collections for One Dollar, Post-Paid. Guarantee satisfaction.

Once a customer, always one. Catalog Free.

Miss ELLA V. BAINES, Box 28, Springfield, Ohio

Wing's Dahlias

When cool autumn days come and nearly all the flowers have faded, the Dahlia, with its masses of gorgeous bloom, lasting from late-summer until hard freezes, is both refreshing and satisfactory. Our collection of over 200 varieties, carefully selected from the best American and European hybridists, yields a wealth of beautiful color, rich and delicate, and a great variety of exquisite forms. To fully appreciate Dahlias, you should know Annellie Dufour, Etoile de France, Cargo, Britannia, Calife, Mlle. Jeanne Chantre and Jeanne Charmet. Write for free catalog.

The Wing Seed Co., Box 1334, Mechanicsburg, O
(The House of Quality and Moderate Prices)

HOW TO MAKE A LAWN

A twenty-page booklet telling what to do and how to do it. Also a 130-page catalog of beautiful flowers, shrubs and ornamental plants. Will help beautify your home. Write today. FREE

IOWA SEED CO., Dept. 45 Des Moines, Iowa

KIDDER'S PASTILLES Standard relief for ASTHMA (Inhalation.) All Druggists, 50 cts., or trial size for 2c. stamp.

STOWELL & CO., 50 D Main St., Charlestown, Mass.

Touring and Roadster Types

BRISCOE

A passenger car combining refinement and endurance in an unusual degree, and attractively priced.

□

The car itself is its best salesman.

BRISCOE MOTOR CORPORATION
JACKSON MICHIGAN

99% BRISCOE BUILT

GUNN Sectional Bookcases

have features others do not have, and their prices will appeal to you. You get in them a guaranteed piece of furniture of honest workmanship, beautifully finished in Queen Anne, Colonial, Mission, Clawfoot and Standard styles in widths to fit almost any floor space.

A Style Book on Bookcases Mailed Free

There is a way to secure artistic effects in bookcases, and to have them practical, convenient and economical at the same time. You will find our latest Style Book a great help in selecting what is exactly suited to your home. Give yourself a treat by looking it over.

THE GUNN FURNITURE CO. 1820 Broadway, Grand Rapids, Mich.

GUNN OFFICE DESKS
WRITE FOR CATALOG

KELLOGG
STRAWBERRY
GARDENS

yield big crops and give big profits everywhere. Kellogg Strawberries are big, delicious beauties. Many families get their own strawberries FREE and from Kellogg Strawberry Gardens. Let a Kellogg Garden add beauty, pleasure, profit to your home.

Make a Good Many Extra Dollars Profit Each Year

IT'S FREE AND POSTPAID

Our Big Book Tells How

WRITE FOR FREE BOOK

Send for Your Copy Now

A POSTAL WILL DO

R. M. KELLOGG CO., Box 670, Three Rivers, Mich.

Succulent vegetables, blooming flowers, velvety grass, grow from

Thorburn's Seeds

Thorburn's Seeds are seeds selected by a house famous through 118 years for quality. You don't buy seeds—you buy what grows from them. Send for 1919 catalogue.

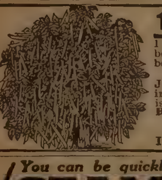
J. M. Thorburn & Co.
53 Barclay St., through to 54 Park Place
New York City



1200 TO 1 BEAN. A Gigantic Wonder—over 200 pods have been grown on a single plant—all well filled, producing over 1200 beans from 1 bean planted. Plants grow strong and erect, branching out in all directions, bearing pods up well from the ground, which literally load the plants; beans being pure white and of best quality.

Plant in your garden or any good soil, after danger of frost, any time up to June 15 only 1 Bean in a hill, and it will mature a crop in about 80 days, ripening very evenly, and the growth and yield will simply surprise you. My supply is limited and I can offer only in sealed packets, each containing over 60 Beans with growing directions. Order early to be sure of them.

Sealed packets 10c each; 3 pkts. 25c; 7 pkts. 50c; 15 pkts. $1 postpaid.

My New Seed Book is filled with High Grade Garden Seeds at lowest prices. It's mailed free. F. B. MILLS, Seed Grower, Dept. 31. ROSE HILL, N.Y.

You can be quickly cured, if you

STAMMER

Send 10 cents coin or stamps for 70-page book on Stammering and Stuttering, "Its Cause and Cure." It tells how I cured myself after stammering for 20 years.

Benjamin N. Bogue, 5502 Bogue Building, Indianapolis

YOU CAN MAKE MONEY

selling our exclusive Dress Goods, Suitings, Waistings, Handkerchiefs, Hosiery, Silks, etc., latest and most stylish designs. Profitable, congenial employment of spare time for ladies of refinement. No money or experience necessary. Samples FREE. Write to-day. Mitchell & Church Co., 123 Water St., Binghamton, N.Y.

Young People's Topics for March

Envy and Covetousness

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic. Luke 12 : 13-21

PROBABLY no two elements in human life are more productive of sorrow than envy and covetousness. Envy blinds our eyes to the good things, the opportunities that we have, and paints in alluring colors the social position, the possessions, the influence of another. We forget that God has been good to us, and we let envy eat out the heart of our lives because He appears to have given to others more than to us. If we will seek earnestly to use well the things, the influence, the position He has given us, we will find so much to make us glad that the spirit of envy will have no power over us. But some take the step from passive envy to active coveting. The coveter not only envies another's apparently better estate but earnestly desires for himself the other's goods, or place, or power, whatever they may be. It is another short step from coveting to attempting to take, from wanting to stealing, and just beyond lies disgrace. But Paul told the Corinthians to "covet earnestly the best gifts;" and yet, he said, "I show unto you a more excellent way," and then followed the 13th of First Corinthians. Love of God, which includes love of all men, will wipe out bot and covetousness.

Our Chapter's Obligation Community

Epworth League Topic. Isa. 58 : 6, James 1 : 27; 2 : 14-17.

EACH of us owes to his commun upright life, a life that exem the love of God in personal moralit loving helpfulness, a life that w compromise with evil and that counted on for every good cause, of human friendliness that he make life more livable for all wh touches. A chapter is only a gro individuals. Its obligations are th the individual multiplied by it bers. Only as in numbers th power, to numbers also the become more definite and the tunities more evident. One man m much good, a dozen may perfect form. One man may inspire a neig hood, a dozen may reinvigorate a One man may preach Christ effect a dozen may achieve a Pente Your chapter owes to your comm an outreaching, upstanding, easily nized life of Christian love and mony, of Christlike purpose and fulness. The details will take c themselves.

The Man at the Well

THE camp pastor at Camp Dix, Rev. J. Francis Behrens, relates in the Pennsylvania Baptist Bulletin how one Sunday evening, after preaching a Gospel sermon, he was quenching his thirst at a near-by pump, when he discovered that he was followed by a soldier, who said, after refusing a proffered cup:

"I was greatly moved in the service tonight, and see my duty as I never saw it before. I was a moral coward tonight. I admired the men who went up and took your hand, but, oh God, what a coward I was! What shall I do?"

The pastor continues: "I replied, 'My boy, you may not know, but many years ago Jesus sat on a well curb, and a poor despised woman came to him. He said to her, "Give me to drink." The woman questioned his right to speak to her, as they were not on friendly terms. Jesus answered her, "If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, give me to drink, thou wouldest have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water." I said, 'Is it not strange that as this woman of Samaria met her Lord at the well, you are meeting with your Lord at this well tonight? That sinful woman was saved and transformed not by some creed or ceremony. She was saved because of her faith in Jesus Christ as a personal Saviour from sin. Jesus is the water of life, my boy: will you drink at his hand and be saved? say you were a moral coward in church, and you were. Are you r to be a Christian hero here and and tomorrow, and all your days dedicating your life to Jesus C right now at this pump?' In a c courageous, manly voice he replie am, sir!' and in the moonlight and u the star-lighted sky we bowed heads in prayer and a soul was born the kingdom. The young man tur to go in his new-found joy said to 'Thank God for this night, for pump and for you, sir! I go over very soon, but I now have a friend goes with me.' I said, 'My boy, I no doubt meet you again, but sold look so much alike in uniform, wl ever you see me you will know me, you just shout, "The man at the pum whenever you see me, and this bles night will all come back.' "

"I looked everywhere for my r but found him not. A week later I with the movement of overseas m and standing in the moonlight, I he a voice clear and distinct: 'The ma the pump!' I looked, a wave of hand, and a smile with heaven in and my man was lost to my vision; there is a warmth in my heart an tear in my eye as the voice of the Mas comes to me saying, 'Whosoever dri eth of the water that I shall give h shall never thirst.'"

A Barrel-Hoop Coat-Hanger

MOLLY had often been told by her mother that it is wrong to waste anything that can be used, so when she saw some short broken pieces of a barrel-hoop lying out in her backyard, she said to herself: "If father would screw a hook into the middle of one of these pieces, I could cover the wood with pretty material and mother could use it as a coat-hanger!"

Molly's father did screw a hook into the center of one of the pieces, and cut the piece to measure eighteen inches. Molly then bound the wood with strips of flannel and covered it with silk from the rag-bag in the following manner:

She made two narrow little bags ea seven inches long and as wide as t barrel-hoop. At the top of each bag s ran a draw-string, just as she would any other kind of bag. She then slipp the bags over the flannel-bound ends the hanger, tying the draw-strin around the hook in the center. T hook itself she bound with strips of t same silk.

"You see," she explained to h mother when she surprised her with t pretty gift, "I thought I would not s the silk on the hanger because then would not be easy to take off and was when it got soiled."

L. A. K.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Graham C. Patterson, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Edward S. Babcox, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.50 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, January 25, 1909, as Second-class Matter under Act of March 3, 1879
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Peter, Peter, pumpkin eater
Had a wife and couldn't keep her
He put her in a pumpkin shell
And there he kept her very well.

This is Peter the Husbander

Peter as a gardener was a failure at first. "A seed's a seed," says he. But his wife left him. Then he got it through his head that the tenderest, most luscious vegetables and the most glorious flowers came from seed taken from the tenderest, most luscious vegetables and the most glorious flowers. You couldn't fool him after that. He became a husbander—one who shows prudence. His wife came back and they became enviably successful—on pumpkins.

FERRY'S SEEDS

are pedigreed seeds. They have an inheritance of quality from generations of forebears noted for perfect production vigor and quality. This family breeding, by careful test and selection has been going on at the Ferry greenhouses and trial gardens for many years. The beautiful 1919 Ferry "Seed Annual" is full of prudent garden advice. It's free. Send for it today. Ferry's Seeds are for sale by dealers everywhere.

D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit, Mich. (and Windsor, Ont.)

Flavored with Fruit-Juice Essences

ADD THIS FLAVOR TO PINEAPPLE
Jiffy-Jell

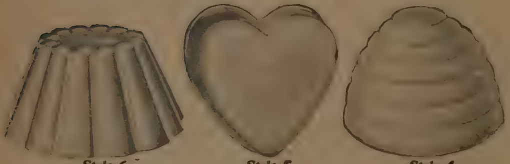
Flavors in Glass Vials

All These Fruits in Jiffy-Jell

Quick, Fruity Desserts of the Rarest Sort

Tart, Zestful Salads, too

Real-Fruit Desserts At Little Cost Instantly Prepared



We Give Molds

To urge a test of Jiffy-Jell we make these six mold offers. Try two flavors—either Loganberry or Pineapple for a dessert, then either Lime or Mint. Then tell us what molds you want.

Six Mold Offers

Buy from your grocer two packages of Jiffy-Jell, then send this coupon to us. Enclose 10c—cost of mailing only—and we will send you three Individual Dessert Molds in assorted styles as pictured. They are pure aluminum.

Or enclose 20c and we will send six of these molds—enough to serve a full package of Jiffy-Jell. The value is 60c per set.

Or enclose 10c—cost of mailing only—and we will send your choice of these larger aluminum molds, valued at 50c each.

Pint Dessert Mold, heart shaped. (B)

Or Pint Dessert Mold, fluted. (C)

Or 6-Portion Vegetable Salad Mold. (D)

Or 6-Portion Fruit Salad Mold. (E)

Jiffy-Jell brings you fresh-fruit desserts of the rarest sort, and at trifling cost, in mid-winter.

Each package contains a fruit-juice essence in liquid form in a vial. This flavor is made from the fruit itself—made by condensing the fresh-fruit juice. And the flavor is abundant. We use half a Pineapple to make the flavor for one dessert. We use 65 Loganberries to flavor another.

So Jiffy-Jell desserts taste like fresh-fruit dainties. They contain a wealth of real-fruit essence, kept fresh and fragrant by being sealed in glass.

They bring you the delights and the healthfulness of fruits, at a fraction of what fruit costs. And now when you need fruit most. Yet they cost no more than gelatine desserts without these bottled flavors.

12½c Per Dinner

One package of Jiffy-Jell serves six people in mold form, or twelve if you whip the jell. It serves them with a luscious, fruity dessert—the finest dessert in existence—all for 12½ cents.

It comes ready-sweetened, in proper color and acidulated.

You simply add boiling water, then the flavor from the vial. The desserts are prepared in an instant.

Also for Salads

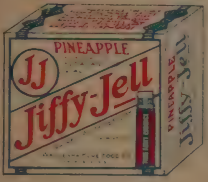
Lime Jiffy-Jell—flavored with lime fruit—makes a tart, green salad jell. Serve with your salad, or mix the salad in before cooling. Vegetable left-overs can thus be made delicious.

Or mix in meat scraps and make a zestful meat loaf—meat in aspic. Mint flavor makes a garnish jell, rich in fresh-mint essence. Serve with cold meats or roast lamb.

Nothing Like It

Jiffy-Jell is vastly different from the old-style gelatine dainties. The wealth of fruit-juice essence in liquid form, in vials, gives a superlative flavor.

It brings you real fruit desserts, healthful and flavory, for less than pies and puddings cost, and with no work at all. Millions now enjoy it.



Mail Us This Coupon

When you buy Jiffy-Jell from your Grocer

I have today received two packages of Jiffy-Jell from

....
(Name of Grocer)

Now I enclose........cents, for which mail me the following molds as per your offer:

....
(State Molds Wanted)

Write plainly and give full address

Your Name ....

Address ....

Be sure you get Jiffy-Jell, with package like picture. This alone has the true fruit flavors in vials. Mail coupon to

WAUKESHA PURE FOOD COMPANY, Waukesha, Wis. (393 C.H.)

10 Flavors in Glass Vials

One in Each Package

Mint
For Mint Jell
Lime
For Salad Jell
Raspberry
Cherry
Loganberry
Strawberry
Pineapple
Orange
Lemon
For Desserts
Also Coffee Flavor

Two Packages for 25 Cents

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1919, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

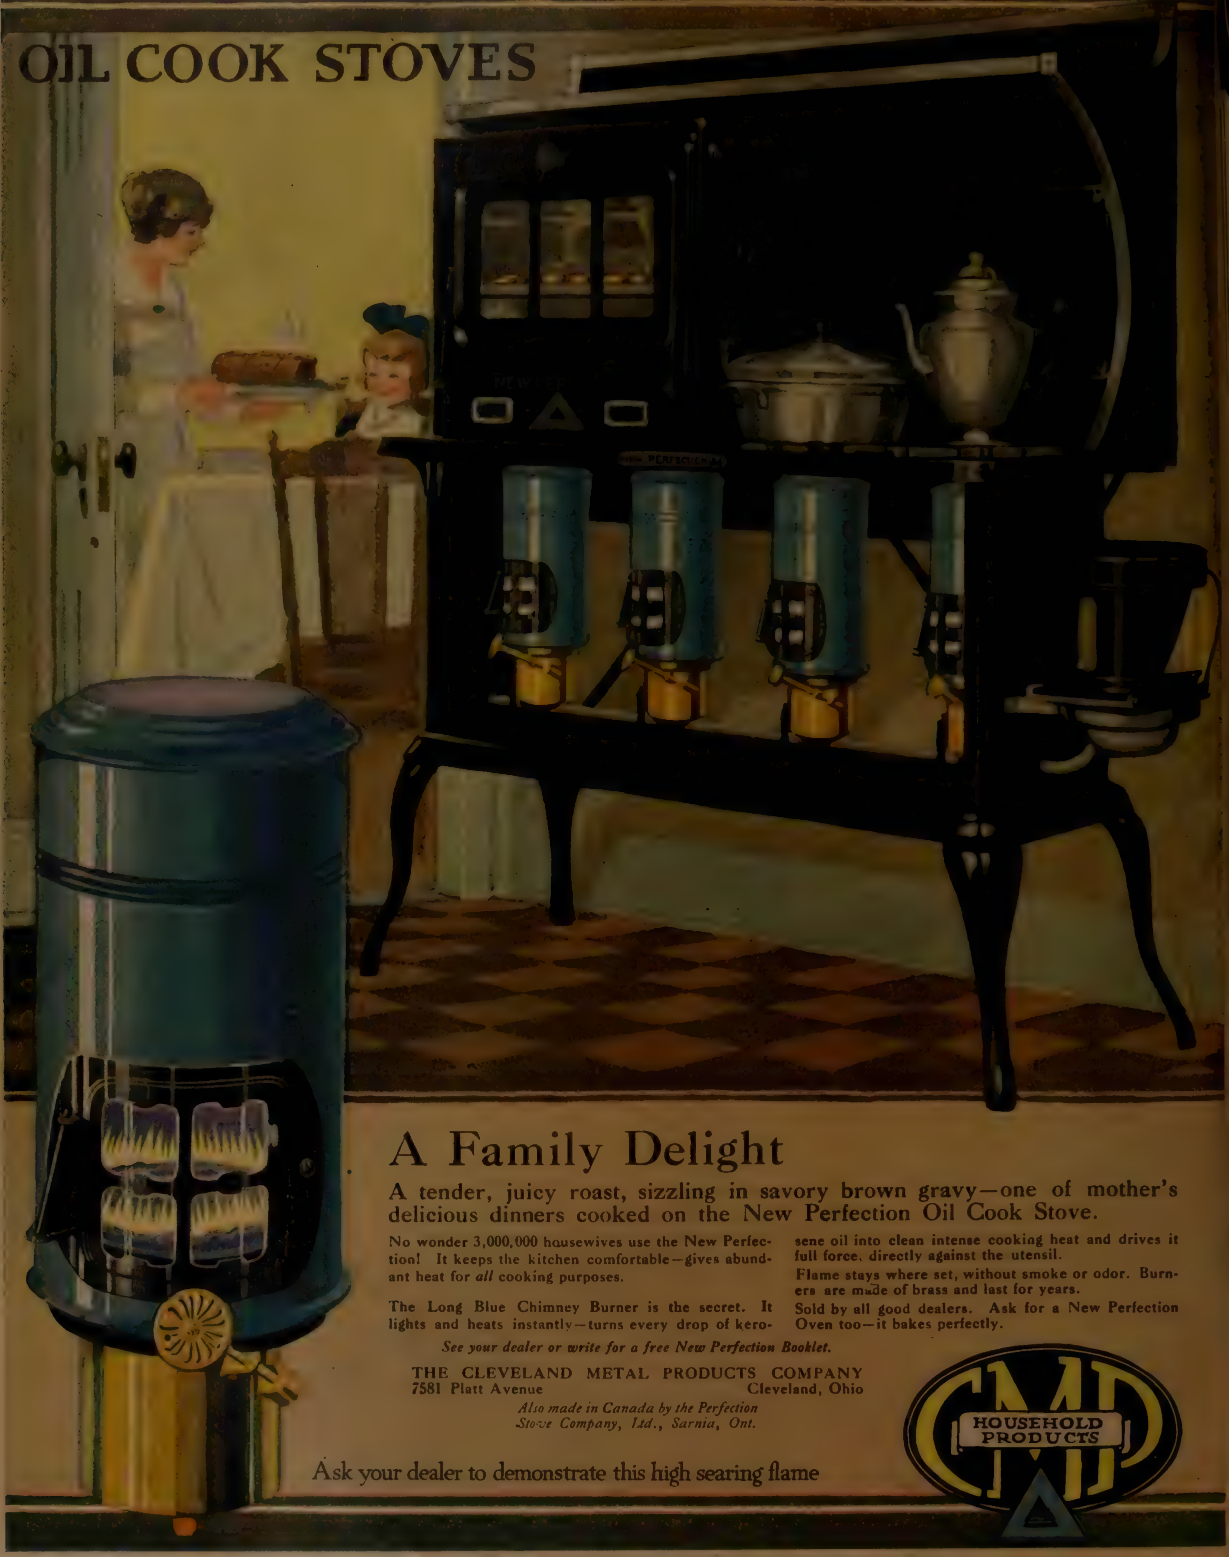
NEW YORK, MARCH 15, 1919

Photo by John Kabel

THE PLOWMAN

NEW PERFECTION

OIL COOK STOVES



A Family Delight

A tender, juicy roast, sizzling in savory brown gravy—one of mother's delicious dinners cooked on the New Perfection Oil Cook Stove.

No wonder 3,000,000 housewives use the New Perfection! It keeps the kitchen comfortable—gives abundant heat for all cooking purposes.

The Long Blue Chimney Burner is the secret. It lights and heats instantly—turns every drop of kerosene oil into clean intense cooking heat and drives it full force, directly against the utensil.

Flame stays where set, without smoke or odor. Burners are made of brass and last for years.

Sold by all good dealers. Ask for a New Perfection Oven too—it bakes perfectly.

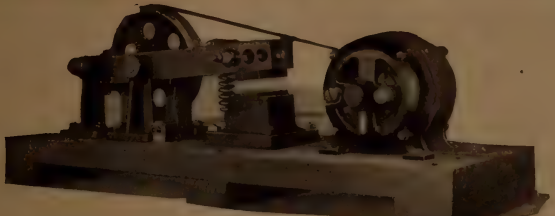
See your dealer or write for a free New Perfection Booklet.

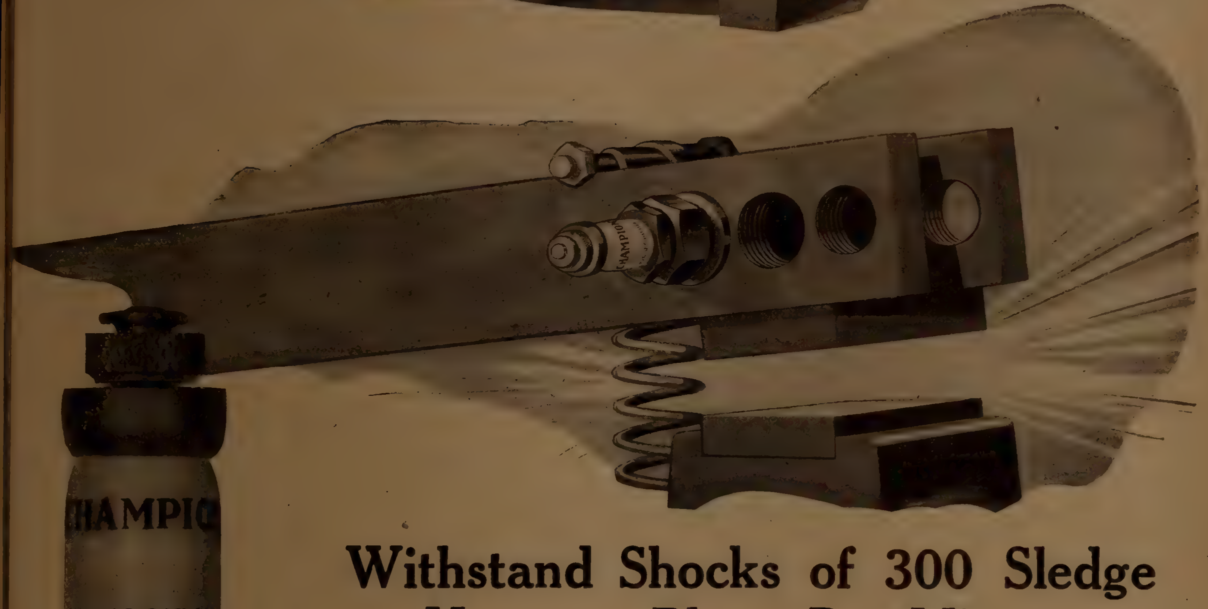
THE CLEVELAND METAL PRODUCTS COMPANY
7581 Platt Avenue Cleveland, Ohio

Also made in Canada by the Perfection Stove Company, Ltd., Sarnia, Ont.

Ask your dealer to demonstrate this high searing flame

Champion Dependable Spark Plugs





Withstand Shocks of 300 Sledge Hammer Blows Per Minute

THE RESULTS of various exhaustive factory tests imposed upon Champion Spark Plugs completely demonstrate their ability to endure every punishment your car's engine can impose.

The test illustrated here is known as the "shock test." The shock, which the Champion Spark Plug must survive without injury, is the equivalent to a weight of 3½ pounds, dropping with the rapidity of 300 times per minute.

The qualities that enable Champion Spark Plugs to successfully withstand such severe trials are largely a result of ten years' study and experimenting that developed our patented gasket construction and our Number 3450 Insulator.

This superior Insulator offers 2½ times the resistance to shock and vibration compared with the best previous insulator. That is one of the several reasons why Champion Spark Plugs are more durable and dependable than ordinary spark plugs.

Buy Champion Spark Plugs now and make sure the name "Champion" is on the insulator as well as on the box and avoid substitutes.

Champion 7/8-18
Price $1.00

Champion Spark Plug Company, Toledo, Ohio
Champion Spark Plug Company, of Canada, Limited, Windsor, Ontario

The BRUNSWICK Method of Reproduction

The Ultona

The Brunswick

The Amplifier

Two New Ideas

Which Won Millions of Friends

WHEN the now-famous Brunswick was announced, most people believed that the utmost had already been attained in the phonographic art.

Hence they expected, and rightly so, that The Brunswick would have to bring out overwhelming betterments in order to win a place among the leaders.

And this great expectation was realized. The Brunswick created a memorable sensation. It commanded instant respect and admiration.

The Pioneer

Of the major instruments, the Brunswick was the first to play all records with faithful regard for different requirements. This feature alone created thousands of admirers. For it meant that a Brunswick owner could buy and play any record, whatever make.

Since different makes offer different artists, and no one make offers them all, music lovers saw in The Brunswick the opportunity to select their own library of records, without restriction.

The other outstanding Brunswick betterment was in tone production. By a more scientific amplification of tone waves, The Brunswick overcame many old time crudities and brought out lovely tones hitherto lost.

Today The Brunswick Method of Reproduction is a recognized triumph. It means perfected reproduction to all who know it. And the news is spreading fast.

Two Famous Ideas

The Brunswick Method of Reproduction includes The Ultona, an all-record player. This master invention can be obtained on no other phonograph. The Ultona presents to each make of record, the proper needle and diaphragm. All at a turn of the hand. It is a unique reproducer, not an attachment nor makeshift.

The Brunswick Method also includes The Brunswick Amplifier, an all-wood sound chamber built with scientific regard for acoustic laws. No metal is used because it muffles sound vibrations.

Before you decide which phonograph for your home, hear The Brunswick. Compare its tone. Note the Ultona.

A Brunswick Dealer will gladly assist you in making a tone test.

The Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co.
General Offices: CHICAGO and NEW YORK

Branch Houses in Principal Cities of United States, Mexico and Canada

Canadian Distributors, Musical Merchandise
Sales Co., Excelsior Life Building, Toronto

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

ENTERED AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER JANUARY 25, 1909, AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW YORK, UNDER THE ACT OF MARCH 3, 1879

VOL. 42—NO. 11. PRICE 10 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

he President's Battle for the League

Mr. Wilson in Conference With Congressmen Declares That the League of Nations Stands as the World's Bulwark Against Horrors Beyond Description

PRESIDENT WILSON has shown himself capable of packing more concentrated action into a given period of time than most men. In his activities since his return from Europe, he has fairly beaten his own record. On landing in Boston, he was ested by a crowd of two hundred thousand enusiastic citizens. After hasty luncheon, he ent immediately to echanics' Hall, where delivered the first iblic address since his rival. All this has ready been told subantially in the pages the Christian Herald.

Then followed a quick ght run to Washingn, which he reached in e early morning, bere sunrise. The foreon saw him installed ith Mrs. Wilson in the hite House, which oked spick and span ter its spring cleaning. hat first day in Washgton was one of the usiest on record. After eakfast he plunged into mass of work, reading elegrams, signing docuents and conferring ith members of the abinet. In addition to is other activities, he ent fully ten hours at is desk. With the abinet he went over in reat detail the League f Nations project. He ld them that wherever e went in Europe, he ad found among all asses hearty popular pproval of the League. he people of Europe, he id, want some definite eans of doing away ith war, and they are inning their hopes upon he constitution of the eague of Nations.

It was learned that the resident expressed the ish that members of the Cabinet and other supporters f the government's policies should tour the country in rder that our citizens might have a thorough undertanding of the fundamental features of the League. e was not surprised at the antagonism toward the eague in certain quarters, but believed it would be uickly overcome when the nation had the subject learly presented. Personally, he had the unalterable onviction that the League is the only means of saving he world from another destructive war. Fourteen ations, he told the Cabinet, had agreed to the League onstitution as submitted, which he believed assured ts adoption by the Peace Conference. He anticipates he offering of amendments, some of which may be ccepted. He foresaw no serious difficulty in adjustng any differences that may arise in the Conference. s far as the United States Senate is concerned, he elieved that when the entire project was fully exlained, opposition would vanish. He looked forward ith confidence to his meeting with the members of the oreign Relations Committee on the following evening, hich would greatly help to clear the atmosphere. ther eventful incidents of that first day at home were the President's decision to call no extra session of Congress until he returned from his second trip to France, and the announcement of his plan to summon the governors of all the states and the mayors of over one hundred cities to a conference in Washington to consider reconstruction plans. Within forty-eight hours it was learned that the governors of sixteen states, lieutenant governors of two states and mayors of over ninety cities had accepted the invitation to attend the White House conference on the following Monday, for the discussion of business and labor problems growing out of the ending of the war.

© International Film Service

President Wilson at home again responding to Boston's greeting

ON WEDNESDAY, February 26, the members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and the House Foreign Affairs Committee took dinner at the White House, by President Wilson's invitation. For the first time in two years the Executive Mansion was brilliantly illuminated, outside and in. Thirty-six covers were set in the state dining room. Mrs. Wilson was present as hostess, and after the dinner, was escorted into the East Room by Senator Lodge of Massachusetts, where a pleasant ten minutes were spent in greetings and informal talk. When she withdrew, the President asked his guests to be seated. The chairs were arranged in a large oval. Mr. Wilson then began his own statement of the situation as he viewed it. Then followed a free interchange of views, in which the League of Nations project was the central subject. There was no attempt by any of the members present to embarrass the President, but they had ample opportunity to question him fully. President Wilson was in excellent humor, and his mood communicated itself to his guests. In his replies he used the utmost frankness, and invited those present to be equally outspoken.

One Senator asked him whether it was true that the formation of a League of Nations, with the United States as one of its members, would involve any surrender of sovereignty on the part of this nation. He replied promptly that in his opinion the nation would relinquish some of its sovereignty; but that every other nation in the League would make a similar surrender and sacrifice for the good of the world. This view of the matter he shared with others in Paris, with whom he had discussed it. He was questioned regarding the Monroe Doctrine, the disarmament proposition, the situation in Europe and on other vital points, and to each he made reply in the same generous and outspoken spirit, evading no point that was made by the questioners. As to disarmament, which was provided for in the charter of the League, he explained that it would not involve any surrender whatsoever of the right of Congress to fix and determine our armament.

THE President good-humoredly reminded his guests that the "question and answer route" would probably give better results than speeches. Following this, questions came thick and fast from all sides, Senators Lodge, Brandegee, Knox, Swanson, Hitchcock and Williams, and Representatives Cooper and Flood being among the interrogators. In one of his replies, the President gave his own construction of article eight of the League's constitution which deals with disarmament, and which was the basis of the recent speeches in Congress of Senators Borah and Reed. No order could be issued by the Executive Council of the League of Nations, the President said, and made binding, unless it was the result of unanimous action. Such an order dealing with the size of armaments, to be made effective, must first be submitted to each of the governments represented on the Executive Council. As our nation is one of the Council, we will be permanently represented there. Any project for disarmament would have to be submitted to our government before it could be adopted. Then it would have to be approved unanimously by the Council. By this method, the United States would have power to pass on the size of the British army and navy, while England would have the same power of passing on the size of the German army and navy, France and Japan on Italy's, and all the members of the Council together would finally have to unanimously approve, before the proposition under consideration could be made effective or become binding on this country or any other.

Many questions were asked concerning the Monroe Doctrine. The President explained that the Monroe Doctrine would be broadened in its application, rather than the contrary, as some persons not accurately informed as to the League and its purpose had asserted. Instead of attacking or invalidating the Monroe Doctrine, the League of Nations in effect would recommend that that doctrine be extended to cover the world. The influence of the United States in making all the nations a party to the Monroe Doctrine, would broaden its scope and would make it of world-wide application.

© International Film Service

President Wilson leading the parade in Washington in honor of men of the District of Columbia returned from the war

Replying to a question concerning the League's guardianship of the peace of the world, he explained that it was in the minds of those who drew up the charter that, in the event of a dispute between two nations, arbitration was to be resorted to. If the quarreling nations rejected arbitration, they would then be required to submit the whole question at issue for the League to consider. An effort would be made by the Executive Council to bring about an adjustment; but if both nations disregarded the League's counsels for peace, they would then be left to their own resources. If, however, one of the disputants accepted the League's decision, the nation refusing to accept would be asked to agree not to attack the nation that had accepted. In the last resort there was still another safeguard: the recommendation of the League in acting on the dispute must be unanimous before such conditions could arise. He admitted that this part of the charter might be improved by amendment in the line of clarification.

If in any such case as he had described, the United States was involved in the dispute, no unanimous decision could be reached by the League, unless our representative on the Executive Council concurred in the decision. It was evident, from the discussion of this part of the charter, that the power of the League in such a case was limited.

Passing to the subjects of the comparative voting strength of the powers in the League, he explained that while England would have four extra votes of her four dominions in the League itself, it was next to impossible for her to have more than a single vote in the Executive Council of nine at any time. Of the nine nations composing that council, five—the United States, England, Italy, France and Japan—would be permanently represented on the council. The other four members would probably go to the lesser nations. In organizing the League, no suggestion had ever arisen of a situation in which the smaller nations, with their overwhelming votes in the body of delegates, would ever contemplate giving England two votes in the executive council of nine.

WHEN the question of American sovereignty was raised, on the point that this nation would be called upon to surrender its sovereignty to some extent by uniting with the League, President Wilson contended that no concert of action by the nations to prevent future wars could be taken without some sacrifice, but that this would be fully warranted by the effort to establish permanent peace, and for the protection of the weak against the aggression of the stronger races. In this common purpose, each nation must yield something to accomplish the end in view. If any or all of the nations raised the objection of sovereignty, the plan could never be carried through.

Here a direct question was asked as to what would be the result, if the United States, through the opposition of the Senate, should refuse to go into the League. He promptly replied that in his belief the whole project for the League would fall through.

To another question inquiring what would happen if no League were created, he answered that it was his own conviction, as well as that of others with whom he had discussed the point, that Europe would be thrown into turmoil, and horrors beyond description would inevitably result.

He did not regard the proposal that the League members should be asked to furnish forces to go over to foreign lands as a usurpation of the authority of Congress under the Constitution to declare war. His auditors were impressed with his view that such participation was not imperative, and that it would be a matter wholly for the United States itself to decide this, in the same class with the question of disarmament. Such a step would be carrying out the agreement made under the treaty for the League of Nations, which would not be effective as far as the United States is concerned unless the Senate should ratify the project.

There was much more questioning and answering before the after-dinner conference closed. It was made clear to the members of the Committees that President Wilson had no thought of attempting to push the campaign for the League without the advice and consent of the Senate, nor in any way to interfere with the freedom of senatorial debate. What he had desired to do was to make such a statement of facts as would be serviceable in enlightening them, so that they might deal with the question with all the information available at their disposal. It was clear from the general trend of the discussion that the President hoped that the draft of the League's covenant would not be radically changed, especially as the whole of the questions involved had been fully considered and accepted by fourteen nations in its present form.

AFTER the White House conference several of the guests felt themselves at liberty to speak on what had taken place. Senator Hitchcock was quoted in the New York Times as saying:

"The President laid strong emphasis on the despair that would come over the world if the League of Nations should fail. He declared that the war would have been fought in vain. The President cleared up one doubt, concerning the right of a member of the League to withdraw. He talked at length on this phase of the League and said that any member of it could withdraw, by taking the proper step, at any time it wished. The steps to be taken, he explained, are similar to those that pertain to the abrogation of treaties.

"The President answered questions very freely as to whether the Monroe Doctrine would be done away with in the League project. The League, he said, would have the same purpose as the Monroe Doctrine, and it would be an extension of that doctrine to the whole world."

Another senator said the President admitted that he expected that more changes might be made in certain phases of the League, but the vital features would be left untouched. A Republican senator quoted the President as saying that none of those who had a hand in framing the draft of the covenant favored recognizing that Germany had any immediate right to a place in the League—certainly not on the Executive Council now or at any other time.

The general impression is that the President's conference with the two committees of Congress has served to clear away certain misunderstandings and may possibly lead to a basis of agreement in Congress, although it is not expected that it will silence the hostiles. Many of those who attended the conference carried away a feeling of reassurance and increased confidence in the situation; while all praised the courage and frankness and ardor which the President carried into the discussion throughout. It was such a "matching of minds" as he likes.

ON FRIDAY, February 27, the President led parade of 15,000 in honor of the return fro France of 3,000 District of Columbia soldiers. Th morning was a half holiday in the Capitol and, thoug the President had requested that the parade be pure in recognition of the services of the men of the arm he himself received an ovation along the whole li of march from the Capitol to the White House. Ai planes and dirigibles flew over the marchers. In th afternoon Mr. Wilson spent two hours in the Pres dent's room in the Senate wing of the Capitol in conference with various Senators. The result was marked speeding up of legislation, notably the necessary supply bills.

The Conferenc of Governors an Mayors convened a Washington o March third wit eighteen Governors three Lieutenant Governors and ninety-nine Mayors i attendance. Th first day's sessio opened at the Whit House at 10 A.M and was addresse by President Wilson, and by Secretaries Baker an Daniels. At th afternoon sessio representatives o the states we scheduled to repo upon their loc needs and their ow labor situations.

In spite of a fil buster by a group o Senators, aimed a the defeat of certai important and som less important mea sures, the Presiden was reported to hav adhered to his program, planning t leave Washington on Tuesday, Marc 4, after the a journment of Congress, to speak tha evening on the same platform with former Presiden Taft, in New York, and to sail on the George Washington on the fifth for France to remain until the bus ness of the Peace Congress shall have been finished The speech in New York, coming too late for thi issue of the Christian Herald, will be noted next week

◆

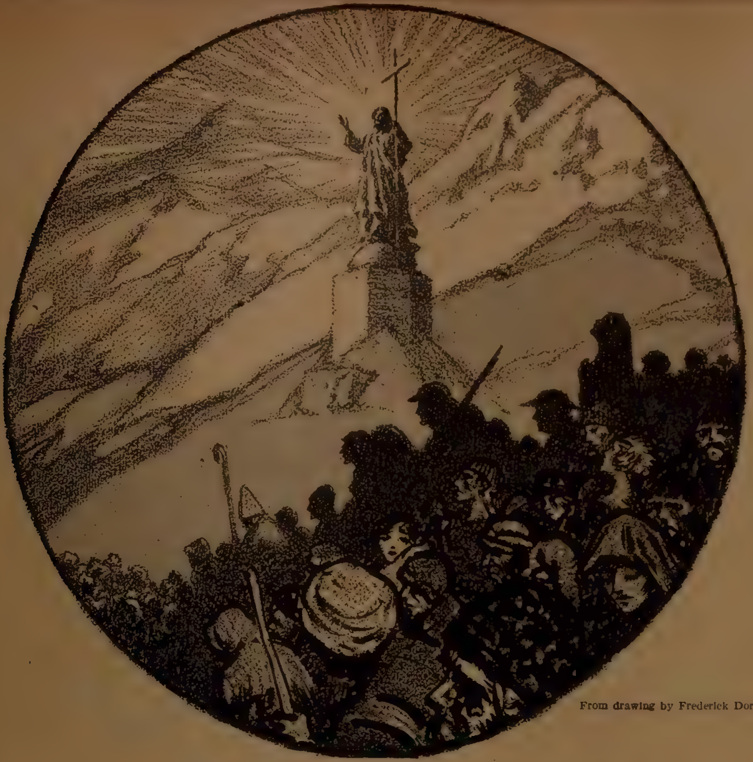
Senators Oppose League

SENATOR LODGE in the Senate on February 2 attacked the League of Nations plan. He took the plan up item by item. He said: "I earnestly desire to do everything that can be done to secure the peace of the world, but these articles, as they stand in this proposed constitution, seem to give rich promise of being fertile in producing controversies and misunderstandings." He felt that the League meant for us abandonment of the principles of Washington's Farewell Address and of the Monroe Doctrine, and he feared that our sovereignty would be so limited as to prevent our resisting invasion. He felt also that such questions as immigration should be specifically omitted from the jurisdiction of the League and that there should be a provision for peaceful withdrawal from the League. He closed with an appeal for an early peace with Germany and the prompt bringing home of our soldiers.

Senator Hitchcock defended the League proposal, taking especial pains to declare that there could be nothing in the plan of the League to take away any nation's right to resist invasion.

Senator Knox, on March 1, attacked the plan of the League of Nations as a loosely drawn document, and said that it was essential that the American people should understand the document and that understanding was only possible through a frank discussion. He declared it a scheme to put America into the United States of the World, and declared that the Constitution of the League as presented to the Peace Conference, "sanctions, breeds and commands war." He proposed an alternative plan by which a coalition of nations would declare war an international crime, and stipulate that any nation making war, except in self defense, should be punished by the world as an international criminal, and he proposed an international court to hear disputes tending to lead to war. Senator Knox pleaded for a postponement of the project until "this League which is to usher in a reign of righteousness upon earth shall comprise all peoples that dwell upon it."

Public opinion in England and France was reported to be keenly alive to the fight for the League of Nations in this country. The English were said to believe that America would approve it finally, even as Britain had done, and to hold that it represented a great gain in international relations.



From drawing by Frederick Dorr Steele

THE CHRIST of the ANDES

By EDWIN MARKHAM Author of "The Man With the Hoe," etc.

CHILE and Argentina, after quarreling for generations over their boundary line, submitted the question to arbitration and settled it in good feeling. As emblem of their peace and pledge of its permanence the two republics united in the erection of an heroic statue of Christ on the highest Andean peak of the borderline

AFTER volcanoes husht with snows,
Up where the wide-winged condor goes,
Great Aconcagua, husht and high,
Sends down the ancient peace of the sky.

So, poised in clean Andean air,
Where bleak with cliffs the grim peaks stare,
Christ, reaching out his sacred hands,
Sheds his brave peace upon the lands.

There once of old wild battles roared
And brother-blood was on the sword;
Now all the fields are rich with grain
And only roses redden the plain.

Torn were the peoples with feuds and hates—
Fear on the mountain-walls, death at the gates;
Then through the clamor of arms was heard
A whisper of the Master's word.

"Fling down your swords: be friends again:
Ye are not wolf-packs: ye are men.
Let brother-counsel be the Law:
Not serpent fang, not tiger claw."

Chile and Argentina heard;
The great hopes in their spirits stirred;
The red swords from their clenched fists fell,
And heaven shone out where once was hell!

They hurled their cannons into flame
And out of the forge the strong Christ came.
'Twas thus they molded in happy fire
The tall Christ of their heart's desire. . . .

O Christ of Olivet, you husht the wars
Under the far Andean stars:
Lift now your strong nail-wounded hands
Over all peoples, over all lands—
Stretch out those comrade hands to be
A shelter over land and sea!

The outstretched hands of the Christ are the only possible shelter over the world!

Edwin Markham.

Foch Would Make Enemy Impoten

MARSHAL FOCH on March 1 presented to the Supreme Council the military terms to be incorporated in the peace treaty. These included a maximum military force for Germany of 200,000 men, comprising fifteen divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, with severe restrictions on the manufacture of war material and the limitation of the use of the airplane. The naval terms proposed included the complete suppression of the submarine, the destruction of the German ships surrendered to the Allies, and the dismantling of the forts of Heligoland and the Kiel Canal. The British and American naval experts are said to favor destruction of the German ships, while the French want them divided in proportion to naval losses. The recommendation to destroy the ships is based on the claim that they are obsolete, that their designs make the provision of spare parts exceedingly difficult, that their engines are too powerful for merchant ships of the same size, that it would take three years to scrap them, and the salvage would be worth only $2,000,000, and that they are not even suitable to be sunk at harbor entrances as jetties. The experts figure that sinking in deep water is the least expensive way to dispose of the ships.

The commission on boundaries was said to be about ready to report, having confined itself to boundary claims growing out of the war. It was also proposed to add a financial section to the League in order to carry over beyond the signing of the peace treaty the intricate problems of international pooling of assets and liabilities growing out of the war. This was held to promise an earlier signing of the main treaty. A special correspondent of the New York Times, on February 27, cabling from Paris, said that there were three theories concerning the working out of the principle of reparation. The American theory was said to be that Germany shall pay sufficient to cover wanton destruction through violation of the laws of war and of nations. The British are said to hold that, as in civil law all damages must be paid by the aggressor, Germany should be compelled to pay the whole cost of the war as well as for wanton damage. The French would require as much as England, but would insist that Germany pay first the bills for destruction in violation of law, deferring the other payments until later.

© Underwood & Underwood

Bolshevists parading in Moscow after they had captured the city and made it their headquarters

The Week in the World's News

TURMOIL IN GERMANY. Following the murder of Eisner in Munich, the Bavarian Soldiers' and Workmen's Councils declared martial law, and took radical measures against the monarchists. Prince Leopold, former Commander on the Russian front was placed under arrest along with many of the notables. Mobs in Baden failed to establish Soviet Governments except at Manheim, where a reign of terror existed for several days, the French authorities finally intervening. On March 1 strikes were almost general throughout Germany, martial law prevailed in Bavaria, government troops were marching on important centers in Prussian Saxony, where Spartacide revolutions were raging, a Soviet Republic had been proclaimed in Brunswick, and railway service was paralyzed throughout the former empire. The bourgeoise classes were on strike in some cities.

Germany on March 2 seemed about at a point of disruption similar to that which marked the downfall of Kerensky in Russia, but with the difference that where Kerensky awaited events without resistance, the Ebert Government was busy meeting disorder with force. The Weimar convention was isolated and impotent, Spartacide propaganda was achieving wider distribution and acceptance, and the voices of sane and conservative leaders who urged Germany to go to work, declaring production essential to real peace and the creation of wealth to continued existence, were lost in the turmoil. The Spartacide answer to such pleas was more strikes and the pooling of existing supplies.

THE BATTLE TOLL. The War Department, of March 1, gave the number of men killed in battle in the war as 7,354,000, divided as follows: Russia 1,700,000; Germany 1,600,000; France 1,305,300; Austria 800,000; England 706,700; Italy 460,000; Turkey 250,000; Belgium 102,000; Bulgaria 100,000; Roumania 100,000; Serbia and Montenegro 100,000; United States 50,000.

FOR A LEAGUE OF CHRISTIANS. The World Conference of Churches, the Protestant Episcopal movement for Unity, whose plans for a conference of Christian Churches of the World were intercepted by the war, on March 6, sent a commission to Europe to promote the World Conference. The commission will visit Europe and the Near East. It is proposed to discuss both those things which separate the churches and those which unite them. Before the war the English church and most of the British and American Protestant churches had planned to take part in the Conferences as had the Old Catholic Church of Europe. The Church of Rome had not accepted the invitation. The commission includes Bishops Anderson, Brent, Weller and Vincent of the Episcopal church.

THE PROBLEM OF OUR SHIPS. Chairman Hurley of the Shipping Board, who recently returned from France, announced on his arrival that he would have ready toward the last of March a proposal for a permanent policy regarding the national ownership and operation of merchant ships. Senator Ransdell of Louisiana in a speech in the Senate on February 24 listed the possible plans of shipping control as follows:

Complete Government ownership and operation.

Ownership and operation through a corporation controlled by the Government.

Ships to be owned, manned, and equipped by the Government, but operated by private shipping agencies.

Vessels owned by the Government, but operated, manned and victualed by private companies.

Vessels owned, manned and victualed by the Government, but leased to private companies under time charters.

Title to vessels vested in a large corporation which would issue stock to private individuals, the Government holding stock and participating in the profits.

Selling of the vessels outright or the combination of one or more of these plans. Chairman Hurley said on March 1 that the world's supply of ships was short 9,500,000 tons.

Will Peace Last?

JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS says, "no," unless we complete the League of Nations, and Arthur Capper says only the League of Nations can end war. So whether it is to end war or achieve peace we must have it. Read both letters in next week's Herald.

Kansas has been the battle-ground of prohibition. She's for it. Next week Alfred G. Hill of the Topeka Daily Capital tells the story of the pioneers and of their fight.

Did you know it was fifty years since the first American State took its political life in its hands, and gave the mighty ballot into the feeble hand of woman? It is, and the state has lived to see the nation within one Senator of equal Suffrage. Read the story next week.

Next week, too, Dr, Clark tells of Beecher, Spurgeon and other masters of the pulpit whom he has known in his ministry. Dr. Marden tells graphically and without mercy the story of the Spider and the Flies of Wall Street, and Dr. Chas. M. Sheldon, in the sermon, shows how peace requires as fine and self-sacrificing a patriotism as does war.

PALMER, ATTORNEY-GENERAL. P dent Wilson, on February 27, nomin A. Mitchell Palmer, former Congress from Pennsylvania and Alien Prop Custodian since October, 1917, to Attorney-General.

GILLETT, NEXT SPEAKER. A ca of Republican members of the Congress, on February 27, elected resentative Frederick H. Gillett Massachusetts to be Speaker of the House of Representatives.

TO RETURN TELEPHONE LINES. National Association of Railway Utilities Commissioners on Februar sent a petitio President Wil appealing for the turn of the t phone and teleg lines to their own

RUSSIAN BOLS VISTS LOSI GROUND. Cop hagen reported February 26 t the ports of Lil and Windau been recaptu from the Bolshe by German troo Athens reported the same day t Greek, French Roumanian tro marching north fr Odessa were driv the Bolsheviki fore them along Dniester River, c turing guns and a munition. T Ukrainians were a reported to be dr ing back the B shevists, while t Cossack troops General Deniki had driven the B shevists back in t Caspian region, lieving pressure the forces of t Siberian Gover ment in the Ura An English Soci ist, recently returning from Russia, ported that Lenine and Trotzky w reaching the end of their rope, and d not know how to let go.

PENNSYLVANIA RATIFIES. The Pen sylvania Senate on February 25 ratifi the National Prohibition amendme adding Pennsylvania to the ratifyi states, making the total 45.

REGULARS FOR EUROPEAN SERVIC General Pershing on February 25 notifi the War Department that all divisio in the American Expeditionary Force except the Regular Army division would return to the United States in th order of their arrival of their respecti divisional headquarters in France. Oth troops not assigned to divisions woul be returned in the order of their arriva It was expected to return 212,000 i March; 221,000 in April; 248,000 i May and 207,000 in June.

NO EXTRA SESSION OF CONGRES Contrary to general expectation Presi dent Wilson announced on his return t Washington, on February 25, that h would not call Congress into extra ses sion until after his second return fron Europe, which it was expected migh be as late as June. Senator LaFollette on March 1, by a four-hour speech killed the Coal and Oil Leasing Bill providing for the leasing of public oil an mineral lands in the West. The Senato charged that it would benefit certai interests which hoped to secure monopoly of the privileges to b granted under the bill. A Republican caucus, held while Senator LaFollette was speaking, voted against filibustering to defeat necessary legislation, and the Victory Loan Bill was passed late o March 1, after prolonged debate.

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted By FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D. D.

Rigid War Prohibition

A DRASTIC war prohibition enforcement bill has received a favorable report from the Judiciary Committee of the House nd is pretty certain to become law. mong other things it says: The words 'beer or other toxicating malt or vinous quors' in the war prohibition act shall be construed s any liquor which conains in excess of one-half one per cent. of alcohol." nforcement of the warme prohibition law, which ontinues in effect until fter demobilization, is laced with the Internal evenue Bureau by the bill amed by the committee. gents of the bureau would vestigate violations of the w and prosecutions would e conducted by United tates attorneys. Any place here liquor is manufacured or sold would be delared a public nuisance, ubject to abatement, and s operators subject to fine nd imprisonment as guilty f a misdemeanor. Property that owners knowingly ermit to be used for violatng the law would be subect to a lien for the fine nd costs of cases resulting rom the prosecution. A reat deal of the silly and icked talk printed in the ewspapers about resisance to war-time and contitutional prohibition is he bluster and bluff of the aw-breaking liquor dealrs, who are threatening trikes and riots and all nanner of evil as the result f prohibition, when in reality this same law-breaking nd law-defying spirit of he brewers and distillers as provoked the people to estroy their business at he polls. Good people eed not be alarmed in any egree. All they have to do s to stand and fight for law nforcement, and the millions of good citizens who ave forbidden the traffic will see to it that their will s carried out to the letter. In our prohibitory law we have gotten around to he Bible standard of what moral value here is in a righteous law. "Whosoever ommitteth sin transgresseth also the law; or sin is the transgression of the law." (I John 3 : 4.)

"Tamerlane" Brings $11,600

AT AN auction sale the other day the top price was reached when Edgar Allan Poe's "Tamerlane" was knocked down at $11,600. In native ability, in creative genius and in strength of expression Poe was perhaps our greatest poet. He was handicapped by riches in his youth and by the evil habits of the times; at the last he was little better than a common pauper. If he could have had $11,600 for some of his manuscripts he would have been very happy, but very likely it would have been wasted as the rest of his money was. One of his biographers reports that he sold the memoir of his beautiful wife, whom he loved better than himself, that he might spend the money in his revels. Poe is the brightest and saddest feature in American literature. He was not more to blame for his weaknesses and failure than the alcoholized times in which he lived, for almost everybody else drank, and so did he. We are on the verge of better times in this country. If another Robert Burns should appear he would live to be over thirty-seven, and if another Edgar Allan Poe should be born he would live to be over forty, and this adage would be realized in the professions, business and industrial life: "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city." (Prov. 16 : 32.)

Eradication of Cattle Tick

THE biggest year's work that has ever been done in freeing the warm regions of the United States from the cattle fever tick removed one of the greatest obstacles to the development of balanced and prosperous agriculture. The Federal and State forces fighting the fever tick—the destructive blood-sucking parasite that has caused an annual loss estimated at $40,000,000—have been so successful that in the twelve months ended December 1 they will have driven the tick from 79,217 additional square miles of territory in nine Southern states. That is the greatest area freed from the tick in one year since the campaign began actively in 1906. The accomplishment convinces officials of the Bureau of Animal Industry that their goal, a "tick-free South," will be attained early in the nineteen-twenties. Tick eradication was recognized as a war measure for increasing the nation's food, as was shown by an emergency appropriation by Congress to provide additional men for the work. As a result of the special funds, added to the regular appropriation, it was possible in 1918 to attack the tick with a larger force than ever before. On July 1 there were at work 354 inspectors of the Bureau of Animal Industry representing the Federal government; 353 state inspectors, and 1,490 county inspectors. They supervised 6,680,232 dippings of cattle during that month in the 26,976 dipping-vats that were available. When the fight was begun against the tick the movement of cattle from all the South for slaughter and other purposes was restricted by Federal regulation, the animal population was of inferior quality, good stock could not safely be imported to improve the breeds because of the susceptibility of imported cattle to the parasite, the dairy industry was insignificant, general agriculture was retarded through the presence of the tick, and the belief prevailed generally through the South that the ticks could not be exterminated. Moses announced one of the plagues of Egypt in these words: "The hand of the Lord is upon thy cattle . . . there shall be a very grievous murrain." (Ex. 9 : 3.)

Bat Roost in Texas

DR. CHARLES A. CAMPBELL has built extensive bat roosts at San Antonio, Texas, to eat the mosquitoes that carry the fever which has killed so many of the people of Texas. The bat is a curious animal, half beast and half bird, and bears the scientific name of Chiroptera, hand-winged. With the sharp claws of its hind feet it attaches to the roost, its head hangs down and it covers itself with its wings. The reason why women and girls scream when a bat gets into a room is that it sometimes fastens itself to their hair with its claws, and it is difficult to get them out. Some species of bat feed on fruit and are quite destructive to fruit trees—those in South America and India, for example—but most bats feed on insects. This fact led to the establishment of the roosts at San Antonio, and reports from there indicate that the experiment of destroying the mosquitoes in the marsh lands is a great success. If this be true a long step is made toward the elimination of the mosquito, which is more deadly than the warrior's bullet. The bat, like the owl, sleeps in the daytime and goes out in search of food at night. They had in Palestine in Bible times the same kind of bats we have now, and their nocturnal habits are thus referred to by the prophet: "In that day a man shall cast his idols of silver, and his idols of gold, which they made each one for himself to worship, to the moles and to the bats." (Isa. 2 : 20.)

Canada's Great Man Gone

ONE of the most picturesque and most accomplished of all the statesmen of Canada passed from the stage in the death of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Within his lifetime of seventy-seven years he saw Canada spanned from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast by three splendid systems of trunk line railroads, a consummation in which his own enlightened policies during the fifteen years he presided as premier over the Dominion government were a potential factor. He lived long enough to see the vast prairie provinces of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan come in as autonomous states under the Maple Leaf flag, bound by ribbons of steel to their older sisters in the East. And he lived long enough to see those boundless prairie stretches, with their rich virgin soil, become one of the greatest granaries of the world. In his career as a public man he possessed a rare grace of bearing, dignity of manner, magnetic personality and oratorical powers of skilled debate and adroit speech. It has often been said of him that he was equally fluent and eloquent in French and English. Words spoken by the prophet can here be used with reference to the death of Canada's grand old man. "And have made thee a great name, like unto the name of the great men that are in the earth." (II Sam. 7 : 9.)

Rescue 300 Girls

MORE than 300 girls were rescued by firemen, a score were overcome by smoke and a dozen were injured in a spectacular fire which destroyed the building occupied by Duff's Business College, in the heart of the commercial district of Pittsburg. One girl fell from the arms of a fireman at a third floor window and was fatally injured. Of the 450 pupils in the school when the fire alarm was sounded only about one hundred girls and fifty boys reached the street in safety before smoke and flames cut off the escape of the others. Trapped on the second and third floors, the remaining pupils were taken from windows or jumped into fire nets in the street. Damage was estimated at $100,000. What in the world would we do without our heroic firemen in our cities and villages? They are the impersonation of everything that is manly and brave and risk their lives constantly for the protection of our property and of precious lives. This act of saving all but one of the three hundred imperiled girls was little short of a miracle. There is a heroism in every-day life which is not so spectacular as that on the sea or on the red battlefield, but which is made of the same material, and illustrates this profound truth expressed by Christ: "For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it." (Matt. 16 : 25.)

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

Secretary
EDWARD S. BABCOX

President and Publisher
GRAHAM PATTERSON

Vice Pres. and Mgr. Editor
GEORGE H. SANDISON

The Soul of the League of Nations

IN HIS speech in Boston President Wilson made such a clear, convincing statement of the situation abroad, especially with regard to the League of Nations, that it has produced a deep impression upon the minds of our people. In none of his previous public deliverances had he risen to the same height of powerful and convincing eloquence as in Mechanics Hall, when in vivid sentences and with the most perfect skill he told of the great transformation that had taken place in the mind and heart of Europe toward America. When this nation entered the struggle, with its great war ideals and with its men who "were not like any of the other soldiers," they had a vision, a dream, he tells us, and they were "fighting in the dream, and they turned the whole tide of battle and it never came back!" But the full measure of the vision was not at first disclosed. Europe had not seen "any great thing to be achieved even when the war should be won. . . . They never dreamed that it would be a Europe of settled peace and justified hope."

When the League of Nations project was at last submitted, they began to understand. The spirit of hope arose in the hearts of all the peoples. They realized that the carrying out of the project would mean the dawn of a new age in the world, "when nations will support one another in every just cause." If America were at this juncture to fail the world, what would come of it? The men of the Peace Conference were bidden not to come home from there until they did something more than sign a treaty of peace. If that were all the Conference did, it would be "nothing but a modern scrap of paper," with no nations united to defend it and no assurance given to the downtrodden peoples that they should be safe.

Then the President grew bold in his utterances. No man, he said, knows this nation of ours who thinks that America would inflict such a disappointment on the world. He challenged, in support of his attitude, a test of the sentiments of the nation. "We set this up to make men free and we did not confine our conception and purpose to America, and now we will make men free!" If we did not complete the work we have begun, this nation would have to keep her power for those narrow, selfish provincial purposes "which seem so dear to some minds that have no sweep beyond the nearest horizon."

This is the expression of the soul of the League of Nations. "We will make men free!" The sentiment is so strongly entrenched in the hearts of Americans that they will stand by the nation's ideal as a pledge which the world looks to us to redeem, and which we will redeem. The nations—not the governments but the peoples themselves—look to us to carry it out. All the petty opposition of short-sighted politicians cannot hold it back. The peoples in every land demand it. "They are in the saddle," said President Wilson grimly, in closing, "and they are going to see to it that if the present governments do not do their will, some other governments shall."

America united with the Allies to win the war. There can be no good, logical reason why we should not now unite with them to keep the world's peace. Unlike The Hague agreement, which was a concession of kings and potentates, the League of Nations will be the spontaneous creation of the people themselves—the work of mankind. No people will accord it more hearty approval than ourselves.

For a Dry World

THERE are no half measures in the program of the Anti-Saloon League. It now announces that the work completed in the United States is merely a beginning, and that, having "begun at Jerusalem," it will now carry the gospel of prohibition to the uttermost parts of the earth. In its program just issued, the League defines itself as "the Church in action against the saloon." It gives full credit to the Church for having originated and pushed to a successful conclusion the war on alcohol in America. Here at home the liquor traffic has been the greatest enemy of the Church, and in the mission fields it has proved a hindering influence to spiritual progress which must now be dealt with; hence the League program is now a world program. It plans to carry the prohibition fight into other nations. American brewers are preparing for investment in the Orient. China, as the Christian Herald has already shown, is to be the next nation it will attempt to exploit. Missionaries everywhere are fighting the evil in their distant fields. With its forces in line, the League is now preparing to open the campaign in France, India, Russia, Italy, Japan, China, Australia, Great Britain, Canada, New Zealand, South America, the Philippines, and possibly even in Germany.

This bold and far-reaching campaign will tax the genius, the energies and the resources of the forces of temperance. It is a mighty undertaking, and if successful would remove one of the greatest obstacles to the progress of Christianity. It is a gigantic program; but we are living in a time of great enterprises. The liquor traffic is an outlaw here, and should be so regarded everywhere. Its complete downfall would be a blessing to humanity.

The Duty of the Denominations

IF THE churches are going to meet the needs and opportunities of the hour, they must unite. They must see that suddenly they are in a new world, facing new conditions and new problems, and that they cannot turn back, nor can they stand still. They must go forward or be beaten. What is true of the nations is true of the churches. If it is absurd to think of the nations as continuing as so many armed camps, straining their resources to maintain great armies and navies to use against one another on the slightest excuse, it is equally unthinkable that, with the world only partly evangelized, with less than half of our own Christian nation in the Church, the denominations can go on in the old methods and still disunited. If they do this, they will shift the question of salvation from the individual to the denominations, and it is they who will be crying, "What must I do to be saved!"

It is a mistake to suppose that, with the war at an end, the emergency is past. It is upon us with full force, and it demands the same energy and enthusiasm of cooperative action that united all Christian hearts and minds in the stress of war. What, for example, is to be their attitude toward the forces of labor? How are they going to substitute the Gospel of Christ for the gospel of Bolshevism? Not by showing a divided front, a divided policy and a divided message.

It is a great moment in the life of the churches, "put in trust with the Gospel," as they face a world needing the truth of God in its inmost lives and needing the ministering hand and heart of Christ's Church more than ever before. The denominations must throw into the struggle of the hour their heart and will and spiritual endowments, and act as one for the accomplishment of their great mission.

Two Evils to Be Fought

ON HIS return from abroad, as one of his first acts, President Wilson called the Governors of all the states and the Mayors of one hundred cities to Washington to confer on plans to speed up business, to stimulate the resumption of private enterprise and public improvements, as a means of lessening unrest.

On February 24 Premier Lloyd George, asserting that Britain was facing civil strife, introduced in Parliament a bill providing for a committee to inquire into the conditions prevailing in the coal industry. The bill was rushed through its three readings on the following day, and it was announced that a report as to wages and hours would be ready by March 20. The miners had threatened a strike on March 15. Behind the miners stood the railway men and transport workers, a triple alliance of labor determined to better working conditions even at the cost of strikes equivalent to civil strife in industry. Are those leaders afraid of labor? By no means. But they have seen in unrest a fever indicating need of radical treatment. World peace must rest on justice. Civil peace can find no other foundation. The time when labor and the public could be exploited has passed. Capital is entitled to a fair profit, and the temper of the world is to permit nothing more. "Profiteer" has come to be a term of conte The man who pays another man less than a li wage steals a part of the other man's earning po The man who charges for merchandise more th fair profit is taking money out of the pockets o customers. Both these men are creating un feeding the fever. If the fever is unchecked both some day lose both their business and their libe The old doctrine that merchandise is worth wh will bring is outgrown. Sweaters of labor and p teers are forcing the nation toward nationalizatio industry, or national control of prices.

The states or the nation or both must take ac speedily to do two things. Every man willing work should be provided with employment at wages, and under fair conditions. Public impr ments which will give opportunity for labor should put in operation. Tribunals with power to act in dustrial disputes should be instituted. If eithe these is neglected, the public pulse will not be stille

And besides this the profiteer must be firmly curb If the law of supply and demand can be set aside individual cupidity and avarice, authority must created to limit lawless profits and to control tribution in the interest of producer and consum If this is not done there may come a crisis in unr None can tell where the fever may break out.

The church has an opportunity to help in solv these urgent problems by preaching common hone and a Christian humanity. It can point the way t peace founded on justice between man and man, which capital and labor shall work together and which the processes of distribution shall be purged unwarranted profit.

The Stewardship of Wealth

IT IS being more and more realized that Christi ity calls for a practical application of its pr ciples in every walk of life; not only in chu and social and private relations, but in all phases a aspects of a man's business as well. Wealth i stewardship, and when the big balance is struck accountability is estimated according to the use have made of our means and opportunities.

Here is an illustration of this principle from real li

An American business man had become convinc of the reasonableness of the doctrine of man's stewa ship. He had thought it all out and decided that might be a good thing to try the experiment. various business enterprises had prospered; his come was constantly increasing; he certainly co do things which he might have done but had n One night he lay awake several hours pondering t whole matter, and before going to sleep prayed o it. Then he made up his mind. Next morning he structed his bookkeeper to open in the ledger a n account in his name, and marked "Special," to whi the bookkeeper should regularly carry one-tenth all profits. He warned him never to fail to have t "Special" account ready when called for.

And that business man's "Special" has nev failed. It has been to him a wonderful revelation the capacity of a man immersed in big enterprises f doing good on a large scale as a side line. It h helped to build churches, to promote the Gospel, support missionaries, to maintain and train orphan to bring gladness to homes of suffering and to ma shut-ins. He has had a hand in a hundred noble ente prises for Christ and humanity. And the most e traordinary thing about it is that it has given him new zest for business, having, as he himself would sa reverently, God as a silent Partner. It has not on been a means of blessing his business, but it has pu fied his whole life, ennobled his character and ma him ten times a better man.

Christianity is not designed to be merely a theor or a beautiful idealism to sit and dream over. The is really no such person as an idle Christian. Eve one, to qualify, must produce works commensura with his Christian professions and his material oppo tunities. There is no finer, wholesomer or more sati fying enjoyment this side of heaven than that whic comes from practical Christian service, and the pe sonal touch and helpful relationship with big ente prises that are going ahead for the World's betterment

Stressing the Great Commission

A CLARION CALL TO ACTION

By RICHARD BRAUNSTEIN

THE Church is awake. The dry bones are living. To quote "Men and Missions" will give the reason:

> "To provide the spiritual equivalent of the stupendous material forces released in the world by the war, the evangelical Church in all her great denominations is projecting a program of extension and enlargement on a vast and comprehensive scale. The barest enumeration of this in naked outline is impressive. The aggregate impression is full of inspiration and challenge."

To give the manifesto issued by the Northern Bapt Laymen throws more light on the subject:

> "It would be a tragedy unspeakable if we should win the war and after all fail to achieve the purpose for which we are fighting. To what end shall we have spent millions of treasure and the far more precious lives of our sons if we fail to take a long step toward the creation between nations and races of those relations of good will and helpfulness that are in accord with the principles of Christ and are necessary to the welfare of the human race?"

T WOULD be a tragedy unspeakable. Happily, such tragedy is to avoided. Every denomination is iving to avoid it.

Already the Northern and Southn Baptists, Lutherans, Methodists, esbyterians, Congregationalists, Disciples of Christ d the Reformed Church, have adopted five-year ograms of intensive study and extensive applican. These are campaigns enlisting the services of entire membership, involving the raising and ending of millions of dollars, and calling for a fellwship of intercession and leadership. The figures in an and money power are staggering. The aims and als are amazing. The plans of procedure are darg. The planks of the platforms are challenging. e things to be done include all the energetics of e Kingdom. Such matters are emphasized as thing, Prayer, Mission and Bible Study, Teacher aining, Evangelism, Pulpit and Press Propaganda, Religious Journal in Every Home, Membership ccessions, Decisions for the Ministry and Other Life ork, Enlistments for the Home and Foreign Fields, hurch, School, College and Hospital Building, and general push and urge for the furthering of all of e values of the Gospel everywhere in the interest of eater numbers and higher efficiency.

It will be a doubling and trebling of all the religious ork of the land. It will be a marshaling of all the iritual forces and resources. It will be a universal ll call, an every-member canvass, a selective draft r the raising of a mighty Christian army. It will a general mobilization of a moribund Church to ecome Christ-like Crusaders for the making of a ood-bought Democracy safe for the world. For this e drill manuals have been written, the text-books of e intellectual maneuvers of the movements for which e brainiest men of the sects have been employed.

Some of the objectives are the rehabilitation of the hristian Home, reestablishment of the Family Altar, turn to the Lord's Day, and the general elimination all that makes for the hurt and shadows of life. It the response of the Church to the "Take up your ss and follow me" of the Master. It is the Church ising its Obedience to the *n*th power.

THE Methodists call their plans "The Centenary," in commemoration of the one hundred years of ethodist missions. The Presbyterians call their ans "The New Era," which is a title in harmony ith the spirit of the great times in which we are living. The Congregationalists are launching a Tercennary Celebration, the movement to be crowned on ecember 21, 1920, which will mark the 300th anniersary of the landing of the Mayflower Pilgrims on lymouth Rock. In honor of these founders of Amera's free institutions the Congregationalists will give wider publicity and application of the democratic rinciples that were given an impetus in New England ree centuries ago. Other denominations are reindling their altar fires from the flame that is sweepg the country.

There are great days ahead for the Church. There much encouragement for those who have had the ingdom of God on their hearts and minds. The various movements are the grand and sublime Amen to he prayers and supplications of the men and women f the faith in the past. Any watchman in his tower canning the distance for the realization of the hopes of the ages may well cry, "The morning cometh!" There are signs of promise everywhere. The horizon is streaked with the roseate hues of dawn. Soon the Sun of Righteousness will flood the land with the genial warmth and mellow glow of his noon-time splendor.

WHAT does it all mean, this new determination and this new endeavor?

What else can it mean but that another miracle has been performed?

The Church, blinded by the dust of materialism and dazzled by the fool's gold of selfishness, had lost its vision. He who opened the eyes of a suppliant of old has opened the eyes of the Church. The Church now sees its privileges and opportunities. It has the vision splendid. It sees, as Robert Moffat saw, "the smoke of a thousand villages where no missionary has ever been." It sees its unfinished task at home in squalid city streets, slums and far-off frontiers. It sees its unfinished task abroad in heathen lands, and a groping humanity seeking the true God amid its temples and idols. It sees the needs of the world made eloquent by the hunger, want and suffering evident on the four corners of the continents.

> THE Church is awake. The dry bones are living.
>
> What does it all mean—this new determination, this new endeavor?
>
> As the Church sees the world as it has never seen the world before, so the world sees the Church as it has never seen the Church before.
>
> The way to keep up is to keep on.
>
> Emotion without motion is null and void.
>
> In the great movements now being inaugurated there is something for everybody to do.

And as the Church sees the world as it has never seen the world before, so the world sees the Church as it has never seen the Church before. The Church and the world are coming together at the crowded ways. The world greets the Church with the cry, "Sirs, we would see Jesus"; it begs, "Show us the Father"; it pleads, "Come and help us"; and the Church rallies to the emergency and flashes back, "In the name of the Son of God we are coming."

Said a wounded soldier in the trenches to his mate, "What can you tell me about your God quick?"

Haste is necessary. The world is sick, weary and wounded. The Church, united in a common task and purpose, must hasten to the rescue. It must forget its theological disputations, denominational differences and petty bickerings.

This is just what in these days it is doing. He who takes hold of one end of the litter on which a hurt brother is prone, must not pause to question the name and affiliation of the man who takes hold of the other end. Both by the leverage of the Cross of Christ must lift the sick and wounded to safety.

This is what the Church is doing. This is the meaning and the significance of the many splendid movements we are discussing. It is worth talking and writing about. It is a theme to handle which is a pleasure. It is the key which enables us to sing doxologies. It is something over which the angels of Heaven make merry. It is that which makes the Cross the plus sign in the minus life of the Church.

IT HAS been observed that the word "movement" is given to these various enterprises. There can be no better word employed for these exploits in righteousness and adventures in social service. The Church is on the move. It is not sojourning in the land of Nod. It is wide awake and alert. It is not Peter lingering by the fire warming himself. It is out on the trails engaged in gracious ministry. It is not static, waiting with its denominational Open Door for the world to pass through. It is dynamic, passing through the waiting world with its interdenominational Open Door of blessing. It is no longer so many private opinions regarding all kinds of reforms, but it is a united effort to take every great reform which was once a private opinion to where it will reach the greatest number. It is individualistic opinion transformed into collective conviction. It is not Theology. It is Sociology. Sociology is applied Theology. It is coming down from the Mount of Transfiguration to the Valley of Disfiguration. It is taking the health of God to the sin-sickness of humanity.

It is a movement in the right direction. At first an organization, it is now a movement. Between the two there is a vast difference. A printing-plant is an assemblage of parts, wheels, cogs and belts. This is an organization. When the power is applied and the parts, wheels, cogs, belts hum and turn, and books and papers are printed, then is the organization a movement. A stuffed lion in the museum is interesting. A live lion in its native element is thrilling. An army standing at attention may invoke our interest, but an army on the march to battle will call forth our admiration. The equilibrium of a bicycle is explained by the principle that it moves. It is suggestive of the fact that a thing which moves cannot fall down. The way to keep up is to keep on. The first word of the Great Commission is "Go." We cannot go until we move. The organizations of the denominations were interesting. Now the movements of the denominations are thrilling. It is goodness in action. There is no other goodness that is worth while.

RUSKIN said, "Life without industry is sin." Carlyle said, "The end of a man is an action, not a thought." When Cavour died Mrs. Browning wrote, "That noble soul who meditated and made Italy has gone to a diviner country." The words "meditated" and "made" are significant. Creed without deed is useless. Emotion without motion is null and void. To hold a service and not do a service is folly. The Word must become flesh. Doctrines must be incarnated. The tree must be vindicated by its fruit.

All this is being demonstrated by the various movements, evangelistic, aggressive, extensive and intensive, that are now showering manifold blessings along the Jericho road of life. They are the practical demonstration of the parable of the Good Samaritan. They are the recovery of the first-century passion impelled through twentieth-century channels. It is a return to the Christian fundamentals. It is presenting the world with the Rose of Christ rather than the botany of Christ. It is a return to Christ, who did much preaching but who also did more good. The Church is now singing all of Wesley's hymn, for it realizes that it has not alone "a never-dying soul to save," but the God-given task "to serve the present age."

All this is as it should be. It is the Church taking itself seriously. It is "Stressing the Great Commission." It is heeding the things that matter most, and it is following the gleam instead of the glitter. It is thinking in world terms, looking beyond sectarian fences and over denominational retaining walls. It is abandoning forever the petty and picayune policy of "you in your corner, and I in mine." The practical result will be not the making of more members for some communion in particular, but the making of more and better Christians in general.

IN THIS Challenge of the Hour there is opportunity for everyone to express his or her life in the highest terms and to become identified with the greatest, most wide-reaching reform of the ages.

There are no special laws for doing good. There is only one law. That is the law of Jesus Christ. It is found in the profoundest book of jurisprudence ever printed. That Book is the Bible in Old and New Testaments.

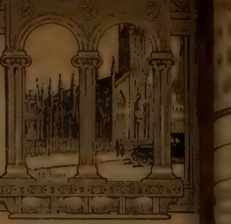
There are no special degrees in righteousness. There are only privileges. There are no special dimensions. There are only opportunities. Righteousness may be expressed on a large scale, such as Dan Crawford and others losing themselves in some foreign jungle, or it may be expressed like that woman of olden time of whom Jesus said, "She hath done what she could."

We are to do the best we can. Angels can do no more. Our best may not equal some other person's best, but it is our best. As such it will contribute to the greater whole.

The pathway of God to one heart is through another heart. John Smith or Mary Jones may possess that heart. Every atom in the universe acts on every other atom. But each atom acts most strongly on the atom that is nearest. The big things in life are accomplished by those who are faithful in the matter of the little things. The duty for every man and woman is the next duty. In the last analysis the mountains all reduce to grains and the ocean to drops. If the world is beautiful in its vastness it is because it is first beautiful in its atoms.

In the great movements now being inaugurated there is something for everybody to do. There is a place for all. Let all be in their place. God has spoken to us for men. It is the privilege of each of us to speak to men for God.

The Church and the World



*A SERMON BY REV. A. EDWIN KEIGWIN, D.D.

TEXT—Acts 17 : 26. "God hath made of one blood all nations of men."

THESE words constitute one of the earliest declarations of the principle of democracy. The sentiment was uttered in Athens, the ancient seat of learning, by Paul, the ablest exponent of Christianity of his time. The essential unity of mankind was accepted then as a fundamental fact, both by scholar and saint. It is so accepted today.

Science and religion therefore see eye to eye on the main proposition, and they may cordially cooperate in their mutually avowed purpose to bring about the full realization of pure democracy, providing that they do not permit their attention to be distracted from the fundamental fact.

And just here lies the chief danger of the hour. We are becoming embittered and embroiled over confused and confusing issues. We are assigning to fractions the full value of the integer. We are getting lost in blind alleys.

Democracy! How loosely the term is used in this period of social unrest! It is a word to conjure with. It has come to be the name of almost anything from autocracy to anarchy. Indeed, it is daily becoming harder for the average man to determine whether Democracy is freedom or frenzy. Wherefore it is of extreme importance that we inquire, and with special earnestness, What is Democracy? Going back to original sources we find the answer quite simple. Democracy is not many things, but one thing. And that one thing is Oneness.

Democracy may be defined in a single word. It is solidarity. Not the solidarity of identity or sameness as so many particles of sand in a sand-pile. In that case democracy would be an aggregation. Not mechanical solidarity, as so many particles of earth in a wall of hard-baked brick. That were democracy of the mass. But the solidarity of a living organism, where there is variety, self-expression and yet the most vital unity. A plant is a good illustration. Every leaf, every branch, every flower is different—yet the plant is one. So much so that no leaf, no twig, no branch, may sever its relations with the organism, and no flower may be plucked from the stem without death ensuing. An even better example is the human body, where in addition to the death penalty for disunion, there is a life penalty. "Whether one member suffer, all members suffer with it; or one member be honored, all members rejoice with it."

Is not this exactly the principle embodied in all the sacred instruments of American Democracy? The Declaration of Independence was the enunciation of the principle of solidarity. Had that principle been cordially accepted by the mother country, in all probability America would not have severed her relation. Self-expression, not separation, was the desire of the forefathers. This fundamental principle is emblazoned upon our escutcheon: "E Pluribus Unum." It is written large in America's jurisprudence, "Equality before the law." It flames brightly from the torch of Liberty. It is heard more clearly than ever before in the frequent and fervent demands for social justice.

SOLIDARITY has been the dominant note in Americanism from the nation's birth down to the recent unprecedentedly united effort in behalf of Democracy. Somewhere in every capital, in every schoolhouse, in every church might well be displayed the words of Abraham Lincoln, called forth by Greeley's "prayer" to him "in behalf of twenty million" who desired an immediate edict of emancipation:

"If there be those who would not save the Union unless they could at the same time save slavery, I do not agree with them. If there be those who would not save the Union unless they could at the same time destroy slavery, I do not agree with them. My paramount object is to save the Union! What I do about slavery, I do because I believe it helps to save the Union." Lincoln clearly understood the meaning of Democracy. Do we?

There is special need just now that we remind ourselves of this cardinal principle. In blindness of rage at glaring social injustice, and in eagerness of heart to right the wrong, we may mistake tinsel for gold and plunge humanity into a more dire plight. At the moment, it looks very much as though we are about to fly from one evil into the arms of another. It is a singular phenomenon which we behold. At a time when one set of class distinctions has completely collapsed, forces are at work creating a new set of class distinctions equally if not more hurtful to true Democracy. Surely a new autocracy is not the solution to our social problems. Instead of healing the disease in the body politic, are we not introducing new elements of discomfort into the system?

The disease is not on the surface; it is organic. It is not an economic eruption, it is spiritual disunion. Any political doctor who contents himself with the application of patent nostrums that promise to allay the surface irritation, is a quack. If merely money and material comforts were curative, then the rich should be saints. Unfortunately, observation does not encourage one to believe that such is the case. What America needs most of all is the remedy prescribed by Lincoln in that dark hour when Democracy seemed about to expire: Let us be dedicated anew to "the proposition that all men are created equal. A house divided against itself cannot stand."

Whatever tends to disrupt is an enemy of Democracy and must be eliminated. Contrariwise, whatever tends to create good feeling among the members of the organism; whatever promises to bring hitherto antagonistic interests into harmony should be encouraged. By following out this program, we may make some mistakes, but they will be of judgment, not of heart. Anyway, is it not better to blunder on in the right direction than to continue living at this "poor dying rate"? Has it not been characteristic of Democracy that it somehow "muddles through"? At best we are groping in the dark. So much the more should we be alertly aggressive, lest in our blindness a bauble be palmed off on us in exchange for a priceless heritage. We are well aware that in the darkness beside us are friend and foe, and passwords are spoken by the one as well as the other. So long as we know the real article when we see it, there is always a fighting chance to recover our ideals when they are made way with.

IS THE League of Nations a real step forward? It looks like it. Let us hope that it is. Whether it is or no must be left to statesmen and to time to determine. Certainly it is a move in the right direction, and as such is deserving of encouragement and sympathetic open-mindedness on the part of all who believe in the solidarity of mankind. But, whatever uncertainties or misgivings may be involved in the statesman's gigantic task, the task of the Christian is quite clear.

The Bible declares men equal. The Constitution of the United States proclaims them equal. To make it so in deed and in truth is the sacred obligation which Almighty God has placed upon church and state. Not alone out of self-respect, but from the lower motive of self-preservation, we must discharge this duty to our fellow men. For unless we level up society, others will level down society. As between the two, the former process is democratic, the latter is not. The first task for the New Era is to make good the claims which our forefathers have put into words long cherished by every true American.

This is the Church's day of opportunity. Will she measure up to the high hopes of her founders? Christianity was born for such an hour as this. It was designed to be a vast unifying influence among the nations. The movement started well. The solidarity of society was fearlessly proclaimed at Jerusalem, the seat of bigotry, at Athens, the seat of learning, and at Rome, the seat of the mighty. The essential oneness of all races was set forth in convincing argument and in impassioned oratory. "There is no difference between Jew and Greek, barbarian and Scythian, bondman and freeman." Racial distinctions, ritualistic distinctions, social distinctions, all were erased, and at Pentecost the high-water mark of pure Democracy was established.

Then a dark tragedy befell the Church, and came under the contaminating influence of the system she had been sent to remedy. First sh came Judaized, then Romanized, then partisan and finally demoralized. Christianity was to t form the nations, but instead the nations transfo Christianity, bitter nationalism reproducing itse denominationalism.

The hour has struck for the prompt recover Christianity's lost unity, without which she ca serve this day and generation. Most of the div influences now seeking to break up Democracy re full well the importance of Christianity to poli solidarity. Therefore the bitter hatred of the Chu Do Christians realize as fully how much dep upon the Church? A divided Church is incapab ministering to a divided world. From which it wi seen that something more than sentimental rea prove conclusively the necessity for the unio Christendom. Manifestly a religion that estra men who believe essentially alike can only work integration in spiritual solidarity, which is the soul of Democracy. Partisan piety means part politics. A United Church means a United Worl

THE Church must "show" the world before can save the world. The prayer of our I proves this conclusively: "Father, I pray that t may be one—that the world may believe that t hast sent me." The world will gladly welcome s a demonstration. While the blood is up and w iron is in the blood, let us undertake our great wo task as a united body; all actuated by one li Spirit, safeguarded by one instinctive attitude mind, and bound together by one common idea, common principle and one common purpose. such religious leadership the world is eagerly wait

There is a particularly dangerous body of wate the north of us, between the coast of Maine and N Scotia—the Bay of Fundy. Twice in every twen four hours a mighty tidal wave rolls in from the lantic, sweeping to destruction everything in its pa Even under normal conditions, this inflow from ocean reaches a height of from twenty-five to thi feet, and in the spring it frequently attains a hei of from sixty to seventy feet. The sight of this h oncoming wave is terrifying and never to be forgott Its foaming crest may be seen far out to sea. mountain of water becomes more ominous as it vances and gathers momentum. The air is filled w mist and fog. Wild birds fly about, screaming in wake of the death-dealing waters, looking for pr Woe to the fisherman who has lingered too long o his net. Woe to the skipper, unacquainted with wild behavior of these tides, who has delayed to f safety.

How are we to account for this apparent freak nature? The explanation is simple. The pecul conformation of the seacoast at this point is the cau The Bay of Fundy has a funnel-shaped and rapi narrowing entrance, making it difficult for the da tides of the ocean, usually only four to six feet, enter. So the water backs up and piles up higher a higher as the channel becomes narrower and shallow Old ocean's task is made even more difficult by t divisions and subdivisions of the Bay.

Now, Democracy's terrifying and destructive pects are due to much the same cause. As the mo at regular intervals reaches down and lifts the wat of the sea at high tide, so at regular intervals G reaches down and lifts the hearts of men to high ti of Democratic fervor. Wherever the inlet has be narrowed or made shallow; wherever the chan for the incoming flood has been divided and sub vided, there Democracy assumes alarming, even t rifying proportions. There also mist and fog gath and the wild birds of prey fly screaming about glo ing over the death and destruction scattered in t wake of abnormal conditions.

Liberate the mind from all slavery to past prej dices and let it roam about the world, and what we find? This: that wherever inlets have been na rowed or divided by tyranny or bigotry, selfishness greed, there has the rising tide of Democracy assum terrifying proportions. For this situation there is b one remedy. The tide cannot be changed; but t inlet can.

Unity has become a world-note. Above the babb of counsels and the jargon of demands and incrimin tions, this dominant note is heard, and it must sustained loud and clear and long. Let us not perm our faith in this fundamental principle of Democrac to be shaken.

The Home-Maker

FOUR simple words the headstone bore,
I conned their meaning o'er and o'er:
"She made home happy."—What could be Sweeter appeal to memory,
Or who could frame in language true
More praise in words so fit and few?
"She made home happy."—Year by year
Her life was one of hope and cheer—
Traits that in this, a later age,
Live on, her children's heritage.

EUGENE C. DOLSON.

---

* Pastor, West End Presbyterian Church, New York.

Reverends
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
R. Braunstein
C. C. Albertson, D. D.

Daily Meditation

Reverends
C. M. Sheldon, D.D.
E. W. Caswell
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

Clouds Without Water

SUNDAY, March 16. Jude 12. "These are clouds without water." And what could be more ironical than for the earth to be dry, baked hard in the long drought, and for clouds to appear ich carry no water? The clouds seem as if they re the homes of refreshing showers, and as if they uld open their treasures in gentle bountifulness; t never a drop comes from their showy parade! ey have only the appearance of reviving ministries, d the thirsty land remains parched, and her fertility checked. And there are things in human life just e these rainless clouds. They seem to be real things t they carry no vital wealth. They have no water the deepest thirsts of the soul. They are gay geants, but they have no rain.

For instance, there is a sort of laughter which conns no vitalizing joy. It is a cloud without water. confers a passing interest, but it does not enrich the l of the life and make it a pregnant bed of more itful harvests. When the laughter is over, the soul's pings are unappeased. The humor of good men soft with showers. Their laughter holds the chalice the soul. The fact of the matter is, some folks ow the deepest oı all laughters, a laughter full of reing joy, and this laughter lends some of its treasure every lighter season and makes it like an April ower. "When the Lord turned again the captivity Zion . . . our mouth was filled with laughter."

Then, again, there is a sort of society in which re is no fellowship. It is a cloud without water. It vides gossip, but no communion. Deep never calls to deep. Heart has no kinship with heart in the cious things of the spirit. Is there any society to compared with the friendship of two souls who n move together along the light surfaces of life, d also descend together into the graver depths,—w amid clean frivolities, and now in the secret ngs of God?

It is possible for men and women to be clouds without ter. We may move about in the world, delusive esences, bearing the promise of refreshing, and yet ly mocking the expectations of men, like a mirage the desert waste. We can bear the Christian name d yet carry no rain. We can be ecclesiastical and t be spiritually dry. We can exhibit many sugstions of kinship with the Lord and yet not be the hicles of grace. We may be like empty cisterns d not like inexhaustible wells. How far is all this m our purposed inheritance in Christ Jesus! Every grim on the road is intended to find in us streams d showers of refreshment. J. H. J.

Saved by Love

MONDAY, March 17. I Tim. 1:5. "But the end of the charge is love out of a pure heart and a od conscience and faith unfeigned." (R. V.) Tenson, describing the Knights of King Arthur's Round ble, speaks of love as able "not only to keep down e base in man, but teach high thought and amiable rds . . . and love of truth, and all that makes a man." American soldier in France came to a chaplain fore a Communion service and said, "I don't know ether I ought to take Communion; I never did at me, but I have just had a letter from my mother, d I'd like to have help to be as good as she thinks m." The chaplain told him to come. He said, This service is for just such as you." The love that nds us to goodness is at its best when it fixes upon an ject that demands the utmost of us and that never ries in its constancy. The blind poet of Edinburgh ng when his earthly lover had cast him off because his blindness, "O love that will not let me go." e saw in God the love that never varies in its conancy and the Light that never grows dim. The endship of God as revealed in Christ is life's preme moral motive. "The love of Christ conaineth us." That love also restrains us. The love a child has been known to exercise immeasurable wer in the reformation of a derelict life. If human e at its best can do so much, how much deeper and ore permanent the fruit of love eternal and unanging! Poor Joe in Dickens's story "Bleak ouse" said, when death had hold of him, "It is time r me to go to Him that loves me." The love of God akes victorious many a dying hour. C. C. A.

Be a Hobab

TUESDAY, March 18. Num., 10:29. "Come thou with us, and we will do thee good." So spoke oses to Hobab. But Hobab refused to take the urney to Canaan. He preferred the arid wastes, ctus growths and wind-swept ridges to the riches the land toward which the Israelites were traveling.

So Moses renewed the invitation by the process of reversal. He said in substance, "Come with us and do us good." This time Hobab accepts. Refusing to go before for his own gain, he is now willing to go because he can be of help to others.

Ralph Conner has told us about Sandy, who was inclined to drink. The minister said to Sandy, "I greatly fear for Donald. If he falls into bad company he and his family will come to grief. Could you keep an eye on him?" Sandy threw back his shoulders. He felt taller. The idea that he could be of service, and some use, put the iron in his blood. It challenged his manhood. He kept Donald straight, and was so busy in that work that he forgot his own temptations. The minister in trying to help Sandy succeeded in making Sandy help somebody else. The minister helped two.

That is the way God intends us to be helped. We are to help others. We are saved not alone to serve, but are saved by serving.

God does not comfort us that we may be comfortable but that we may be comforters. He enriches us so that we may enrich others.

We are not to corner our blessings, but we are to bless the corner where we are. We are not to be helped, but we are to help.

He who is a Hobab is a true helper. R. B.

The Crowning Year

WEDNESDAY, March 19. Ps. 65:11. "Thou crownest the year with thy goodness." According to the pessimist, last year was a terrible year. War, famine, pestilence, disease, violence and death in a multitude of forms stalked over the earth.

And yet, judged by the standard of God, it was a year crowned with goodness. For, according to Plato, who agreed with the Master on this point, death itself is an insignificant thing by the side of character. "Not life, but a good life," he says, "is to be chiefly valued."

Last year was a crowning year in the world's history, in spite of all its horrors, because:

(1) New conditions in military life surrounded men with safeguards from vice never known before in the history of the world.

(2) The world's protest against intoxicating drink reached a climax, leading to a nation of 100,000,000 people without a brewery or a saloon. And drink has killed more than all the wars of history.

(3) The world was never so sacrificial. More money has been given to relieve human distress than ever was known, and more for church work and worldwide missions than ever recorded.

(4) The different sects and denominations of the world took steps that will lead to a federation of Christendom which will mark a new era in Christianity.

(5) There has been a breaking down of national exclusiveness and a sense of responsibility for other nations never before known in human history.

(6) There has been a growing sense of a need of a League of Nations that would put an end to war. That consciousness is at last finding concrete expression in a League. That fact is of tremendous value to the future.

When the history of the world is finally written by the Christian historian the year 1918 may be found to be the greatest and best year in the world's calendar. We need to be continually reminded of the fact which even the old Greek philosopher found out, that death itself is not a very serious thing. As he says, "Be of good cheer about death, and know of a certainty that no evil can happen to a good man."

Last year was a terrible year to the man who thinks physical death is the most important event in life. It was a "crowning year of God" to the man who looks far enough ahead. C. M. S.

Humility With Dignity

THURSDAY, March 20. Luke 11:43. "Woe unto you, Pharisees! for ye love the uppermost seats in the synagogues, and greetings in the markets." The Bible teaches us to regard able teachers and leaders as precious gifts which God bestows on his Church and to hold them worthy of double honor for their work's sake. But this does not mean that God wants hierarchical ranks set up in his Church; he rather deprecates them, as in this text; for in all ages the setting up of titled superiorities in the Church has wrought havoc with the simplicity and humility in which all Christians are brethren under their one Master Christ. The common sense of Christians and their grateful heart readily and gladly accord all sorts of distinctions to the great men in the Church, but they resent as an encroachment upon their freedom and a destruction of the brotherly relationship when their great men demand as a right, even a divine right, priority of rank and station, and high-sounding titles. These things feed the ambition and pride of the human heart, and become snares even to the regenerate. Pretensions to greatness among the teachers of the Church also lead to ecclesiastical despotism—if they do not spring from that motive—and become fearful and ruinous to Christians all the more because the pretenders invade the domain of the Christian conscience and lead men ultimately to an idolatrous regard for human greatness and to a disregard of the supreme claims which Christ has on the love and esteem of his followers as their Teacher, Reconciler, Lord and Guide.

It is a solemn warning which Christ utters in this text. The Church has needed it at all times. Some churches may have been greater offenders than others in this respect, but none have a right to consider themselves immune. Let no man vaunt himself of his position and office. Humility is the true way to abiding dignity, some one has truly remarked.

W. H. T. D.

The Conquest of Self

FRIDAY, March 21. Rom. 6:11. "Reckon ye also yourselves to be dead to sin." There is a point in the development of every Christian character which marks the death of self. Self may have many defeats before it finally dies. Our lives may be marked with a thousand victories over self before the final victory which accomplishes the complete conquest of that arch-enemy of God within our own souls. Few pages of history are nobler than that which relates a certain hour Sir Thomas More spent in the privacy of his own study. The king desired a divorce. Sir Thomas must give it sanction or be dishonored. Out of that study he came with a light in his eyes and an erectness of carriage which were not perceptible when he entered the room. He said, "I thank my God the fight is won." To the Tower he went, presently to lay his head upon the block, and die as a gallant English gentleman and as a true Christian. The fight he fought was first of all with self. Righteousness must be maintained at whatever cost.

The third of the temptations of Jesus recorded in the Gospels marks the complete victory of our Saviour over self. Thenceforward it was easier for him to "please not himself." The crisis of our lives may come on the battlefield on which self challenges duty or conscience or honor or purity or truth. When that gauntlet is flung down, the battle royal is on. Wise are we if we prepare ourselves for the conflict by fortifying our wills, by entrenching ourselves in deep and solemn purposes. The Christian life has its entrenchments, its defenses, its armor as well as its arms. No soul need ever fight alone. God is our invisible Ally. Christ is our Banner. The Word of God is our Shield. Self may be masked in innumerable disguises, but the Spirit of God, our inward Monitor, enables us to recognize the enemy in whatever form he may appear. C. C. A.

"If I Only Had!"

SATURDAY, March 22. Luke 19:42. "If thou hadst known." A keeper at a drawbridge did not watch the semaphore. Failing to close the bridge, he allowed a trainload of passengers to plunge to their death. Ever after he could be heard whispering to himself, "Oh, if I only had! If I only had!" He might have known if he had watched the signs. How many could escape the pits of peril if they would profit by the experience of others, but how natural to follow like dumb animals friendly associates whose steps take hold on death, whose failures and wrecks lie along the pathway of life!

How soon the signs of warning will be hidden away forever! The present is the precious moment for action. Only those blinded by passion rush on regardless of danger. The drunken engineer will run his train past the signal, and, after the wreck, hide himself from the face of his fellow men, crying out, "If I only had not taken that last awful chance! But now it is forever too late!" God's signals are plain; he who runs may read, but oh, how many rush by, taking time's fast express to the abyss of ruin! They are willing to be guided by the false lights of brilliant skepticism, of fashionable sins, of attractive infidelity, and by the red lights of lust and pleasure. They dash themselves against the Rock of Ages rather than build upon the foundation which cannot be moved. Today, if you will hear the Master's voice, harden not your hearts by neglect. This is your day; you may never have another. Put not your head into the lap of Delilah, but upon the heart of your Redeemer. Let not your eternal requiem be, "Oh that I had known!" E. W. C.

From dreary, aimless existence in dismal cabins to useful lives and comfortable home

Photos © Press Illustrating Service

Helping Others to Help Themselves

By EARLE HARRISON

AWAY down in the heart of Dixie, in the foothills of the Cumberland Mountains, is a school—not the conventional institutional affair, where knowledge is imparted entirely from books and "theory" is the one important and often the only phase of knowledge discussed. On the contrary, this place of learning is a practical "training camp" where both the theoretical and practical sides of living are taught. This is the Berry School, Rome, Georgia. Here boys and girls from the mountains are converted from ignorant, dirty and lazy ne'er-do-wells into clean, intelligent, well-prepared candidates for better citizenship, desirable husbands and wives and efficient home-builders.

Miss Berry, combining wealth and refinement with a great knowledge of what was needed to improve the young folks of the mountains, has given the better part of her life to the work of teaching. From her old colonial home she made trips, beginning as a mere child, into the mountains, carrying with her the Bible, a simple spelling-book, slate and pencil. Sunday after Sunday she rode up into the hills, visiting cabin homes, teaching the children there about God, and instructing them in their a b c's—and, in time, teaching them to read and write. As she taught, she gained the confidence of the young people and the older folks too.

When Miss Berry began her teaching, in her own home, all her students were as children, for despite the fact that many were more than half grown, they could neither read nor write. From her home she took her boys and girls to a log cabin constructed on the plantation, and here she began a school, and from this humble beginning she has added and enlarged, until today, instead of teaching a dozen or eighteen mountain boys and girls in a single room constructed of logs, more than five hundred students are being taught the theoretical and practical sides of modern living, and this work now requires more than two dozen large buildings for housing and classrooms.

IN REALITY, the Berry School is two schools in one; for the boys have their living quarters, mess-hall and classrooms in one section of the grounds, while in another part of the campus is a group of buildings devoted to the living quarters and instruction rooms of the girls. The boys and girls are only allowed to meet on Sundays at church and occasionally for little socia affairs, yet despite this there have been a number o courtships and happy marriages; and this please Miss Berry, for the happy home is the object of al her teaching, and her graduates are model home-builders.

There are but two requirements to entering th school—you must be from the mountains and you must be willing to help Miss Berry to help you. There is no charge made for the schooling, and all the necessary clothing, food, heat and light, together with a comfortable room, is provided free; in fact, everything is given the boy or girl who applies fo training. Even the books that he studies are furnished gratuitously.

But on the other hand the student is not allowed t feel that he or she is the recipient of charity. On the contrary, the student is taught to be independent, and to make this independence genuine every student gives something to the school in return for what i received. This is in the form of work, and in turn this work is part of the training. Since the school started, there has never been any hired help there. All the chores have been done by the students.

A large farm is part of the school, and on this food is produced. A large part of what the students eat they themselves raise. A dairy is maintained, and there is made all the butter and cheese used. A fresh and abundant supply of milk and cream forms an important part of the food supply.

THE working day is divided in two parts, each about four hours; one part is given up to class work, the other to practical training. The practical work for the boys comprises a wide scale and includes almost every phase of modern life on the farm. They are given actual construction work, taught to build houses, barns, highways and bridges, also to repair and rebuild farming machinery. In fact, they have a well-rounded knowledge of all kinds of machinery and the use of tools. Of course they are taught practical and scientific methods of farming and business methods which when applied will make farming profitable.

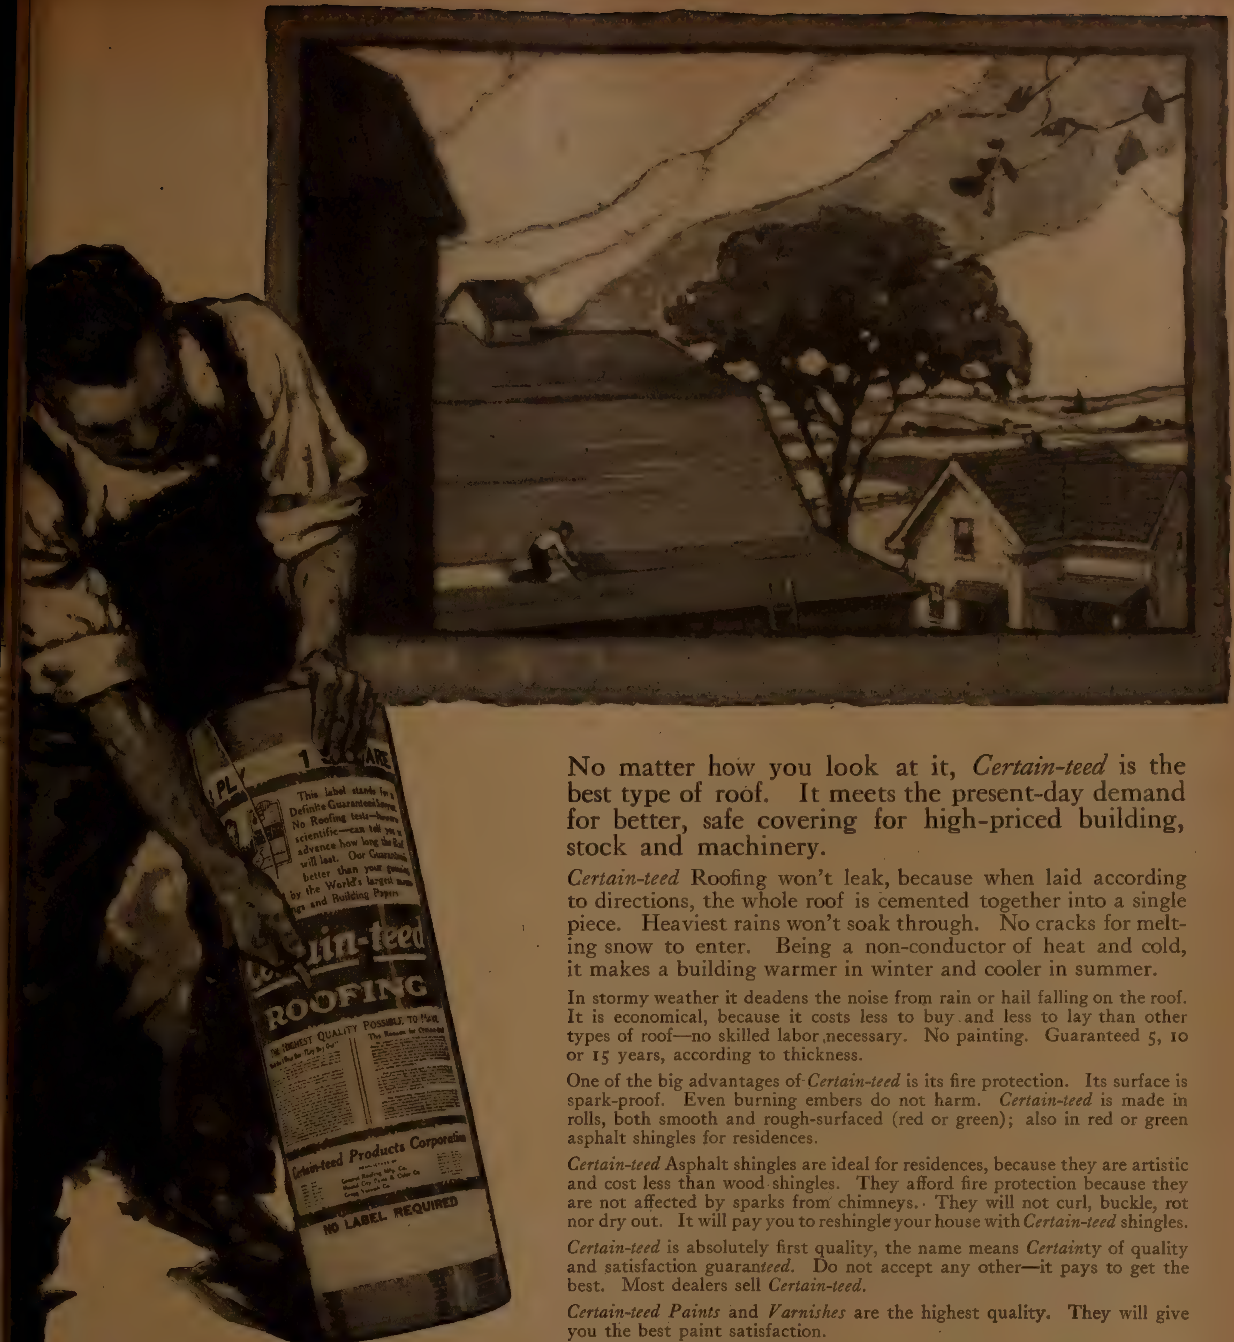
As to the classroom, or book-learning, every graduate receives sufficient academic knowledge to allow him to enter the freshman class in any college or university, should he desire to continue his educatio Miss Berry usually keeps the student in school fro five to six years, yet there have been students wh could read and write a little when they came to he who have graduated in less time.

To see the wonderful result of what Miss Berry has done, and is still doing, one has but to go into the mountains. There you will find modern homes and fine farms, and in these homes and on these farms you will find her graduates. Then visit the dirty, poorly lighted and heated cabins where the whole family look underfed, and in many instances stooped and flat-chested from consumption, and you will be loath to believe that it was from just such cabins tha Miss Berry sought the boy or girl upon whom to bestow an education.

Yet when you speak to Miss Berry of the marvelou changes her school has produced upon the young mountaineers, she replies in a sincere and modest way "I have only helped them to help themselves."

© Press Illustrating Service

The forge shop where every note of the anvil rings with character-making



1 SQUARE
3 PLY
This label stands for a Definite Guarantee
No Roofing test—however scientific—can tell you in advance how long the Roof will last. Our Guarantee is better than your guessing by the World's largest and Building Papers
Certain-teed
ROOFING
THE HIGHEST QUALITY POSSIBLE TO MAKE Certain-teed Products Corporation
NO LABEL REQUIRED

No matter how you look at it, Certain-teed is the best type of roof. It meets the present-day demand for better, safe covering for high-priced building, stock and machinery.

Certain-teed Roofing won't leak, because when laid according to directions, the whole roof is cemented together into a single piece. Heaviest rains won't soak through. No cracks for melting snow to enter. Being a non-conductor of heat and cold, it makes a building warmer in winter and cooler in summer.

In stormy weather it deadens the noise from rain or hail falling on the roof. It is economical, because it costs less to buy and less to lay than other types of roof—no skilled labor necessary. No painting. Guaranteed 5, 10 or 15 years, according to thickness.

One of the big advantages of Certain-teed is its fire protection. Its surface is spark-proof. Even burning embers do not harm. Certain-teed is made in rolls, both smooth and rough-surfaced (red or green); also in red or green asphalt shingles for residences.

Certain-teed Asphalt shingles are ideal for residences, because they are artistic and cost less than wood shingles. They afford fire protection because they are not affected by sparks from chimneys. They will not curl, buckle, rot nor dry out. It will pay you to reshingle your house with Certain-teed shingles.

Certain-teed is absolutely first quality, the name means *Certain*ty of quality and satisfaction guaran*teed*. Do not accept any other—it pays to get the best. Most dealers sell Certain-teed.

Certain-teed Paints and Varnishes are the highest quality. They will give you the best paint satisfaction.

Certain-teed Products Corporation
Offices and Warehouses in Principal Cities

Certain-teed

PAINT VARNISH ROOFING & RELATED BUILDING PRODUCTS

Religion and the League of Nations

By DR. CHARLES E. JEFFERSON

A MIND penetrated by the spirit of the Christian religion is naturally hospitable to the general conception of a League of Nations. A man versed in the life of Jesus of Nazareth and accustomed to breathe the atmosphere of the New Testament is predisposed in favor of a scheme so idealistic and so practical. He may find himself in opposition to sundry details of various proposed plans, but to the general idea of a League of Nations he will forthwith give his hearty consent. Such a proposal falls in with the general temper and intention of the teaching of Jesus Christ.

Christianity is wide-visioned. It carries the world in its eye. It assumes that "God has made of one blood every nation of men to dwell on all the face of the earth, having determined their appointed seasons, and the bounds of their habitation." In other words, all nations are the creations of the Almighty, under his guidance and care, working out in their various ways the far-reaching plans of the Eternal Wisdom. The Founder of Christianity met his disciples just before he left the earth, and in that final hour said to them: "Go and make disciples of all the nations, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

Among the things which Jesus commanded his disciples was the duty of keeping their hearts free from the love of dominion. The spirit of domination in the first century was rampant, and everywhere it worked mischief and disaster. "Ye know," he said, "that the rulers of the nations lord it over them, and their great ones exercise authority over them. Not so shall it be among you. But whosoever would become great among you shall be your servant; and whosoever would be first among you shall be your slave, even as the Son of Man came not to be served but to serve, and to give his life a ransom for many." A Christian nation is a nation which has the mind of Christ. The mind of Christ is a brotherly mind, finding its supreme satisfaction in serving others. The New Testament holds before us the ideal Man, and that Man keeps saying to all the generations, "I am among you as one who serves."

A Christian man knows, therefore, that all boasting of military or naval or economic supremacy is anti-Christian; and that all ambition in any nation to dominate either the land or the sea is perilous; and that every plan for the aggrandisement of one nation at the expense of others is born of a spirit which, unless curbed, will eventually tear the world to pieces. He will be in favor of any scheme which promises to hold this spirit in check.

THE religion of Christ is exceedingly solicitous for the well-being of the little and the weak. "Despise not one of these little ones" is a sentence of the Master which made a deep impression on the minds of all who heard it. It was spoken with unusual solemnity and passion. The soul of Jesus always flashed fire in the presence of tyranny imposing its will on helpless weakness. He was everywhere and always the protector of the weak. Men who came the nearest to him were filled with passionate concern for those who were unable to defend themselves. "Support the weak," wrote the first great Christian preacher in the oldest Christian document which has come down to us, and that sentiment runs like a strain of celestial music through the whole New Testament.

A Christian nation true to its better self will always be careful of the weak. Little nations cannot be trampled on with impunity, any more than can little children. "Woe to the man," said Jesus, "who makes it hard for a little child." "It were better for him that a great millstone should be hanged about his neck and that he should be sunk in the depth of the sea." Woe to the nation, then, which tramples on a little neighbor. He that sits in the heavens laughs at the military preparedness of a nation willing to do a thing like that. Germany lost the war in the hour in which she trampled on Belgium. Her doom was sealed when the first Belgian child was murdered. Mighty empires must not be permitted to perpetrate outrages on defenseless kingdoms. The smallest nation has a right to life and liberty and the pursuit of happiness. To safeguard this right, the nations must be leagued. Experience proves it.

THE religion of Jesus has a keen ear for the cry of those in distress. Its feet are swift to carry relief to all who are in need. There is no more vivid picture in the New Testament than that of the Good Samaritan—the man who gets his arms under another man—although a stranger and a foreigner and a devotee of a different religion—who is bleeding and half dead, and lifts him to life and health again. The words inscribed beneath that picture—"Go and do thou likewise"—are words of fire which have burned themselves into the fiber of the conscience of mankind. We all feel bound by them even though some of us may call ourselves unbelievers. When nations fall among robbers who strip them and leave them bleeding and half dead, other nations must go to their assistance. This is the will of God. In order that they may go with expedition and conquering strength, they must be leagued. Experience has demonstrated that.

The religion of Jesus calls for faith and kindles it. It inspires men to face difficulties without flinching, to meet obstacles undaunted. Those who are completely swayed by it are without fear. They are not intimidated by what the world calls the impossible. They believe that with God all things which ought to be accomplished are possible. The Divine Leader of the Church says in every crisis: "Fear not, only believe!" He does not allow his followers to be tethered to the past, to be bound by stupid traditions, to be held back by foolish conventionalities, to be paralyzed by hampering precedents, to be browbeaten by bygone failures, or to be robbed of the joy of venturing into paths which are new. He said and says: "You shall see greater things than these." "Behold, I make all things new." He makes it easy for his disciples to believe in miracles, marvels, wonders, things which cannot be accounted for by any of the hypotheses written in the world's philosophy. Those who have his spirit revel in projects which are colossal, and plunge gladly into moral enterprises which tax all the resources of the soul. A Christian likes this proposed League of Nations because of its vastness and the audacious way it fronts the future.

WHEN some timorous soul suggests that there are difficulties in establishing a League of Nations, the Christian replies: "What of that?" When some one says: "The obstacles are well-nigh insurmountable," he replies: "Suppose they are?" When some one shudderingly points out the perils, the Christian's response is: "Every path is perilous which leads toward the heights, and perils are no excuse for flinching in the face of duty, or running away from an opening door." Suppose the United States had refused to send two millions of our boys to Europe because the sea was perilous, and because France was still more perilous than the sea! No nation truly Christian ever stops to think of danger when momentous interests are at stake. A League of Nations carries with it frightful perils. Very well, then, let us have it, for without it the perils are more numerous and more appalling still.

The Christian religion is the religion of the Cross. It accepts the principle of sacrifice as the controlling principle of human life. It is by the Cross that we are to conquer. Only by giving up things which are precious can we obtain things which are more precious still. It is only as we surrender things which we prize that the world gains things which are essential to its progress. No step forward can be taken until the full price has been paid. No wrong can be redressed, no right can be established, without bloody sweat. It is everlastingly true that without the shedding of blood there can be no remission of sins. The Head of the Christian religion carries a cross, and he says to all who are willing to listen: "Unless you take up your cross daily and come after me, you cannot be my disciples." A true Christian is a cross-bearer. It is his habit to make sacrifices for others. A Christian nation must bear its cross. It must give up a lower good to secure a higher one. Some one dolefully remarks that "If our country goes into a League of Nations we assume responsibilities which are heavy." It is right that we should! Why should our big Republic refuse to get its broad shoulders under the world's burdens? That is what we are here for. God has given us the best part of this continent, and immeasurable resources, and a long line of noble leaders from Washington to Wilson, and millions of God-fearing men and women, in order that in this, the greatest crisis of history, we should be ready to come forth and accept with rejoicing the full weight of our international obligations. To shrink back either from selfishness or fear would be unworthy of Washington, and would give pain to the great heart of Lincoln. It would be a crimson blot on the history of the land of the free. If the burden is heavy, by all means let us accept it.

IT IS a great step which is contemplated. We do well when we pause to ponder the full significance of it, for it is one of the most momentous and heroic steps which humanity has ever been called upon to take. The nations are now asked to impose limitations on their own sovereignty. For the sake of the liberty of mankind, each nation is asked to surrender a portion of its traditional liberty. Hitherto national sovereighty has been unlimited. Every nation has been free to do what it counted right in its own eyes. There was no human authority above it. But now, the opportunity has come for all the nations to acknowledge a super-national sovereignty—to confess that above the nations there stands humanity. For the sake of humanity, each nation must forego some of the privileges it has hitherto enjoyed. For the peace and prosperity of its neighbors, it must give up things heretofore counted indispensable to a nation for the full realization of its highest life. A new vision has come in this great hour, and the vision calls us to make a great sacrifice, to discard traditions, to depart from precedents.

Will other nations make the sacrifice? Are we ready to make it? Many groups of men say "No!" An occasional Senator says "No." But a Christian man knows that, whether we are ready or not, we ought to make it. This is the way of the Cross. It is only by way of the Cross that humanity can get on. If we are not willing to make the sacrifice now, we shall be compelled to make it later on. There is no way out of this world's entanglements and agonies except by way of sacrifice.

We must have, sometime, somehow, a League of Nations. We cannot have a League in any high or effective form unless the nations are willing to curtail the limits of national sovereignty. It is only by the limitation of liberty that we ever secure a more abundant life. The surrender of a lesser freedom is always the price we pay for a freedom which is larger. Civilization did not begin until men reached the point at which they were willing to give up a portion of their own individual liberty for the sake of the city. After centuries of conflict, a second step was taken. The cities became willing to surrender certain rights for the sake of the state. Other centuries passed, all of them filled with tumult and tempest, until a third step was taken, and states laid down some of their liberties for the sake of the nation. State rights are indeed sacred, but they must be sacrificed whenever by their surrender the health and the prosperity of the nation are enhanced.

And now the hour has come when the Human Family stands before us. Its needs must be considered. Its welfare must be secured. Every nation must contribute to the security and liberty of all. Unlimited national sovereignty has brought us immeasurable woe. The right of every nation to pursue its own course, independent of the interests and wishes of its neighbors, is a right which must be surrendered, if we are ever to have a world of righteousness and peace. In short, the time has arrived when the diplomats and statesmen must be willing to act on the principles proclaimed to the world through Jesus Christ.

THESE principles of Christianity underlie the whole world and must be made controlling in all the kingdoms of human effort. There is no escape from them in the home or the school, the shop or the market-place, the office or the state-house. Christ is King of Humanity. All the kingdoms of the world belong to him. There will be overturnings and overturnings until his right to rule is universally acknowledged. The world in 1914 fell into a ditch because men in high places said: "We will not have this man Jesus to rule over us. We prefer Macchiavelli, Metternich, Bismarck, Bernhardi, Nietzsche. The laws of Christ were flouted in the realm of international conduct. It was assumed that there is one law for the home and a different law for the state; one law for the individual and a different law for the group; one law for boys and girls and another law for rulers and statesmen. It was a costly error. It was a deadly blunder. God's condemnation of it is written across the earth and across the heavens. Only blind men

Continued on page 313

JOHNSON'S PREPARED WAX
LIQUID
UNSURPASSED FOR
Polishing and Preserving
Varnished Surfaces
S.C. JOHNSON & SON
RACINE, WIS.

Every Family has Dozens of Uses for Johnson's Prepared Wax

The easy, practical way to polish and preserve finished surfaces is with Johnson's Prepared Wax and a cloth—you don't need brushes, sprays or mops of any kind. Simply apply the Wax with a cloth and then polish with a dry cloth—very little rubbing is required to produce an exquisite, lustrous polish of great beauty and durability.

Johnson's Prepared Wax is not only a polish but a wonderful preservative—it forms a thin, protecting film over the finish, similar to the service rendered by a piece of plate glass over a desk, table or dresser-top.

Johnson's Prepared Wax gives perfect results over any finish—varnish shellac, oil, etc. It imparts a hard, dry, velvety polish which is impervious to water, dust, scratches, heel-marks, finger-prints, etc. The finish obtained is always sanitary—durable and disinfecting.

JOHNSON'S
Liquid and Paste
PREPARED WAX

Johnson's Prepared Wax contains no oil, consequently it cannot discolor the wood or catch dust and dirt. It never becomes soft and sticky in the hottest weather or from the heat of the body—and it doesn't show finger-prints.

Johnson's Prepared Wax is made in paste, liquid and powdered form. We recommend the Liquid Wax for polishing furniture, woodwork and automobiles. Use the Paste Wax for polishing floors of all kinds—wood, linoleum, tile, etc. Sprinkle Johnson's Powdered Wax over any floor and you can immediately put it in perfect condition for dancing.

Johnson's Prepared Wax is just as necessary around the house as soap. Keep it always on hand for cleaning and polishing—

The furniture, woodwork, floors, linoleum
—In Your Home

The desks, metal cases, cabinets, safes, etc.
—In Your Office

The body, hood and fenders of automobiles
—In Your Garage

Insist upon your dealer supplying you.

S. C. JOHNSON & SON, Racine, Wis., U. S. A.

JOHNSON'S PREPARED WAX
PASTE
S.C. JOHNSON & SON RACINE WIS.
JOHNSON'S PREPARED WAX
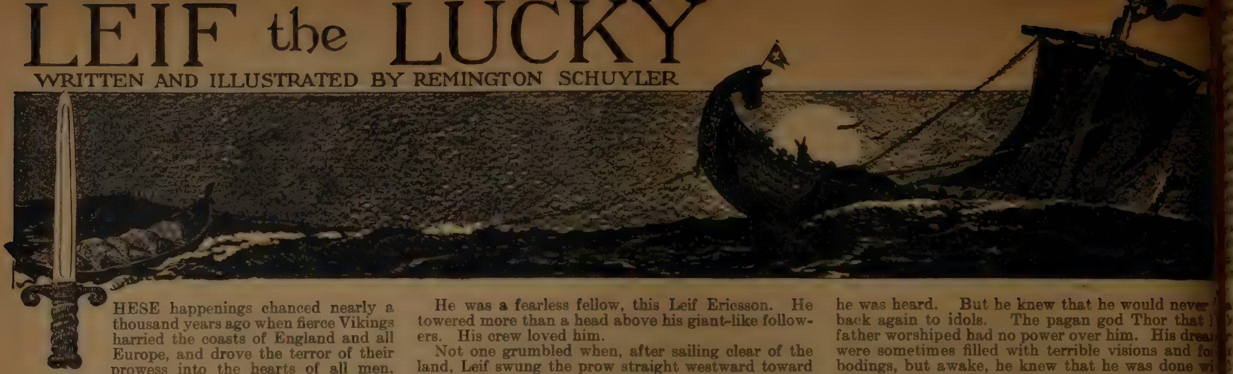
LIQUID
Polishing and Preserving
Varnished Surfaces
S.C. JOHNSON & SON
RACINE WIS.

LEIF the LUCKY

WRITTEN AND ILLUSTRATED BY REMINGTON SCHUYLER



THESE happenings chanced nearly a thousand years ago when fierce Vikings harried the coasts of England and all Europe, and drove the terror of their prowess into the hearts of all men, even in far-off Greekland and the coasts of Egypt.

These hardy Norsemen were free outspoken men. They loved liberty. They held Truth to be a quality needful to all men who wished to prosper. Such were the men that Leif had for ancestors.

In Norseland at this time Olaf the king was sweeping up and down the countryside, razing pagan temples, casting down heathen idols and fast winning the respect of his fierce subjects. In the autumn of the year 999 he had come down from the North to Nidaros. Hither Leif, the Greenland outlander, had come to tread the soil of his forefathers and to look upon this Christian king, whose fame had reached even to icy Greenland.

Because of Leif's stately bearing, and above all because of his fairmindedness, Olaf chose him to do in Greenland somewhat of the things Olaf had accomplished in Norseland. That winter Leif was a favorite at the Great Hall in the king's town. It was by the king himself Leif was baptized.

Leif was a man of action, and so no sooner had the harbor ice broken up in the spring than Leif had his long ship Wave-Treader rolled down from the royal ship sheds and floated. They made all ready for the voyage, laying in a great cargo of linen and honey and golden wheat.

ONE fine day when the king's harbor was alive with the bustle of shipping and sailings they brought down to Wave-Treader the great golden horseheads. These they secured to the bow and stern-posts. The brave red pennant broidered with a silver cross they broke out to the merry breeze. The harbor sparkled with glittering wavelets.

Only the night before Leif had said goodby to his king in the Great Hall in Nidarostown. As parting gifts Olaf had pressed on him a goodly mantle of rich "pel," ornamented with curiously wrought buckles of gold. Also much fine clothes had been given Leif.

Near the steersman, arrayed in all that splendor of kingly garments, Leif stood. His polished casque glinted in the sun. To the king's men who had come down to wish him well he appeared as a Viking god. His long curls shone like gold as the freshening breeze tossed them about.

Below him, on a huge lumpy bale of English linen, two Gaelic runners sat huddled. They were for use if Leif should have need for speed; so the king had said. Men thought, and it was commonly believed, that they could outrun horses and were swifter than deer. Leif glanced down at the two slender thralls, little thinking of how great value they would prove as bearers of good tidings.

Propelled by the oars, the ship glided in and out amongst the congestion of shipping in the harbor, and so on down the steep-walled fiord that led to the sea. Finally Wave-Treader swept out of the narrow channel into the broad reaches of the ocean. They set the blue-striped sail amid glad uproar and shoutings. How gaily the long ship mounted the waves!

Leif felt great courage swell in his heart as he looked westward beyond the horizon. Tumbling cloudbanks lay like enchanted isles on the surface of the sparkling sea. Men said his sight was keener than any man's who had lived before. Some few said it was a vision of second sight, given by the gods.

He was a fearless fellow, this Leif Ericsson. He towered more than a head above his giant-like followers. His crew loved him.

Not one grumbled when, after sailing clear of the land, Leif swung the prow straight westward toward his father's new colony in Greenland. He scorned the old well-known course by Iceland way, along the ice barrier. Traders could follow that safer coasting course. Save for the Scotch runners and one other, his followers were all freemen born. They were not cowardly thralls to fear adventure in strange waters. So he struck boldly westward across the unknown sea.

His failure to compass this direct course on his way out had not shaken his faith. What if he had been driven to land in the Hebrides? This time he would succeed. He aimed to lay his course between the Faroes and the Shetlands. To this day mariners follow the route which in that far-off time Leif tried to chart. He had no compass, not even a lodestone. There were no fixed decks in his ship to make his observations from; and there were no accurate maps. Men thought the world flat, with a vast ocean surrounding it. Westward from Ireland they thought there lay a sea filled with worms which would destroy the planking of any ship foolhardy enough to attempt to sail it.

This was the first transatlantic voyage undertaken deliberately. It required such faith and courage that no other leader had dared risk it. But men called Eric's son "the Lucky." It was a good thing to follow such a leader.

After they had sailed some while the rocky heights of Norseland sank into the sea. Leif held his course steadily westward. They sailed many weeks and saw no land. Day by day they viewed only the great soft clouds that drifted with them. Their leader seemed engrossed in deep thought and to be seeking some unknown thing. The man of letters who had been brought along with them read for hours at a time from a curiously colored book of runes. So with songs and games and sleeping and eating they whiled the time away. Some few overhauled their armor and hunting gear. And one among them, a great wag he was, carved wooden men and animals and set them at adventuring among the bales and the sacks of wheat.

ONE evening the fair wind died out; and the north wind arose, and fogs; and they knew not whither they were drifting. Dull, drear, fog-drenched days succeeded one another, and it seemed that months passed in aimless voyagings. At times the sail swung limply in the smothering dampness. The lurchings of the ship shook down chilling showers on the weather-beaten crew. It was very cold. They rowed hours at a time to ease their cramped arms and legs and to help the time to pass more quickly. They chafed under the long confinement. No one murmured openly. One look at their stately leader's hawk-like, bronzed face, with his keen blue eyes sparkling under his bushy brows, was enough to hearten them again.

But they longed for land, that they might stretch themselves and rest from the bitter driving snow squalls that beat down from off the icy wastes northward. Some strove to lighten the gloom with old songs of Norse valor and mighty deeds. But the songs seemed to freeze on their lips. Some few among them became less ready to join in the rowing chanties of seafarers. It was very dreary and disheartening.

But one morning Leif seemed to feel that a great store of good lay behind these weeks of futile drifting and endless toil. For a long time he had called on his new God, seemingly without any answer or sign that he was heard. But he knew that he would never back again to idols. The pagan god Thor that father worshiped had no power over him. His drea were sometimes filled with terrible visions and fo bodings, but awake, he knew that he was done wi idol worship. So on this morning which seemed different from any of the others, he seemed to feel th there would be much of good brought forth.

About noon the sky began to lighten. The cloaki mists, which drifted in eddies among the men, beg to thin out. Then they saw the sun again and we able to determine the quarters of the heavens. Th hoisted sail and in the bright glad sunshine the fa wind drove them westward again many days.

Like a cloud in the sky, one day Leif beheld lan He saw it more than two hours before any of his me His keen eyes pierced the sea haze first and made out to be tree-covered and fair to behold. It sho like a turquoise in the deep blue sea. So after he ha made sure it was not a vision, he showed it to h steersman Thorkel.

With a glad shout Thorkel looked and cried th good tidings to his mates. They rushed forward t cluster in the prow and see. Then with joy they ben to their oars and Wave-Treader leaped forward. I slashed swiftly up the long breaking swells and dashe clouds of rainbow spray aboard as it swept alon down the trough of the waves.

When Leif came upon this country of which befor he had had no suspicion, the spring and summer ha gone and it was bright autumn weather. It was fair land, girt with mighty trees, and sweet grass ra down close to the water's edge. A pleasant island la to the northward off the land.

There they went ashore in the ship's boats and looked about them, the weather being fine. They observed that there was dew upon the grass, and clover. And it so happened that when they had touched this honey dew with their hands and touched their hands to their mouths, it seemed to them that they had never before tasted anything so sweet as this.

They went aboard their ship again and sailed into a certain sound which lay between the island and a cape which jutted out from the land on the north, and they stood in westering past the cape. At ebb-tide there were broad reaches of shallow water there, and they ran their ship aground. It was a long distance from the ship to the ocean.

Leif's men were so anxious to go ashore that they could not wait until the tide should rise under the ship, but hastened to the land, where a river flowed out from a lake. As soon as the tide rose beneath their ship, however, they took the boats and rowed to the ship. Leif was anxious to get Wave-Treader into a good deep harbor, not wishing to risk it among the shoals should the fair weather break. So they conveyed the ship up the river and into the lake, where they cast anchor.

THEN was a great bustling around as the happy travelers carried their leather sleeping-bags ashore. They took enough provisions for the night. They went armed, not knowing what might be in store for them. Some also took their hunting-gear and fishing-tackle, for the woods rustled with game and the river teemed with fish. Some were for racing along the beach or hunting through the woods. But Leif would have none of it. He was too wise to risk trusted friends alone in a strange, outland place. hey contented themselves by sitting in the sun and tching their cramped bodies. It was so good to be eace after all the long months of seafaring.

eif called the man Haki and the woman Hekia (the ners Olaf had given him) and told them to prepare mselves for a journey. These fleet-footed runners e deep-chested like greyhounds. Their widely dis- ded nostrils seemed to quiver as they awaited f's command to start. Compared with the huge nt-like Norsemen they appeared frail and as if the h had been cut away from their legs. The single ment they wore had a hood and was open down sides. It fastened with a loop and button below ir waists. This gave them great freedom of movement as they ran.

eif said, "You, Haki, run northward, and you, kia, to the south. So limit your running that you y return here by the third afternoon—but not er. See all that may be seen, and bring anything ange that you may find."

They started. So swift was their going that rcely had they begun running when they were lost sight.

The next day Leif set his men to work to build gh booths near the shore. Much provisions were ught ashore, and daily they busied themselves th pleasant tasks and with feasting on the salmon y had caught.

On the third day toward sundown Hekia flashed into w along the beach waving something in her hand as e raced toward them. It was self-sown wild wheat, ich she declared grew in great profusion far to the th, and also close at hand. At sunset out of the rth Haki appeared running more slowly, for he car- d great clusters of something that shone purple in e last rays of the sun. They found his burden to be eat branches of wild grapes and pieces of the vines.

And for these God-given grapes and its goodly oducts Leif gave the land a name, and called the untry Vinland the Good, because it abounded in all od things. This country that Leif chanced upon s America. Some men say that the lake where he ilt his booths was in Massachusetts. Some contend was farther to the south. This was in the year 1000 D., nearly five hundred years before Columbus set il.

That winter nearly one thousand years ago was mild d open. There was so little of frost that the grass arcely withered. Only twice were the river banks inged with ice. The long keen days, so different om the drear winter twilights of Greenland, were a urce of joy to them. They felled trees in the forest d pressed forward the building of a great house. Of lmon in the river and in the lake there was no lack. eif saw that the country there was so goodly that ttle would need no fodder during the winter. There ere broad meadows which lay westward beyond the ood.

Haki and Hekia were sent out almost daily to run rough the country. They were so swift of foot that eif had no fear for them. They brought tidings of st stores of good things in the land which lay back the lake and along the river. They reported untless strange game that thronged the forests.

Leif was disturbed when they brought news of trange man-like creatures they had encountered arce a half day's journey away. They called them Skrellings," which in Old Norse meant "peeled," r these man-like creatures were so lithe and slender. n several occasions they had had to exert themselves o the utmost to escape from the Skrellings. They eemed to be fleet of foot and tireless runners. Once Haki had come upon a number of bark-covered ounds on a sandy beach. When he turned one over ut jumped two Skrellings, who sent after him stones rom a sling and swift arrows. These were very trange arrows, with tips made of flint, for one had ierced Haki's hood as he fled away, and Leif had ound it there. The Skrellings, so Haki said, uttered uch piercing cries and weird calls that all the other ounds had opened and the air filled with cries that ere not human.

These tidings of the Skrellings made Leif keep his en even closer about the camp. He hurried the com- letion of the booths. He forbade the runners to go nto the country any more. This made Haki and Hekia sad, for they had enjoyed the fierce flights over he glowing country.

Leif's booths were surrounded with a wall of great ogs like the stockade which surrounded his father's ome in Greenland. Later they beached the ship and overed it with a heavy ship-shed of logs for its protection.

With so much work to be done the long days of Vinland the Good were of great help. On even the shortest day the sun was up from morning's meal till late afternoon.

Shortly after this shortest day the house was finished.

Leif said, "I propose now to divide our company into two bands to set about the exploring of the country the runners have brought tidings of. One-half shall remain at home while the other half shall investigate the land."

He gave orders that they must not go beyond a point from which they could return home the same evening. They were never to separate into smaller bands. This they did for a time. Leif himself by turn joined the exploring party or remained behind at the house.

Several times Leif thought he saw shadows flitting through the woods, but he was not sure. Only once did the exploring party come upon any signs of the Skrellings. Late one afternoon they found the smoldering camp fires and the marks of boats where some strange folk had hastily quitted a camp site. They found some broken arrow points and a slender stone knife in a glade. There were a few scattered bones lying about, and it appeared to them that a battle had taken place there in some distant age.

One day Leif said to his shipmates, "We will now divide our labors, and each day we will either gather grapes and garner wheat, or else fell trees so that we may add to the cargo of our ship."

So they acted upon this advice and dried the grapes they gathered and made raisins. The logs were cut on the headland above the bay, and they left them to dry in the sun. There was much grained "mosur" wood, and from this they selected a great quantity, most beautifully marked for paneling and for knife handles. In this way a cargo sufficient for the ship was made ready. The larger of the ship's boats they filled with raisins.

One fine spring day they floated their ship, and having made all ready they sailed away. They had fair winds. This was most lucky, for the heavy cargo made Wave-Treader ride very low in the water. Heavy seas would have swamped her quickly. Behind them the raisin-laden ship's-boat tugged and dragged on the stout towing rope.

They sailed six days with southwesterly winds and saw land again. This land was high and mountainous. They asked Leif if this was Greenland and if he would land there.

HE said, "I am not so disposed, because this land does not offer any attractions to me."

Nor did they lower their sail, but held their course off the land and saw it was an island. They left this land astern and held out to sea with the same fair wind. The wind waxed stronger and Leif directed them to reef, and not sail at a speed unbefitting their deeply laden ship. The next day the strong wind continued. Leif bade them lighten the ship somewhat.

The Thoughts of God

SO THIS is a thought of God!
I will lay it away with my pearls;
For his thoughts are gems with a sunlight flood,
And his deeds are the finished worlds.

Oh, many his thoughts have been;
Some into the sea were cast,
Where the dark waves covered their light unseen,
While the æons went marching past.

And some in lines of fire
Far up with the stars were lit;
And some to kindle a world's desire
In a golden book were writ.

But never a thought was lost;
For up from the depths they came,
And the silver light of the starry host
Blazed the wonder of His Name.

"Immanuel—Oh, hear,"
The stars of the morning sang,
And the waiting worlds caught the message clear
And peans of praise outrang.

And the rocks the truth proclaim,
He passed this way, they said,
Though earth may crumble, the mighty Name
Shall gleam when the worlds are dead.

HARRIET WARNER REQUA.

So they made fast the long logs like a raft and let them drag astern with the ship's boat. For a time it seemed as though they would have to cast out somewhat more of the cargo. The crew were kept steadily bailing to throw out the waters that came aboard from time to time.

They sailed in this fashion for eight days, when they sighted land. This seemed to be Greenland, for there were many huge ice mountains on it which glittered in the sun. And they began to see the green in the fells below the glaciers. But Leif swung eastward with the wind almost dead ahead. The crew wondered at this, for they knew that from here the course should have been to the Western Settlements and so home. They were anxious to end this long adventure and to tell their kinsfolk of the glorious country of Vinland the Good.

So Thorkel asked, "Why do you steer the ship so much into the wind?"

Leif answered, "I have my mind upon my steering but upon higher things as well. Do you not see anything out of the common, Thorkel? Your eyes are bright and strong."

But neither Thorkel nor the crew saw anything strange.

"I do not know," said Leif, "whether it is a wreck or a rocky skerry that I see."

Now after much looking they saw it and said that it must be a rocky island. But Leif was so much keener of sight than the others that he was able to discern men upon the reef.

"I think it best to tack," said Leif, "so that we may draw near to them. In this manner we may be able to render them assistance if they should stand in need of it; and if they should not be peaceably disposed, we shall still have better command of the situation than they."

So they tacked and swung down the wind and lowered their sail. They cast anchor off the skerry. Leif directed the launching of the second boat they had with them. With an armed party of picked men they rowed toward the rocks where the wrecked men were clustered. There was a woman among them. Leif found them to be Norsemen. A great deep-chested man, whose face was gaunt and pinched from the harrowing of the sea, questioned who Leif could be. And when he found that he was Eric's son he was glad. His name was Thori and he was a brave man and a great traveler. So they brought all that desolate wan crew aboard Wave-Treader. Leif sent Hekia the runner to wait on the woman, who was Gudrid, Thori's wife. Then they took as much of Thori's possessions as the ship would hold. The rest which they could not carry, together with the cargo of timber Thori had had aboard his ship, they made fast among the rocks on the skerry. They built a cairn there to mark the place where the lumber was, and also for those of Thori's crew that had died there.

So with Wave-Treader laden almost to sinking, they laid their course up Greenland way, past the East Settlements and up into Eric's Firth. They saw a horseman high up on the headlands. He waved for a time, and then turned back. They saw the dust kick up as he spurred toward Brattahlid, Eric's house. By the time they came to anchor below the ship-sheds the shore was thronged with kinsfolk. It gladdened their hearts to see the dear faces of their families and friends. Men, women and children rushed into the water as the boats came ashore. There were glad shouts and cries of happiness as husbands and wives, sweethearts and lovers, found again those from whom they had been separated more than two years.

It was a great day for Leif. He wore the scarlet cloak and the rich trappings of the king. How mighty a leader he looked! They cheered him loudly, and made a great noise of applause when Thori came ashore and told of his rescue from off the bleak skerry. But when the great boles of birdseye maple and birch were brought ashore and the two slim Gaelic runners and the raisins, how the crowd gaped and stretched their necks to see!

Leif had brought so many rich prizes and had now a goodly store of both property and honor. Every one proclaimed him a great man and were for offering sacrifices to Thor. But Leif restrained them and bade them wait. So they set him upon a fine horse and in a noiseful chattering procession they arrived over at Brattahlid. Eric was rejoiced at the good success of Leif's voyage and made many feasts. But some men said he was only lukewarm, because he felt that in the new honors heaped upon his son something of his glory was taken away. Some men say that it was because of this that Eric refused to give up his pagan gods, even though his wife, Thiohild, accepted the new faith with gladness and caused a church to be built over beyond Brattahlid.

Leif had taken Thori and his wife Gudrid and three others to his home, and showed his great goodness by finding quarters for the other members of Thori's crew and those of his own band who had no homes. And when he had done all these good things he announced the great glory that accompanied this new faith. He showed how it had saved him from the sea and led him to find Vinland the Good. So he settled down and made no more voyages save one. That was when he went to fetch the wood from off the skérry.

So in a noble manner Leif, Eric's son, fulfilled his lofty mission for his God and his king. When Eric died, Leif became master at Brattahlid and was well beloved and respected. And here ends the Saga of Leif, called by men Leif the Lucky.

NEWS PICTURES OF THE WEEK

U. S. Official Photo

President and Mrs. Wilson dining at Montigny le Roi with General Pershing and members of his staff

© Western Newspaper Union

New York City's negro regiment won honors in France. The colors bear ribbons of the Legion of Honor

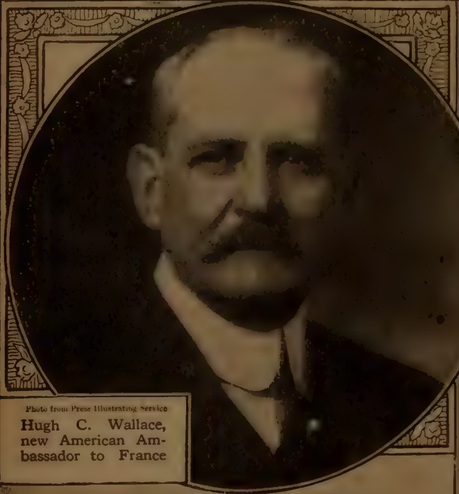


Photo from Press Illustrating Service

Hugh C. Wallace, new American Ambassador to France

© Committee on Public Information

A class in French and friendship. Sergeant Hubbard Perry of the A. E. F. being piloted through a French primer by three little ladies of Valdaie

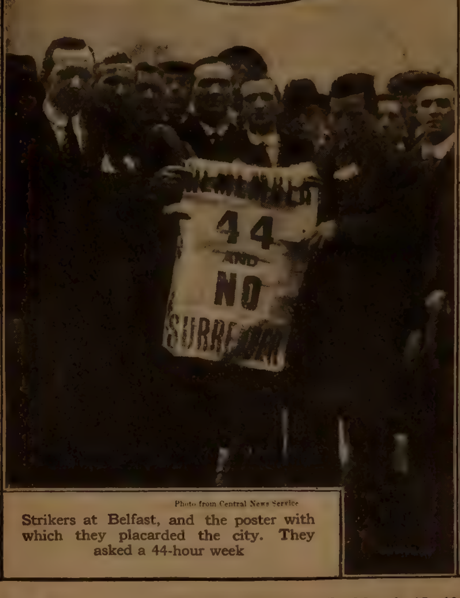

Photo from Central News Service

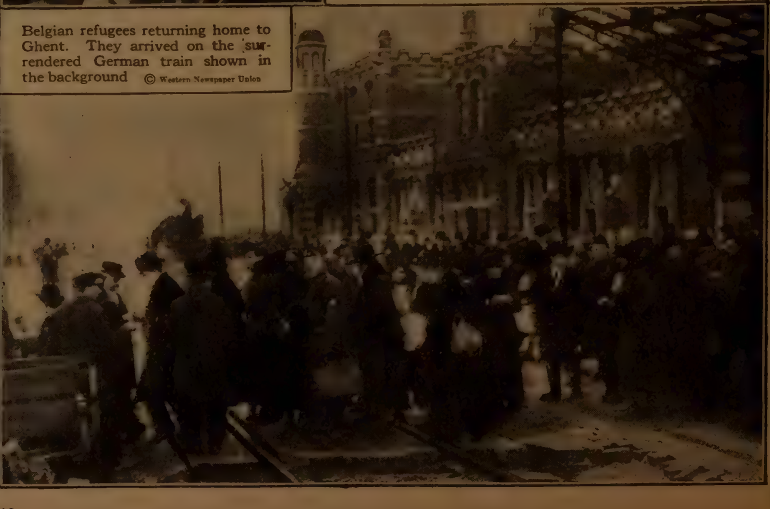
Strikers at Belfast, and the poster with which they placarded the city. They asked a 44-hour week



Belgian refugees returning home to Ghent. They arrived on the surrendered German train shown in the background © Western Newspaper Union

WILSON & Co.

The Wilson label protects your table

Thos. E. Wilson

THERE is a simple, straightforward pledge to you. It means that we stand back of your dealer every time you buy anything bearing the Wilson label. Our label embodies our good reputation with the public—which means that our products must have your friendship and your confidence.

❖ ❖ ❖

The food products—meats, fruits, vegetables and table specialties—bearing the Wilson label are selected, handled and prepared with the respect they deserve.

WE are just as careful, just as thoughtful, as your own mother would be. We want our products to convince you that you cannot find anything better—and we intend that the Wilson label shall always carry that message to you personally.

❖ ❖ ❖

Today the W-shaped Wilson label is the mark which tells of public favor honestly deserved and thoroughly won. More than that, it is our constant promise to respect and hold your confidence.

"This mark WILSON & CO. your guarantee"

CHICAGO

Majestic Ham, Bacon and Lard Clearbrook Butter and Dairy Products

Certified Fruits, Vegetables, Meats and Table Specialties

If your dealer cannot supply you with Wilson Pure Food Products, write us giving his name and address and we will arrange to provide your requirements

The Wilson Label Protects Your Table

Colorite Your Hat
COLORITE
JET BLACK

A SLOGAN originated by millions of thrifty women throughout the country who have made old straw hats look just as good as new with

Colorite
REG. U S PAT OFFICE

COLORS OLD & NEW STRAW HATS

Fine for coloring your hat just the shade to match a new dress or to re-color this year's hat that has begun to look faded. There is nothing just as good as Colorite.
It is a liquid sold in a bottle with a brush for applying. It is waterproof and durable. Easily applied by anyone. Dries in thirty minutes. Also fine for coloring Satin, Silk and Canvas Slippers, Basketry, Leather Hand Bags and Belts.
Sold by Drug and Department Stores throughout the United States and Canada.
If your dealer cannot supply you, we will send a bottle of Colorite postpaid upon receipt of 30 cents. Be sure to name color you want.

16 COLORS TO SUIT YOUR TASTES:

Jet Black	Cardinal Red	Cadet Blue	Cerise	Violet
Dull Black	Yellow	Victory Blue	Burnt Straw	Lavender	Gray
	Navy Blue	Sage Green	Brown	Old Rose	Natural

Directions on each box for mixing to obtain most any desired shade.

CARPENTER-MORTON COMPANY
Established 1840
Makers of the Famous Economy Products
83 Sudbury Street Boston, Mass.
Canadian Distributors: A. Ramsay & Son Co., Montreal

FREE OVER 100 SAMPLES

Cut From Actual Stock

Book Measures 5¾ x 8¾ Inches

CORRECT WALL PAPERS 1919
FROM FACTORY TO YOU PRICES
Montgomery Ward & Co
Montgomery Ward & Co CORRECT WALL PAPERS 1919

Send For This NEW SAMPLE BOOK TODAY

Up-To-Date Styles, Correct Designs and Beautiful Colorings. Factory-To-You-Prices

Some patterns priced as low as 10c and 11c per double roll of 16 yards (ordinary single rolls are only 8 yards long). Others up to 85c per double roll.

A big assortment—easy to make your choice from the many beautiful stripes, shadow designs, Jaspes, grasscloth patterns, tapestry effects, oatmeals, embossed figures, etc. Several fine bedroom papers, newest styles, as low as 12c and 14c per double roll.

Patterns to please every taste—prices to suit every purse. You'll be sure to find just what you want in this big free book.

Send Today For Your Copy

This sample book will be sent promptly and without any obligation on your part. You will be both surprised and delighted with its showing of attractive patterns at low prices.

If you are interested in PAINT, ask for our free Paint Book also. We operate our own Paint Factory and can save you money. Guaranteed House Paint—$2.36 per gallon and up.

Write to the house nearest you. Address Dept. A 169

Montgomery Ward & Co.
Satisfaction Guaranteed or Your Money Back
Chicago Kansas City Fort Worth Portland, Ore.

Famine Death Roll Grows in Ind

LETTERS from India bring further news of the appalling famine now prevailing in that country. A communication to the American Board from a member of the Marathi Mission says prices of food have soared to heights unknown in a hundred years. Spanish influenza has filled the cities and villages with processions carrying the dead to burial or to burning. Traffic has practically ceased, mails are undelivered, business has come to a standstill. When the pestilence had done its work, famine did the rest. Travelers may knock at house after house without getting a response. Many have died because there was absolutely no food procurable, and many more are hovering between life and death, having neither food nor money nor strength to work.

In thirty-nine out of forty districts of India, the food shortage is seriously felt. In the Marathi Mission districts alone, many thousands are suffering. Government is doing what it can in supplying food and providing work for those who are able to labor; but the distress grows, nevertheless. There are orphans to be cared for, their parents having been swept off by plague or pneumonia. Besides, there are the thousands of sick who, if their lives are to be saved, will need ministrations which the famine camps cannot give.

In one instance, a party of 150 natives, when the famine broke out, went to Bombay for work. There they were attacked by influenza. Now they have come back, looking like mere skeletons, to find themselves face to face with starvation from famine.

These are only a few of the problems the missionaries are now facing. Dr. Hume, chairman of the Christian Herald Relief Committee, writes from Ahmednagar: "Some of our mission workers are slowly starving to death."

At a recent meeting in aid of the suffering, the Episcopal Bishop of Bombay said: "We consider the famine to be a disaster. It is not only a famine of grain and a famine of water. It is a famine of clothes and of many other necessaries of life. We appeal in the name of universal pity and in the name of human nature itself, in behalf of these sufferers."

A LETTER from a mission worker at Rahuri to his brother in the United States says: "I have never experienced such hard times before during the forty-two years I have lived in India. In addition to the famine, we have had to endure the high prices caused by the war and the severe epidemic of influenza which killed off the people of India like flies. I made a trip through my district about a month ago, and I never saw anything like the sights I then witnessed in each village I went through. It seemed as if the open space in front of each village was one vast cemetery, where from one-fourth to even one-third of the population were lying freshly buried. In some places I went to, the dead were still lying unburied in their houses, as there was no one left in the immediate neighbor to bury them. The disease was m like typhus than anything else."

Mrs. W. O. Ballantine, ano member of the American Mar Mission, writes: "The plague has ta off many thousands of young strong people, leaving the old and young without means of living. Wh families have been swept away. Th little girls came to us one day, brin their small possessions with th They were all who were left of a h family of seven. . . . Now we m brace ourselves for a year's fight w famine. Our need is so appalling t we try not to think of it, lest courage should fail."

THE Times of India of Januar says: "The famine is an all-Ind affair and not an individual one for e province. Government must supp ment supplies by necessary imports fr abroad and doing as much as possi to facilitate transport. Bombay pri of foodstuffs of all kinds are now highest of any in India. Bombay su plies present and prospective are shor than desirable. Government will what is necessary to keep the peo alive—the Fund performs the co plementary work of mercy which ma the life still worth living."

Rev. R. A. Hume, chairman of t Christian Herald Relief Committ writing to the Christian Herald fr Ahmednagar, January 9, says: "T banking firm of Bombay, Messrs. C & Co., informs us that their Lond house has directed them to pa me t present exchange value of $5,0 which is Rs. 13845 (cabled by t Christian Herald). Very soon a la part of this remittance will be d tributed and will be giving extreme needed relief. Daily I get letters telegrams from different missions a pealing for money. It is impossib adequately to describe the urgent nece sities of relief money, or adequately express gratitude at the constituency the Christian Herald beginning to se aid.

"I enclose a copy of a letter to th chief official in the Ahmednagar di trict, in which letter I state the princip and program on which American m sionaries in the district propose conduct famine relief. I believe that wise Americans will approve of s principles and such a program, and w be glad to help us in applying them the use of American money for th relief of distress.

"Because the steamship by which had engaged passage, via the Pacif has been commandeered, I now expec to sail for the U. S. on S. S. Siberi Maru, in the latter part of March."

IT IS very desirable that another r mittance should go forward to the r lief fund at the earliest possible moment Our readers can make this possible b sending in their contributions promptl to the Christian Herald's India Famin Fund. Every dollar will do duty for them in saving life and relieving suffering.

Nannie I Stevens	$5.00
Mrs Robert G Galt	5.00
Mrs Robert S Anderson	5.00
Mary E Hamlin	5.00
Mrs Henry Rietz	5.00
Chas R Roe	5.00
A Friend, Gardner, Mass	5.00
H. R. Hornes & Son	5.00
Mr & Mrs C F Hoffman & Chas D Hoffman	5.00
Miss Alice Yates	5.00
Mary E Sturgeon	5.00
Emma Cadwallader	5.00
Minnie F Hessong	5.00
Mrs C F Bridge	5.00
Cliffee Moore	5.00
A Friend of the Needy, Jerseyville, Ill	5.00
Pearl Binford	5.00
Mrs E S Allen	5.00
——, Deedsville, Ind	5.00
Lucy A Pearl	5.00
——, Worcester, Mass.	5.00
Jennie L Brown	5.00
Mrs Wm Wallace	5.00
Chester B Smith	5.00
A Friend from Murray Nebr	5.00
L P Henser	5.00
Mrs Nettie Murphy	5.00
Mother Haise	5.00
Grace H Wilson	5.00
Mrs J M Henderson	5.00
Mrs A M MacDonald	5.00
Mrs N A Kirkland	5.00

U R Gensemer	$5.00
——, New Bedford, Mass	5.00
Mrs Lewis Wiegand	5.00
Mrs J W Beckwith	5.00
Julia M Hersey	5.00
John McNeill	5.00
In His Name, Newark, N J	5.00
A Moelk	5.00
H A Edgerly	5.00
Mrs Mary D Hutchinson	5.00
W H Allen	5.00
Miss Belinda Barcroft	5.00
Mary A Plummer	5.00
Wm S Lowry	5.00
Mrs Laura McLeod	5.00
J O Bryant	5.00
Mr & Mrs C P Russell	5.00
Henry E Fitts	5.00
A Vupile	5.00
Mrs Jno S Smith	5.00
J A Lee	5.00
Mrs Wm Holmes	5.00
Emily H Pim	5.00
Mrs H M Wright	5.00
E Carson	5.00
R W Webb	3.00
Mary L Lewis	3.00
Mr & Mrs Ed E Smith & Son	3.00
Mrs H G Wittmer	3.00
Miss Read	3.00
Mrs Della Hunt	3.00
C C Benedict	3.00
G W Littell	3.00

Mrs M C Hopper	$3.0
H S Kenyon	3.0
E A Johnson	3.0
Mrs C F Finney	3.0
Mrs J B Keown	3.0
Sarah E Estabrook	3.0
Mary E D Powelson	3.0
Anna B Jack	3.0
Martha M Rippel	3.0
Mr & Mrs Abrams	3.0
Reader, Springfield, Mass	2.50
A Reader, Kingsley, Pa.	2.50
Miss Betty C Jones	2.00
Frances M Mossford	2.00
Mary L Bullard	2.00
John Clough	2.00
Jacob Young	2.00
Mrs H Mitray	2.00
Mrs A Lu Smiser	2.00
Mr & Mrs H K Mosher	2.00
Clara W Wittmer	2.00
Ellen B Witmer	2.00
Emma C Thomas	2.00
Cora I Vanderwerp	2.00
Mrs O J S, Macungie, Pa	2.00
Charles P Funk	2.00
Mrs Sarah Schwenk	2.00
Chas Hoag	2.00
Mrs A J Shearer	2.00
Mr & Mrs E J Forsberg	2.00
——, Chicago, Ill	2.00
M K, Walkin, Ind	2.00
A Subscriber, Boston, Mass	2.00

nma Burgar	$2.00
T R Williams	2.00
Josiah Smith	2.00
Fred L Warren	2.00
tio L Abertson	2.00
on Swarthout	2.00
.S Strunk	2.00
a M Strunk	2.00
Kuthly	2.00
Jno Wagner	2.00
Rockwell	2.00
. Des Laines, Ill.	2.00
riend, Wisconsin teran Home, Wisc.	2.00
rude Cranor	2.00
beth Pollock	2.00
a M Clark	2.00
L W Grace	2.00
J G Rerick	2.00
Anderson	2.00
B Gummerson	2.00
. F Ware	2.00
. Phinney	2.00
Roy Odelius	2.00
L G Burrus	2.00
F A Wheelers	2.00
P, Suffield, Conn.	2.00
Sarah A Cummings	2.00
abeth Campbell	2.00
I. Fram	2.00
ma H Hurst	1.50
Ella P Agee	1.50
E B Schmidt	1.50
ina Wright	1.50
bella M De Long	1.50
Reader—Sergeants	1.00
n E Irwin	1.00
I D, West Cheshire, onn	1.00
—, New Paltz, N Y	1.00
s Cline	1.00
ry Price	1.00
rela Harmon	1.00
s Delia J Bartlett	1.00
—, Bensenville, Ill.	1.00
Mrs C A Thompson	$1.00
Ella M Baker	1.00
Mrs K Mangold	1.00
Herm Heitenstein	1.00
Rachel Lafontaine	1.00
Miss Ella Sanderson	1.00
Mrs A T Davis	1.00
A Subscriber	1.00
J K S, Goshen, N Y	1.00
Mrs J W Nicodemus	1.00
M A Post	1.00
Perry Brown	1.00
——, Cambridge, Md.	1.00
Mrs E H Rowland	1.00
Mrs L C Stewart	1.00
Mr S F, Wash, D C	1.00
A Friend, Ohio	1.00
Helen G Baldwin	1.00
Alma B Porter	1.00
Low A Pratt	1.00
A Friend, Pa.	1.00
In His Name, Lynn Mass	1.00
Mrs H W Carter	1.00
M H Hobart	1.00
Martha S Stively	1.00
Mrs Mary E Warnock	50.00
C J Malpass	20.00
A Friend, Walkerton, Ind.	20.00
M H Coons	20.00
Mr and Mrs Myro Bollis	20.00
Mrs H F Wettlaufer Mrs John Wegner and Mrs T J Kichhoefer	20.00
J M Swanger	10.00
1st Cong Ch of Belle Fourche, S Dak.	10.00
F A Shannahan	10.00
Pollock Family	10.00
Mrs S M Lavender	10.00
Nora B Bottenfield	10.00
Mrs Wm Sanderson	10.00
Horace Martin	$10.00
A Reader, Providence, R I	10.00
Mr & Mrs A M Carnahan	10.00
W A and A M Crosias	10.00
B Baas	10.00
Martha Weaver	10.00
Fannie Severtson	10.00
C E H— Jewell, Kans.	10.00
C W Willingham	10.00
Mrs C A Nelson	10.00
Mrs E C Sullivan	10.00
Mrs Atherton Clark	10.00
Garfrey Wokoun	10.00
Adah Evans Coleman	10.00
Selah Wash	10.00
Gertrude Moen and Mrs. Wm Wallace	10.00
Mrs Alin G Robinson	10.00
——, Batavia, N. Y.	10.00
F L Lake	10.00
Abigail Cough	10.00
J B Betlys	10.00
M E Birdsell	10.00
Mary V Reynolds	10.00
Matilda Davis	10.00
Mrs Anna Blomberg	10.00
Agnes Crummey	10.00
Mrs N E Tyler and daughter	5.00
Miss Belle Mozens	5.00
S M McMary	5.00
H J K, Dover, Ohio	5.00
Mrs R E Riedesel	5.00
W P Taylor	5.00
Mrs C C Waters	5.00
Amy I Ritter	5.00
Wilbur F Wilson	5.00
A Friend, Sanford, Pa.	5.00

Additional contributions to be acknowledged later.

A Soldier's Trust in God

THE following extracts are from a letter by Lieutenant W. W. Hague, U. S. A., written in France just fore the end of the war, to a friend in ooklyn, N. Y.:

"I have truly had some miraculous apes so far, and while one's knees are und to knock together sometimes, I n not worried, for I have perfect trust God. I have with me here the ninety-st Psalm printed on a card. I picked up recently in a Y. M. C. A. and gave ay the extra copies I had to other en. It certainly is a message for the esent time, and as I read it again this orning it was particularly so after the ght we passed, with the fifth and sixth rses applying especially.

"'Thou shalt not be afraid for the rror by night nor for the arrow that eth by day, nor for the pestilence that alketh in darkness, nor for the destruc- on that wasteth at noonday.'

"And the best part of it is that we n't have simply this life and its essings to look forward to as the fulfil- ent of the rich promises, but we know at we are entering into a fuller and cher fulfilment of them if He takes us me to him. So I don't worry at any our prospects. I am second in com- and of this company now, and we have fine bunch. All goes well, and, as lways, I am enjoying all my experi- nces."

In a later letter, the same writer says: "Have been able to mail no letters ince the last Sunday in September. They gave us a long hard drag of it, much onger than we expected and very wear- ng, for we had much cold and wet, not uch warm food and very little sleep. But we are a crack division, and it took us to do a still job after somebody else ouldn't. So of course we simply went ahead and did it. The last day was a eward, for we had a glorious, brief face- o-face smash, in which I succeeded to he command of a company for the econd time in a week. We sure did out it to 'em and we licked 'em to a razzle and it was a great joyous windup; the outfit had about twenty-four more hours and some more fighting before they were relieved, but I had to get nicked in the arm. It didn't keep me from keeping on and fighting, and I stayed with the company six hours until they went to another place, when I turned it over to the next officer and I came back. I had a bullet go through my left forearm, and the doctors were astonished that the bone wasn't smashed, because it looked from the holes to be unavoidable, Truly God in his providence cared for me, even when I was wounded. On account of congestion at dressing stations and being able to walk, I walked six miles and rode four in a truck to a field hospital, thus leaving ambulance place for severely wounded. But once I got to bed and let down—well, you know how it is when you let down after you go top speed for two weeks and fight in cold and mud on canned food. I was rather sick a couple of days—ran from subnormal to slight fever, but now I am again chipper as can be and sitting up and taking notice and it only happened Monday A. M. and this is Saturday A. M. When I get my clothes on again, I will have two gold stripes on my right arm,—wounds; and one on my left,—six months in France.

"I have been this last time through some dangerous and solemn moments. I have been under as intense and fierce a shellfire barrage as one can go through and live. Three times I was in such situations, that every nerve and muscle was quivering and I knew it would be a miracle if I should come through. But no matter how strained I was physically, my mind was at all times calm, and I was able to cheer and comfort my men, because I had God's promises to sustain me. I think a man who really didn't believe in God or God's help would hardly be able to keep his mind in some of these things, because one needs something bigger than his own strength to go through it. I never prayed that I should be spared—simply that all things might indeed 'work together for good,' and that I might be ready for whatever should come. I prayed that for all my men and, while we had men wounded, there were none killed by shellfire in either of my companies, and I commanded first D and later C and D in one, and still later we were ready for what came and took an important and strategic stretch. Also we had every reason, on those three occasions particularly, to be practically annihilated, and I said the escape was miraculous, so thick around us did the shells fall.

"God has been very good to me, and even being wounded now is an enjoyment, slight as it is, for it brings the rest and change of the hospital."

◆

"The Lord's Money"

A SUBSCRIBER in Montana sends this letter:

"I note you are building an orphanage in Jerusalem and I want to help just a little with some of the Lord's money and hand you herewith my check for $250. You may use all or part for that noble work. If you prefer to use some of this money for the destitute in some parts of the devastated countries in or near Palestine, it will be satisfactory. You have my consent to use it as best deemed by you, but I want at least the largest part to go to the orphanage. Please do not use my name in mentioning this gift.

Grated Coconut
—canned
—in its own milk
"that's the secret"

BAKER'S
Use the Milk
—adds flavor
—saves shortening

The milk—that's the secret of the delicious goodness of fresh coconut. That delightful flavor and refreshing delicacy of the natural coconut is sealed right into the Baker can. The fresh coconut is grated—fluffy and flaky, as you would grate it yourself in your own kitchen—and then it is packed into the sanitary can together with the original coconut milk.

Many delicious and substantial coconut dishes are given in our new Recipe Booklet, illustrated in colors. It's FREE. Mail us request for yourself and friends.

If not obtainable at your grocer's, send his name and 15c in stamps for full-size can.

The Franklin Baker Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

BAKER'S
FRESH GRATED COCONUT

A shock absorber for the door

As the pneumatic tire absorbs the shocks for the automobile, so the Yale Closer absorbs the shock of the closing door.

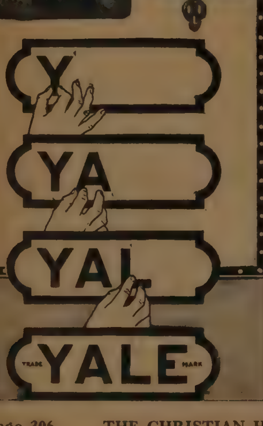
There are certain doors in your home or business building that you want closed to secure privacy and quiet, or to keep out dangerous drafts. Yale Door Closers will do this, do it automatically, quietly and surely.

Yale Door Closers are simple and compact in design—so sound mechanically as to necessitate practically no attention after installation. They are made in various sizes, for front and rear entrance doors, for doors to bathrooms, dens, nurseries, kitchens and pantries.

See your hardware dealer, he will tell you the right size, and will put a Yale Closer on your most troublesome and noisiest doors and keep them there for thirty days on free trial.

SEE the "Yale" trade-mark on the Door Closer you buy. Made and guaranteed by the manufacturers of Yale Night Latches, Yale Padlocks, Yale Builders' Hardware, Yale Bank Locks and Yale Chain Blocks.

The Yale & Towne Mfg. Co.,
9 East 40th Street, New York City
Chicago Office: 77 East Lake Street
Canadian Yale & Towne Limited,
St. Catharines, Ont.



The Search

By
GRACE LIVINGSTON HILL
(MRS. LUTZ)
Author of "The Witness." "The Measure of a Man." Etc.

CHAPTER XII

IT WAS a clear crisp day in March, with just a smell of spring in the air, when Cameron finally united with the church.

He had taken a long time to think about it. Quarantine had extended itself away into February, and while his company had had its regular drill and hard work, there had been no leave from camp, no going to Y. M. C. A. huts, and no visiting canteens. They had been shut up to association with the members of their own barracks, and there were times when that palled upon Cameron to a distressing degree.

One day after it had snowed for three days, and then had rained on the top of it, and a chill wind had swept into the cracks and crannies of the barracks, and poured down from the ventilators in the roofs, and the old stoves were roaring their best to keep up good cheer, the men lay on their cots in rows talking, telling their vile stories, one after another, each to sound bigger than the last, some mere lads boasting of wild orgies, and all finally drifting into a chat on a sort of a philosophy of their own with the lowest possible ideals. Cameron lay on his cot trying to sleep, for he had been on guard all night, and a letter from Ruth was in his inside pocket with a comfortable crackle, but the talk that drifted about him penetrated even his army blankets when he drew them up over his ears.

The fellows had arrived at a point where a young lad had stated with a drawl that all girls were more or less bad; that this talk of the high standards of womanhood was all bosh; that there was one standard for men and women, yes—but it was man's standard, not woman's as was written sometimes. White womanhood! Bah! There was no such thing!

In vain Cameron stuffed the blanket about his ears, resolutely shut his eyes, and tried to sleep. His very blood boiled in his veins. The letter in his pocket cried out to be exonerated from this wholesale blackening of womanhood. Suddenly Cameron with a single motion flung the blanket from him and sprang to his feet, a tall soldier with a white flame of wrath in his face, his eyes flashing with fire. They called him in friendly derision the "Silent Corporal" because he kept so much to himself; but now he blazed forth at them:

"You lie, Kelly, you know you do! The whole lot of you are liars! You know that rot you've been talking isn't true. You know that it's to cover up your own vile deeds and to excuse your own lustful passions that you talk this way, and then try to persuade your hearts and consciences that you are no worse than the girls you have dishonored! But it isn't so, and you know it! There are good women! There always have been and there always will be! You, every one of you, know at least one. You are dishonoring your mothers and your sisters when you talk that way! You are worse than the beasts you are going out to fight! That's the rotten stuff they are teaching. They call it Kultur! You'll never win out against them if you go in that spirit, for it's their spirit and nothing more. You've got to go clean! If there's a God in Heaven he's in this war, and it's got to be a clean war! And you've got to begin by thinking differently of women or you're just as bad as the Huns!"

With that he seized his poncha, stamped out into the storm, and tramped for two hours with a driving sleet in his face and his thoughts a fury of holy anger against unholy things. Back of it all there was the feeling that he was the knight of true womanhood. She had sent him forth, and no man in his presence should defile the thought of her. It was during that tramp that he had made up his mind to ally himself with God's people. Whether it would do any good in the long run in his search for God or not, whether he even was sure he believed in God or not, he would do that much if he were permitted.

Cameron's interview with the minister had not made things much plainer. He had been told that he would grow into things. That the church was the sheep-fold of the soul, that he would be nurtured and taught. That by and by these doubts and fears would not trouble him. He didn't quite see how he was to be nurtured from the distant battlefield of France, but it was a mystical thing anyway, and he accepted the statement and let it go at that. One thing that stuck in his heart and troubled him deeply was the minister's words to him about love and fellowship with his fellow men. As a general thing he had no trouble with his companions in life, but there were one or two, notably Wainwright, toward whom his enmity almost amounted to hatred. He wasn't altogether sure, when he tried to explain to the minister, that his suggestion that he might love the sinner and hate the sin would hold good with regard to Wainwright; but there had been only a brief time before the communion service, and he had to let the matter go. His soul was filled with a holy uplifting as he stepped out from the pastor's study and followed into the great church.

It had startled him just a little to find so many people there. In contemplating this act of allying himself with God he had always thought of it as being between himself and God, with perhaps the minister and an elder or two. He sat down in the place indicated for him much disturbed in spirit. It had always been an annoyance to him to be brought to the notice of his fellow townsmen, and a man in uniform in these days was more than ever an object of interest. His troubled gaze was downward during the opening hymns and prayers. But when he came to stand and take his vows he lifted his eyes, and there, off at one side where the seats grouped in a sort of a transept, he caught a glimpse of Ruth Macdonald standing beside her tall captain-cousin, who was home for the day, and there was a light in her eyes that steadied him and brought back the solemnity of the moment once more. It thrilled him to think she was there. He had not realized before that this must be her church. In fact, he had not thought of it as being any church in particular, but as being a part of the great church invisible to which all God's children belonged. It had not occurred to him until that morning either that his mother might be hurt that he had not chosen her church. But when he spoke to her about it she shook her head and smiled. She was only glad of what he was doing. There were no regrets. She was too broad-minded to stop about creeds. She was sitting there meekly over by the wall now, her hands folded quietly in her lap, tears of joy in her eyes. She too had seen Ruth Macdonald and was glad, but she wondered who the tall captain by her side might be.

It happened that Cameron was the only person uniting by confession at that time, for the quarantine had held him beyond the time the pastor had spoken of when so many were joining, and he stood alone, tall and handsome in his uniform, and answered in a clear, deep voice, "I do!" "I will!" as the vows were put upon him one by one. Every word he meant from his heart, a longing for the God who alone could satisfy the longings of his soul. He thrilled with strange new enthusiasm as the congregation of church members were finally called to rise and receive him into their fellowship, and looking across he saw Ruth Macdonald again and his beloved Captain LaRue standing together while everybody sang:

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love;
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above."

But when the bread and the wine had been partaken of, the solemn prayer of

WHITE
ENAMEL
VARNISH

Such a beautiful, lasting finish is assured with Acme Quality Paints. These paints are made particularly for home service—where real satisfaction and results count—and they well repay all the generous confidence you put in their excellence.

With Acme Quality Paints and Finishes so easy to use with such assured results, home beautifiers will find delight in refinished walls, floors, furniture; renewed wear-worn spots and in making bright and cheery the darkest corners.

ACME QUALITY
PAINTS & FINISHES

Get to know all about Acme Quality Paints and Finishes and how they add to the joy of the home. Your decorator knows and approves them. We want you to have—free—our two mighty helpful booklets "Acme Quality Painting Guide" and "Home Decorating." Write us for copies if your dealer's supply is exhausted.

ACME WHITE LEAD AND COLOR WORKS
Dept. O, DETROIT, MICH.

Boston
Toledo
Lincoln
Chicago
Nashville
Spokane
Minneapolis
Birmingham
Portland
St. Louis
Fort Worth
Salt Lake City
Pittsburgh
Dallas
Los Angeles
Cincinnati
Topeka

Neal's Enamel
ACME QUALITY
Floor Paint
HAVE AN ACME QUALITY SHELF

For the many "touching-up" jobs about the house, keep always on hand at least a can each of Acme Quality Varnotile, a varnish for floors, woodwork and furniture; Acme Quality White Enamel for iron bedsteads, furniture, woodwork and all similar surfaces; and a quart of Acme Quality Floor Paint of the right color.

dication spoken! when the beautiful rvice was over, and the rich tones of e organ were swelling forth, he sud- nly felt strange and shy among all at crowd of people whom he knew by ght only. The elders and some of the her men and women shook hands with m, and he was trying to slip away and d his mother, when a kindly hand was id upon his shoulder. There stood the ptain with Ruth beside him, and such warm handshake of welcome into the urch!

"I'm so glad," said the captain, "that u have taken this step. You will ver regret it, Cameron. It is good at we can be of the same company re if we have failed in other ways." hen turning to Ruth he said:

"I didn't tell you, did I, Ruth, that ve failed in trying to get this man ansferred to my division? I did every- ing I could, but they've turned down y application flatly. It seems like upidity to me, for it was just the place e was most fitted for; but I guess it's ecause he was too much of a man to ay in a quiet sector and do such work. f he had been maimed or half blind hey might have considered him. They eed him in his present place, and I am he poorer for it."

There was a glow in her eyes as she ut her hand in his and said simply, I'm glad you're one of us now," that armed his heart with a great gladness.

"I didn't know you were a member," e said wonderingly.

"Why, yes, I've been a member since was fourteen," she said, and suddenly e felt that he had indeed come into a oly and blessed communion. If he ad not yet found God, at least he was tanding on the same ground with one f His holy children.

That was the last time he got home efore he sailed. Shipping quarantine was put on his company the very next week, the camp was closed to visitors, nd all passes annulled. The word ame that they would be going over in a ew days; but still they lingered, till the ays grew into three weeks, and the spring was fully upon them in all its beauty, touching even the bare camp with a fringe of greenness and a sprinkle of wild bloom in the corners where the clearing had not been complete.

The letters had been going back and forth rather often of late, and Cameron had walked to the loneliest spot in the camp in the starlight and had it out with himself. He knew now that Ruth Macdonald was the only girl in all the world to him. He also knew that there was not a chance in a thousand that he could ever be more to her than he now was. He knew that the coming months held pain for him; and yet he would not go back and undo this beautiful friendship, no, not for all the pain that might come. It was worth it, every bit.

He had hoped to get one more trip home, and she had wanted to see the camp; had said that perhaps when the weather got warmer she might run down some day with his mother; but now the quarantine was on and that was out of the question. He walked alone to the places he would have liked to show her, and then with a sigh went to the telephone office and waited two hours till he got a connection through to her house, just to tell her how sorry he was that he could not come up as he had expected and take that ride with her that she had promised in her last letter. Somehow it comforted him to hear her voice. She had asked if there would be no lifting of the quarantine before they left, no opportunity to meet him somewhere and say good-by, and he promised that he would let her know if any such chance came, but he had little hope, for company after company was being sent away in the troop trains now, hour after hour, and he might be taken any minute.

CHAPTER XIII

ONE day Cameron called up Ruth Macdonald and told her that, greatly to the surprise of the men, the next Saturday and Sunday the camp was to be thrown open to visitors, and if she could come down with his mother he would meet them at the Hostess House and they could spend the day together. Ruth promptly accepted the invitation and promised to arrange it all with his mother and take the first train down Saturday morning. After he had hung up the receiver and paid his bill he walked away from the telephone headquarters in a daze of joy. She had promised to come! For one whole day he should have her to himself! She was willing to come with his mother! Then as he passed the officers' headquarters it occurred to him that perhaps she had other interests in coming to camp than just to see him, and he frowned in the darkness and his heart burned hot within him. What if they should meet Wainwright! How the day would be spoiled!

But when the Saturday morning came and he went down to the station there stood his sworn enemy in a group waiting for a train to Philadelphia.

"Yes, I got special leave for three days!" his loud pompous voice proclaimed, and Cameron slid back into the station again to study a time table and quietly rejoice until the north-bound train came by and cleared the platform, fifteen minutes before the south-bound train arrived.

It was a glorious golden spring day when Ruth and Mrs. Cameron stepped from the train and looked bewilderedly about them at the swarm of uniforms and boyish faces, looking for the one. It seemed that they walked through a long lane lined with soldiers, held back by a great rope, each with an air of sad expectancy upon him, a silence that showed the deep realization of the parting that was soon to be. Deep disappointment was growing in many faces because the expected one had not arrived. Ruth's throat was filled with oppression as she looked about her and suddenly felt the grip of War, and saw that all these thousands were bearing this bitterness of parting, perhaps forever. Death stalking up and down a battlefield, waiting to take his pick of them. That was the picture that flashed before her shrinking eyes.

It was almost like a solemn ceremony, this walking down the lane of silent waiting soldiers, to be claimed by their one. It seemed to bring the two young people nearer in heart than they had ever been before, when at the end of the line Cameron met them with a salute, kissed his mother, and then turned to Ruth and took her hand, with an earnest look of deep pleasure.

He led them up under the big trees in front of the Hostess House while all around were hushed voices and teary eyes. That first moment of meeting was the saddest and the quietest of the day with everybody, except the last parting hour when mute grief sat unchecked upon every face, and no one stopped to notice if any man were watching, but just lived out his real heart self, and showed his mother or his sister or his sweetheart how much he loved and suffered.

That was a day which all the little painted butterflies of temptation should have been made to witness. There were no painted ladies coming through the gates that day. This was no time for friendships like that. Death was calling, and the deep realities of life stood out and demanded attention.

The whole thing was unlike anything Ruth had ever witnessed before. It was a new world. It was as if the old conventions which had heretofore hedged her life were dropped like a garment, revealing life as it really was, and every one walked and was unashamed, because the great sorrow and need of all had obliterated the little petty rules of life. Small passions were laid aside while hearts throbbed in a common cause.

Cameron waited on them like a prince, seeming to anticipate every need and smooth every annoyance. He led them away from the throng to the quiet hillside above the camp where spring had set her dainty footprint. He spread down his thick army blanket for them to sit upon, and they held sweet converse for an hour or two. He told them of camp life and what was expected to be when they started over, and when they reached the other side.

His mother was brave and sensible. Sometimes the tears would brim over at some suggestion of what her boy was soon to bear or do, but she wore a smile as brave and tender as any saint could wear, and the boy saw and grew tender over it. A bird came and sang over their heads, and the moment was sweet with springing things and quiet with the

BOSS Glass Door OVEN

"I used to have 'bad luck' baking"

"But it was the fault of the solid door oven I was using. It was more or less guess-work."

With the Boss Glass Door Oven, you can always see what you're doing, how fast the things are baking, the exact time to take them out—all without opening the door. This puts an end to uncertain, unsuccessful baking.

The Boss is more economical. You can keep the flame of your Oil, Gas or Gasoline Stove lower than with the ordinary oven. It heats up in a few minutes. All the heat passes directly into the oven and is evenly distributed by the patented heat deflector. Convenient to handle, and durable.

Now is the time to get one. Don't put it off because you have an oven. You need a Boss, the oven that will make your baking easier and more economical. The glass in Boss ovens is guaranteed not to break from the heat. If it should be broken by accident; any glass dealer can replace it. Ask your dealer. Remember the name, BOSS.

The Boss Oven and Boss Oil-Air Stove make a wonderful cooking combination

If you are still carrying coal or wood and emptying dusty ashes, it's high time you bought a Boss Oil-Air Stove. It means more comfortable cooking in hot weather—better and more economical cooking in any weather. No fires to build. Just strike a match.

The Boss Stove is equipped with the patented Oil-Air Burner, which burns a thousand times as much air as oil. The intense blue flame plays right against the pots and pans, it cooks quickly, saves fuel and does not heat up the kitchen. Made with two to five burners. See the new models on rollers at your dealer's.

The Huenefeld Company
31 Grove Ave.
Cincinnati, Ohio

BOSS PATENTED

OIL-AIR STOVE

A CHEERFUL HOME-COMING

Home means comfort and good cheer when there is a CALORIC FURNACE in the basement.

Your slippers, pipe, favorite reading and the CALORIC are a combination that make you forget the howling wind and drifting snow. And how the wife and children appreciate such a home—warm and comfortable in every room.

More than 50,000 satisfied users testify to the splendid success they have had with the

PIPELESS CALORIC FURNACE
The Original Patented Pipeless Furnace

This is the furnace which has revolutiónized heating. Instead of using numerous pipes and registers, it heats the entire house through only one register. It is therefore easily installed in new or old houses, usually in one day, without interfering with your present heating arrangements.

The CALORIC heats all types of homes up to eighteen rooms, also churches, stores, factories, halls and other buildings. It burns coal, coke, wood, gas or lignite, and, because of special patented features, saves from ⅓ to ½ your fuel. The CALORIC is sold under the Monitor Iron-clad Guarantee, which insures the purchaser thorough and economical heat.

See the nearest CALORIC dealer or send for our new catalog. If you write us, we will send you the names of some CALORIC users in your locality so that you may investigate the claims we make.

THE MONITOR STOVE COMPANY
CALORIC

THE MONITOR STOVE COMPANY
Established 1819—A Century of Service—"Pioneers of Pipeless Heating"
1330 Woodrow St., Cincinnati, Ohio

Immediate shipment made from Burlington, Ia., Green Bay, Wis., Harrisburg, Pa., Minneapolis, Minn., Omaha, Neb., Lansing, Mich., Salt Lake City, Utah., Spokane, Wash., Seattle, Wash., Aurora, Ill., Baltimore, Md., Columbus, Ohio, Louisville, Ky., New Haven, Conn., Newark, N. J., Peoria, Ill., Philadelphia, Pa.

Wm. Campbell
The Original Fireless Cooker Man

Right Now I Am Making a Low Factory Price on 10,000 Cookers

JUST now I am making a special price proposition on 10,000 Fireless Cookers to introduce them quickly into new homes. My Rapid Fireless Cooker actually reduces the cost of living. It saves you a big per cent of your fuel bill, saves you time and worry, and cooks all kinds of foods better. It makes them more digestible and more delicious. All the flavor of the food remains in the food after it is cooked. My

Rapid Saves You Work—Saves You Steps—Saves You Standing Over the Hot Cookstove, Because Nothing Burns or Sticks

I want you to use my Rapid Fireless Cooker a month at my risk. Then I want you to take a vote of the entire family and yourself—and if you don't decide that the Rapid Fireless Cooker is a marvel—if the whole family don't say that they never had better meals, more wholesomely cooked, and if you don't say that you did it with far less work than you ever did before—then send it right back and I will return your money without argument.

Aluminum Lined Throughout—Full Equipment of "Wear-Ever" Aluminum Cooking Utensils

Try My Rapid 30 Days On My Personal Money Back Guaranty

Try my Rapid this way and see how much better it is than the ordinary—two tops instead of one to retain the heat—no reheating necessary—radiators do not crack or break—last forever.

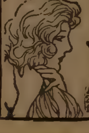
Send For Big FREE Book. It shows that with the Rapid, you can cook or prepare every dish you serve on your table. It roasts, boils, stews, steams, fries, bakes every kind of meat, fish and vegetables—makes delicious soups, puddings, breakfast foods, preserves. Does a score of things you never knew a Fireless Cooker could do. Send for the Free Book. With it will come my special price proposition. Write today. A postal will do. WM. CAMPBELL, Pres.

The Wm. Campbell Company
Department 202 Detroit, Michigan

CASH FOR OLD FALSE TEETH, DISCARDED JEWELRY, ETC.

Mail us useless false teeth, (with or without gold fillings), discarded or broken jewelry, watches, magneto points—anything containing gold, silver or platinum—and we will send you the full cash value by return mail (and hold your goods 10 days pending your acceptance of our remittance.) Dun and Bradstreet References.

OHIO SMELTING & REFINING COMPANY
902 Park Building, Cleveland, Ohio



Kill Dandruff With Cuticura

All druggists: Soap 25. Ointment 25 and 50, Talcum 25. Sample each free of "Cuticura, Dept. M, Boston."

brooding tenderness of parting that hung over the busy camp. Ruth had one awful moment of adjustment when she tried to think how her aunt Rhoda would look if she could see her now; then she threw the whole thing to the winds and resolved to enjoy the day. She saw that while the conventions by which she had been reared were a good thing in general, perhaps, they certainly were not meant to hamper or hinder the true and natural life of the heart.

Cameron had them over the camp by and by, to the trenches, the practice, the camouflage, the walls and bridges and all the paraphernalia of war preparation. Then they went back to the Hostess House and stood in line to get dinner. As Cameron stood looking down at Ruth standing in the crowded dinner line in that democratic way which was the only way there was, it came over them both how strange and wonderful it was that they two, who had seen each other so little in their lives and who had come from such widely separated social circles, should be there together in that beautiful intimacy. It came to them both at once and flashed from one pair of eyes to the other and back again. Cameron looked deep into her thoughts then for a moment to find out if there was a shadow of mortification or dismay in her face, but though she flushed consciously her sweet true eyes gave back only the pleasure she was feeling in her real enjoyment of the day. Then instantly each of them felt that another crisis had been passed in their friendship, another something unseen and beautiful had happened that made this moment most precious, one never to be forgotten, no matter what happened in the future, something they would not have missed for any other experience.

As it began to appear during the afternoon that the company would not go out before the morrow Mrs. Cameron showed a desire to be near the camp over Sunday. Ruth quickly assented, and it was arranged by telephone that they should be taken care of at the little Salvation Army headquarters just outside the camp for the night and return in the morning. Ruth entered into the plans eagerly, and put aside all the mother's protests on her account. What if the accommodations were not luxurious? What if they were even somewhat in the nature of a hardship? Wasn't it worth it all? Of course they would stay! So they stayed, and came back the next day for more beautiful converse.

Sunday afternoon Mrs. Cameron went into the Hostess House to lie down in the rest room for a few minutes, and sent the two young people off by themselves. Cameron took Ruth to the log in the woods and showed her his little Testament and the covenant he had signed there, and they opened their hearts together about the eternal things of life. Shyly at first, and then with the assurance that sympathy brings, Cameron told her that he was trying to find God, and Ruth said she would pray for him, although she had seldom until lately done very much real praying for herself.

It was a beautiful hour wherein they traveled miles in their friendship; an hour in which their souls came close while they sat on the log under the trees with long silences between their talk.

It was whispered at the barracks that evening at five when Cameron went back for "Retreat" that this was the last night. They would move in the morning surely, perhaps before. He hurried back to the Hostess House where he had left his guests to order the supper for all, feeling that he must make the most of every minute. Passing the Officers' Headquarters he heard the raucous laugh of Wainwright, and caught a glimpse of his fat head and neck through a window. His heart sank! Then Wainwright was back! They must surely be going that night then, and he must have been sent for!

He fled to the Hostess House and was silent and distraught as he ate his supper. Suppose Wainwright should come in while they were there and see Ruth and spoil those last few minutes together! The thought was unbearable.

Nobody wanted much supper, and they wandered outside in the soft evening air. There was a hushed sorrow over everything. Even the roug soldiers were not ashamed of t Little faded mothers clung to big b sons, and their sons smoothed their hair awkwardly and were not ashar A pair of lovers sat at the foot of a hand in hand and no one looked at th except in sympathy. There were p ings everywhere. A few wives little children in their arms were wri down hurried directions and recei a bit of money; and most desolate o was the row of lads lined up near station whose friends were gone, hadn't come at all, and who had noth better to do than to stand and end the woe of others.

"Couldn't we walk out of cam asked Ruth suddenly. "Must we go that awful trolley? Last night ev body was weeping. I wanted to w too. It is only a few steps from end of camp to our quarters. Or is too long a walk for you, Mrs. Cameron

"Nothing is too far tonight so I m be with my boy one hour longer."

"Then we must start at once," s Cameron. "There is barely time reach the outskirts before the hour wh all visitors must be out of camp. It over three miles, mother."

"I can walk it if Miss Ruth car said the mother smiling bravely.

He drew an arm of each within own and started off, glad to be out Wainwright's neighborhood, gladder st to have a little longer time with the he loved.

Out through the deserted streets th passed, where empty barracks we being prepared for the next draft m past the Tank Headquarters and colored barracks, the storehouses, a more barracks just emptied that afte noon into troop trains; out beyond t great laundry, and on up the cinde road to the top of the hill and the end the way.

There at last, in sight of the militar police pacing back and forth at the en trance to camp, with the twinklin lights of the village beyond, and long wooded road winding back camp, they paused to say good-by. Th cinder path and the woods at its edg made a blot of greenish black against blue and silver stormy sky. The su was setting like a ball of fire behind th trees, and some strange freak of its ray made a golden cross resting back diago nally against the clouds, its base buri among the trees, its crossbars risin brilliant against the black of a thunde cloud.

"Look!" said Ruth. "It is an omen!" They looked and a great wonder and awe came upon them. Th cross!

Cameron looked back and then down at her and smiled.

"It will lead you safely home," she said softly and laid her hand in his. He held her fingers close for an instant and his eyes dared some of the things his lips would never have spoken even if they had been alone.

The military police stepped up:

"You don't have to stay out here to say good-by. You can bring your ladies into the station right here and sit down. Or if they are going into the village you may go with them, comrade. I can trust you to come back right away."

Cameron turned and saluted.

"I thank you!" he said. "That is the kindest thing that has happened to me at this camp. I wish I could avail myself of it, but I have barely time to get back to the barracks within the hour given me. Perhaps—" and he glanced anxiously across the road toward the village, "Could you just keep an eye out that they reach the Salvation Army hut all right?"

"Sure!" said the big soldier heartily. "I'll go myself. I'm just going off duty and I'll see them safe to the door."

He stepped a little away and gave an order to his men. So the mother and Ruth said good-by and watched Cameron go down the road into the sunset with the golden cross blazing above him, as he walked lower and lower into the shadow of the dark woods and the thunder cloud. But brightly the cross shone above him as long as they could see, and just before he stepped into the darkness where the road turned he paused and waved his hat, and so passed out of their sight.

To be continued

Relief Workers for the Near East

T A recent meeting of the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, reports were preted telling of the progress of the it life-saving campaign among the lions of sufferers in the Near East. iouncement was made by the Chaira of a gift of $15,000, representing tributions from readers of the istian Herald, to be applied in nediate relief in the localities of atest suffering.

he great ocean steamship Levian, once the Vaterland of the Gerns, has had a checkered career and carried many men on many mis. None, however, is nobler or has on a kindlier errand than the nenian and Syrian relief expedition ch, 250 strong, sailed from New k harbor on Saturday, February 15. ree other ships have already carried r a large body of workers and sup, most of whom sailed on the isacola. A group of men and women ind exclusively for Syria left on the France, February 18.

nteresting is the personnel who will ry on this humanitarian and selfrificing enterprise of aiding the rving and cruelly persecuted subject es of the Near East. Nine members the committee are in control of the edition. Dr. James L. Barton, Dr. inley White, Dr. George Edward ite and Walter George Smith are ong the number.

Experienced and devoted workers, efly women, sailed on the Leviathan. st of the men have gone ahead with y or more motor trucks and a large mber of Ford cars, gasoline and supes to prepare the way and to carry the plans of the committee for mediate relief work in the Near East. hen the Leviathan reaches Brest, ance, the Armenian and Syrian comssion will either embark on a British nsport for Constantinople, or will ss the continent in special trains. e Greek Government has also promd a ship which the workers may or y not use upon arriving at Brest.

The relief expedition on the Leviathan ludes sixty Red Cross nurses, twenty ysicians, several laboratory assistants d bacteriologists, forty missionaries, specialists in agriculture, reconstruction aids, expert psychologists experienced with backward children, relief workers, kindergartners, journalists and writers. Two girls' colleges are represented by the Smith College Unit and the Wellesley College Unit. Each college is supporting five girls and is also raising funds for the support of the expedition.

The American Women's Hospital Unit of the Near East is sending five doctors and full equipment. Four Mennonite members are being sent at the expense of the Mennonite Relief Association. This makes a total of ten Mennonites engaged in the relief work.

One million dollars' worth of material was donated by the Red Cross. It consists of the complete equipment for fifteen hospitals, X-ray, electric light, medicines, bandages, surgical supplies —in fact, the standard Red Cross hospital outfit, with additions made necessary by special conditions in the Near East.

A worker who left on the Leviathan is Miss Elaine E. Van Dyke of Princeton, N. J., a daughter of Dr. Henry Van Dyke, formerly United States minister to the Netherlands.

Dr. James L. Barton of Boston, chairman of the Committee for Relief in the Near East, left New York several weeks ago and is well on his way to Constantinople. With him are Dr. George W. Washburn of Boston; Dr. U. H. T. Main, president of Grinnell College, Grinnell, Iowa, and Arthur Curtiss James. Dr. Barton is the author of many books on the missionary situations. He has been seven years in Harpoot, Turkey, and is closely interested in the Armenian cause. Dr. Barton is the pioneer; following him and heading the expedition on the Leviathan is Dr. George E. White, former president of Marsovan College in Armenia.

The missionaries, relief workers and physicians will be sent to the following cities in Asia Minor, Armenia, Mesopotamia, Syria and the Caucasus; Smyrna, Brousa, Angora, Konia, Cæsarea, Tarsus, Marsovan, Adana, Trebizond, Der-el-Zor, Jerusalem, Bagdad, Mosul, Urumia, Tabriz, Erivan, Tiflis, Batum, Soubilak, Bitlis, Harpoot, Mardin, Urfa and Van.

dditional Contributions to the Widows and Orphans Fund

H Jurey	$5.00
ah E Rapp	5.00
rs F A Eatman	5.00
r and Mrs A E Eggleston	5.00
rs C J Livermore	5.00
rtrude White	5.00
—, Sandborn, Ind	5.00
S Class, Gallatin, Tenn	5.00
rs Lillie Lowe	5.00
rs S J Jolley	5.00
ed Creek Mission, Dry Fork, W. Va.	5.00
rs J H McCarty	5.00
rs Charles E Oberg	5.00
L Williams	5.00
rs J W Journell	5.00
atharine Buller	5.00
ay Porter	5.00
r and Mrs S K Skinner	5.00
P Reibold	3.00
rs A N McKay	3.00
rs Fred A Kassel	3.00
atherine McPhee	3.00
rs. Christine Weimer	3.00
—, Bishop Calif	3.00
rs Mary E Lockwood	3.00
rs. L Sinwald	3.00
rs E M Ogburn	3.00
nnie Hamer	3.00
rs Sarah Ring	3.00
rs W E Robinson	3.00
rs S E Courtright	3.00
dna Hackett	3.00
rs J T Beckman and Daughter	3.00
rs Ellen B Lord	3.00
rs M J Fox and Family	3.00
rs Thos Smith	3.00
rs G H Spicer	3.00
J Treloar	3.00
Elias Monday	$3.00
Mrs B E Cokely	3.00
Mrs Sarah Hopper	3.00
K Hendrickson	2.50
A Reader, North Tazewell, Va.	2.50
S F Young	2.50
G W Moore	2.50
A Friend, Deer Park, Md	2.50
Mrs H Baldwin	2.50
Albert H Arms	2.50
Mary E Young	2.50
A Willis	2.50
Mr and Mrs Albert King	2.50
Mrs G L Bliss	2.00
Mrs H A Crosby	2.00
Mrs L W Groce	2.00
William Kennedy	2.00
Mrs J E Ort	2.00
Mrs F W Booth	2.00
B H Ulbrech	2.00
Mrs Eunice Darling	2.00
Harvey C Harper	2.00
Emma Fay	2.00
Jane A Warner	2.00
Mrs B H Wall	2.00
Mrs J N Sprole	2.00
C E L Old Orchard, Maine	2.00
Brookside Friends, Batavia, N.Y.	2.00
A Sympathizer, Frederick, Ill.	2.00
John L Hoffman	2.00
Mrs M C Hopper	2.00
Mrs C G Kaufman	2.00
Emma Fay	2.00
Mr and Mrs Brisbine	2.00
A Subscriber, Pa.	2.00
Mrs K M Harris	2.00
Clark A McBride	2.00
Mrs M F Morrill	2.00
W Broirant	2.00
Mrs Emma Ellis	2.00
Stella Cox	$2.00
Epworth S. S., Ida Grove, Iowa	2.00
Louis De Lancett	2.00
Mrs D C Whitehill	2.00
Mattie E Stoll	2.00
Annie B Randall	2.00
Ira Clynick	2.00
Mrs E J Stover	2.00
Y M Ferguson	2.00
Mr and Mrs D C Lyons	2.00
Mrs Anna P Unger	2.00
James R Raup	2.00
Mrs M C Harris	2.00
A Friend, Keyser, W. Va.	2.00
Minnie A Cross	2.00
J P Sweitzer	2.00
Mrs S Douglass	2.00
Mrs L Dammers	2.00
Mrs M Gilson	2.00
Mrs W Pelton	2.00
Mrs J A Hight	2.00
Mrs Jos Batchelor	2.00
Mary McGrave	2.00
Geo Parsons	2.00
Mrs D Etter	2.00
Miss V Hoelscher	2.00
Give Ye Thou to Eat, Windham, N Y	2.00
Miss Rose Schmidt	2.00
Mr Chas Staiger	2.00
Mrs L S Martin	2.00
O Dennis	2.00
Mrs H V K, Niagara, Pa.	2.00
O A Wickstrom	2.00
Alex Harveson	2.00
R W E Tibbetts	2.00
Mrs Jno Gibson	2.00
Carlos Comb	2.00
Mrs F St John	2.00
Miss Hilda Hallner	2.00
Mrs G H Hill	2.00
Mrs M F Hayes	2.00
Gale Forest Reinertson	2.00
S J Gilman	$2.00
G W Porter	2.00
Lelia I Scales	2.00
Saml B Fouell	1.75
Mrs Martha Walter	1.25
O W Krupp	1.00
——, Arlington Hghts, Ill	1.00
Miss J T Stewart	1.00
F C B, Wecota, So Dak	1.00
Mrs L B Smith	1.00
Rev J Schaedel	1.00
Leslie Eldringe	1.00
Mrs C A Mason	1.00
H Groscloss	1.00
W Geo Kennedy	1.00
Miss M Lewis	1.00
Mrs Rosa W De Winton	1.00
L F Haines	1.00
G S Fairchild	1.00
Miss C E Hulsart	1.00
J H Reid	1.00
N Schmidt	1.00
Mr B Steffer	1.00
Rena E Hicks	1.00
Hiram Scriver	1.00
A V Ward	1.00
Nettie M Tong	1.00
Mrs N E Kellogg	1.00
Mrs M Cole	1.00
Mrs Ellen R. Weaver	1.00
Sarah M Cole	1.00
W J Dixon	1.00
Mrs W H Bacon	1.00
Mrs W S Taylor	1.00
Mrs Kate Oehler	1.00
Mrs L H Haskell	1.00
Thos Gillaland	1.00
Mrs Mary M Johnston	1.00
Mrs C Youngman	1.00
Miss Margaret Stauffer	1.00
C J Collins	1.00
Miss Harriet W Jewett	1.00
C Hatch	1.00
F A Hightman	1.00
Mrs Ruth A Hovel	1.00
Eva M Smith	1.00
C N Maw	1.00
Mr R Stafford	1.00
Mrs Chas Noel	1.00
Mrs H Gorenzen	.75

Additional acknowledgment in subsequent issues of the Christian Herald.

HOLEPROOF HOSIERY
H HYMER
© H.H.Co.

Begin This Spring to Wear Them

Even if all makers were to use the fine materials that we do, Holeproof Hosiery would still excel because of our specialized methods of knitting.

For more than 16 years these hose have amazed the public by their durability—and they are just as durable today as ever, besides being more beautiful.

Women's and Children's, 55c upward; Men's, 35c upward

If your dealer cannot supply you, write for illustrated book and price list.

HOLEPROOF HOSIERY COMPANY, Milwaukee, Wis.
10 Church Alley, Liverpool, England 50 York St., Sydney, Australia
Holeproof Hosiery Co. of Canada, Limited, London, Ont. (989)

Holeproof Hosiery
Don't accept hosiery that does not bear this label.

SMITH BROTHERS'
S.B.
COUGH DROPS.
S.B. Stamped on each Drop
POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y., U.S.A.
TRADE Reg. U.S. Pat. Off. MARK
S.B. COUGH DROPS

The child with a cough has to keep away from other children. Wise mothers take no chances. But why spoil your children's good times? Coughing is unnecessary. S-B Cough Drops relieve it. Give the children all they want. Absolutely pure. No drugs.

Drop that Cough

SMITH BROTHERS of Poughkeepsie

Famous since 1847

YOU CAN MAKE MONEY

selling our exclusive Dress Goods, Suitings, Waistings, Handkerchiefs, Hosiery, Silks, etc., latest and most stylish designs. Profitable, congenial employment of spare time for ladies of refinement. No money or experience necessary. Samples FREE. Write to-day. Mitchell & Church Co., 124 Water St., Binghamton, N.Y.

HAVE A THRIFT GARDEN

"Every Dollar Saved Is a Dollar Earned."

Plant our Choice Iowa Seeds. Reduce your living cost and produce food for the nation. Our catalog tells you how. It is free. Write for it today. Address IOWA SEED CO., Dept. 45 Des Moines, Iowa

HOOSIER STOVES & RANGES FREE

To try in your home 30 days free no matter where you live. Show your friends, send it back at our expense if you do not want to keep it. Million members of families enjoying the comforts and pleasures of "Hoosier" Stoves & Ranges, perfect bakers and heaters, beautifully finished, smooth latest design, guaranteed for years.

Write for our big free book showing photographs, describing large assortment of sizes and designs of Steel and Cast Ranges, Cooks, Soft and Hard Coal Heaters, to select from, explaining our free trial. Send postal today.

HOOSIER STOVE CO.
164 State St., Marion, Ind.

The Anybody Family on Sunday Morning

Six copies only required for rendition
(Prices postpaid) Single copy - - - - - 25 cents
Six (6) copies in one order - $1.00

A One Act (20 minute) Play, showing the absurdity of habitual lateness at church service on Sunday morning

REV. PAUL MOORE STRAYER, D.D., writes: "It was more effective than repeated appeals from the pulpit to be at church on time. It opens a new field of dramatizing scenes in church life."

Send $1.00 for six copies. Money back if you want it.

TULLAR-MEREDITH CO., 249 W. 36th Street, New York

SANITAS
MODERN WALL COVERING

SANITAS supplies the harmonious background which makes furniture, rugs, and hangings look their best.

Sanitas is a cloth wall covering finished in durable oil colors and is obtained in

"Styles for Every Room In the House"

Sanitas does not crack, peel or fade. Dust and finger marks do not injure it—a damp cloth wipes off the dirt.

Do a room or two in Sanitas this spring and make them look more inviting than ever.

The Sanitas trademark is always on the back of the goods.

Write for Booklet and Samples and address the manufacturers of

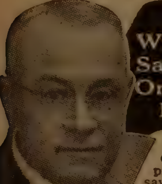
SANITAS MODERN WALL COVERING
Dept. 3
320 Broadway, New York



Here's Where YOU Save Money On A Range, Friend!

DEL DANE, "The Old Stove Master," promised you money-saving offers on Kalamazoo Ranges, Stoves, Furnaces, Gas Ranges, Oil Ranges and Kitchen Kabinets. We are here to make good that promise. We are manufacturers and sell direct to you, the user. That enables us to save you money.

Ask about Kalamazoo Phonographs, Cream Separators, Refrigerators, Roofing, Paint and other home necessities.

Ask For Catalog No. 103
Kalamazoo Stove Co., Mfrs.
Kalamazoo, Mich.

Write for the Book That Tells How

A Kalamazoo Direct to You

Become a Nurse

IF YOU cannot spend three years in hospital or are past hospital age limit, send name and address on postcard for yearbook explaining the C. S. N. Home-Practice Method of studying trained nursing. State age.

The Chautauqua School of Nursing
341 Main St. Jamestown, N.Y.

The Housemothers' Exchange

By MARION HARLAND

I TAKE real pleasure in endeavoring to meet the desires of the writer of the following letter:

"May I ask you some questions about cake-making? I shall be most grateful to you for any advice along this line. I follow recipes closely, but my cakes and cookies are always so dry and coarse-grained! I use none but the best flour. Is it a good plan to beat the whites and yolks separately and add the whites last? I have always beaten the eggs together and added, after creaming, butter and sugar. In short, what is the secret of cake-making?

"Now with regard to icing for cakes. I think a boiled icing too dry for a layer cake. I have eaten soft, white, delicious filling in such, but do not know what it is, or how it is made. Can you tell me? Now just one more question: Can you tell me how to make a good bread stuffing? Should the bread be soaked in water or just dampened before using? I cannot make good bread stuffing."—Edith P. (Iowa).

Each of your queries is pertinent, and all have perplexed the novice in cake-making. I therefore recognize their importance and reply briefly yet as fully as is consistent with our prescribed space.

You are wise in using the very best brand of flour. It is well after sifting, to set it in an open oven for perhaps five minutes, stirring often to make sure that it is perfectly dry. This is expedient in damp weather. Then let it cool. Sift again just before adding to the rest of the prepared ingredients, and, should the recipe call for baking powder, sift this in twice to insure thorough blending with the flour.

1. It is best to beat whites and yolks separately. The yolks must be perfectly smooth and the whites a standing froth stiff enough to cut with a knife.

2. Having the materials within easy reach, including the sifted and dried flour, begin active operations by rubbing butter and sugar to a cream. Stir and beat until the mixture is really "creamy" throughout. If you can secure an assistant to have the eggs beaten just in time, let the yolks go now into the creamed butter and sugar and whip in swiftly with upward strokes. If spice or liquid flavoring be used this is the time for adding these.

Without the loss of a minute add, alternately, a big spoonful of the stiffened whites and a handful of the sifted flour. A large wooden spoon is best for this purpose. Beat in fast and with deep dips to drive the air clear down to the bottom of the batter. And let every stroke count. Long beating toughens cake batter. Mix faithfully and whip (not pound) the delicate mixture. As soon as it is light and smooth, put into lightly buttered molds and bake. Cover with what is known as "butcher's paper," which is both light and stiff. Leave this on until the batter has risen to double the original bulk. Then remove the papers and brown—not burn! Scorched cakes are inexcusable. To avoid this the oven should be at a steady heat. If too hot, the cake will be streaked unevenly.

A Little Lesson in Life

RECENTLY a shade refused to work properly. Examination revealed the end of the roller wrapped with ravelings and one of the spring's small catches slipped so as to render the whole useless. It took but a few minutes to free the entangled end and adjust the catch. The roller was then doing duty as well as ever.

Most of us experience a sense of gratification when we overcome a difficulty, though trifling in itself. But to some there is a truth concealed in these every-day affairs. An instance like that just mentioned reminds us how easily individuals are put out of service. The ravelings of life accumulate all too fast; just little things easily removed, but unnoticed until their usefulness is threatened.

It needs but the touch of His hand to make such lives again effective. The catch in the curtain was impaired only from lack of proper connection with the main spring. Even so lives jostled out of their relations with the divine forces delay God's purposes.

We recall at this moment a familiar song which, with slight changes, suits our thought:

Though at times we're tired of the toilsome road,
  And for days of ease we pine,

let us be glad—

That He draws us back to duty's track
  By the touch of his hand divine.

E. T. F.

Uses for Old Shades

THIS is the time of year when housekeepers are asking themselves which shades and draperies must be discarded when taken down in the coming spring housecleaning, and replaced by new ones. The thrifty housekeeper, however, will find good use for the old shades. Let us see what she may do with them:

Portions of old shades are often good enough to be used at the small pantry windows.

Worn-out shades may also be used to provide darkness for preserves which are stored on open shelves in the cellar; preserves keep better in the dark, and many housekeepers hang old shades to the shelf above that which holds the glasses and jars, drawing them down as a screen.

The stiff, canvas-like material of shades makes an excellent covering for a low bed-screen to shield the child at night from a light, or to ward off drafts from the little sleeper.

When boiled, old shades make strong rags, which can be used for rag rugs and carpets. Indeed, white and écru linen shades, when boiled, ironed and hemstitched, or embroidered in simple scalloping, make very pretty bureau covers and supper cloths. L. A. K.

Best Foods for Little Children

WHAT are the best foods for tots from four to eight years old?

This question is perplexing more than one mother, and to be able to answer this legitimate query the workers in foods at the New York State College of Agriculture have been giving much thought.

For children from four to eight years of age it is suggested that four meals are desirable. For breakfast stewed fruit, cereal with whole milk or thin cream, or bread and milk; and, when possible, an egg may be served. For a mid-morning meal milk with a thin slice of bread and butter is adequate.

The dinner may consist of a lightly cooked egg, spinach or peas or string beans, mashed baked potato or boiled rice, and stewed fruit or a light pudding.

A well-cooked cereal with thin cream, milk to drink and stewed fruit, make an acceptable supper. A lightly cooked egg, bread and butter, milk to drink, and a baked apple are likewise desirable for the evening meal.

Suggestions

The best spring tonic is plenty of vegetables, preferably fresh ones, in the diet.

One way to make stockings wear longer: Buy stockings long enough for your feet.

Employ thy time well if thou meanest to gain leisure; since thou art not sure of a minute, throw not away an hour.—Poor Richard, 1758.

The most satisfactory wall paper is that which is least conspicuous. It should lie quietly on the wall, not shout for the attention of any one who enters the room.

Many have sung the praises of adhesive tape. Scarcely less useful is the ordinary gummed brown paper tape which is used in stores for sealing packages. For many purposes it is better than the adhesive tape and costs much less.

◆

There's a lot of good in the world which some people refuse to see, and a lot of bad which some are good enough not to see.

You Can We
What You Sho

I TEACH you ho sit, stand and wall
rectly, give you gr abundant vitality—co
to undertake and to do t
I build you up or reduc to normal—all in your own h
In a few weeks, you can su your family and friends.

You Can Be W
Without Drugs

It's easier to be well than sick, when you know how.
If you are troubled with of the following, or any ailments, write me.

Indigestion Nervousness
Torpid Liver
Constipation
Poor Circulation
Mal-assimilation

My 16 years' work has won the endorsement of leading physicians.

What I have done for 87,000 women I can do for you. Write me. Your letter will be held in absolute confidence, and you will be under no obligations. Write today, before you forget. I will gladly send you my illustrated booklet telling how to stand or walk correctly, free.

Susanna Cocroft
624 S. Mich. Ave., Dept. 18, Chicago

Miss Cocroft is a nationally recognized authority on conditioning women as our training camps have conditioned our men.

Housework lameness

You know how you often feel at the end of a hard day of household duties—tired back muscles, and perhaps a wrench from heavy lifting, a cut from a butcher-knife, or a severe bruise.

Absorbine J
THE ANTISEPTIC LINIMENT

will give immediate relief. It is an efficient antiseptic liniment which penetrates quickly and is healing, cooling and soothing. If used on cuts it prevents infection as well as heals.

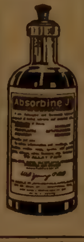
Invaluable for sprains, swellings, cuts, pains and wounds.

Absorbine, Jr. is a clean, pleasant liniment, and is safe to use under any circumstances. It is made of herbs and is not poisonous.

$1.25 a bottle, at druggists or postpaid

A liberal trial bottle will be sent upon receipt of 10 cents in stamps

W. F. YOUNG, P. D. F.
5 Temple Street Springfield, Mass.



These Club Feet Made Straight in Four Months

Annabell Williams was born with Club Feet. After other treatment had failed, her mother brought her to the McLain Sanitarium, January 17, 1916, at 11 years of age. Four months later they returned home—happy. Read the mother's letter.

"I took Annabell home, on May 19, 1916, with two straight and useful feet. Today she runs and plays as any child. We can't say enough for the McLain Sanitarium and will gladly answer all letters of inquiry."

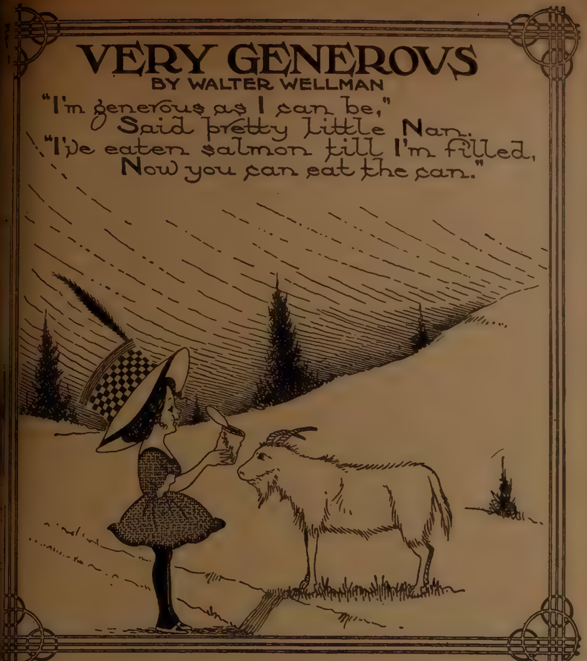
Mrs. Morgan Williams, Higbee, Mo.

This deformity was corrected without plaster paris or general anaesthesia.

FOR CRIPPLED CHILDREN

This private institution is devoted to the treatment of children and young adults afflicted with Club Feet, Infantile Paralysis, Spinal Diseases and Curvature, Hip Disease, Wry Neck, etc. Our valuable book, "Deformities and Paralysis," with Book of References, free.

The McLain Orthopedic Sanitarium
923 Aubert Ave. St. Louis, Mo.



VERY GENEROUS
BY WALTER WELLMAN
"I'm generous as I can be,"
Said pretty Little Nan.
"I've eaten salmon till I'm filled,
Now you can eat the can."

Making Christian Unity Practical

AS A RESULT of a number of conferences, both among the ministers and the laity of several denominans, concerning the institution of restructive activities among the rening soldiers, a popular movement now on foot for the opening of social vice houses in various parts of the y of Philadelphia, through the coeration of churches.

It is admitted by the pastors of the ferent Protestant denominations that e question of dealing with the men o have been in camps at home or road is a serious and difficult one beuse of the new and very liberal ideas ich they have acquired as a result of eir military life and the radical breakg away from old conventionalities and ditions.

Most of the churches have offered to operate in the interest of the boys and establish under church auspices welluipped social centers, where the physl as well as the moral good of the men n be promoted. In keeping with the erality of the young war heroes, the urches have agreed to forget denomational lines to accomplish a common od, and the fine distinctions of theogical differences will be overlooked in effort to bring the boys under proper ligious influences.

What seems to be the first practical sult of the new movement in Philadelia is taking form in the establishment a large social settlement "on the ll," the neighborhood between Market reet and Girard Avenue and Broad reet and the Schuylkill River. The oneer in the movement is Rev. William . Berg, pastor of the Central-Congreational Church, Eighteenth and Green reets, who some weeks ago asked the operation of the ten "churches on the ll," comprising St. Matthew's Lueran, Central Congregational, Fifth aptist, St. Matthias's Episcopal, Cenal North Broad Street Presbyterian, rinity Methodist, First Moravian and hrist Memorial, all of which agreed to elp in the new project.

The "churches on the hill" have for hirty years been affiliated in a friendly ay for the uplift of the moving population of the district, and the pastors ledged their efforts to the establishent of a service house in which they ould all combine for the care of the reurning soldiers. It was agreed that ecause of the enormous expense reuired to erect a building it would be necessary at first to use one of the churches for the desired center, and Olivet Covenant Presbyterian Church, Twenty-second and Mount Vernon Streets, was chosen as the most convenient location.

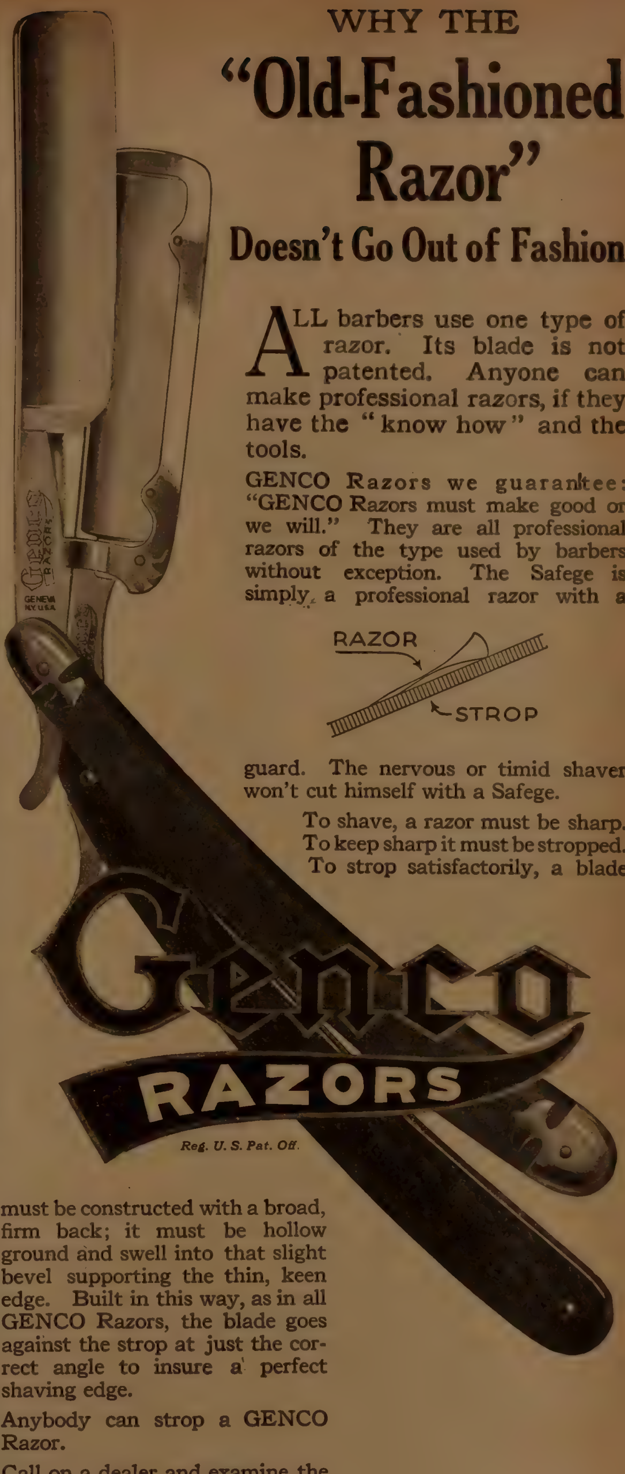
The new service house, which will soon be in course of operation, will be in the center of a neighborhood where such an institution is badly needed. It is crowded with boarding and rooming houses, and the churches have little opportunity of getting or keeping in touch with the transient population. According to Dr. Berg, who has made a careful survey of the district, the young people, many of them coming from outside the city, often live in squalid quarters where they have no way of entertaining, and their hours of recreation are consequently spent on the streets or in some cheap house of amusement, saloon or club.

The new settlement will be equipped in the most modern manner and will be so arranged that there will be ample room for the entertainment of women. It will be under joint direction of the "churches on the hill," which will pledge the necessary funds for the opening expenses.

◆

A Historic Spot in France

IN THE little city of Nevers, which boasts a pretty and modern municipal opera house and an ancient cathedral of imposing spire and nave, there stands snugly sheltered in a narrow street, crowded with traffic, a quaint Protestant chapel. The parishioners are the descendants of those Huguenots who met their death at the instigation of the Medici. The history of these events is familiar to most readers and especially to those who know the one historical novel Balzac wrote—"Catherine de Medici." As a fact, the first signals for the St. Bartholomew massacre were sent forth from this area surrounding Nevers. In addition there is also in the city an old Masonic building of the same period, afterward used as a torture chamber. As an enduring memory and labor of love, the Masonic soldiers of the Allies in this area, with the permission of the parishioners, have arranged to place stained-glass windows in the ten openings of the little church. Five thousand francs have already been subscribed for this purpose. PERCY WEADON.



WHY THE
"Old-Fashioned Razor"
Doesn't Go Out of Fashion

ALL barbers use one type of razor. Its blade is not patented. Anyone can make professional razors, if they have the "know how" and the tools.

GENCO Razors we guarantee: "GENCO Razors must make good or we will." They are all professional razors of the type used by barbers without exception. The Safege is simply a professional razor with a guard. The nervous or timid shaver won't cut himself with a Safege.

To shave, a razor must be sharp. To keep sharp it must be stropped. To strop satisfactorily, a blade must be constructed with a broad, firm back; it must be hollow ground and swell into that slight bevel supporting the thin, keen edge. Built in this way, as in all GENCO Razors, the blade goes against the strop at just the correct angle to insure a perfect shaving edge.

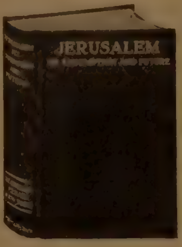
Anybody can strop a GENCO Razor.

Call on a dealer and examine the famous GENCO edge. This edge is on a professional blade that lasts as long as the handle.

Geneva Cutlery Corporation
806 Gates Avenue Geneva, N. Y.
Largest Exclusive Manufacturers of High Grade Razors in the World

“JERUSALEM— ITS REDEMPTION AND FUTURE”

IT IS only now that the real story of the Redemption of Jerusalem can be told, and it is that story which the Christian Herald presents in the book entitled “Jerusalem—Its Redemption and Future.” It tells the story of conditions in the Holy City before the War. In vivid detail it relates the experiences of the people during the years of the War itself up to the present time.



Like the Unfolding of a Vast Drama

THE book reads like the unfolding of a vast drama, one of the grandest ever known. Mme. Ben Yehudah, a talented native author, tells of the sufferings and the persecutions of her people; how they were beaten, plundered, exiled and martyrized; how they found refuge in cellars and caves; and how even the Turkish abuses were outdone by the brutality of the Germans. In a wonderful chapter she tells of the sudden liberation. On the eve of Hanucca, the anniversary of the “Feast of Lights” (commemorative of the first great Deliverance of the Israelites) while all were praying and dreading lest they should not live to see the light of another day, there was a sudden burst of jubilation from men and women who ran in from outside the city walls, shouting: “Hosanna! Hosanna! The English have come! We are saved!” Out they swarmed, like rats from their holes. The troops were marching in with General Allenby at their head, and the people, old and young, were weeping, shouting and singing for joy. It is a story from the pen of this gifted woman which will thrill the reader at the thought of God’s wonderful manifestation in behalf of his ancient people.

But, as the book shows, the redemption is not confined to Palestine, but includes all the Bible lands: Syria, Armenia, Arabia, Mesopotamia, the old country of the patriarchs, and even the “Eden Land”—the cradle of the human race.

The Garden of the World

PROF. EDGAR J. BANKS, one of the contributors, tells of the great changes in the Eden country, which are destined to make it literally the “garden of the world.” Lieutenant Colonel J. S. Wardlaw Milne, of the British service, who has traveled all over Mesopotamia, tells how Germany’s great scheme of creating an Eastern empire in the Bible lands was thwarted, and the Berlin-to-Bagdad project brought to sudden failure. Professor Kemper-Fullerton, a most charming writer, has a wonderful story of events in Jerusalem up to a few months before capitulation. It reads like a romance, yet is reality itself. His story of the Christmas Eve, spent by a company of American and British exiles before sailing, is delightfully told. Professor George L. Robinson, who has personally visited twenty-five out of the thirty-four Jewish agricultural colonies in Palestine, including also Edom and Mount Seir, tells of the wonderful development in all of these places, and foreshadows the brilliant agricultural future of the entire Holy Land, under Allied protection, in the near future.

Fulfilment of Divine Promise

By Bible readers generally, and especially by all who believe in the fulfilment of the divine promise for the restoration of God’s people to their ancient land “in the latter days,” the book will be greatly prized. It is a volume which should be in the possession of every Christian man and woman in America, as it is splendidly illuminative of the fulfilment of God’s pledge which is being brought about in a remarkable way in our lifetime. We have only hinted at a few of its attractive features. The book is illustrated with photographs by the contributors, all of which are of especial interest. We consider it on the whole the most timely book the Christian Herald has issued in many years.

Palestine to Be Preserved

MR. JOHN H. FINLEY, of the American Red Cross Commission in Palestine, has made a very enlightening statement with respect to the program for the future of the Holy Land. In that statement, which is given in this book, Dr. Finley explains that his suggestions as to Palestine are:—

> 1. That Palestine, now redeemed and held in trust by western civilization, be not entrusted to any single nation, race or creed, but be preserved by an international agreement and by international guarantees as a monument to the civilization of the Occident.
>
> 2. That Palestine, because of its relation to modern civilization, is too precious a conquest to leave to future risks.

In the Holy Land at present affairs are administered by a remarkable group of scholarly, conscientious, able men. General Allenby has picked for this work at the outset men of whom Christianity may be proud. Dr. Finley tells of an impressive meeting with the Grand Mufti of Jerusalem, one of the most interesting religious personalities in the world today. This is what he said to Dr. Finley:

> “No one can dispute the fact known to God and confirmed by your noble history, oh citizens of America, that out of compassion and charity He created you, to do good to humanity, and has through you always accomplished good work, keeping you innocent of all evil doing.
>
> “On behalf of these in general, and of Moslems in particular, I burn incense on the altars of gratitude, and pray the great God to make you a good reward, defend you from every evil, make your benevolent undertakings successful and hasten the days of peace which we all await impatiently.”

SPECIAL OFFERS

We will send a copy of “Jerusalem—Its Redemption and Future,” postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for One Year, for.... $3.00

“Jerusalem--Its Redemption and Future,” separately, $1.00 per copy postpaid

We will send a copy of “Jerusalem—Its Redemption and Future,” postpaid, to Christian Herald subscribers, as a reward for sending us ONE NEW yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $2.50.

The Christian Herald, 1699 Bible House, New York, N.Y.

Israel Warned Against Comprom

International Sunday School Lesson for March 23

Joshua 23 : 1 to 24 : 28

Dangerous Company

By Rev. George D. Allison, Ph.D.

ONE by one the great leaders of mankind pass on, but God’s work goes forward still. Already we have come to Joshua’s last advice to the people whom he had shepherded so faithfully. When we begin to read we are reminded of the last words of other men who have been considered influential in the affairs of nations. We are reminded of Washington’s Farewell Address, and as we see the burden of Joshua’s warnings we are reminded of what the Father of his Country said to us about entangling alliances. In the unsettled conditions of the ancient world, it was as important for the Hebrew nation to avoid the contaminations of idolatry and polytheism as it was for the United States at the outset of her career to avoid dealings with monarchies and autocracies. The children of Israel were a people with a great spiritual mission and a unique religious program, and the affiliations of their neighbors were such as to threaten to corrupt the religion of Jehovah again and again in history. Just so America remained aloof and separate from the discordant and rival powers until now the time has come for universal democracy and open diplomacy, when the League of Nations can adopt America’s policies as their own.

The Perils of Success

The first thing we note in Joshua’s speech to the chieftains and elders of Israel is the emphasis on the perils of success! He seemed to feel that Israel well-established was more likely to compromise with Canaanitish idolatry and superstition than Israel embattled. And he was right. The very bitterness of the struggle had prevented intercourse, and the ideals of a desperate enemy are not often attractive to any one. But now with the coming of peace the Jews were coming into increasingly close relations with the heathenish remnants who survived the conquest. Joshua’s pronouncement recalls to us moderns the edict of General Foch against “fraternization” of the Allied soldiers with the German enemies during the armistice.

Just so the Christian who is successful in the things of this world is led into many associations that are capable of contaminating his life. There are perils of poverty of course, but they are more apparent and more threatening in aspect than the perils of riches. A rich Christian is tempted to steal in ways that are far more subtle than any the poor man meets. The poor Christian recoils from the temptation—“Should such a man as I steal?” The rich man sees dazzling opportunities to gain big sums in ways that Christ would classify under breaches of the eighth commandment. But his associates tell him they are entirely “within the law.”

In a similar way many a disciple of Jesus resists the influences for evil that are found in ordinary social life, but when he becomes socially successful and mingles with “high society” he begins to compromise on his convictions. This has been proved frequently in the case of drinking and gambling alike. Men, and women too, who never felt tempted to drink the intoxicants used by the poor felt constrained to partake of the fine wines served at the tables of the newly rich associates whom success had brought them. Men, and women too, who would never have gambled at cards in the days of their struggle for a living, felt it necessary “for the sake of their social position” to play bridge-whist for money in the smart set whose prestige they coveted.

“A Snare and a Trap, and a Scourge and Thorns”

These are vivid and varied metaphors that Joshua uses in pointing out the dangers of compromising with the people of the land. They sound like the virile speech of a real orator addressing a responsive audience. They sui subject, for no one ever deliber chooses bad company any more the wild bird seeks the snare of fowler. We drift into bad compar planlessly for the most part as the puts his head in the noose. We go the bait of gaiety or excitement in trap of evil influence, like the silly m after the cheese. Forewarned shoul forearmed, and the object of ins tion is to make men realize the da “Take good heed to yourselves Joshua’s wise counsel. “Watch step” is the Y. M. C. A. paraph of it on an illustrated poster in on the buildings frequented by boys young men, showing some of the gerous associations of the neigh hood. Our Golden Text is one of most striking instances of the supe ity of the Revised Version in conve Paul’s thought to us. “Evil com ionships corrupt good morals” is m forceful and more accurate than “ communications corrupt good m ners,” though both are true.

No Compromise

Whatever else a Christian is, h not a compromiser. He is a man thoroughgoing principles, and those principles of Jesus. In one of Ro velt’s farewell messages to the yo people of America, the great pat said, “Never be neutral between ri and wrong.” But right and wrong of come to us, not as abstract princip but embodied in the ideals and cond of different groups of men or wom The tendency of human nature is adapt one’s self to his company—“wl in Rome do as the Romans do.” D ing the whole history of Israel there a counter-current toward the Baal-w ship of the Canaanites. In the la period there was a powerful drift tow Hellenism. But the prophets who e bodied the best idealism of the Hebre always steadfastly resisted this comp mising propaganda.

Just so St. Paul, writing to Chr tians in Rome, the center of pag worldliness: “Be not conformed acco ing to this world, but be ye transform by the renewing of your mind.” Eve Christian a non-conformist! But takes courage to stand out against t seductive influences of environme the highest kind of moral courage. T is why we find Joshua passing on watchword given him by Moses at t beginning of his leadership in Isra “Therefore be ye very courageous Courageous to fight a cruel foe? longer was that necessary: courageo “to keep and to do all that is writt in the law.” Moral courage, which still the chief need of the young Chri tian convert and the chief requisite a statesman or a ruler of a nation.

Christianity’s Higher Code

We cannot leave this lesson witho remembering the contrast between th primitive Israelitish duty to suppre and ignore the inferior clans of the da and their ideas, and the great missio ary principle in Christianity which mo ifies all these truths and puts them on positive instead of a negative basis. Christian nation has the duty, now re ognized in the League of Nations, enlighten and uplift the weaker an backward races. One of the cardina principles in the Constitution of th League calls for the protection of th primitive peoples from slavery an drink, two evils which we found har enough to suppress in our own fair land

So it must be in the individual Chris tian life. It is not enough to be rigor ously uncompromising and aloof. It necessary also to go often into the mids of bad company with the definite pur pose, avowed to Christ alone, of trans forming it with the leaven of his Way As the missionary goes to idolatrou people not to be misled but to uplif others, so will the stay-at-home be liever be uncontented by a life that not overcome of evil, and will endeavo to overcome evil with good.

leligion and the League of Nations

Continued from page 298

fail to see what all men ought to seen long ago: armed peace is an nination. Universal conscription in of peace is a degradation. Swollen aments are a disgrace and menace. ation in arms, except when under ck, is a monstrosity. Exploiting ward peoples is a sin against Al- hty God. Scrambling for markets zones of influence is a demoralizing brutalizing game. A strutting pa- tism is anti-Christian. A selfish and ping nationalism is heathenish. An tiable greed for privilege and power he expense of others is of the devil. /e must exorcise this old spirit of d and domination. We must create hinery which will save us from nging again into the abyss. We st league the nations together. Po- al wisdom says so, the religious con- nce says so, common sense says so. hout a League of Nations we are osed to a recurrence of the same mity which has recently darkened devastated the world. Nay, the t war—if there be a next war—will ar worse than the last. Mankind is in possession of instruments by ch it can extinguish the light of hope. ilization has the apparatus in its d by which it can commit suicide. ry man who is awake to the situa- which now confronts us is saying his heart, "What shall we do to be ed?" The answer today is the an- which Simon Peter gave in the et of Jerusalem 1900 years ago: epent, and believe in Jesus Christ. ere is none other name under heaven en among men whereby we must be ed." Which being interpreted in the ech of our day means, "Change your nd. Give up your old ideas, your old als. Start out now in a new direc- n. Act on the principles which Jesus Nazareth has taught. Work them in your individual and collective Apply them to the problems of ur city and your nation and the whole rld, for it is only by the application of these principles of brotherliness and good-will, of unselfishness and willingness to serve, of readiness to cooperate and bear one another's burdens, and to make heavy sacrifices for the common good, that it is possible for humanity to escape its manifold distresses, and come into the peace and prosperity which a gracious God wishes his children to enjoy."

THE League of Nations is a political scheme, but the idea which lies at the heart of it is distinctively Christian. All the main things which it aims at are things which a good man can pray for, and which the most enlightened conscience can feel certain that heaven approves. Such a league can be created and maintained only by the spirit which it is the aim of religion to foster in men's hearts. Without the tempers and dispositions which religion builds up, the prosperity of such a league is clearly impossible.

The Church of God, then, has today a great opportunity and an imperative duty. The prophets and priests of organized religion should open their mouths boldly, and hearten the people to support their leaders in the pursuit of this glorious quest. When we move toward the political organization of the world, we are moving in the direction which the God of history has unmistakably indicated. We have bound individuals and cities and commonwealths together for the glory of God and the welfare of mankind, and now the hour has arrived when, for the sake of all the generations yet unborn, we are to try to bind together, by bonds which shall never be severed, all the nations of the whole earth. Who could deny that this would be an advanced step along the ascending and difficult way which it is ordained that humanity shall travel? Who could doubt that the political federation of the world would mark a new stage in the realization of the plan of God, who has created us, and who is the loving Father of us all?

The Sleeve Editions in China

EV. HENRY G. C. HALLOCK, Ph.D., for twenty-two years a ssionary in China, who had already mpleted the first Concordance of the inese Bible, has set about the eparation of a Brief Dictionary of e Chinese Bible, an Abridged Chinese ncordance and a Chinese Topical xt-Book. He is calling them "The ace Three," in grateful commemora- n of the peace which God has sent nations. These books are to be leeve Editions," about the size of a tle New Testament, with soft cloth vers and printed on thin paper, with 400 or 500 pages each. The Sleeve Dictionary of the Chinese Bible will give information in brief form on all subjects and names found in larger dictionaries of the Bible. The Sleeve Concordance will give references to the most important passages of Scripture carefully selected from Dr. Hallock's large three-volume Concordance. The Sleeve Topical Text-Book will give principal texts relating to subjects in the Holy Scriptures. These little books are "for the journey," and will be so inexpensive that the poorest can afford them.

Free Official "Health Almanac"

RECONSTRUCT yourself first.

No use trying to reconstruct the nation unless you have sound human material to build with.

Is your health good? If so, is it properly safeguarded? Are you getting enough fresh air and exercise? Do you drink pure water? Do you know how disease is communicated and how to avoid it?

These and a host of other questions that you cannot afford to neglect are brought forcibly to your attention by that unique official publication, the "HEALTH ALMANAC" of the United States Public Health Service. In addition to all of the usual data contained in an almanac, it contains health hints for every month of the year. It is a booklet of forty-three pages, with pictures.

To get your copy, use the attached coupon and enclose a two-cent stamp for return postage. Write your name and address plainly.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD INFORMATION BUREAU
Frederic J. Haskin, Director,
Washington, D. C.

Enclosed find two-cent stamp, for which you will please send me, entirely free, the HEALTH ALMANAC.

Name……………………………………………………

Street Address……………………………………………

City………………………………State……………………

Just Dip the Brush

YOU'D never believe, unless you have used Kyanize Varnishes and Enamels, that so much satisfaction could come with so little effort.

Kyanize
KY-AN-IZE

SANITARY FLOOR ENAMEL

Ends the problem of old painted floors. This master Kyanize Product goes on to your battered or old soft wood floor with the greatest ease; dries overnight with a waterproof gloss that stands repeated washings without dimming. Will not stick to the furniture. Made in eight attractive fadeproof colors.

Write for our beautifully illustrated booklet "The Inviting Home" - - IT'S FREE.

BOSTON VARNISH COMPANY
83 Everett Station
BOSTON, U. S. A.

Don't Wear a Truss

Brooks' Appliance, the modern scientific invention, the wonderful new discovery that relieves rupture, will be sent on trial. No obnoxious springs or pads.

MR. C. E. BROOKS

Brooks' Rupture Appliance

Has automatic Air Cushions. Binds and draws the broken parts together as you would a broken limb. No salves. No lies. Durable, cheap. Sent on trial to prove it. Protected by U. S. patents. Catalog and measure blanks mailed free. Send name and address today.

C. E. BROOKS, 498 State St., Marshall, Mich.

6%

PAID FOR 24 YEARS

In good times and bad, in peace, and in War, for 24 years we have paid 6% on Two-Year Time Certificates and 5% on Certificates payable on demand. Interest checks are mailed semi-annually.

If you have as little as $25 to invest, you will be interested in our Booklet, "6% and Safety," giving full particulars about this old and tried institution.

WRITE FOR IT

The Calvert Mortgage Company
863 Calvert Building, Baltimore, Md.

See why it's so durable

If you could see the reinforcement of this sock, under a magnifying glass, you would understand why it outwears two ordinary socks. The heel and the toe, have four plies of the strongest, wear-resisting yarn that can be made. And the whole sole and high splice of heel have two plies of this special process reinforcement. With this great durability has a beautiful, soft, silken finish, that makes it a very dressy sock. That's what you want—a long wear sock that looks well. Try this famous Iron-Clad hose—only 50 cents a pair. If you don't know of an Iron-Clad dealer nearby, order from us; colors; black, dark gray, white, palm beach, cordovan brown. Sizes 9 to 11½.

Iron Clad number 398

Cooper Wells & Co., 222 Vine St., St. Joseph, Mich.

LIQUID VENEER
REGISTERED U. S. PATENT OFFICE MAKES OLD THINGS NEW WOODWORK PIANOS FURNITURE CARRIAGES, AUTOMOBILES, BICYCLES
APPLIED WITH A CLOTH
NOT A VARNISH BUT A SURFACE FOOD WONDERFUL FOR DUSTING BUFFALO SPECIALTY CO.

Vapo-Cresolene
USED WHILE YOU SLEEP
Established 1879
The Inhalation Treatment for Whooping-Cough, Spasmodic Croup, Colds, Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, Coughs.

Simple, safe and effective, avoiding internal drugs.

Vaporized Cresolene relieves the paroxysms of Whooping-Cough and Spasmodic Croup at once; it nips the common cold before it has a chance of developing into something worse, and experience shows that a neglected cold is a dangerous cold.

Mrs. Ballington Booth says: "No family, where there are young children, should be without this lamp."

The air carrying the antiseptic vapor, inhaled with every breath, makes breathing easy and relieves the congestion, assuring restful nights.

It is called a boon by Asthma sufferers.

For the bronchial complications of Scarlet Fever and Measles, and as an aid in the treatment of Diphtheria, Cresolene is valuable on account of its powerful germicidal qualities.

It is a protection to those exposed.

Cresolene's best recommendation is its 39 years of successful use.

Sold by Druggists. Send for descriptive booklet. Try Cresolene Antiseptic Throat Tablets for the irritated throat, composed of slippery elm bark, licorice, sugar and Cresolene. They can't harm you. Of your druggist or from us, 10c. in stamps

THE VAPO-CRESOLENE CO., 62 Cortlandt St., New York
or Leeming-Miles Building, Montreal, Canada

MADE TO YOUR ORDER $1.85 SEND NO MONEY

To Prove Our Fine Quality we offer these fine pants for dress or business, many handsome styles, genuine through and through worsted goods, beautiful narrow weave, smooth silky finish, guaranteed for 2 years solid wear and satisfaction and regular $5.00 value or MONEY BACK. These stylish $5.00 pants, while they last, only one pair to any customer, by prepaid express, for only $1.85

Cash Profits You can earn a lot of extra money by sending orders for your relatives and neighbors. Young Grant Case made big money first week and a good income his first year. Get his own book about it Free—also fine tailor book, cloth samples and simple directions. All goes to you Free with first letter. Just send us your name—TODAY.

CHICAGO TAILORS ASS'N.
Dept. J548, 515 S. Franklin St., Chicago

We Pay Express
$1.85 Buys $5.00 Value

TYPEWRITER SENSATION $3 OR $4 monthly buys a Beautifully Reconstructed Latest-Model Visible Typewriter with back-spacer, decimal tabulator, two-color ribbon, etc. Every late style feature and modern operating convenience. Perfect appearance, perfect action and absolute dependability. Sent anywhere on approval. Catalog and special price FREE.
Harry A. Smith [374], 218 North Wells Street, Chicago, Ill.

FREE THIS GUARANTEED 14K GOLD FOUNTAIN PEN
For selling 25 Pkgs. Sachet Perfume. H. Conklin sold box in 2 hrs. Premium List Free Pen Offer and Sample Pkg. 10c. Write at once.
Springfield Perfume Co., Dept. 20, Springfield, Mass.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 85
THE C. S. BELL CO., Est. 1858, Hillsboro, Ohio

PATENTS Send sketch or model for preliminary examination. Booklet free. Highest references. Best results. Promptness assured. Watson E. Coleman, Patent Lawyer, 624 F St., Washington, D. C.

Young People's Topics for March 23

The Epworth League on a War Footing

Epworth League Topic. Heb. 13:1, 2, 16; I Pet. 4:9, 10; Matt. 7:12

A NATION is on a war footing when every element of its population is ready for service anywhere, when every fighting man is armed and equipped, when every factory, every farm, every line of transportation is listed and its relation to the task outlined, when the whole nation is made a single unit, driving toward the goal of victory, when all individual preference, all single initiative is submerged in the one task.

The League is fighting in a great war. It seeks to make Christ victor in the hearts of men. When it is on a war basis no one will ask why. When a plan is decided upon no one will say, "I won't do it that way." But each will do his task in the appointed way, because he sees through to the end and trusts his leaders. It is on a war basis when its members are fully armed and equipped. The armor of a Christian is well known, but it must be worn by one who loves truth, and who will do right at any cost. A League is on a war basis when there are no idle corners in its field, no idle hands, no idle minutes. It is not easy to get a nation on a war basis; it took England nearly two years and America more than one. It means sacrifice, selflessness, willingness to be lost in the mass, to forget personal ambition, to bury old animosities, to strike hands with every cause and person fighting for the same end. War is intense action directed remorselessly to one end. When an army is on a war basis it is ready to go over the top, to go through to the end, and nothing matters but victory. That spirit will put a League on a war footing, nothing short of it will.

The Art of Building Character

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topics. I Cor. 3:10-17

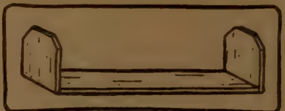
WE BUILD ourselves a house at our pleasure, we build character whether we will or not. But we must choose the materials of our building in either case. There is a type of character which the world recognizes as worthy of confidence. The man who has it finds no difficulty in securing employment. Opportunities seek him. This character is not born in a man; it is not bestowed on him; it is built day by day from childhood to maturity. It is founded on Jesus Christ, or on his teachings; it is built of truth, of sincerity, of enthusiasm for good, of hatred to evil, of faith, of sympathy, of that dependability that comes from the honest doing of the task whatever it may be, whether distasteful or not. The boy who slights his algebra, who slips through his French, who skims his science, may get marks, but his character will be marred. When the position opens which demands reliability, courage, and resource, he will stand aside for the fellow who did honest work. Birth, environment, friends, physical powers, all are materials in the building of character. And there is one sure plan, the plan of life laid down by the Saviour and the apostles, the plan of the Bible. There are no false specifications there, no weak members. A life built according to that plan will meet the storms and stresses of the world unshaken, it will stand ever more sturdily through the years, for character laid up with the cement of truth weathers all gales.

Frank's Book-Rack

FRANK'S seat at school was very near to his teacher's desk, and he often noticed that the line of books on his teacher's desk had a way of falling over because they were merely held together by paperweights at each end of the row.

"She ought to have a little book-rack," Frank said to himself one day when he saw the heavy dictionary push one of the paperweights away and the entire row topple over.

That afternoon, after school, he set about making a book-rack. This is how he did it: he took a plain piece of board from an old wooden box and sawed it down to measure 4 x 15 inches. Then he cut two smaller pieces, 4 x 5 inches, cutting the corners off one end of each of these pieces, and then nailed one piece at either end of the long piece.



As he happened to have some brown paint on hand, he used that on the rack, although any other dark paint or stain would serve the same purpose.

"What a comfort that will be!" said Frank's teacher as he gave her the pretty little book-rack, and Frank wondered why he hadn't thought of making one for her before.

LAURA A. KIRKMAN.

For the Girl Who Can Sew

THE girl who can do plain overhand stitching can make for her mother a new kind of window polisher which will be a great help at house-cleaning time. This is how she can make it:

Cut a piece of old flannel 18 x 18 inches square and hem it all around, as one would hem a table napkin.

Then put a man's large glove (right hand) on another piece of flannel and cut with scissors all around the glove, going between the fingers and thumb and around the wrist.

Now take the large flannel outline of a hand and pin it in the center of the hemmed square of flannel. Sew it to the square, around the edges, with overhand stitches, leaving only the wrist open.

When this is done, mother will be able to slip her hand into the flannel glove and polish her windows with the comfortable feeling that the cloth beneath her hand will not wrinkle up, as it does ordinarily.

L. A. K.

* * *

WE appreciate your paper and the work you are doing in the interest of Christianity and humanity. We believe your paper is one of the great blessings of the world today.

MR. AND MRS. W. H. ROGERS.
Rathdrum, Idaho.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Graham C. Patterson, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Edward S. Babcox, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.50 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

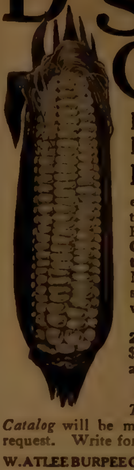
CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, January 25, 1909, as Second-class Matter under Act of March 3, 1879
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa



Burpee's Seeds Grow
Five of the Fine
Fordhook Vegetab
For 25c We will n one pac each of the following Ve table Seeds: Beet, Cro Egyptian Carrot, Chanter Corn, Golden Bantam L tuce, Wayahead Toma Matchless. If purcha separately this collecti would cost 50 cents.
Complete collection 25c. Five collections $1.00 mailed to differe addresses, if so ordered.
BURPEE'S ANNUAL
The Leading American Se Catalog will be mailed to you free up request. Write for your copy today.
W. ATLEE BURPEE CO., Seed Growers, Philad

A WOMAN FLORIST
4 Hardy Everblooming Roses On their own roots ALL WILL BLOOM THIS SUMMER 25
Sent to any address post-paid: guaranteed to reach you in good growing conditio
GEM ROSE COLLECTION
Melody, Pure Yellow.
Warrior, Blood Red.
Ophelia, Salmon Flesh.
Aurora, Bright Pink.
SPECIAL BARGAINS
4 Carnations, the "Divine Flower," all colors, 25c
3 Choice Ferns, - - 25c
5 Chrysanthemums, 25c.
5 Beautiful Coleus, - 25c.
3 Flowering Cannas, 25c.
3 Choice Dahlias, - 25c.
3 Choice Hardy Iris, 25c.
8 Lovely Gladioli. - - - - - 25c.
8 Superb Pansy Plants. - - - - 25c.
10 Pkts. Flower Seeds, all different, 25c.
Any Five Collections for One Dollar, Post-Paid. Guarantee satisfaction.
Once a customer, always one. Catalog Free.
Miss ELLA V. BAINES, Box 62, Springfield, Ohio

AN EASY WAY TO MAKE MONEY Don't t content t plod alon on a small salary. Be independent. Go in the tire re pairing business. One man says "I made big money th first day." Others average very high a month. Ver little capital needed. Jobs plentiful. Every motorist possible customer. No experience needed. We teach yo

SHALER Tire Repair Outfi
Improved Wrapped Tread Method Used by Tire Manufacturers
Does as good work as the big high priced vulcanizing outfits. A boy can use it. It's the only vulcanizer that has Automatic Heat Control, and can't undercure or overcure a tire. Requires no watching or regulating.
FREE Book
"How to Open a Tire Repair Shop." It tells how to make big money. Don't delay. Write quick.
C. A. SHALER CO.
2350 Fourth St. Waupun, Wisconsin

FACTORY-TO-RIDER
SAVES YOU MONEY
Buy direct and save $10 to $20 on a bicycle. RANGER BICYCLES now come in 44 styles, colors and sizes. Greatly improved; prices reduced. Other reliable models also. WE DELIVER FREE to you on approval and 30 days trial and riding test.
Our big FREE catalog shows everything new in bicycles and sundries. Write for it.
TIRES, lamps, wheels, parts and supplies at half usual prices.
Do not buy a bicycle, tires, or sundries until you get our wonderful new offers, low prices and liberal terms. A postal brings everything.
Ranger Electric Lighted Motorbike
MEAD CYCLE COMPANY Dept. G-71 Chicago

Chance of a Life Time to make Big money. Nothing like it on the market. Makes BLUE Monday ROSY. Not sold in stores. Exclusive territory for proper parties; write for free samples.
T. H. SNYDER & CO.,
10 EAST THIRD ST., CINCINNATI, O.

FREE · Lintex COLLA REVERSIBLE
We will send FREE starch-finished Lintex collar so you can prove comfort and economy State size wanted
REVERSIBLE COLLAR CO., Dept. T Boston, Mass.

my Ships for Commercial Busi- Chairman Edwin H. Hurley of United States Shipping Board on uary 17 asked for the release by the Department of 500.000 tons of ing which was to be rushed to itic seaports, for use on different routes, in the carrying of some ,000,000 worth of export cargoes up for lack of ships. The inability ip this merchandise was causing ht embargoes against new produc- and increasing unemployment.

18 Shipbuilding. Allied and neu- shipyards in 1918 launched 1866 of a total tonnage of 5,447,444, 62 cent. above the world production 13.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES Quickly Relieve
oughing, Hoarseness, Sore Throat

For seventy years these tablets have been ithfully serving speakers, lecturers, vocal-s and thousands of others, in quickly sing sore throat, hacking cough, loss of ice, bronchial and asthmatic troubles evalent in winter.

Not a confection, but a genuine remedy. ontain no opiates or other harmful ingredi-ts, hence are especially safe for children. small piece relieves a sore throat.

our sizes, 15c, 35c, 75c & $1.25. At all druggists.
John I. Brown & Son, Boston, Mass.
Agents for Continent of America:
arold F. Ritchie & Co., Inc., New York—Toronto

Safe Handy Dependable

All Your Garden Tools in One

Ideal for small gardens and truck patches. With its several tools—which are quickly interchanged—you can plow, open furrows, cover them, cultivate and hoe. The large wheel and "double curve"—which is an exclusive feature—elevate the draft and make the easier to operate than any other hand tool on the market. Readily adjusted for adults or children—just the thing for families where everyone helps in the garden. Your hardware dealer carries them and you will be surprised how reasonable they are in price.

Leader Garden Plow

THE LEADER PLOW COMPANY
Staunton, Va.

plive er sent equest

now For Yourself

Experience always was the best teacher, and it is best to learn by experience and prove the power of

SCOTT'S EMULSION

to build up strength, raise the blood-quality and retrieve lost weight. It is not by accident that Scott's has been endorsed and recommended by physicians almost everywhere. Scott's contributes to robustness.

The strengthening virtues of Scott's are felt in every avenue of health.

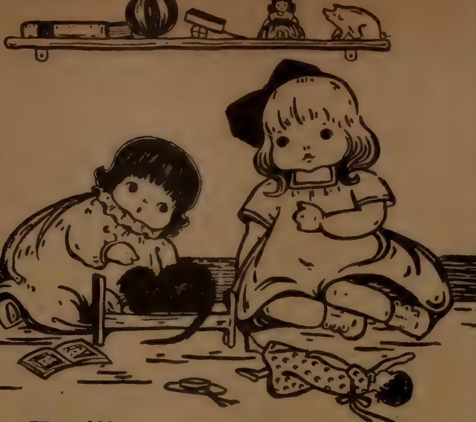
Scott & Bowne, Bloomfield, N.J. 18-35



Our·Fluff's·a·gentle·pussy·cat
But·when·we·pat·her·fur
We·hear·a·growly·lion·noise
Deep·down·inside·of·her!

·Elizabeth·FitzHugh·

The Christian Herald Prayer League

All Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

"AND they said, Go to, let us build us a city and a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven." And thus the children of men with bricks for stone and slime for mortar sought to mount from their sordid earth to the glorious abode above. But God met their presumption with his omnipotence, and the building of the heaven-reaching tower of mud and bricks ended amid a confusion of tongues.

Thus is it always when men seek through worldly means to find out God. Every road to God but one ends in confusion. Jesus said, "I am the way." "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name." We need no craft of hand or skill of mind to reach heaven and the haven of our souls. We need only humble faith and sincere acceptance of the truth of God. Having this, we shall not be confounded as we reach up to God, for the language of the faithful heart is universal.

K. B. asks prayer for divine blessing on a new line of work which seems to have providentially opened up.

A prisoner asks the prayers of God's people that if it be the Lord's will he may be delivered from his confinement and reunited with his wife.

Two members of the League—Miss A. J. C. and Mrs. H. E. W.—make the same request in almost the same words. Each asks that a burden which she has been carrying for a long time, and which is known only to her and God, may be lifted.

W. A. C. and J. B. H. ask prayer that the influenza plague may be stayed.

Mrs. O. T. asks prayer for what is now on many a mother's heart—that her son may find his place in the new adjustment of industry that will follow the return of our two million boys from their job in Europe.

Seventy-seven requests have been received for prayer for bodily healing.

Sixteen ask prayer for mental strength or restoration for themselves or friends.

Six ask prayer that friends or relatives may be delivered from the liquor habit.

Twenty-six ask prayer for spiritual blessing for themselves or others.

Nine wives ask prayer for the conversion of husbands; nine parents, for conversion of sons; three, of daughters; three persons ask prayer for the conversion of brothers; seven, for conversion of friends; and one for conversion of self.

Eight ask prayer for the restoration or improvement of sight; twelve, for restoration or improvement of hearing.

Sixteen ask prayer for divine guidance in financial troubles.

Ten ask prayers for the restoration of friendships or broken homes.

Fifteen ask prayers for the granting of various desires and needs.

Prayer is requested for revivals and reform in Brigham, Utah; Big Rapids, Mich. (that state may continue dry); Lockport, N. Y. (that an institution may be filled with the Holy Spirit); Hymera, Ind.; Van Etten, N. Y.; East Cayuta, N. Y.; Goldston, N. C.; Herrick, Ill.; Columbiaville, Mich.; Collins, Ind.; Akron, Ohio; North Leverett, Mass. (that an evangelist may find means to carry on his work); Melrose, Wis.

Acknowledgments of answered prayers have been received from Mrs. A. W., Brigham, Utah; N. S., Sanger, Calif.; E. B., Cranbury, N. J.; M. M., Gould Station, Que.; A. F. H., Galva, Ill.; Mrs. C. A. McF., Lacy, S. D.; Mrs. F. K., Sugar Grove, Ill.; Mrs. S. E. R., Hampden Sidney, Va.; Mrs. W. E. G., San Francisco, Calif.; E. M. E., Decatur, Ill.; J. W. K., Harlan, Ia.; Mrs. J. H., Fayette, Mo.; M. A. B., Hale, Mo.; M. H. G., Pulaski, Tenn.; A. R. N., Philadelphia, Pa.; X. Y. Z., Ballston, N. Y.; A. E., Richmond, Va.; Mrs. M. W., Enid, Okla.; E. L. D., Frederick, Pa.; A. P., Atkinson, Wis.; E. A. T., Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mrs. H. M. S., San Gabriel, Calif.; Mrs. A. L. M., Wausau, Wis.; Mrs. R. F. W., Strong, Me.; M. F., Covington, Ohio; Miss E. P., The Ridge, Ky.

FREE Style Book of Bond Shoes

For Women, Men, Growing Girls, Boys, Youths and Little Gents

Our new Spring catalog is just off the press and pictures and describes our full line of Bond Shoes in 76 of the newest spring models at popular prices.

It shows a line of footwear superior to anything we have offered in previous years. The best styles—the new ideas in stitching and finishing—all the fashions that will be worn through Spring and Summer are here. And every model shown is made for long service and good looks. There is a pair of Bond Shoes that you will want for yourself from the moment you see them. Get this Style Book and see.

X201—Patent leather, four-eyelet, blucher oxford. Two inch heel, light sole. This is one of our popular priced models combining comfort and excellent style. $2.98

Better Shoes for Less Money

Let us show you how to save from $1.00 to $1.50 on your Spring shoes. Bond Shoes are sold direct to you from our factory and offer you wonderful values in Quality, Style and Fit. You cannot afford to spend money for shoes until you have seen the Bond Catalog and compared our prices and styles with others.

Bond Shoes are absolutely guaranteed to satisfy you, or your money refunded. Write today for Free Style Book.

The Bond Shoe Makers
Dept. 143 Cincinnati, O.

WONDERFUL PHONOGRAPH GIVEN TO YOU

The latest improvement—without the horn. The lightest, most durable and compact practical phonograph ever produced. It is beautifully finished, tone arm black japanned, nickel winding crank, accurately constructed, smooth running spring motor, which plays 2 to 3 records at one winding, speed regulator, stop lever and felt covered turn-table. New improved sound box with mica diaphragm, which makes perfect reproductions of all kinds of music—band pieces, talking pieces, instrumental, orchestra, vocal, &c., in a marvelous manner. PLAYS ANY DISC RECORD Up to 7 inches, and plays them properly. This machine is simply wonderful—not to be compared with any other of this kind. Will give you more entertainment than anything you ever owned. Every Machine Regulated and Tested before it leaves the factory and guaranteed in every way. A real phonograph, not a toy, yet small and light enough to be carried to camps, excursions, etc. Gives a clearness and volume of tone not surpassed by most high-priced instruments, and SEND NO MONEY you can obtain it without cost. Just your name, and we will send you 24 of our Art Pictures to dispose of on special offer at 25c each. Send us the $6 you collect and for your trouble we will send this new improved E. D. L. Phonograph and a selection of 6 records, free for your trouble. You can dispose of pictures and earn this great machine in a few hours. E. D. LIFE, 337 W. Madison St. Chicago

Clear Out Rats In 3 Nights

"Rough On Rats" rids your premises of all rats and mice in 3 nights. Change the bait you mix with "Rough On Rats"—that's the secret. Rats won't eat the same food that they know killed others. Varying the bait fools them. Druggists and general stores sell "Rough On Rats"—the most economical, surest exterminator. Write for "Ending Rats and Mice." Mailed free to you.

E. S. WELLS Chemist
DON'T DIE IN THE HOUSE
Jersey City, N. J.

ROUGH ON RATS

Earn Extra Money

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD needs additional representatives to procure renewal subscriptions. Experience not necessary.

A special proposition is ready for those who wish to build up a business of their own.

You can put your whole time on our work—or you can work during spare hours.

Send a postal today for complete information of our special offer to agents.

Agency Department, Christian Herald, Bible House, New York

Ingersoll Radiolite

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

Tells Time in the Dark

11 12 1 2 3 4 5 7 8 9 10
In the Dark
Houses of Parliament London

IN this—the busiest period in the world's history—law-makers, laborers, entire industries—are turning their night time into work time. And because their night time must be measured, millions of people are using the Ingersoll Radiolite. Its hands and numerals are coated with a substance containing real radium and this wonderful watch shines the time on the darkest night as legibly as you see it by day.

The Ingersoll Radiolite glows the time as clearly as the town clock. But, unlike its big brother in the steeple, this watch costs so little that everybody can own it—and it's always with you, handy!

The Midget Wrist Radiolite and the Yankee Radiolite are two efficient low-priced watches that give night and day service the world around.

No matter who you are or what you do, the Radiolite is the most useful watch you can own. For work or play—beneath your pillow—at your bedside—there's no greater convenience than the watch that tells time in the dark. And, remember—

"A genuine Radiolite is always an Ingersoll."

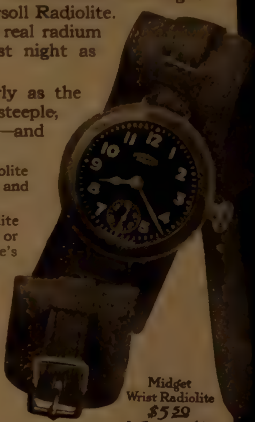
Look for the store with an Ingersoll display.

ROBT. H. INGERSOLL & BRO.
315 Fourth Avenue, New York

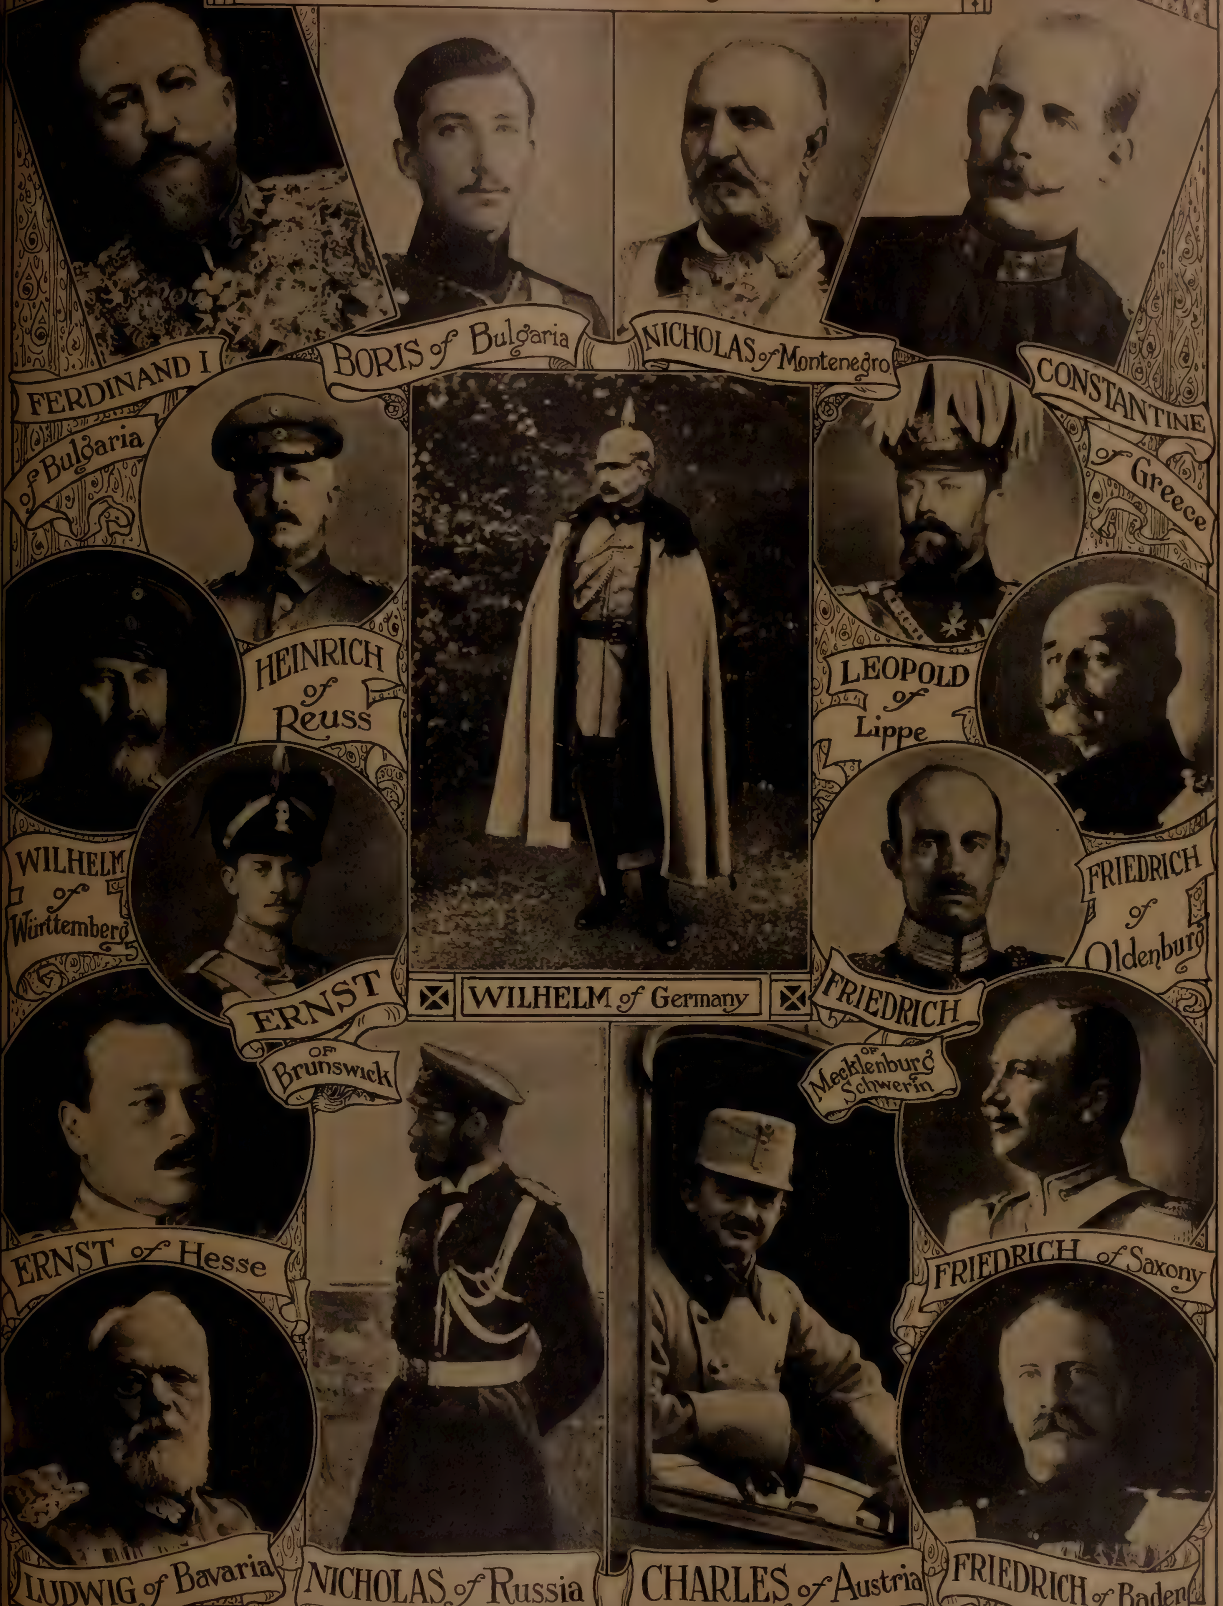
New York Chicago San Francisco
Montreal Buenos Aires Shanghai
London
(Ingersoll Watch Co., Ltd. Distributors)

Ingersoll
Radiolite
$2.75
In Canada
$3.00



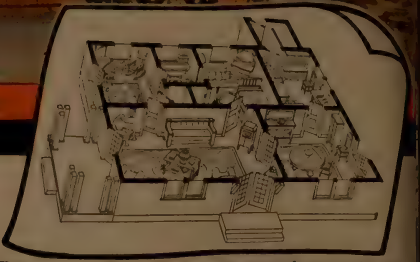
Midget
Wrist Radiolite
$5.50
In Canada $6.00

Heads Uncrowned by the War



FERDINAND I of Bulgaria
BORIS of Bulgaria
NICHOLAS of Montenegro
CONSTANTINE of Greece
HEINRICH of Reuss
WILHELM of Germany
LEOPOLD of Lippe
WILHELM of Württemberg
ERNST OF Brunswick
FRIEDRICH of Oldenburg
FRIEDRICH OF Mecklenburg Schwerin
ERNST of Hesse
FRIEDRICH of Saxony
LUDWIG of Bavaria
NICHOLAS of Russia
CHARLES of Austria
FRIEDRICH of Baden

Aladdin Home



$1238 for this Beautiful 6-Room Aladdin Bungalow Home

Save Money—Cut Out Waste

Of course, you would like to save money building your new home—would like to build at the lowest possible price. But you cannot expect to save very much money by bargaining or getting different prices. You can only expect to save money by saving labor in building your home and eliminating waste of lumber. Aladdin Readi-Cut Houses are cut-to-fit in Aladdin Mills by Rapid Power Machines. Old-fashioned building waste is reduced from 18% to less than 2%—a saving of practically $18 on every $100 worth of lumber. And you save a third of the labor in building your home. This saving of lumber and labor will mean a large percentage of the cost of the entire building. The Aladdin Book shows you how it is done. Send for this book today.

$18 out of $100 Saved!

Thousands of our customers have told us of big savings they have made building Aladdin Homes. The average saving on our $945.00 bungalow is very large. The Aladdin system saves waste of lumber. All of the material is shipped to you cut-to-fit. Your carpenter can erect your Aladdin Home quicker because all of the necessary sawing is done in our mills by Rapid Power Machines.

The average waste of lumber in a complete house is 18%—$18.00 out of every $100.00 of your money is wasted by the old-fashioned system of building. The Aladdin Readi-Cut system saves you this loss by the elimination of waste lumber.

Aladdin Dollar-A-Knot Guarantee

Aladdin Readi-Cut Houses are built of the finest materials obtainable. The choicest clear stock is used for all exposed parts. The Aladdin Dollar-A-Knot Guarantee is but one evidence of the built-in quality which is a part of every Aladdin Readi-Cut Home. The Aladdin Readi-Cut system is thirteen years old. Thousands of American families are living in Aladdin Homes today. Wherever you live there is an Aladdin Home near you.

ALADDIN READI-CUT HOUSES

Sold By The GOLDEN RULE

Beautiful Book of Homes

The Aladdin Book of Homes has a message for you. Amongst its pages, profusely illustrated in colors, leading home, barn and garage designs are represented to you. Many of the homes are pictured in their natural colors, the way they are built and standing now, some place in America. Each one represents a beauty spot in the town of the Aladdin owner. This book opens the way for you to build this year. Send for it today.

Price Includes All Materials

Aladdin Houses are cut-to-fit—no waste of lumber or labor. The Aladdin price includes all materials cut-to-fit as follows: lumber, millwork, flooring, outside and inside finish, doors, windows, shingles, lath and plaster, hardware, locks, nails, paint, varnishes. The material is shipped to you in a sealed box car, complete, ready to erect. Safe arrival of the complete material in perfect condition is guaranteed. Send today for a copy of "Aladdin Homes" No. 240.

The ALADDIN CO., 336 Aladdin Ave., Bay City, Mich.

Canadian Address: Canadian Aladdin Co., Ltd., C. P. R. Bldg., Toronto, Ontario

$1310 for this Aladdin Bungalow Home

$1548 for this Aladdin Home

$1502 for this Beautiful Aladdin Home

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT 1919, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, MARCH 22, 1919

THE WOODS AWAIT THE SPRING Water Color by C. P. Rising

The Spider and the Flies of Wall Street

BY DR. ORISON SWETT MARDEN

Famous Editor and Author of Man-Making Books

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

The editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the writer, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

M. E. S., Dorchester, Mass. I am somewhat troubled about this problem: I get hungry to hear a good sermon that will give me a clear vision of Jesus Christ and my duties toward him. You will say I can find that in my Bible, and so I can; but I am anxious to know how humans are working it out in 1919. I belong to a church, so I go and listen, and what do I get? Mostly some eloquent appeal for this or that drive, this or that movement. All worthy causes that should be helped, but worldly, oh, so worldly! My spiritual need is not supplied. I went to another church to midweek prayer meeting, and it was an annual report of the Sunday school work. Next week I went, and the superintendent of Home Missions was giving an outline of his work. I received benefit from the meetings in a way, but my spiritual hunger was not satisfied. On the other hand, I attended a meeting in Boston, but it all seemed strange and unreal to me. I take your Christian Herald and get more real satisfaction there than anywhere else. What is the matter? Am I or are the churches to blame?

We do not think our correspondent presents the matter quite fairly, although she doubtless intends to. There is a great deal of spiritual work in the church that does not appear on the surface. The real joy of Christian service, which has infinite variety, cannot be understood unless one goes wholesouledly into it and tries to "do something for somebody," to help along some worthy, urgent cause, to lend a hand in advancing the Christ-spirit, whether it be at home or in the foreign field, or in the camps. Our advice to every Christian, and especially to the hesitant ones, is to link up with some kind of actual service, even if it be only visiting the sick, or feeding the hungry, or providing for some poor little heathen child in a foreign land. One does not get the real blessing one seeks except in such service. All the fine sermons and eloquent addresses and innumerable books will not satisfy the soul whose real yearning is for actual service. An old pastor, known widely as a splendid Christian, used to say to the hesitant ones who were half-way Christians: "Why stand ye idle? These are the words of the Master. Get up and go to work and do something for somebody quick! You will find in such work the joy and comfort you are seeking."

A. V. T. C., Owen's Crossroads, Ala. The word "débacle" means collapse.

Mrs. N. E. K., Huron, Ohio. We are not sufficiently familiar with the details of the subject, although it is well known that there are large German interests represented in the American brewing business. Of course, all interests, whatever their nationality, will be similarly affected by prohibition.

L. L. L., Little Eagle, S. D. Divorce laws differ greatly in many of the States. You should refer your case to a lawyer in the state in which the divorce and remarriage took place. Concerning the Bible attitude, we would refer you to Matt. 5 : 32, 19 : 5, 19 : 9; Mark 10 : 7–11; Luke 16 : 18: Rom. 7 : 2, 3; 1 Cor. 7 : 10–15; Eph. 5 : 31. As to the attitude of the different denominations, there is also a difference, especially with regard to the attitude of the marriage of a person who has been divorced.

Edward T. Francis, a reader of this paper, sends us an account of a notable event in Church history which has just taken place in England. A Congregational church and Sunday school in Leicester Square, London, some time ago dedicated its new church home. It had been erected on the sites of several old buildings, one of which was Sir Isaac Newton's house, in which he made his astronomical studies and wrote his famous work, "Principia." The roof of the astronomer's home was a single large glass-covered room, which was removed fifty years ago to the Crystal Palace Exhibition. There was also on the recently purchased site a church which for over a century was occupied by the Huguenots who had been driven from France. Dr. Toplady, whose famous hymns still live, afterward ministered in that church to an Anglican congregation. It was during this ministry that he wrote the hymn "Rock of Ages." Mr. Francis, our correspondent, was at one time sexton of the church, and came to America in 1872.

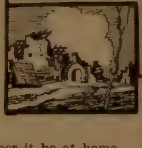
M. A. H., Russell, N. Y. All wealth is a trust to be used for the highest purposes, and our use of our means and influence here will unquestionably have its effect in determining our record hereafter. But whatever is given to the Lord's work, whether administered personally with our own hands or through the church or its subsidiary organizations, or through any other channel, should be put wholly away from us so that we cannot derive any material benefit from the outlay. Christians' gifts to friends cannot possibly come under the heading of contributions to religious work.

H. B., Canton, Miss. Rev. Henry Martyn, of the Church of England, many years ago taught the sphericity of our globe to the natives by using conic sections. How did or could he do that?

Henry Martyn was one of the pioneer missionaries, and translated portions of the Bible into many of the languages of Asia, but we do not find any record of his teaching the sphericity of the earth to the natives of India by means of mathematics.

LITTLE BOY BLUE—1919

Margaret E. Sangster



Little Boy Blue, come blow your horn!
Come, for your sheep are straying-
Straying away through the shell-swept town,
Toward the fields that lie stark and brown,
Come, little boy, through the frosty morn-
Come, for your sheep are straying!

Father tended the flocks last year,
White were they then as snow;
How they dotted the hillside green,
Only a year ago!
Little Boy Blue, you are young to meet
Life and death.
And your childish feet
Are small to follow the wistful way
That leads to the Now from Yesterday!

Little Boy Blue, what troubles you?
Why are your eyes so sad?
What can you know of the cross that stands,
Roughly hewn, on the pasture lands-
You, such a little lad!
Why do you follow the vagrant flock,
Child, when you should be playing?
(Comes a cry through the war-swept land,
"War clasps even a baby's hand!")

Little Boy Blue, come blow your horn!
Come-for your sheep are straying!

J. B., Pasadena, Calif. According to the estimate of Secretary Baker, the total cost of the great war to all belligerents, the Central Powers included, has been $193,000,000,000. He stated this fact at a "victory dinner" given in Washington lately, and explained that the figures were compiled from data in the possession of the War College.

C. V., White Salmon, Wash., and Mrs. N. B. F., Lonoke, Ariz. The passage you refer to is James 2 : 10: "For whosoever shall keep the whole law and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." The truth of this statement in James' Epistle is founded on the unity both of the Lawgiver and of the law. The same God who gave one commandment, gave all; the law is the expression of his will; and therefore whoever breaks one commandment, opposes himself to the will of God. This declaration of James was especially appropriate to the Jewish Christians, who were in danger of being led away by the errors of the Pharisees. The Jewish doctors affirmed that if men kept any one precept of the law it was sufficient, and accordingly some selected the law of the Sabbath, others the law of sacrifice, and others the law of tithes; while the law of love, the sum and substance of the law, was neglected.

M. W. McG., Harrison, Ohio. The Bible does not teach that all trouble and suffering come from God as a punishment. It recognizes the fact that trouble is in the world, and that sickness is bound to occur, either through the breaking of the natural law or through inherited taints, and while it has some definite thing to say about it, it does not attempt to give a complete solution of the whole problem. Heb. 12 : 3–11 declares that God does in some instances discipline or chasten those whom he loves, but this could hardly be called punishment. The book of Job is a beautiful explanation of suffering which has the double purpose of disciplining the soul and glorifying God. Nothing can be finer than the demonstration made by a soul that trusts and praises Him even in the midst of misfortune. The Bible exhorts us to bear suffering, while at the same time it exhorts us to lessen the sufferings of others.

J. H. H., Mount Morris, Ill. Christ distinctly says (John 18 : 36) that his kingdom is not of this world, meaning to impress on Pilate the distinction between a spiritual and a political kingdom. Those who follow the Master are the members of that kingdom and are described in John 1 : 12.

Manchester, Tenn. Nothing is said in II Pet. 2 : 6 of the faultiness ascribed to Lot by the narrative in Genesis, or of the way he came to live among these licentious men. Everything is done by Peter to present a telling picture of a righteous man thrown into godless society and yet not suffering the edge of his righteous feeling to become blunted by lengthened familiarity with the coarse licentiousness of neighbors who mocked at the restraints of divine as well as of human law. The point of the discussion is that the soreness of Lot's distress was due to the fact that, living among these wicked men, he had the protracted pain of seeing with his own eyes and hearing with his own ears day by day, things against which his soul revolted.

Mrs. J. W., Rockwood, Mich. Some royal families have no legal surnames, but if the ordinary method of giving family names had been used in the case of Queen Victoria she would have been called Mrs. Wettin.

M. J. M., Santa Clara, Calif. The new capital of the Commonwealth of Australia is called Canberra.

W. G. R., Savannah, Ga. 1. The name Asia is thought to be derived from Asia, the daughter of Oceanus, mentioned by Hesiod, the first Greek writer who used the word. The name Africa was applied originally to the country in the immediate neighborhood of Carthage, and in the Carthaginian language "Afrygah" meant "colony," the city of Carthage being a colony of the Phœnician city of Tyre, according to the Encyclopædia Britannica, ninth edition, page 249. Europe is said to be derived from Europa, daughter of Agenor, a Phœnician king. America is so named from Amerigo Vespucci, one of the early explorers. 2. We do not find any mention of a pyramid of gold in Ceylon.

S. T. D., Parish, N. Y. 1. Bolshevism is the creed of the Bolsheviki, or Bolshevists, the party of extreme socialists which is now in power in a great part of Russia. It is said to be derived from a Russian word meaning "the majority." Without stating in formal terms the platform of the Bolshevist party, it seems practically to imply hostility to the "bourgeoisie," that is, the commercial, professional, and educated classes, and a desire to put in power the workers. 2. The loss of life to the American troops during the war by death in action and from wounds, accidents, disease and losses at sea is estimated at 67,966, according to casualty lists up to February 26. The total missing is 6,932. 3. The cost of the war to the United States up to the signing of the armistice was $18,818,323,000, which is the total of the four loans raised previous to the signing of the armistice. 4. The victory of Constitutional Prohibition was no doubt partly due to the world war, but the temperance forces had been at work in their campaign of education for years before, with victory constantly growing nearer and more inevitable.

H. D. J., St. Louis, Mo. 1. See answer in preceding paragraph. 2. France claims a protectorate over the Christians of Syria, which dates from the time of the Crusades and is founded on a decree of the Pope. 3. The principle of self-determination was enunciated by President Wilson after the United States had entered the war. It may be said to have been already proclaimed in the Declaration of Independance, and to have been a part of the historic policy of the United States. 4. Yes.

The Secret of Being a Convincing Talker

How I Learned It in One Evening

By GEORGE RAYMOND

HAVE you heard the news about Frank Jordan?"

This question quickly brought me to the group which had gathered in the center of the e. Jordan and I had started with the Great ern Machinery Company, within a month of each r, four years ago. A year ago, Jordan was taken the accounting division and I was sent out as sman. Neither of us was blessed with an unusual unt of brilliancy, but we "got by" in our new well enough to hold them.

nagine my amazement, then, when I heard:

Jordan's just been made Treasurer of the npany!"

could hardly believe my ears. But there was the otice to Employees" on the bulletin board, telling ut Jordan's good fortune.

low I knew that Jordan was a capable fellow, et, and unassuming, but I never would have ked him for any such sudden rise. I knew, too, t the Treasurer of the Great Eastern had to be a man, and I wondered how in the world Jordan led the place.

'he first chance I got, I walked into Jordan's new e and after congratulating him warmly, I asked to let me "in" on the details of how he jumped ad so quickly. His story is so intensely interest- that I am going to repeat it as closely as I remember.

I'll tell you just how it happened, George, be- se you may pick up a pointer or two that will help .

You remember how scared I used to be whenever ad to talk to the chief? You remember how you d to tell me that every time I opened my mouth I put my foot into it, meaning of course that every time I spoke I got into trouble? You remember when Ralph Sinton left to take charge of the Western office and I was asked to present him with the loving cup the boys gave him, how flustered I was and how I couldn't say a word because there were people around? You remember how confused I used to be every time I met new people? I couldn't say what I wanted to say when I wanted to say it; and I determined that if there was any possible chance to learn how to talk I was going to do it.

FREDERICK HOUK LAW

As educator, lecturer, execu- e, traveler and author few n are so well equipped by perience and training as Dr. w to teach the art of effec- e speaking. His "Mastery Speech" is the fruit of 20 ars active lecturing and in- uction in Eastern schools d colleges preceded by an ucation at Oxford Academy, nherst College, Columbia niversity, The Teachers Col- ge, Brown University, and ew York University. He lds the degrees of A.B., M. and Ph.D.

Dr. Law is the author of two ovels, two books of poetry, d editor of six school text- oks. At present he is lec- rer in English in New York niversity, Lecturer in Peda- gy in the Extension Work of e College of the City of New ork, Head of the Dept. of nglish in the Stuyvesant H. and writer of the Weekly esson Plans for The Inde- ndent.

"The first thing I did was to buy a number of books on public speaking, but they seemed to be meant for those who wanted to become orators, whereas what I wanted to learn was not only how to speak in public but how to speak to individuals under various conditions in business and social life.

"A few weeks later, just as I was about to give up hope of ever learning how to talk interestingly, I read an announcement stating that Dr. Frederick Houk Law of New York University had just completed a new course in business talking and public speaking entitled 'Mastery of Speech.' The course was offered on approval without money in advance, so since I had nothing whatever to lose by examining the lessons, I sent for them and in a few days they arrived. I glanced through the entire eight lessons, reading the headings and a few paragraphs here and there, and in about an hour the whole secret of effective speaking was opened to me.

"For example, I learned why I had always lacked confidence, why talking had always seemed something to be dreaded whereas it is really the simplest thing in the world to 'get up and talk.' I learned how to secure complete attention to what I was saying and how to make everything I said interesting, forceful and convincing. I learned the art of listening, the value of silence, and the power of brevity. Instead of being funny at the wrong time, I learned how and when to use humor with telling effect.

"But perhaps the most wonderful thing about the lessons were the actual examples of what things to say and when to say them to meet every condition. I found that there was a knack in making oral reports to my superiors. I found that there was a right way and a wrong way to present complaints, to give estimates, and to issue orders.

"I picked up some wonderful pointers about how to give my opinions, about how to answer complaints, about how to ask the bank for a loan, about how to ask for extensions. Another thing that struck me forcibly was that instead of antagonizing people when I didn't agree with them, I learned how to bring them around to my way of thinking in the most pleasant sort of way. Then, of course, along with those lessons there were chapters on speaking before large audiences, how to find material for talking and speaking, how to talk to friends, how to talk to servants, and how to talk to children.

"Why, I got the secret the very first evening and it was only a short time before I was able to apply all of the principles and found that my words were beginning to have an almost magical effect upon everybody to whom I spoke. It seemed that I got things done instantly, where formerly, as you know, what I said 'went in one ear and out the other.' I began to acquire an executive ability that surprised me. I smoothed out difficulties like a true diplomat. In my talks with the chief I spoke clearly, simply, convincingly. Then came my first promotion since I entered the accounting department. I was given the job of answering complaints, and I made good. From that I was given the job of making collections. When Mr. Buckley joined the Officers' Training Camp, I was made Treasurer. Between you and me, George, my salary is now $7,500 a year and I expect it will be more from the first of the year.

"And I want to tell you sincerely, that I attribute my success solely to the fact that I learned how to talk to people."

* * *

When Jordan finished, I asked him for the address of the publishers of Dr. Law's course and he gave it to me. I sent for it and found it to be exactly as he had stated. After studying the eight simple lessons I began to sell to people who had previously refused to listen to me at all. After four months of record breaking sales during the dullest season of the year, I received a wire from the chief asking me to return to the home office. We had quite a long talk in which I explained how I was able to break sales records—and I was appointed Sales Manager at almost twice my former salary. I know that there was nothing in me that had changed except that I had acquired the ability to talk where formerly I simply used "words without reason." I can never thank Jordan enough for telling me about Dr. Law's Course in Business Talking and Public Speaking. Jordan and I are both spending all our spare time making public speeches on war subjects and Jordan is being talked about now as Mayor of our little Town.

So confident is the Independent Corporation, publishers of "Mastery of Speech," Dr. Law's Course in Business Talking and Public Speaking, that once you have an opportunity to see in your own home how you can, in one hour, learn the secret of speaking and how you can apply the principles of effective speech under all conditions, that they are willing to send you the Course on free examination.

Don't send any money. Merely mail the coupon or write a letter and the complete Course will be sent, all charges prepaid, at once. If you are not entirely satisfied send it back any time within five days after you receive it and you will owe nothing.

On the other hand, if you are as pleased as are the thousands of other men and women who have used the Course, send only $5 in full payment. You take no risk and you have everything to gain, so mail the coupon now before this remarkable offer is withdrawn.

FREE EXAMINATION COUPON

(Advertisement)

Independent Corporation

Publishers of The Independent Weekly

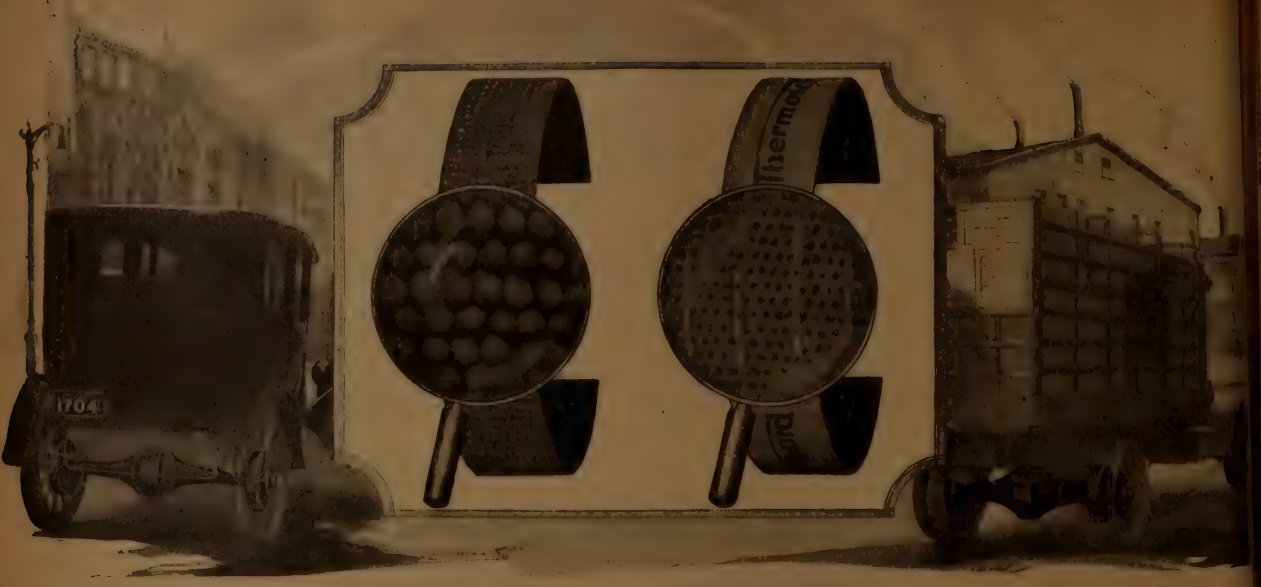
Dept. L-353, 119 West 40th Street, New York

Please send me Dr. Frederick Houk Law's "Mastery of Speech," a Course in Business Talking and Public Speaking in eight lessons. I will either remail the Course to you within five days after its receipt, or send you $5.

Name..

Address...

.... Chr. Her. 3-22-19



Ordinary woven lining
Notice the loosely woven texture
Wears down quickly and unevenly
Loses its gripping power as it wears

Thermoid Hydraulic Compressed Brake Lining
Notice the compact texture
Wears down slowly
Gives uniform gripping surface until wafer thin

This difference means the safety of your car

Important facts that motorists are learning about brake lining

Trucks constitute only 12% of the total registration but are involved in 18¾% of all automobile accidents.

76% of all automobile accidents occur when the car is going 15 miles an hour or less.

YOU wouldn't ride in an elevator, if you knew that it hadn't been inspected. You are reasonably sure of its safety, because the state inspects elevators for you.

Yet the state does not inspect the brakes of your car. Are you assuming that they are safe? Be certain. Have your brakes inspected by your garage man. He will tell you if they need tightening or new brake lining.

Why Thermoid brake lining is safest

The photograph above shows the difference between the texture of Thermoid and that of ordinary brake lining.

Ordinary woven brake lining is loosely woven. It has gripping power when new, but wears down quickly and unevenly. It may fail just when you depend on it most.

Thermoid is made with a close, compact texture. It wears down slowly and evenly, and retains the same uniform gripping power until worn down as thin as cardboard.

Thermoid brake lining has 40% more material than ordinary brake lining, and is made tight and compact by 2,000 lbs. hydraulic compression.

Thermoid is Grapnalized—our exclusive process, which enables it to resist water, oil, and gasoline.

Thermoid the favorite of engineers

The engineers and manufacturers of 51 leading passenger cars and trucks have standardized on Thermoid Hydraulic Compressed Brake Lining because of its sure-gripping, long-wearing qualities.

The safety of your car and everyone in it depends on the efficiency of your brakes. Have them inspected. If they need relining, specify Thermoid, because it gives you more efficient brakes and longer wear.

Every foot of Thermoid is backed by Our Guarantee; Thermoid will make good—or WE WILL.

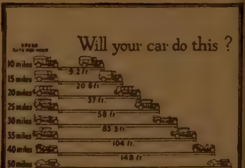
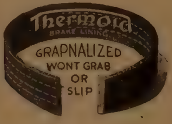
At 40 miles an hour you are going 58 feet a second. Your brakes must obey instantly.



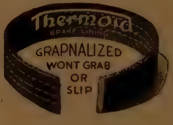
Thermoid Rubber Company

Factory and Main Offices: Trenton, N. J.
New York Chicago San Francisco Detroit
Los Angeles Philadelphia Pittsburgh Boston
London Paris Turin

Canadian Distributors:
The Canadian Fairbanks-Morse Company, Limited
Montreal



Thermoid
HYDRAULIC COMPRESSED
100% BRAKE LINING



Makers of "Thermoid-Hardy Universal Joints" and "Thermoid Crolide Compound Tires"

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

ENTERED AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER JANUARY 25, 1909, AT THE POST OFFICE
AT NEW YORK, UNDER THE ACT OF MARCH 3, 1879

VOL. 42—NO. 12. PRICE 10 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Wilson Proclaims his Faith in the League

© Underwood & Underwood

The George Washington leaving her pier to carry the President back to France

IT WAS with an overwhelming confidence in the success of his mission as America's advocate of the League of Nations that President Wilson faced his audience of over 5,000 in the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, on the evening of Tuesday, March 4. When the President came on the platform, arm in arm with ex-President Taft, the musicians in the orchestra were playing "Over There." Outside was a mighty gathering of many thousands who could not be accommodated in the building. The flag of the Peace League, a white star on a blue field, was hung midway in the parterre row of boxes, where Mrs. Wilson sat just underneath an American flag. It was a brilliant audience and a friendly one. The people had come to hear the President's defense of the League, and they were not disappointed.

Ex-President Taft made the opening address, which is summarized on page 341 of this issue and which was well received, but the people were impatient to hear Wilson speak. When at last he stepped forward and began his address, he roused the audience by the very first sentence. He took his cue from the band. "My fellow citizens," he began, "I accept the intimation of the air just played. I will not come back till it's over 'over there,' and I pray God that in the interests of peace and the world that may be soon."

The President was in excellent fighting trim. He flung down the gauntlet to the senators who had signed the statement that they would not support the League unless the present draft of its constitution were amended. In the most direct terms he expressed his absolute confidence in the support of the League by the American people. The opposition of a few mistaken and short-visioned individuals would end in failure. No criticism of his attitude or acts would move him from a course which he believed to be essential to the world's welfare and to the honor of the American nation in carrying out the high mission to which it had been called as the champion of world peace and righteousness. He would tell the nations "over there" that an overwhelming majority of the American people was in favor of the League, because he believed it to be true.

Again and again he was cheered as he scored point after point in his address. Those who had criticized the League adversely he characterized as "men who have never felt the great pulse of the heart of the world." These gentlemen do not know what the mind of men is just now, although everybody else does. The objectors have been "separated from the general current of the thought of mankind." He contended that the whole issue is not in any sense a party one; no party has the right to appropriate it, "and no party will in the long run dare oppose it." He pictured Europe as sick at heart because its statesmen could not see the vision, although the people themselves saw it. "Those who suffer see," he said. "Those against whom wrong is wrought know how desirable is the right and righteous." It was not the governments of Europe, but the pitying hearts of philanthropic men and women throughout the world, who had poured out their treasure to relieve these sufferers. No nation or government had said to the nations responsible for these terrible wrongs, "You must stop; this thing is intolerable and we will not permit it." Now the peoples demand it.

He expressed amazement that in certain quarters there should be comprehensive ignorance of the state of the world. And he uttered a solemn warning—not a threat. World forces do not threaten, they operate. The great tide of world feeling had risen in its might, and those who stand in the way will be overwhelmed.

His reference to the American army elicited loud cheering. The enemy was broken and routed not merely because of the physical force of our "lusty youngsters," but because of the irresistible spiritual force of our armies. "Do you suppose," he asked, "that, having felt this crusading spirit of these youngsters who went over there not to glorify America but to serve their fellow men, I am going to permit myself for one moment to slacken in my effort to be worthy of them and their cause? . . . I do not mean to come back," he said, "until it is over over there. And it must not be over until the nations of the world are assured of the permanency of peace." Loud cheering greeted this vigorous sally.

He could not understand how those who criticized the League could claim to be Americans and set up a doctrine of "careful selfishness, thought out to the last detail." In such an attitude there was no counsel of generosity, no constructive suggestion—simply selfishness. The adoption of such a policy would make of America the most contemptible of nations. Raising his voice higher, he exclaimed: "I did not need to be told, as I have been told, that the people of the United States would support this covenant. I am an American and I knew they would! In great fundamental things he had always felt sure of the sentiment of the American people. However they might differ in judgment as to policy, they were united in purpose and ideal. Therefore the criticisms against the League made no impression upon him, because "the sentiment of the country is proof against such narrowness and such selfishness as that."

His concluding sentences reaffirmed his unshakable confidence in the future. "We have awakened the expectations of the world, and we will not disappoint these expectations. The day will come," he said, "when men in America will look back with swelling hearts and rising pride because they have been privileged to make the sacrifice and to combine their might and moral power for justice throughout the world. God give us the strength and vision to do it wisely!" There was long and continued applause as he concluded.

The streets between Pennsylvania Terminal and the Metropolitan Opera House were thronged with thousands of cheering citizens, who greeted the President with a continuous ovation. It was marred by only one incident, 200 suffragettes attempting to make a demonstration and trying to break through the police lines. Six of them were arrested. Following his speech the President met a committee appointed by the Irish Convention in Philadelphia to urge him to sponsor self-determination for Ireland at the Peace Conference. Mr. Wilson was reported to have refused to commit himself.

The President left the Opera House about midnight for Hoboken, where he boarded the transport George Washington, sailing early on the morning of March 5, for France and the completion of his task.

The President's Address

MY FELLOW-CITIZENS: I accept the intimation of the air just played; I will not come back "till it's over, over there." And yet I pray God that that may be soon.

The first thing that I am going to tell the people on the other side of the water is that an overwhelming majority of the American people is in favor of the League of Nations. I know that that is true; I have had unmistakable intimations of it from all parts of the country, and the voice rings true in every case. I am happy to associate myself with Mr. Taft in this great cause. He has displayed an elevation of view and a devotion to public duty which is beyond praise.

And I am the more happy because this means that this is not a party issue. No party has the right to appropriate this issue, and no party will in the long run dare oppose it.

We have listened to so clear and admirable an exposition of many of the main features of the proposed covenant of the League of Nations that it is perhaps not necessary for me to discuss in any particular way the contents of the document. I will seek rather to give you its setting. I do not know when I have been more impressed than by the conferences of the commission set up by the Conference of Peace to draw up a covenant for the League of Nations. The representatives of fourteen nations sat around that board—not young men, not men inexperienced in the affairs of their own countries, not men inexperienced in the politics of the world; and the inspiring influence of every meeting was the concurrence of purpose on the part of all those men to come to an agreement and an effective working agreement with regard to this League of the civilized world.

There was a conviction in the whole impulse; there was conviction of more than one sort; there was the conviction that this thing ought to be done, and there was also the conviction that not a man there would venture to go home and say that he had not tried to do it.

Mr. Taft has set the picture for you of what a failure of this great purpose would mean. We have been hearing for all these weary months that this agony of war has lasted of the sinister purpose of the Central Empires, and we have made maps of the course that they meant their conquests to take. Where did the lines of that map lie, of that central line that we used to call from Bremen to Bagdad? . . . They lay then through a united empire, the Austro-Hungarian Empire, whose integrity Germany was bound to respect; . . . the Turkish Empire, whose interests she professed to make her own. . . . And now what has happened? The Austro-Hungarian Empire has gone to pieces and the Turkish Empire has disappeared, and the nations that effected that great result—for it was a result of liberation—are now responsible as the trustees of the assets of those great nations. You not only would have weak nations lying in this path, but you would have nations in which that old poisonous seed of intrigue could be planted with the certainty that the crop would be abundant; and one of the things that the League of Nations is intended to watch is the course of intrigue. Intrigue cannot stand publicity, and if the League of Nations were nothing but a great debating society it would kill intrigue. . . .

[President Wilson here outlined graphically the attempts of England to get the statesmen of Europe into conference upon the Austro-Serbian controversy; Germany's haste to act and refusal to discuss, and the arraying of the world against her.]

The League of Nations is meant as a notice to all outlaw nations that not only Great Britain, but the United States and the rest of the world will go in to stop enterprises of that sort.

The liberated peoples of the Austro-Hungarian Empire and of the Turkish Empire call out to us for this thing. It has not arisen in the council of statesmen. Europe is a bit sick at heart at this very moment, because it sees that statesmen have had no vision, and that the only vision has been the vision of the people. Those who suffer see. Those against whom wrong is wrought know how desirable is the right and the righteous. The nations that have long been under the heel of the Austrian, that have long cowered before the German, that have long suffered the indescribable agonies of being governed by the Turk, have called out to the world, generation after generation, for justice, for liberation, for succor; and no Cabinet in the world has heard them. Private organizations, pitying hearts, philanthropic men and women have poured out their treasure in order to relieve these sufferings; but no nation has said to the nations responsible, "You must stop; this thing is intolerable, and we will not permit it." And the vision has been with the people. My friends, I wish you would reflect upon this proposition: The vision as to what is necessary for great reforms has seldom come from the top in the nations of the world. It has come from the need and the aspiration and the self-assertion of great bodies of men who meant to be free.

AND I am amazed—not alarmed, but amazed—that there should be in some quarters such a comprehensive ignorance of the state of the world. These gentlemen do not know what the mind of men is just now. Everybody else does. I do not know where they have been closeted, I do not know by what influences they have been blinded; but I do know that they have been separated from the general currents of the thought of mankind.

And I want to utter this solemn warning, not in the way of a threat; the forces of the world do not threaten, they operate . . . and those who stand in the way are overwhelmed. Now the heart of the world is awake, and the heart of the world must be satisfied. Do not let yourselves suppose for a moment that the uneasiness in the populations of Europe is due entirely to economic causes or economic motives; something very much deeper underlies it all than that. They see that their governments have never been able to defend them against intrigue or aggression, and that there is no force of foresight or of prudence in any modern Cabinet to stop war. And therefore they say, "There must be some fundamental cause for this," and the fundamental cause they are beginning to perceive to be that nations have stood singly or in little jealous groups against each other, fostering prejudice, increasing the danger of war rather than concerting measures to prevent it; and that if there is right in the world, if there is justice in the world, there is no reason why nations should be divided in the support of justice.

They are therefore saying if you really believe that there is a right, if you really believe that wars ought to be stopped, stop thinking about the rival interests of nations, and think about men and women and children throughout the world. Nations are not made to afford distinction to their rulers by way of success in the maneuvers of politics; nations are meant, if they are meant for anything, to make the men and women and children in them secure and happy and prosperous, and no nation has the right to set up its special interests against the interests and benefits of mankind, least of all this great nation which we love. It was set up for the benefit of mankind; it was set up to illustrate the highest ideals and to achieve the highest aspirations of men who wanted to be free; and the world—the world of today—believes that and counts on us, and would be thrown back into the blackness of despair if we deserted it.

I have tried once and again, my fellow citizens, to say to little circles of friends or to larger bodies what seems to be the real hope of the peoples of Europe, and I tell you frankly I have not been able to do so because when the thought tries to crowd itself into speech the profound emotion of the thing is too much; speech will not carry. I have felt the tragedy of the hope of those suffering peoples.

It is tragedy because it is a hope which cannot be realized in its perfection, and yet I have felt besides its tragedy, its compulsion—its compulsion upon every living man to exercise every influence that he has to the utmost to see that as little as possible of that hope is disappointed, because if men cannot now, after this agony of bloody sweat, come to their self-possession and see how to regulate the affairs of the world, we will sink back into a period of struggle in which there will be no hope, and, therefore, no mercy. There can be no mercy where there is no hope, for why should you spare another if you yourself expect to perish? Why should you be pitiful if you can get no pity? Why should you be just if, upon every hand, you are put upon?

THERE is another thing which I think the critics of this covenant have not observed. They not only have not observed the temper of the world, but they have not even observed the temper of those splendid boys in khaki that they sent across the seas. . . . When we went into the war, we went into it on the basis of declarations which it was my privilege to utter, because I believed them to be an interpretation of the purpose and thought of the people of the United States. And those boys went over there with the feeling that they were sacredly bound to the realization of those ideals; that they were not only going over there to beat Germany; they were not going over there merely with resentment in their hearts against a particular outlaw nation; but that they were crossing those three thousand miles of sea in order to show to Europe that the United States, when it became necessary, would go anywhere where the rights of mankind were threatened. They would not sit still in the trenches. They would not be restrained by the prudence of experienced continental commanders. They thought they had come over there to do a particular thing, and they were going to do it and do it at once. And just as soon as that rush of spirit as well as rush of body came in contact with the lines of the enemy they began to break, and they continued to break until the end. They continued to break, my fellow citizens, not merely because of the physical force of those lusty youngsters, but because of the irresistible spiritual force of the armies of the United States. It was that they felt. It was that that awed them. It was that that made them feel if these youngsters ever got a foothold, they could never be dislodged, and that every foot of ground that they won was permanently won for the liberty of mankind.

And do you suppose that having felt that crusading spirit of these youngsters, who went over there not to glorify America but to serve their fellow men, I am going to permit myself for one moment to slacken in my effort to be worthy of them and of their cause? What I said at the opening I said with a deeper meaning than perhaps you have caught; I do mean not to come back until it's over over there, and it must not be over until the nations of the world are assured of the permanency of peace.

Gentlemen on this side of the water would be very much profited by getting into communication with some gentlemen on the other side of the water.

[Here the President said that if European statesmen had ever been cynical or "practical" rather than ideal their temper has been subdued.]

They have been subdued, if that was once their temper, by the awful significance of recent events and the awful importance of what is to ensue. . . . Every man in that Conference knows that the treaty of peace in itself will be inoperative without this constant support and energy of a great organization such as is supplied by the League of Nations.

[The President said that these gentlemen who were skeptical of the possibility of forming the League of Nations would find when the treaty comes back "the covenant not only in it, but so many threads of the treaty tied to the covenant that you cannot dissect the covenant from the treaty without destroying the whole vital structure. The structure of peace will not be vital without the League of Nations and no man is going to bring back a cadaver with him."]

I cannot imagine how these gentlemen can live and not live in the atmosphere of the world, I cannot imagine how they can live and not be in contact with the events of their times, and I particularly cannot imagine how they can be Americans and set up a doctrine of careful selfishness, thought out to the last detail. I have heard no counsel of generosity in their criticism. . . . I have heard nothing except "will it not be dangerous to us to help the world?" It would be fatal to us not to help it.

FROM being what I will venture to call the most famous and the most powerful nation in the world we would of a sudden have become the most contemptible. So I did not need to be told, as I have been told, that the people of the United States would support this covenant. I am an American and I knew they would. What a sweet revenge it is upon the world! They laughed at us once, they thought we did not mean our professions of principle. . . .

[The President told how Europe had thought us selfish and had expected little real help from us, but how what we really did amazed them and convinced them that "this nation is the friend of mankind as it said it was."]

The sweet revenge, therefore, is this, that we believed in righteousness, and now we are ready to make the supreme sacrifice for it, the supreme sacrifice of throwing in our fortunes with the fortunes of men everywhere. Mr. Taft was speaking of Washington's utterance about entangling alliances, and if he will permit me to say so, he put the exactly right interpretation upon what Washington said, the interpretation that is inevitable if you read what he said, as most of these gentlemen do not. And the thing that he longed for was just what we are now about to supply: an arrangement which will disentangle all alliances.

Nothing entangles, nothing enmeshes a man except a selfish combination with somebody else. Nothing entangles a nation, hampers it, binds it, except to enter into a combination with some other nation against the other nations of the world. And this great disentanglement of all alliances is now to be accomplished by this covenant, because one of the covenants is that no nation shall enter into any relationship with another nation inconsistent with the covenants of the League of Nations. Nations agree that there shall be but one combination, and that is the combination of all against the wrongdoer.

And so I am going back to my task on the other side with renewed vigor. I had not forgotten what the spirit of the American people is, but I have been immensely refreshed by coming in contact with it again. I did not know how good home felt until I got here. . . . In a certain rather abandoned part of the frontier at one time it was said they found a man who told the truth; he was not found telling it, but he could tell it when he heard it. And I think I am in that situation with regard to some of the criticisms I have heard. They do not make any impression on me, because I know there is no medium that will transmit them, that the sentiment of the country is proof against such narrowness and such selfishness as that. I commend these gentlemen to communion with their fellow citizens.

WHAT are we to say, then, as to the future? I think, my fellow citizens, that we can look forward to it with great confidence. I have heard cheering news since I came to this side of the water about the progress that is being made in Paris toward the discussion and clarification of a great many difficult matters and I believe that settlements will begin to be made rather rapidly from this time on at those conferences. But what I believe, what I know as well as believe, is this: That the men engaged in those conferences are gathering heart as they go, not losing it; that they are finding community of purpose and community of ideal to an extent that perhaps they did not expect; and that amidst all the interplay of influence there is a forward movement which is running toward the right. Men have at last perceived that the only permanent thing in the world is the right, and that a wrong settlement is bound to be a temporary settlement. . . . and the spirits of men will rebel against it, and the spirits of men are now in the saddle.

When I was in Italy a little limping group of wounded Italian soldiers sought an interview with me. . . . they presented me with a petition in favor of the League of Nations. Their wounded limbs, their impaired vitality were the only argument they brought with them. . . . That appeal has remained in my mind as I have ridden along the streets in European capitals and heard cries of the crowd, cries for the League of Nations, from lips of people who, I venture to say, had no particular notion of how it was to be done. . . .

It is inconceivable that we should disappoint them, and we shall not. The day will come when men in America will look back with swelling hearts and rising pride that they should have been privileged to make the sacrifice which it was necessary to make in order to combine their might and their moral power with the cause of justice for men of every kind everywhere.

God give us the strength and vision to do it wisely! God give us the privilege of knowing that we did it without counting the cost and because we were true Americans, lovers of liberty and of the right!

THE PIONEERS OF PROHIBITION

Defeats and Triumphs of the Early Days in Kansas

By ALFRED G. HILL

KANSAS has been named as the best example of what prohibition does for a state by both prohibition supporters and an- gonists. The state has been much aligned. But the impetus of the movement for ore effective prohibition has never been halted. he experience of the state has been similar to that a successful pioneer in any venture, whose teachings e adopted because he has been successful, by those ho have learned of his experiences and problems.

The story of prohibition and its development in ansas is one of fascinating interest. What Kansas d in abolishing commerce in intoxicating liquors as not the result of a sudden reform wave. Rather was the result of a slow; tedious, bitterly opposed ovement. It started with the opening of the settle- ent in Kansas territory before the Civil War. It ached a climax with the adoption of constitutional rohibition forty years ago. But prohibition did not me then. There was the long battle of law-enforce- ent to follow until the present day.

Following its adoption of constitutional prohibition, ansas created a distinct precedent for other states hen its prohibitory statutes were tested in higher ourts through to the United States Supreme Court, he laws being upheld in every instance.

The names of a man and a woman and out most distinctively in the Kan- s crusade. These are John P. St. ohn and Carrie Nation. The moral ourage of Governor St. John in backing rohibition forty years ago made possi- le constitutional prohibition in Kansas d in the nation. The fiery hatchet- mashing of illegal saloons in Kansas by arrie Nation twenty years ago awoke ansas to real law enforcement and roused the nation.

The Sunflower State took an early art toward its present bone-dry condi- on. In 1855 Kansas territory bor- owed from Missouri "An act to re- train dramshops and taverns and to egulate sale of intoxicating liquors." his gave the right of local option and rescribed Sunday closing.

In 1859 the territorial legislature met n Topeka. The laws made in 1855 had een outlawed. Here the first petition rom women for prohibition was re- eived, the appeal being:

"Here in Kansas we are laying the oundation of a new society and you as he first law-making power recognized y the people should examine with the reatest circumspection the evils exist- ng in older states and by wise and udicious enactments protect the moral nd social interests of the community."

In 1861, the year Kansas was ad- mitted as a state, occurred the first meeting of the Kansas State Temper- nce Society. In 1866 the dramshop aw was tightened by the requirement hat the majority of women as well as men must sign licenses for dramshops n townships. In 1876 stricter dram- hop regulation came by legislative en- ctment. The "Blue Ribbon" or Mur- phy movement swept the state, aiding he Order of Good Templars.

In 1878 prohibition supporters cen- ered their efforts on the election of ohn P. St. John, who had been an ctive prohibition worker. Governor St. John was inaugurated on January 6, 1879, just forty years before the late Kansas ratified the national prohi- bition amendment. In his message the tatesman from Olathe suggested that petitions to secure liquor licenses and publicity to these petitions in all cities, no matter how large or small, would make local option successful.

The bitterest fight of Kansas legisla- tive history followed. Liquor lobbyists concentrated against the bill carrying out St. John's recommenda- tions. The session of 1879 was well under way when the resolution calling for the state constitu- tional prohibition amendment was introduced by Senator George F. Hamlin of Linn after being drawn by N. C. McFarland, a Topeka attorney. The senate passed it by 37 votes to 0, and the vote in the house was 88—five more than necessary.

Now it was necessary to have the people of Kansas ratify the amendment. A picturesque figure in the campaign was a woman sixty-four years of age, Drusilla Wilson, of Lawrence, who drove from town to town from November, 1879, to November, 1880, when the amendment was ratified by nearly 8,000 votes. She drove 3,000 miles and made hundreds of addresses, remarkable in their power.

From August 15 to 27, 1880, a statewide prohibition camp meeting was held at Bismarck Grove near Lawrence, with as many as 25,000 present in a day.

The legislature in 1881 enacted laws to carry out constitutional prohibition. The battle now changed to a strictly law-enforcement issue. The first important amendment in 1885 weakened the law by allowing the purchase of liquor in drug stores on affidavit by the purchaser that he was sick. From this developed the famous "snake bite" affidavit. More men in Kansas suffered from snake bite than any other ailment. From 1885 until 1909, drug store "joints" were a problem in Kansas. Then drug stores were denied the right to sell alcoholic liquors for any purpose.

The fight for liquor enforcement has gone on unabated until the present time. For a period in 1889, prohibition was given a near knockout blow by a decision of the United States district court which decided that liquor in "original packages" could be sold in Kansas, as the state had no right to interfere with interstate commerce. Immediately tremendous pressure was brought upon the Kansas representatives in Congress, and a law was passed which gave the state the unquestionable right to deal with liquor-selling, even in original packages. But for six months, prohibition was a dead letter in many communities.

Mrs. Carrie Nation

Through the nineties, resubmission continued as a campaign question, with the result that no Democratic governor was elected to office after Glick in the early eighties until Hodges in 1913, and Hodges ran on a prohibition platform. The last dying gasp of the resubmission element was in 1915, when Billiard, an out and out resubmissionist, received only a scattering vote. At the same time, law enforcement as an issue for city campaigns became a dead letter.

The cleaning up of Wichita, Leavenworth and Atchison, and several cities in southeastern Kansas came along from 1909 to 1915, with the state attorney general using special assistants. Recent legislatures had given special powers of inquisition. Also by use of the injunction law, Attorney C. W. Trickett, starting at Kansas City, Kan., gained his title of "Padlock" Trickett by securing injunctions against resorts and using a padlock to enforce the court orders.

Continued violators of the prohibatory law found they could no longer "buck" the courts, for the legislature passed a law giving the court the power to punish violators as guilty of felonies for the second offense of prohibitory violation. Going to the penitentiary discouraged many "joint" keepers.

The stricter enforcement, the general support of the public, with the resulting favorable attitude of the courts, came like the prohibition sentiment first came, slowly.

The most picturesque part of the development was Carrie Nation. Born in Kentucky in 1846, and later resident of Missouri, Mrs. Nation was an early settler with her husband at Medicine Lodge, Kansas. Her husband died a drunkard. On June 29, 1900, Mrs. Nation visited Kiowa in Southwestern Kansas, and going to a place owned by one Dobson, she threw stones at the mirrors and glasses of the resort, while the proprietor fled.

She appeared next at Wichita, where, in the Carey Hotel barroom, she demanded that a large oil painting, "Cleopatra at the Roman Baths," be taken down. Early the next morning she entered the same room with a large iron bar and many rocks concealed under her cape. The total damage amounted to more than $400 before Mrs. Nation was through. She served a short jail sentence, and after her release she smashed two more saloons in Wichita before continuing in other towns, until she arrived at Topeka, where one Sunday, February 18, 1900, she appeared with a hatchet and, followed by an immense crowd, raided almost every liquor establishment in Topeka. Nation-wide publicity resulted. She edited a magazine, "The Smasher's Mail," and cooperated with the Women's Christian Temperance Union.

After astounding Kansas, Mrs. Nation continued her crusade in other states, as John P. St. John widened his efforts. Mrs. Nation died in 1911, while John P. St. John died only last year, after predicting in 1914 that nation-wide prohibition would come in 1920. A memorial for Mrs. Nation stands outside the union station at Wichita, and Olathe, the home of Governor St. John, is planning a memorial for its most distinguished citizen.

Prohibition kept Kansas existence lively. Liquor lovers of the well-to-do class resorted to clubs. These were difficult institutions for the "law" to handle. Topeka still talks about the time Chief Eaton raided the organization of its most exclusive citizens—the Topeka Club. Some lodges played a prominent part in giving members liquor. It took special legislation and much bitter feeling to drive the liquor ends of these clubs out of business.

As far as state enactment is concerned, the most drastic piece of legislation came in 1917 when Kansas followed the lead of other states with a "bone dry" act which in effect has been more so than in probably any other portion of the United States. Mere possession of liquor is prima facie evidence of violation of the prohibitory law.

The 1919 legislature is scheduled to pass an act giving a means of stopping the last big problem of prohibitory enforcement, that of the automobile. Railroad companies are not shipping liquor except where a few shipments are made in camouflaged form, such as hidden in the center of crates of household goods and by other subterfuges. Hereafter automobiles found transporting liquor within the state or into the state are to be seized and sold by the counties.

Another measure recently introduced provides for the spending of jail sentences, not in the city or county jail but in a state farm at Lansing near the penitentiary, where a regular schedule of work will be provided. Already those convicted of a second offense of prohibitory violation may be sent to the penitentiary. If Kansas legislators knew other ways to encourage and enforce prohibition, they would be enacted into laws.

Kansas public sentiment, as shown by a state prohibition jubilation on February 18, appears to be in favor of the most effective prohibition possible in the hands of human authorities.

Sixty-Fifth Congress Ends in Talk

NOTWITHSTANDING the action of the Republican caucus, 3 Senators of that party, Sherman of Illinois, LaFollette of Wisconsin, and France of Maryland, united in a filibuster, talking from 2 o'clock on the morning of March 4 until 11.30 o'clock. The filibuster was aimed particularly at the General Deficiency Bill, the major portion of which was a $750,000,000 appropriation for the Director General of Railroads. The bills which failed to pass Congress, apparently as a result of the filibuster were the Army Appropriation Bill, carrying $1,238,282,967, the Navy Appropriation Bill, $824,708,521, the Agricultural Appropriation Bill with a rider repealing the daylight saving act, the General Deficiency Bill, the Sundry Civil Bill, carrying $1,122,919,738, the District of Columbia Appropriation Bill, the Indian Bill, the Civil Service Retirement Bill, the bill extending Government control over telegraphs and telephones, the public buildings bill, the Water Power Bill, the Coal and Oil Lands Leasing Bill, the bill providing for $100,000,000 for reclaiming land by irrigation in the interest of returning soldiers, the bill providing for the enforcement of prohibition, the joint resolution repealing the luxury tax, the bill providing for the expenses of the President and the Peace Commission, the Public Buildings Bill, the bill appropriating $15,000,000 to comply with the treaty with Columbia, the Immigration Bill, the bill for reform of courts martial and the resolution for modified woman suffrage. The bill providing $1,000,000,000 to make good the Government guarantee of the wheat price got through. When Congress finally adjourned the President issued a statement declaring that "A group of men in the Senate have deliberately chosen to embarrass the Administration of the Government . . . and to make arbitrary use of powers intended to be employed in the interest of the people," and that "I must make my choice between these two duties (presence at the Peace Conference and at Washington) and I confidently hope that the people of the country will think that I am making the right choice." The President then sailed for France.

© International Film Service

The transport Leviathan entering New York harbor with over 10,000 of the city's own boys

The Week in the World's News

FOOD AND PEACE. The Allied Food Commission estimated on March 5 that during 1919, in order to be properly fed, Germany must receive from abroad 3½ million tons of grain, one million tons of wheat and a million tons of fats. Germany's supply of potatoes and grain, although considerable, was said to be insufficient to carry her beyond the end of May, while in fats the situation was worse than in 1917. The food situation was said to be especially severe in Bavaria, while Bohemia, although an ally, is in serious straits. France withdrew her objections to the Allied plan for the feeding of Germany. but in agreeing to the British-American plans for the feeding of Germany, France stipulated that the agreement carried only for a single month. The German armistice delegates refused to turn over the German mercantile tonnage in return for such a promise.

Realization that only prompt peace and adequate supplies of food could save Germany and possibly the rest of Europe, from a wave of unrest, perhaps of Bolshevism and complete anarchy, spurred the Supreme Allied Council at Paris to impress the need of haste on all the subcommittees of the Conference it being hoped that German delegates might be received at Versailles by March 24. The Economic Council was sent back, with new instructions, to meet the Germans at Brussels, it having been decided to let Germany pay for foodstuffs in securities and merchandise and to guarantee her the 300,000 tons a month needed until the next harvest.

TROOPS GREET STRIKE IN BERLIN. A strike called in Berlin by the Spartacides and the communist organizations, intended to be a general strike, was instituted by the seizing of a number of strategic locations in the city and the suburbs and an attack on police headquarters. The Ebert Government, however, promptly ordered a loyal army corps into the city, which reoccupied most of the positions taken by the strikers, and by firing upon the rioters succeeded in dispersing the crowds and maintaining control of the city. The general strike failed. The National Assembly at Weimar on March 3 announced new laws for the nationalizing of mines and the transfer of public power companies from private to common ownership. The Ebert Government gained control on March 7 after street fighting in which 1,000 persons were killed or injured.

ITALY BLOCKADES FOOD. The conflicting interests of the new state of Jugoslavia and of Italy in the upper Adriatic resulted in a situation which gave much worry both to the Allied Food Administration and to the Peace Conference. Both nations have their armies fully mobilized. On February 19 an Italian military mission sent into the Jugoslav territory at Laibach in connection with the plans for feeding the people was forced to leave and to return to Italian soil. The Italians immediately established a food blockade against all Jugoslav territory, which since the railways leading to Bohemia crossed Jugoslavia resulted in holding up food stuffs intended for Bohemia, and complicated the whole program for the feeding of Bohemia and all former Austrian peoples. Italy herself is dependent upon the United States for $60,000,000 worth of supplies monthly as against $28,000,000 worth being sent into Austria, and the American Government was reported to have warned Italy that, unless she ended her blockade of Jugoslavia, shipments of food stuffs to Italy would be stopped. Italy withdrew her restrictions on March 7 and Mr. Hoover at once moved supplies into Austria.

THEY FOUGHT THE HUN. General March announced on March 8 that of the slightly more than 2,000,000 American soldiers who went to France, 1,390,000 had taken part in the fighting.

INTERNATIONAL BONDS. The Petit Journal of Paris is authority for the statement that in the last year 6,000 Americans in France have married French women.

GERMANY'S BILL. It was announced through Paris, on March 3, that the Supreme Council of the Peace Conference had practically set the amount of reparation to be asked of Germany, at $12 000,000,000, of which France asked t immediate payment of $5,000,000,0 the remainder to be payable in 25 to years. America asks only the val of enemy property seized in the Unit States, approximately $800,000,000.

RADICAL NORTH DAKOTA. The No Partisan League, controlling two-thir of the North Dakota legislature and t Governor, was able to write into l its complete program. The legislatu which just adjourned passed laws crea ing a great State Bank, which is to ha dle all State funds and funds of all Sta enterprises; its deposits are expected exceed $135,000,00 creating a State own mill and elevator syste to market the farm pro ucts of the State; crea ing a State owned Hon Building Association, b which any person may s sure a $10,000 farm or $5,000 town home b making a small payme down and paying th balance in small amoun spread over 25 year creating, by a $10,000 000 bond issue, a fun for farm loans, the inte est on which is not to b paid in years of crop fail ure and creating a Stat ownership of lignit mines by which it is ex pected to supply the peo ple with cheap fuel. Th legislature also change the tax laws to provid 100% taxing of land railroad property, publi utilities, business build ings and bank stock 50% taxing for tow residences and stocks o merchandise, while farn implements, machinery and improvements ar exempt.

HARBOR STRIKE REOPENED. The harbor strike in New York which was settled in January at the request of the President by the submission of questions in dispute to arbitration, was reopened on March 4 Between 12,000 and 16,000 men left their positions on the boats, and all harbor traffic, except a few non-union boats and the Army, Navy and Municipal boats, was brought to a standstill. On March 7, the U. S Railway Administration came to an agreement with the unions and the railway ferries, tugs, lighters and barges employing 40% of the strikers were back in service on the 8th.

HOOVER QUITS IN JULY. Herbert Hoover announced, on March 9, that he and most of his associates would be compelled by the necessities of their private business to end their activities in food relief work on July 1. He said that there would be no surplus from the 1918 world wheat crop and that Russia and Rumania, formerly exporters, would be importers in 1919, so that it was probable that there would be no surplus of wheat this year. He did not expect the Government to lose money on its wheat price guarantee, but thought a price of $3.50 a bushel not impossible.

NEW YORK'S OWN REACH HOME. The 27th Division of New York City and state troops, which won undying glory by breaking completely through the Hindenburg line at the St. Quentin tunnel on September 27 to 29, began to arrive home in the week of March 3, the largest number, 11,000, coming in on the Leviathan on March 6. New York City laid herself out to receive her boys. The greatest parade in the history of the metropolis was planned for March 25, when the last unit of the division should have landed.

The Y. M. C. A. As It Is

THE Y. M. C. A. has met a great opportunity in a great way. Next week a conclusive story, authorized by Dr. Mott's office, of Y. M. C. A. achievement in France.

Church Unity talked of at home is a fact on foreign fields. Dr. Carroll tells next week how they get together in Asia.

A stubborn father, a stiff-necked son, a dimpled baby and a laundry basket. What would you do with them? Read "A Peace Baby," next week, and see how skilfully Annie Hamilton Donnell has woven them into a capital story.

Next week, too, Dr. Gray tells where "John Found his Thousand Years."

No Lasting Peace But in Proposed League of Nations

Sovereignty of Nations Is Properly Restricted—Monroe Doctrine Is Only Extended—Rights of All Are Justly Safeguarded

By JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,

Administration Leader in United States Senate

Senator John Sharp Williams

THE argument made against the League of Peace by the Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Lodge, is the ablest argument that has n made on that side and will, I doubt , remain the ablest, except that per- ps Senator Knox of Pennsylvania may able to go more into the mere legal ses of the question.

The trouble with all of these men is t they want the constitution of the gue of Peace expressed "in such r terms that there may never be a pute about the meaning of any of Of course that would be impossi- unless somebody under the direct piration of God with that purpose in w could write the articles. Senator dge paid a high tribute to the men o formed the Constitution of the ited States and to its clear wording, d yet there has not been a single use of that instrument which has not n the subject of scores of lawsuits, wing out of the attempt to interpret misinterpret it, and a civil war grew t of divergent interpretations of the amble "we the people," etc.

All sorts of attempts are being made to prejudice the public mind against the world peace instrument. The League of Nations is what it says—A League of Nations—to settle disputes between nations which are necessarily international disputes. It has no force and necessarily from the nature of it could have none with regard to purely domestic and internal questions between parts of a nation. The language of the instrument is to protect "the independence and the territories of the signatory powers" against "external aggression." This of course has nothing to do with internal disputes, as the attempted secession of the Southern States was or as the Irish question now is.

An attempt is being laboriously made to alarm people who are opposed to Japanese immigration on the ground that a League of Nations would assume jurisdiction over that question. Nothing could be more absurd because it is universally admitted that each nation everywhere has a perfect right to say who shall and who shall not immigrate to its shores. This view is re-inforced by the fact that Japan tried at Paris to get a declaration to the effect that no nation should "discriminate on account of race." She failed miserably, for the very simple reason that nobody else was with her on that question.

So, too, when the Monroe doctrine, or the main meaning of it, is extended to the whole world and put under the direction of the League of Nations, gentlemen argue that it is a surrender of the Monroe doctrine. The truth is, we have re-inforced it. We have had to depend hitherto simply upon our sword. The Monroe doctrine declared against any European governmental "colonization" of American territory or the superposition of any European country of "its institutions" upon American soil. The League of Nations protects all nations against those perils.

No human instrument is perfect, of course. It is equally a matter of course that everything must have a beginning. So must the League of Nations, and out of experience and probable mistakes will evolve a more perfect instrument.

Meanwhile, the weakness of the position of those who attack it is this: They offer nothing in its stead to maintain or even to promise the peace of the world; they stand upon the floor of the Senate and contend for the pure German doctrine that the sovereignty of the nation must be complete, unlimited, and uncontrolled; in other words, that a nation has a right to do whatever it chooses to do unless some other nation can whip it into not doing it. They are contending for the right of America to be independent and absolutely unlimited in anything it chooses to do as a nation, whereas the League of Peace, while it does not want to limit it unduly and does not want to destroy French sovereignty, British sovereignty, or American sovereignty, does desire to limit the operation of each of them within a certain sphere prescribed by good morals, by agreed principles of international law, and by a given, peaceful purpose.

On the one side of this controversy stands the proposed League of Nations and its advocates, saying: "Look at what has just happened; substantially all the nations of the world involved in Armageddon; slain and crippled men, widowed women, fatherless children; libraries, universities, orchards destroyed; and anarchy let loose to rage wherever, like a blind and roaring devil, it can find space to rage. This is what we propose: To help stop it all or to keep it all from ever being repeated; and then we turn to the opponents of the League and say: What do you propose? and they answer, "Nothing."

Go right back to where we were! They say: "Above all things let America not agree to limit her freedom of action in any particular, lest it disturb her national sovereignty or national independence."

The League might regulate her sovereignty; it could not destroy it. It has nothing to do with her independence, except that the League of Nations guarantees it. The awful, dreadful fact remains that if we are to preserve for ourselves the right to do whatever we think is right, regardless of all other nations in the world, then each other nation must be left in exactly the same attitude, including Germany. I thought this war was fought mainly to convince Germany that no state had a right to do whatever it pleased; that the old theory of absolute, unlimited, uncontrolled sovereignty of a state had gone into the scrap-heap.

Nobody is more devoted to Americanism than I am. Nobody would more oppose our depriving ourselves of any right of self-government than I; but, when you come to international relations, the rights of others as well as our own rights must be considered; and to go back to the old Middle-age doctrine that a nation must in no respects bind its own hands to keep it from doing wrongs, while other nations by acknowledged moral right bind their hands to keep from wronging it, is one of the saddest spectacles that people surrounded by a condition of modern civilization could present.

No Real Victory But in Lasting Peace

By ARTHUR CAPPER

United States Senator-Elect from Kansas and Editor of Capper's Weekly

SIMPLY because we must, we are to have a League of Nations to end war, to end endless preparations r war and to stop the huge outlays ery nation now feels forced to make peace times for armies and navies.

It is natural there should be great dif- rences of view among leaders of opin- n concerning such a League, or any rm it might take. It seems that war constitutional, and a compulsory ace isn't—no matter how badly the rld needs it. A league to keep the ace of the world is as new and untried once was a republican form of gov- nment. Circumstances compelled that periment, and I think we shall find a ay to cooperate in this one.

I believe a League of Nations is in- itable if the world is to be saved from archy. Consider the situation: The ople of every great nation are strug- ing under a mountain of debt. Four ars of war have mortgaged their activ- ies for years to come. If they are to on squandering the major part of eir labor and resources for big navies d large standing armies, and keeping t of productive labor the hundreds of ousands of men necessary to man em, we shall slowly but surely break e backs of the people.

As I see it, what this nation has most fear in the future is not war, but our iftly increasing burden of taxation hich is going to eat us up if we do not tain relief by stopping up the big rat ole of military expenditure and attain ficiency in government.

The war will add two billion dollars a year in interest charges alone to our taxes. Appropriations for virtually another two billions a year are asked in behalf of our army and navy. On top of this, we are urged to adopt compulsory military training for every boy of nineteen in the land who can pass the physical test of fitness for soldiering. Our general staff has planned this so that it may have an army of twelve million reserves pledged to leave home and business instantly at the "call to the colors." Under compulsory military training draft and conscription will not be necessary.

A League of Nations should save us from this.

And there is that other possibility, worse than war, from which a League of Nations will be needed to save us. The history of every revolution and all the causes leading to it show that hunger was the spark that finally set off the powder magazine. As the struggle for existence grows greater, the tendency to revolt increases.

The explosion point is reached when any considerable number of the people are compelled to live from hand to mouth with no prospect for better times in view.

If we again go in for a military program where shall we bring up?

Any program for a league to keep the peace between nations is sane and reasonable compared to entering on a program entailing consequences like these. Is it strange, then, with such consequences in sight, that peoples all over the world have demanded as a deliverance a League of Nations limiting armament, requiring every nation to give bond to keep the peace, and pledging one another to keep the peace through arbitration, and by force, if need be?

I am for any League plan based on the broad American principle of "the consent of the governed," a League ruled by chosen representatives of the several peoples instead of by great interests, which shall safeguard and protect the rights of citizens in their international relations, which will protect backward peoples from exploitation, and which shall reduce armies and navies to a police-force size.

We did not save the world in the world war, we only gave it a breathing spell. But we can save it with a League of Peace, one which is not a supernation but a binding, effective international agreement permitting every nation, great or small, that is a party to it to maintain its self-respect and individuality.

A League of Nations is not a visionary dream, a foretaste of the millennium, nor the fad of an altruist; it is sanely and compellingly practical because the world cannot do without it, because the world cannot and will not longer tolerate war between nations any more than we tolerate murder between citizens as a method of settling disputes.

It took the great war to make a League of Nations practically possible through compulsion of circumstances. The war showed all mankind the abyss into which modern nations were about to plunge. We have had a narrow escape, but I think we have stopped in time.

Senator-Elect Arthur Capper

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President and Publisher
GRAHAM PATTERSON

Vice President and Managing Editor
GEORGE H. SANDISON

The President and the Plain People

WHEN President Wilson in his address at the conference of governors and mayors in the White House reminded those who attended on that occasion that they were servants of the great silent mass of people who constitute the United States, and that as such it is their business "to find out how we can best assist in making their lives what they wish them to be," he wisely seized the occasion to emphasize an attitude which should characterize every man in public life as well as every business man in America. "My present plan is to understand what plain men everywhere want," declared the President. "In Paris we are not meeting as the masters of anybody. We are meeting there as the servants of about 700,000,000 people, and unless we show that we understand the business of servants, we shall not satisfy, and we shall not accomplish the peace of the world. And if we show that we want to serve any interest but theirs, we shall have become candidates for the most lasting discredit that will ever attach to man in history."

What had impressed him most, not only in the conference abroad but for many months before he went there, was the fact that "we are at last learning that the business of government is to take counsel from the average man," and "that the whole matter of prosperity of peoples runs down into the great body of men and women who do the work of the world."

Lincoln used to say that "the Lord must love the plain people, for he has made so many of them." Lincoln's great heart was with them, and he labored for their interests as few men in public life have ever done. In his goings and comings among them, he showed this in many ways and proved the sincerity of his championship of their cause.

President Wilson has taken a fitting opportunity to impress this lesson upon the governors and mayors. The problems of labor and industry with which they are called to deal are such as cannot be satisfactorily solved in any other spirit than that of service to the whole people. They are problems that touch the vast majority of our citizenship—those who are the backbone of the nation, and who have a right to share in its prosperity.

This same central thought of service was uppermost in the mind of the President when he spoke in New York on the night before he sailed the second time for France. He regarded himself as the ambassador to the Peace Congress of the whole American people, not of any class or party. All Americans, he felt confident, had caught the spirit that dominated our soldiers, who went into the war to serve their fellow men. Our sons fought to make world-peace possible. Americans are going to keep on serving their fellow men, that the full victory may be reaped, and he personally would not relax his efforts to serve also and so be worthy of the common cause. The time had come for us to stop thinking of the rival interests of nations, and to think rather of the men and women and children throughout the world who need our help and are looking to us to give it. This appeal from the people themselves is what has moved the heart and roused the spirit of this nation, and which inspires our President to set out again, that he may complete the work of world service already begun.

We feel we must pity those who are incapable of the broader sympathy—the wider sense of duty. And we rejoice that the President had the courage to speak boldly as he did. Like him, we believe that the American people have heard the call, and that he has their heartiest approval as he speeds on his mission without loss of time. Lowell must have had some such service as this in mind when he wrote:

"The longer on this earth we live
 And weigh the various qualities of man,
  The more we feel the high, stern-featured beauty
  Of plain devotedness to duty,
 Steadfast and still, nor paid with mortal praise,
  But finding amplest recompense
  For life's ungarlanded expense
 In work done squarely and unwasted days."

Take Care of Your Liberty Bonds

DURING the war the Treasury asked us to hold our Liberty bonds. Now that the war is over and there is no patriotic reason for retaining these investments, the woods are rapidly filling with get-rich-quick schemes which regard the 21,000,000 Liberty bondholders as their natural prey. There are good land companies, but few of them offer their holdings through plausible agents in a house-to-house canvass. There are good oil and mining companies, but their stock is usually floated on the stock exchange. If you get an attractive circular offering fabulous returns in oil or coal or silver or gold, to be gained from a new company just organized, especially if your Liberty bonds are sought in exchange for the stock, the quicker you can shove the whole proposition in the fire the better for your peace of mind.

Three things commonly offered as investments are usually nothing but gambles; real estate that is too far away for you to see it, mining and oil stocks, stocks and bonds of small manufacturers and merchants. The Astors made millions on New York City real estate, but other millions are being lost by thousands who tried to follow their example. Fortunes were made in Texas oil, but thousands lost the savings of years in oil companies that were honestly operated, while the dishonest ones reaped a golden harvest. Tonopah made millionaires and paupers with equal ease, but made thousands of the latter to tens of the former. The silver mines of Colorado, the copper mines of Montana, the gold of California—they number their victims in armies and their favorites are few.

But easy-spoken men and women sold the stocks to easy buyers. These smooth talkers, skilful in appeals to vanity and cupidity, are being loosed upon the millions of bond-buyers. Don't be an easy buyer!!

Public Opinion on Tap

ONE of the signs of the times which shows the desperation of the supporters of the liquor traffic is the circulation in the hotels of our large cities of the following card:

I, THE UNDERSIGNED, protest against the methods by which the Prohibition Amendment has been acted upon by State Legislatures in disregard of the opinion of the people, and record myself as opposed to National Prohibition.

Signature..

Address..

On the reverse side is the address of the Association Opposed to National Prohibition in New York City. Thousands of these cards are being circulated for signature at the tables in almost all of the New York hotels, and many people are signing them over and over again, dozens of times at different hotels. The statement that "the prohibition amendment has been acted upon by our State legislatures in disregard of the opinion of the people" is a shallow pretext. Public opinion has been expressed in favor of prohibition through hundreds of assemblies representing religious convocations and other public gatherings, and by a very large proportion of the press. This has been so impressed upon Congress by the nation-wide campaign that both houses have recognized the wishes of the people in this respect. There is probably hardly a single member of either house who cannot testify to this, in his relations with his constituents by mail and otherwise. Except from the liquor interests and its representatives, who might naturally be expected to make a fight, there has not been a single occasion upon which any influential protest has been made against the reform. The deluging of the hotels with protest cards is a cheap trick, and will not change the situation.

A Good Cause to Help

WE WANT to say just a few words to our readers about the Bowery Mission. They know the history of this wonderful institution, which has been the means of lifting up many thousands of human derelicts by Christian kindness and brotherly assistance and bringing them back to decent, self-supporting manhood. Young men and old, youths and graybeards, belonging to that great class of those who have missed the right way of life and become stranded on the rocks and shoals, come to the Bowery Mission. For nearly three-score years it has been a lighthouse of safety and restoration. In that time it has been the means of bringing back to upright and self-respecting lives a great army of this class. Its Brotherhood has an enrolled membership of 33,000. You will find the Mission's converts in almost every American city—men who tell of it as having been the means of their reformation when drink or evil courses or crime had made them to be shunned and counted as among the black sheep of our population. Many men who were thus won back are now the heads of united families, respected by their neighbors and blessed with perity and happiness in their new life; some hav come heads of missions themselves, for the Bo is a "Mother of Missions," and its converts are in many lands besides our own.

During these days of great demands on the osity of the nation, the work of the Bowery Mis has still gone on, although many of its former pat owing to the heavy calls from other quarters, not contributed to it this year. We feel that they have a kindly sympathy with its work. We be that if they knew the present needs of the Mis they would gladly give help. Therefore we make appeal to all of our readers in behalf of the Bo Mission, in order that it may be enabled to kee work going. It needs your aid and it needs it Will you not, when you read this plain statem send a contribution, and make it as liberal as y heart dictates?

In this period of widespread unemployment burden on the Bowery Mission is unusually heavy. every reader were to send a small gift it would b the greatest assistance just at this time of need. D hesitate, but send just what you can. The Miss is supported entirely by voluntary contributions, we are confident that our appeal will not be in v You can make no better investment of a few doll anywhere than in devoting them to this work of hum reclamation. Send to the care of the Christian Hera Bible House, New York. Every gift will be ackno edged and will be applied without diminution to work of the Mission.

The Way to Success

"IF you never do more than you are paid for, you w never get paid for more than you do."

A good motto that! It is the motto which t girls of a trade training school in Boston have adopt as the principle which shall guide them in their wor

It might well be the motto of every man and wom who toils. And who of us do not? Who is there whom it does not apply?

The man who gives less than he receives will be le behind in the race of life. It is the fit who survive.

The real failures are the men and women who ha deceived themselves into thinking that they can s ceed without being worthy of success. They gi little and expect much. They are doomed to disa pointment.

They may accumulate money, but their lives destitute of those achievements which mean succes They may wield power over their fellow men, but th own souls are dwarfed by their thoughts and their deed

The success worth struggling for is not to be tained in that way.

Mexico's Proffer

MEXICO, in an unofficial but emphatic way, h expressed a desire for closer relations and better understanding with ourselves. Presi dent Carranza has spoken his mind freely in a lon talk with an American correspondent in the nation palace. He complains that a part of the Americ press has treated him unfairly, and that the Mexic attitude toward Americans has been misrepresente He believes there is an organized propaganda " depreciate the Mexican government and people b making American citizens think that their fello citizens are ill-treated in Mexico and not wante there." This he repudiates as absolutely untrue. H assures us that his people and government apprecia what American business men, missionaries and tou ists are doing in informing their own nation concernin actual conditions in Mexico. Transportation, agri culture, education and economic conditions are al reaching a more satisfactory stage. There is still law lessness in remote sections, but this, he reminds u is not confined to Mexico. Every effort is now mad to give protection to Americans. He believes tha fair play and international friendship can solve th problems that have affected the relations of the tw countries in the past, and that if they can only ge together on friendly terms troubles and misunder standings will disappear.

We have always been ready to help Mexico whe help was needed, and if President Carranza's new at titude—whether influenced by the outcome of the great war or by other causes—is representative of the desire of the people of Mexico, as we are disposed to think it may be, we know of no barriers that should stand in the way of good relations between the two republics. Mexico has done well to treat the situation with frankness. It is a good beginning and may lead to better things.

THE SPIDER AND THE FLIES OF WALL STREET

By ORISON SWETT MARDEN

Famous Editor and Author of Many Character-Building Books

ONE day recently I was talking to a man advanced in years who is now doing e work of an office-boy ecause in his youth he anted to "get rich quick." n the advice of a friend e had gambled in Wall tree

"I bought U. S. Steel tock," he said. "I bought n margins, and to save what I first invested I had to eep adding to the amount as prices went up until the mall fortune I had inherited was gone. Then I began o borrow, and never stopped until I had invested 15,000. I lost every cent of it. If I had bought the tock outright," he sighed, "I'd be drawing dividends ow instead of working for ten dollars a week!"

The Wall Street editor of a leading New York paper ecently published the statement that only one person n three hundred really made any money in Wall treet speculations. The one who wins, except in are instances, is in all probability the man ho has made a thorough study of Wall treet business, who is familiar with stocks nd bonds and with the markets at home and broad. As one writer very neatly put it: Here's the secret of the stock market: In very toss-up, heads win."

The man who, like the one I referred to, on he advice of a friend, who, perhaps, knows s little about the business as he does himelf, risks everything he has in a Wall Street peculation has just about as much horse ense and judgment as the man who would nter a highly skilled technical business ithout any preparation whatever and yet xpect to succeed.

In an interview on this subject some time go with one of the ablest and most successul men in Wall Street, he got at the very eart of the matter. I would advise young nen—men, and women, too, of any age from wenty to seventy—to take careful note of is words. He says:

"Success in Wall Street is attained, as a ule, the same way as elsewhere. There is no oyal road to wealth, even in speculation. Popular fancy pictures men as growing rich in day in dealing in stocks. They do so rarely, nd they grow poor in an hour—often. Wall Street is no place for the man who expects o amass a fortune in a hurry, although he is much in evidence here. He brings his money with him with the expectation of having it multiplied immediately; he has his ups and downs, and after a while departs, almost invariably without his money. He is greatly surprised and disappointed, of course, and often thinks he is an unfortunate exception to the general rule; whereas his experience is in strict conformity with the rule—a rule which, in the long run, is as inevitable in its working as a natural law. There is nothing in it to wonder at. The outsider in Wall Street is a man who is embarking in a business without knowing its first principles. He has plenty of advice, of course; but it is a rare thing to succeed on advice alone. To be successful in Wall Street, as elsewhere, you must know your business."

AMERICAN haste has a most unfortunate and dangerous manifestation in the too common eagerness to get rich by some lucky hit; to acquire a fortune without the slow and painful process of earning it. The speculative tendency of the times is a real peril to young men. It is antagonistic to business principles and subversive of high character itself.

It is a dangerous experience in a young man's life when he gets his first dollar that is not fairly earned, or when he makes a few hundred dollars by the turn of a wheel, or the fortune of a card, or a lucky bet. The chances are that he will never be quite content to jog along in what he considers humdrum business life. His lucky hit may prove the first serious obstacle to a true and lasting success.

A metropolitan daily newspaper some time since invited confessions by letter from those who felt that their lives had been failures. Guaranteeing secrecy regarding the name or identity of any one making such a confession, the newspaper asked two questions: "Has your life been a failure? Has your business been a failure?"

Many pitiful "confessions" were received. The writers attributed their failure to various causes; but the great majority frankly admitted that it was due to missteps taken early in life, to gambling or to dissipation of some kind.

One man wrote: "I was in a fine position, on a good salary, when I went to a horse-race and won six hundred dollars. I could not after that afford to work for what now looked like a very small salary, so I resigned next day, lost all I had in two years, got another good place as traveling salesman and reformed my habits; but unfortunately I attended the Gloucester races one day, bet and won. The bookmaker hired me at ten dollars a day. I lost everything again, and suffered tortures. Friends, sweetheart and all forsook me. I was never drunk, but my life has been a sad failure."

This man is a type of thousands who every year, bitten by the American mania to "get rich quick," sacrifice promising prospects because they cannot afford to work and wait years for success to come in the old legitimate way.

The great failure army is full of people who tried to get rich quick. The jails are full of people who tried short cuts to success. They all played a game of chance, and lost, as the gambler on chance almost invariably does.

THE speculative tendency of the times is a real peril to young men.

American haste has a most unfortunate and dangerous manifestation in the too common eagerness to get rich by some lucky hit; to acquire a fortune without the slow and painful process of earning it.

The great failure army is full of people who tried to get rich quick.

Gambling is a game in which to win is to lose.

At the present time dishonest brokers are working on the credulity and business ignorance of men and women who are not satisfied with the 4¼ per cent. interest they are receiving on their Liberty Bonds.

Four-fifths of all the failures in the business world are due to shortcomings inherent in persons doing business and only one-fifth to causes outside and beyond the individual's control.

Only one speculator in three hundred makes money in Wall Street.

A few years ago a young man left a position which had great promise, because he thought his advancement was too slow. He went into the real estate business, where he adopted gambling methods and took great chances. In two or three weeks, by a lucky "deal," he had become wealthy. He dressed in the height of fashion, spent money lavishly and felt sure he was on the road to millionairedom. He tried to explain to me how foolish young men were to take so many years to build a fortune when, if they had brains and a little dare in them, it could be done so quickly. For his part, he said, he did not propose to spend the better part of his life getting money enough to retire on; he expected to do it in a very short time, and then quit and have a good time while he was still young enough to enjoy it. Today that young man is down and out; his gambling speculations have landed him in a quagmire. Not only that, but he has dragged others into the quagmire with him. Those who were dazzled by his sudden rise trusted him with their money, believing that he had found a short cut to fortune, and they also lost their money.

GAMBLING is a game in which to win is to lose. There is nothing more demoralizing to a young man just starting out in life than a fortunate venture, a chance hit which has put him in possession of a lot of money which he did not earn. His head is turned by once tasting the sweets of fortune which he did not legitimately earn. He thinks he has discovered a short cut to success, and he is unwilling afterward to settle down to hard, steady, concentrated work. In short, he grows conceited over his lucky hit, and does not think it necessary for him to plod along as most people do. He believes he has superior brains; he has found the "get rich quick" secret, and so he goes on playing the game that leads him on to utter failure and misery.

"A considerable proportion of failures in business and ninety per cent. of the defalcations, thefts and ruin of youths among those who are employed in places of trust are due directly to gambling," said Chauncey M. Depew. "I have seen in my vast employment so much misery caused by the head of the family neglecting its support and squandering his earnings in a policy shop, and promising young men led astray in a small way, and finally becoming fugitives or landing in the criminal dock, that I have come to believe that the community which licenses and tolerates public gambling cannot have prosperity or happiness." Although many forms of public gambling, such as policy shops, lotteries and betting on horses, have been done away with in recent years, the passion for gambling is as strong as ever. And as long as there is a chance of getting something for nothing it will persist.

There are thousands of men and women living in utter poverty and misery today because some one took chances, gambling away a competence for a chimerical fortune that never materialized, that never had any basis in reality. I have just read of a middle-aged man with a family who invested every penny he owned, even selling his home, worth $9,000, to put the money in worthless mining stock. He was assured by specious promoters that he was taking no risk whatever, that the stock was selling fast, and that he should not lose the opportunity of taking all he could, for it was already paying dividends. The poor victim fell to their game to the extent of more than $20,000. When he discovered the swindle and realized that he had beggared himself and his family, the man was on the point of a nervous breakdown.

AT THE present time dishonest brokers are working on the credulity and business ignorance of men and women who are not satisfied with the 4¼ per cent. interest they are receiving on their Liberty bonds. These smooth-tongued human sharks are offering them great opportunities to invest in mining stock that is "a sure thing," or in oil wells, or some other sort of stock that will make big money for them overnight. When they protest they have no money to invest, the suggestion is cunningly made that they exchange their Liberty bonds for this wonderful stock. The broker offers to let them have, say, ninety dollars' worth of fictitious stock for a hundred-dollar bond, which the United States government will eventually redeem at its face value. Of course, the gullible ones fall into the trap and part with a perfectly safe investment, paying a moderate interest, for one that is really going to make them rich in a little while. And pretty soon they find that all they have done is to give something for nothing.

Look out for those sharks who are getting rich quick on the gullibility of people who know nothing about stocks or bonds or business!

After a wide investigation covering many years, Dun and Bradstreet find that four-fifths of all the failures in the business world are due to shortcomings inherent in persons doing business, and that only one-fifth are due to causes outside or beyond the individual's control. While this proportion varies slightly in years of stress, yet on the whole the percentage is so constant that they virtually guarantee statistical accuracy. Among the causes of failure they give, the most important are the following four:

1. Going into business without knowing anything about that line—Inexperience. 2. Speculating. 3. Dishonesty. 4. Bad Management.

The trouble with multitudes of young men is that they are in too great a hurry to get rich, in too great a hurry to succeed. They want something easy, that will bring them quick returns. They don't want to take time to prepare. They are not willing to lay the broad and deep foundations necessary for the only genuine and enduring success—that which is based on service to mankind.

WE ARE facing a new age, an era of world reconstruction, and never before did the world call so loudly for leaders, men who are experts in their particular line. Never before was the call for specially trained brains so loud as now.

In spite of the unrest, universal disturbance and, in some cases, anarchy, following the great war, we are advancing toward an era of prosperity and opportunity such as no country has ever before seen. He who looks abroad at the great schemes already afoot, and who has a little imagination, can readily form an idea of the demand that will be made during the next score of years on the skill and genius of the world.

The call for superior service in the years to come will be and will continue insistent. But there will be no call for the "get rich quick" young men, the gamblers, those who want to take short cuts to success, to get something for nothing. The cry will be for real men, men prepared for great opportunities, ready to take responsible positions and fulfil large obligations, for men trained from the bottom to the top of a business in thoroughness and from east to west in knowledge of its possibilities. The places of honor, the big prizes of life, will be for the men who can render the most valuable service to their fellow men.

The Patriotism of Peace

*A SERMON BY REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON, D.D.

TEXT—Matt 5 : 5. "Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth." Jesus Christ.

WHAT has been the great motive and passion that has led young men to give themselves to the world war? And can similar or even greater motives and passion govern them in a world of peace?

The motives and passion that have sent men to war to suffer and die are these:

(1) Group feeling. Men will do in the mass what they will not do as individuals. The whole country was aflame with the war spirit. Men were enthusiastic by the thousand. They realized that the country was behind them.

(2) Love of the adventurous life. Thousands of men old and young enlisted out of a sense of new experiences to be met on the field of war. The love of adventure is in the hearts of most young men. It is a strong incentive to action. Many welcomed a change from the monotony of everyday struggle for existence.

(3) Sense of duty to country. This was a true and solemn feeling with great numbers. They did not want to be called "slackers." In the case of the majority, perhaps, who responded to the call to arms, this motive was the most compelling. A love of country that is free from sordid interests is a fact in young men.

(4) A true feeling wrought up over the wrongs of others. This was a real motive with thousands of American boys. It was a noble and unselfish desire to right the wrongs of Belgium and Armenia, and restore to the war-swept peoples of Europe the freedom that autocracy denied them. I have seen many letters from English boys to their parents in which they passionately declare this to be the motive which made them willing to die. No finer exhibition of unselfish sacrifice has ever been shown by men going into war.

(5) A desire to make a contribution to the future welfare of the world. Men who went into the war from a sense of adventure came to have this higher motive as the conflict went on. They realized the fact that the immediate struggle was something to be connected with the world struggle long after they were gone. This was the highest possible incentive to go into the army, and may not have been shared by very many, but it did have a place in the hearts of some of the noblest men and even boys.

We might add to these causes for the war spirit the love of fighting that many men acknowledge is a fact in their lives. It is the primitive man frankly acknowledging his animal nature when attacked.

NOW the question arises, Can the same enthusiasm and sacrifice be made a part of a peace program? What are the incentives to actuate men in the Patriotism of Peace? Suppose, as we fervently hope and pray, this war has been waged to put an end to the horrible thing forever, how about the heroisms and enthusiasms which we have seen illustrated on such a gigantic scale for the last four years? Can the Patriotism of Peace provide as large and sublime a program as the program of war?

We say at once, Yes.

The task of peace is greater than the task of war. Clemenceau, the French Premier, said, addressing the French Senate, "Gentlemen, it is harder to win peace than war." A battle can be fought and won in twenty-four hours, but a civilization worth fighting for is a matter of years of constructive planning and building. A child can destroy in a few minutes the work of art that took years of making. Destruction is easy. Construction is difficult. What is the task of peace, the task that calls for all the heroism and enthusiasm of the same men who went to the call of war? This is the task:

1. The task of bringing order out of confusion. It will tax the skill of the noblest and bravest.
2. The task of geographical boundaries. The nations fought for territory. That is the historical cause of most wars. It will not be an easy task to settle.
3. The task of uniting different nations. This is one of the problems of the League of Nations. No one pretends to think that such a thing can be done quickly or in a day. The League must be a thing of evolution and growth.
4. The task of creating new ideas as a basis for new and untried forms of government. This task also will call for all the statesmanship and courage of men ever demanded of them in waging war.
5. The task of removing human jealousies and suspicion, the growth of centuries of wrong and injustice.
6. The task of educating and Christianizing the world in order to have a sound basis for democracy.

HERE, then, is a task greater than any task of war ever known. It is constructive and calls for all the patriotism and enthusiasm of which any human being is capable. The difference between this task and the task of war is very marked. In war a man leaves behind all he holds dear. Five of the most precious things in life he abandons at the call of war—Home, Church, School, Business, Career. He cannot take any of these with him. But in the exercise of the Patriotism of Peace, he takes them all with him into the field of the conquest that peace has to make. In war the one passion prevails to do all the harm possible to the enemy. It is a passion that necessarily emphasizes one thing. In peace a multitude of mental, moral and spiritual forces are given full swing.

So far as military training is concerned in the proper training and discipline of the body the things to be desired can be met just as well, and even better, without the constant end in view of killing some one. In time of war, of necessity the mind of the soldier and of those training him is fixed on making a capable machine for killing. In time of peace the training of mind and body is fixed on making all-round men capable of facing a multitude of problems and doing the maximum of service to one's fellow men. The men and women, for example, demanded by our foreign missionary boards must have all the physical stamina of the highest trained soldiers. Very few professional soldiers could pass the examinations that the missionary societies require for their missionaries. The demands made on our foreign missionaries are greater than those demanded of the professional soldier. Men like Adoniram Judson, William Carey, David Livingstone and Alexander Duff endured physical hardships that cannot be equaled by any soldier in any war of history, and they never received any military training. England has just passed an Education Bill which forbids all military training in her school system. The incentive of war is not necessary to the finest physical training, which peace is fully prepared to meet to fit men for the fiercest struggles of body and mind in the service of humanity.

IT MUST not be forgotten that professional military life with possible war in view as the end blunts and finally kills the finest moral qualities. John Burroughs, in a recent notable article giving the reason for the German defeat, says: "All of Germany's tremendous military equipment did not make her the fittest to survive. There was one vital thing lacking—the moral sense." War does not and cannot create this sense. It tends to destroy it. Peace exalts and educates that sense. War, in the very nature of the end in view, educates the physical and emphasizes the material. But those who have thought of President Roosevelt as the exponent of physical and bodily courage will do well to recall his noble utterances to the college men of this country—a call to the creation of character which does not need war to give it enthusiasm:

"Bodily vigor is good, and vigor of intellect is even better, but far above both is character. It is true, of course, that a genius may, on certain lines, do more than a brave and manly fellow who is not a genius; and so, in sports, vast physical strength may overcome weakness, even though the puny body may have in it the heart of a lion. But, in the long run, in the great battle of life, no brilliancy of intellect, no perfection of bodily development, will count when weighed in the balance against that assemblage of virtues, active and passive, of moral qualities, which we group together under the name of character."

In this connection, it is also well to recall the saying of one who spoke a good many years ago, a warrior himself—"He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty, and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city."

THE program of the Patriotism of Peace can use every motive that called the men and boys to war. The group feeling is very prominent in the program of peace. It is specially strong now in the coming of the nations into a World League, such as history never knew before. It is working out in the union of ecclesiastical forces, it is bringing men together in community life as never before. The peace program emphasizes the group feeling.

The adventurous life is just as enticing in peace as in war. Where could one have more adventure than in the career of a missionary or social worker in Far East or Siberia in the reconstruction of the w famished countries? One of my boys in my chu has been in the Caucasus distributing Armenian lief during the war, and he is there now and will c tinue during the reconstruction period. He live life of constant danger and adventure. Thousands such men are being called into the great army of s vice in peace time. There is also the adventure th peace will offer to thousands to make concrete of democratic business and social life. The advent of the spirit into the realms of courageous sacrific an adventure by the side of which charging agains machine gun might be child's play. Most men physically brave, but great numbers of men are mo cowards when it comes to applying the teachings the Sermon on the Mount to politics, business a amusements.

The sense of duty to one's country that sent men war is just as much needed now as it was four ye ago. It is even more needed. If the country need men to fight for it, with even greater insistence Patriotism of Peace demands that the country be p served from a false political leadership and a sel commercial exploitation. For a man to be a "slacke now in the times of peace, when the country nee real patriots, should mean far more than an occasion
"slacker" who tried to avoid the draft.

IF ONE of the motives that sent men to war was desire to right human wrongs the same moti holds now in time of peace. There are wrongs of ca tal and wrongs of labor. Childhood has its wron and womanhood. There are wrongs in the Chur and the college and the market-place. There millions of the earth's inhabitants yet under bonda to drink and lust and greed and superstition. T call to right these wrongs is a call fully as heroic as a call to arms. There is plenty of opportunity to be hero and to die for the welfare of the oppressed. T age of martyrs is here, if any one yearns to be on and is willing to pay the price.

"The meek shall inherit the earth." It is a remar able statement for a man of war like the Psalmist make. And it sounds strangely effective to hear th statement made by the Man of Peace hundreds years later. There is not a single promise in the Bib for the militarist. The whole song of final victo resounds about the peacemaker. A world that fast clearing out of its civilization the curse of ce turies—drink—as it killed millions more than all th wars of the world, can also look with hopeful eyes faith to the near fulfilment of that promise made b the Psalmist and the Master when war shall be more and the meek shall delight themselves in th abundance of peace. The patriotism that war able to create is a feeble torch by the side of that tr mendous flame that peace is fitted in the nature of h own God-given attributes to inspire. The world di not understand the meekness of Jesus. It looked an still looks with contempt on an attribute which is co founded with weakness and inefficiency. The time coming when the world will have to acknowledge wi
the Psalmist and with the Master that the mee are the only real inheritors of the earth. Brute phys cal force belongs to the dark ages. Militarism is thing of the devil. The future rulers of this earth wi be the disciples of Jesus Christ, whose weapons a not material but spiritual.

The following prayer was offered up in an Englis church in London a few days ago. It voices th desire of those whose patriotism is the Patriotism
Peace to all mankind.

"O God, to whom all nations are dear, accomplish ing thy will in divers ways: teach us, we pray the to forgive our enemies and to do good to them th hate us. Have mercy upon them, even as we as mercy for ourselves. Grant to them and to us enlightened mind, a zeal for justice, a sincere desire t set aside all pride and vain ambition that they an we may unite in creating a new and better orde wherein, as brethren reconciled through thy Son, w may rejoice in the beauty of righteousness and peace

"Turn their hearts to thee; forgive the wrong that men have suffered at their hands; quicken thei consciences with a vision of the true destiny to whic thou hast called them in fellowship and friendshi with all the peoples of the earth.

"So move upon their wills and ours that all hatre and malice may die and that the spirit of love ma be born anew in them and in us. And these preciou gifts we ask in the name of Him who is the Brothe and Saviour of all, Jesus Christ, thy Son, our Lord."

---

* Pastor, Congregational Church, Topeka, Kan.

The Golden Jubilee of Woman Suffrage

Fifty Years of Organization Not Only Toward the Vote But Against Unjust and Cruel Laws

By JANE A. STEWART

Mrs. Jennie Law Hardy
National Campaigner

PIONEERS, veteran campaigners and new recruits in the solid ranks of suffragists will unite, March 24–29, at St. Louis, in the celebration of the golden jubilee of the beginning of woman suffrage in this country.

This beginning was made when Wyoming in 1869 granted full suffrage to women, leading the line of states. In the same year the women of the country began organizing to secure their enfranchisement, there being at first two groups, which were later united in the National American Woman Suffrage Association. The golden jubilee of the women's organized national suffrage movement is consequently also observed at the St. Louis meeting.

To signalize their anniversary, leaders of the National American Woman Suffrage Association are planning to form at St. Louis a powerful new development in organized suffrage, a new League of women voters, composed of women citizens of the fifteen full suffrage states, to push the suffrage campaign throughout the country. These present suffrage states are Wyoming, Colorado, Idaho, Utah, Washington, California, South Dakota, Kansas, Oregon, Arizona, Nevada, Montana, New York, Michigan and Oklahoma. In addition full suffrage prevails in Alaska, presidential and municipal suffrage in Illinois, Nebraska, North Dakota, and Vermont; presidential suffrage in Rhode Island and Indiana; and suffrage at the primaries in Arkansas and Texas.

The association in its golden jubilee call directs attention to the fact that women in England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, Canada and Germany have been recently granted the vote, and that this great Republic as a nation has fallen behind other countries. A great campaign to carry the movement "over the top" is heralded, as well as a big investigation of the "mysterious causes which deny patriotic, qualified women of our Republic a voice in their own government, while women of monarchies and erstwhile monarchies are honored with the vote."

The work of the National American Woman Suffrage Association during the past half century has been directed not only toward getting the vote but against unjust and cruel laws, many of which have been changed, giving women educational, legal, and civil privileges for which other women have given their lives and their fortunes.

The Association's persevering work in every state to secure suffrage by amendment to state constitutions, a costly, slow, and tedious process, is another story in itself. It secured the introduction into the United States Congress many years ago, of a suffrage amendment to the Federal Constitution, and it was the moving spirit in the formation in 1902 of the World's Woman Suffrage Alliance, which has auxiliary organizations in twenty-six countries, eight of which have extended full suffrage to women—Great Britain, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Norway, Denmark, Iceland and Finland—uniting women internationally for the promotion of human welfare and cooperation everywhere.

Rev. Anna Howard Shaw
Hon. National President

The organized suffragists call attention at their golden jubilee to the war work of American women, who have helped the United States to win the war in short order. In recognition of their patriotic service, it is pointed out that, if only as a matter of simple justice, the vote should be granted and the slogan of the Association become a fact—"Suffrage for every woman in the country before 1920."

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt
International President

Mrs. George W. Plummer
Illinois Leader

Mrs. Maud C. Stockwell
Minnesota

Mrs. Emily C. McDougald
Georgia President

India Looks for Help from Us

IN A letter to the Christian Herald, dated Ahmednagar, India, January 24, Rev. R. A. Hume, chairman of the Christian Herald Relief Committee, conveys the thanks of his associates and also his own for the aid our readers are rendering by their contributions. The first cable remittance of $5,000 has done good service.

Mr. Hume writes: "I am very sorry to say that the famine condition is becoming more and more serious. Multitudes of people have struggled through the last two or three months; but now the scanty resources of millions are nearly or quite exhausted. Mortality is sure greatly to increase. Many little children have lost one or both parents, and there is none to care for those little ones. One of the distressed classes which especially appeals for sympathy and aid is the large number of Christian workers employed by the missions. In normal times they can support their families on their moderate salaries; but now, with food costing three and four times as much as it formerly did, it is absolutely impossible for them to maintain themselves and their dependants. I hope that our Committee will receive another remittance from your Christian readers early in March."

A second remittance was cabled to Chairman Hume on March 5, when $10,000, representing contributions from Christian Herald readers, was forwarded for relief work through the Bombay Committee. It is to be hoped that contributions will come in in sufficient volume to make it possible to send a third remittance soon, as the need is steadily increasing.

The Times of India of January 24 said editorially:

"The famine specter has for months and months past been fastening more and more trouble upon the land. Much praiseworthy work has already been done to avert loss of life and to mitigate the sufferings of the poor; but up to the present time the most of this work has been preparatory. The worst is yet to come."

Grain for food and also for seed is being procured, and grass is being provided, but much more extensive measures are needed. In spite of all efforts, a vast number of people are believed to be at the very end of their resources and cannot hold out much longer. State relief is directed mainly to the preservation of life, but other means will be needed to make even this effective. The Times closes its article with these words: "This is not an appeal that can be pigeonholed; it is urgent, and whatever can be done should be done now."

An effort is being made to employ on public works those among the famine-stricken who are able to labor. The work is largely unskilled. The missions are having a hard struggle to keep their workers and families alive, and are looking hopefully to the generosity of America to come to their aid. The additional contributions to the India Famine Relief Fund noted on this page are hereby acknowledged:

Gifts for Starving India

Miss Bessie Hooker	$16.50
Elmer E Wood	4.00
H M Sanders	7.00
Wesley Munard	8.00
Mr & Mrs H Brisbine	1.25
Mrs S M Riggsbee	1.30
Friend, Framingham, Mass	4.00
E Handfield	3.50
E P Stevens	4.00
Clara B Allen	3.25
Hazel Pike	6.00
Miss Belle Beatty	8.00
C E Redfield	6.00
Mrs H M E Turnan	5.50
Mrs G S Reid	6.50
John H Geiser	6.00
C C Wilmore	8.00
Mr Ralph Nelson	20.50
Mrs J H Zimmer	18.35
Mrs E H True	4.00
Miss S C Sdomson	6.00
Rev. H McCall Goodwin	4.00
Mrs C A Sperry	4.00
Ida Hedrick	5.25
Jean E Hays	23.10
Jules Cusin	2.10
Mrs Wm Malters and others	4.00
Cora A Duncan	7.00
F A Johnson	4.00
H Louise Adsit	7.00
Mrs J M Gardner	3.50
Mrs J W Wakefield	4.00
Clara B Raymond	$ 7.00
Mrs J N Williams	5.25
Mrs E McRoberts	6.00
Mrs A L Martin	100.00
Geo W Gensemer	100.00
A Thank Offering, N. Dak	100.00
E G T, Allentown, Pa	50.00
Mrs Anna H Dinsmore	50.00
Henry C Blanchard	50.00
W M Brokaw	25.00
Mrs J W Williams	25.00
S E L	25.00
Miss M Earle	25.00
L W Felter	25.00
Theodosia G Emory	25.00
Herman E Martens	25.00
C P Hodges	25.00
Mrs Pauline Kiernan	20.00
Peter Ulrich	20.00
Mrs W D Benedict	20.00
Mrs G F Scofield	10.00
Miss Ruth Rhodes	10.00
Clara Moore	10.00
A Paulson	10.00
Mrs Laura Mabel Anderson	10.00
W T Russell	10.00
Miss Belle	10.00
Anson Caswell	10.00
Mary E Fisher	10.00
John E Thomas	10.00
Mr & Mrs J H Clingan	10.00
Mr & Mrs A L Johnson	10.00
A B Wisborg	$10.00
Mr. & Mrs Robt Peasgood	10.00
Mr & Mrs John Necke	10.00
Mrs Nelson Hinckley	10.00
M L Crowgey	10.00
Mrs L A Qyans	10.00
Mr Wm Sayer	10.00
Mr Arthur Seipp	10.00
G F Meyer	10.00
Mr & Mrs G Bossard	10.00
Mr McAdam	10.00
Mrs A Baker	10.00
C H Winn & Nephew	10.00
A Reader, Archbod, O.	10.00
Mr & Mrs Euston	10.00
Mrs J E Upson	10.00
Mrs L A Monroe	10.00
Blanche Palmer	10.00
J H Bailey	10.00
D R McRae	10.00
Mr & Mrs Lee Thomas	10.00
S E Chattey	10.00
W A Johnson	10.00
Wm Edmond	10.00
S H S, Lexington, Ky	10.00
Mrs R Burdie	10.00
Mrs H E. Seanland	10.00
C N Raiser	10.00
J P Winjoie	10.00
Henry Wilken	10.00

Additional gifts will be acknowledged in later issues.

SOME GREAT PREACHERS I HAVE KNOWN

BY

Rev. Francis E. Clark, D.D., LL.D.

I SHOULD have sadly wasted my opportunities had I not, in the course of much convention-going and many journeys in many lands, taken the opportunity to hear distinguished and eloquent preachers. In a comparatively brief article it is impossible, of course, to speak of all of them, but in any series of reminiscences it would indeed be ungracious not to speak of some to whom I have been greatly indebted for light and leading.

One of the greatest of these great preachers is seldom referred to in these days, though his eloquent words still vibrate in the hearts of many men who were once his students. I refer to Professor Edwards A. Park, of Andover Theological Seminary. I was one of his later students, and though he was over seventy years of age when I knew him, his mighty bow of eloquence still abode in its strength. He was a man of most impressive appearance, very tall, somewhat gaunt, with such a dome of forehead as I have seen on no other man.

He was, moreover, a man of exquisite humor, and his daily lectures on systematic theology (and he was recognized in most circles as the greatest theologian of his day) were always lighted up with sparks of brilliant wit, and sometimes of downright fun, so that his students looked forward to these lectures, not as dry, didactic hours, but as periods of enjoyment and keen intellectual stimulus.

But it was as a preacher that his power was transcendent. His duties as a teacher prevented him from preaching regularly, but when, three or four times a year, he filled the pulpit of the Seminary Chapel, we all regarded it as a great occasion, and throngs came to hear him from near and far.

His two most famous sermons (perhaps not his greatest) were his "Peter" sermon and his "Judas" sermon, and there was an insistent demand from the students every year that one or the other, or both, should be preached. To this demand he often yielded. These sermons never seemed old or out of date, even to the residents who had heard them several times. Dr. Park's tremendous personality, his wonderfully deep but flexible voice, his familiarity with Scripture, his vividness of description, his unescapable logic as he pictured the sinning but repentant Peter and the traitorous, desperate Judas; all combined were beyond my power to adequately describe.

Professor Austin Phelps was his contemporary in the same seminary, and was also a great preacher, with a power all his own. He was a master of the purest English style, and in this respect has had few rivals among the writers and speakers of America. His deep spirituality, his heavenly face and his quiet force always made a deep inpression. His daughter, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, the novelist, inherited at least his literary gifts. If my readers would know something of Dr. Phelps' power, let them read that classic of the devotional life called "The Still Hour."

AMONG all the preachers of America who have held regular pastorates, I think Henry Ward Beecher would be voted as supreme for real eloquent power. His was a spontaneous, overflowing, seemingly unpremeditated eloquence that has seldom been equaled by the world's great preachers. Apparently he could not help saying the apt thing in an eloquent way.

During much of his pastorate Dr. Richard S. Storrs held sway in a near-by church in Brooklyn, and was considered by some as an equally great preacher. But this is not the verdict of most who heard them. Of Dr. Storrs's sermons one would say, "What a splendid effort!" of Beecher's, "How wonderfully he reached my heart!"

In his mid-week services Beecher was equally helpful, simple, direct, often witty, always natural. After one such service which I attended when I was a young pastor, when sixty or seventy people were propounded for church membership, I said to him, "Mr. Beecher, I should think it would make you very happy to receive so many into your church." "Oh," he replied, "we ought to catch a lot of fish, for we have a great big pond to fish in."

When the famous trial that darkened Beecher's last days was on, a few members of the Seminary Church wanted to institute an ex parte ecclesiastical trial aside from the civil trial. I was put on the committee of five of the Seminary Church as its student member, the others being professors, to have the matter in charge. Two professors were for the trial and two against it, and I have always been glad that, as the fifth member, I voted against the ecclesiastical trial, and it never came off. It would have been a useless piece of impertinence if not of persecution. I received from both Professors Park and Phelps warm letters of commendation for the stand I took. Feeling ran high at that time, and many good men believed Beecher guilty; but posterity has not sustained their views.

I might mention many more eloquent American preachers whom it has been my privilege to know. Theodore Cuyler, Dwight L. Moody, Charles F. Deems, Bishop Simpson, Wayland Hoyt, J. Wilbur Chapman, among those who have passed to their reward. It would perhaps seem invidious to name as supreme in my opinion any among the many eloquent preachers who still abide with us.

THIRTY years ago, when an American with any religious proclivities went to England, there were two places for which he was sure to steer on his first Sunday. One was Holborn Viaduct, where the City Temple was situated; the other was the "Elephant and Castle," to which a 'bus, marked with those enigmatic and incongruous words, would carry him. Now the "Elephant and Castle" was a low-down public-house, little more than a dramshop, but near by was the great Metropolitan Tabernacle, where Charles H. Spurgeon preached for so many years. Needless to say, Americans usually avoided the "Elephant and Castle," and sought the Tabernacle.

And what a sight it was as one entered the great church and looked upon that vast audience of four or five thousand, filling the floor of the church and the two surrounding galleries! It was even more impressive to look at the audience from the high pulpit, under which sat the fifteen or twenty deacons. (And I sometimes thought what a destruction of good deacon timber would occur if the pulpit should come crashing down.)

Mr. Spurgeon himself at first sight struck one as an extraordinarily homely man, stout, gouty in his feet, and with a large, rather coarse, typically "John Bull" face. But when he spoke, his features would shine with an inward illumination that transformed them, for they shone with spiritual beauty. His voice was peculiarly melodious, and he could use it as a skilful musician can play upon a great organ. He had the same gift of spontaneous eloquence as Beecher, though I think his range of thought and interest was narrower.

"Open your mouths wide," I heard him say on my first visit, as he turned to the Bible, "and I will drop in some delicious morsels of Gospel candy."

His sermons were simplicity itself, but great because of their marvelous simplicity and clarity. As he uttered each sentence, you would say to yourself, "That could not have been put more effectively."

On my second or third visit to England, Mr. Spurgeon asked me to tell his congregation something about the Christian Endeavor movement, and a little later asked me to address his students in his famous Bible College. I shall never forget that occasion. Nearly a hundred alert, eager young men were there, and their love and admiration for their teacher were evidently unbounded. They seemed to expect that some pearls would drop from his lips whenever he opened them. They were evidently quite ready to be amused, too, and a laugh was ready for every sally of their great master. I have noticed that most great preachers have an exquisite sense of humor and are not afraid to use it.

When Spurgeon introduced me to the students, it was with some kindly bit of pleasantry which I have forgotten, but the students evidently expected that I would be as humorous as my introducer. Or perhaps it was some Yankee twang or uncouth Americanism that they expected, as did most Englishmen in those days. However, I had nothing humorous to tell them, but only the plain story of the principles of Christian Endeavor. As I spoke of the different committees, the Lookout, the Prayer Meeting, the Social, the Music, the Good Literature, etc., they began to smile, then to laugh, then almost to guffaw, as though it was a funny and absurd thing that young people could be so organized for religious work. It was evidently a huge American joke.

However, soon afterward Christian Endeavor beg to grow strong in Great Britain, and first of all Baptist churches, and many of Mr. Spurgeon students were among its stanchest defenders.

JOSEPH PARKER was a totally different type preacher, but no less great in his own way. him the simplicity of Spurgeon seemed at first to replaced by a studied artificiality, the straightfo ward proclamation of the Gospel which one hea at the Metropolitan Tabernacle gave place to seemingly theatrical address at the City Templ Yet when one came really under the spell of Josep Parker, and it was very easy to get there, his hi trionic periods, which at first seemed so exaggerate soon began to seem as natural as Spurgeon's simpl style.

So, indeed, they were; for Parker's style was much a part of himself as was Spurgeon's of himsel It fitted him like a glove.

I have spoken several times in City Temple as we as in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, both during th pastorates of their early world-famous pastors an their worthy successors, and found that there are n more delightful audience rooms or audiences in th world than there. After the fire which destroyed th interior of the latter church, it was rebuilt considerably smaller, but on the same general lines, an Dr. Pierson, Thomas Spurgeon, and now Dr. A. C Dixon from America have held the great congregation together in a remarkable way.

Dr. Parker's successor, Reginald J. Campbell, wa scarcely less noted as a preacher, though of an exactl opposite type from his predecessor, and City Templ continued to be crowded until the day when he, to th surprise of most of us, changed his denomination allegiance and went back to the Church of Englan

He came to America to address an internationa Christian Endeavor convention, and I found him t be as agreeable as a guest as he was inspiring as preacher. His halo of white hair, his ascetic, St John-like face, his rather thin but penetrating voic his lofty thought, will not soon be forgotten by thos who have heard him.

TO RETURN to Joseph Parker, about whom mor good stories are told than about any othe preacher. I recall a most characteristic address th he made at the great World's Christian Endeavo Convention in London in 1900, when nearly 50,00 delegates came together in a wonderful series o meetings. One of the great platform meeting which was held in the Alexandra Palace was meant t emphasize interdenominational fellowship, and leading ministers of the leading denominations were th speakers.

The Bishop of London, the eloquent and learne Dr. Creighton, represented the Church of England Joseph Parker the Congregationalists, Dr. Watson th Presbyterians, Dr. Greenough the Baptists, and Hug Price Hughes the Methodists—a remarkable quintette, the giants of the British pulpit, all of them now numbered among the saints above.

It was my duty to preside, and I first introduced th Bishop of London, who gave a splendid address on th temper with which we should do our religious work

Next I called upon Dr. Parker to speak. "Mr Chairman," he began, in thunderous and awe-inspiring tones, "I understood you to address the last speake as the Bishop of London. I had an impression that was the Bishop of London. A man who has preach the Gospel in one great church in the heart of Londo for twenty-five years has some right to be called th Bishop of London."

We were all amazed and dumfounded at such apparent bombast, and Congregationalists especially desired to hide their diminished heads. But Dr Parker knew what he was about, and often seemed to get into trouble for the sake of getting out gracefully for he went on to say:

"But though I might make some such claim, yet since I have heard the magnificent address of the one who preceded me, I have come to the conclusion that he has the better right to be called the Bishop of London."

It was a frightfully hot day, and the sun, beating through the glass roof, fell full upon the speakers Dr. Parker's thin alpaca coat soon showed how he wa

Continued on page 340

Caught in the Photographer's Net

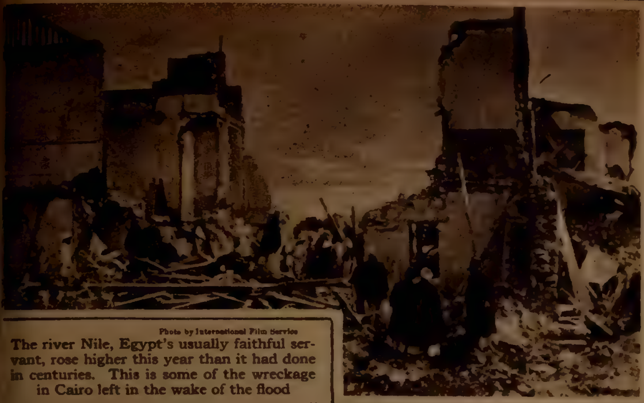

Photo by International Film Service

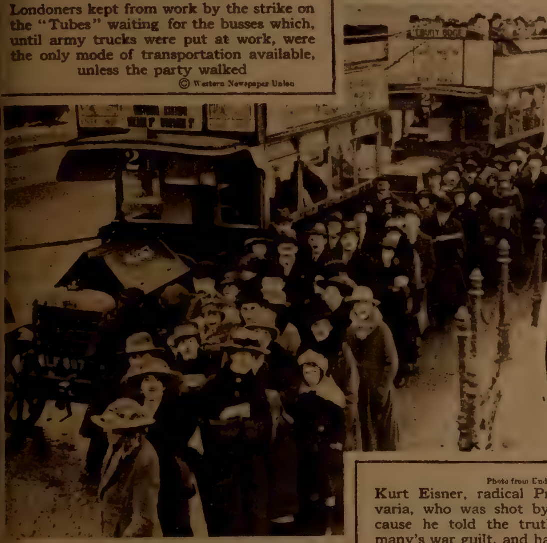
The river Nile, Egypt's usually faithful servant, rose higher this year than it had done in centuries. This is some of the wreckage in Cairo left in the wake of the flood

Because he saved a big gun from capture by the Turks, the British have pensioned this bullock for life at the rate of 2c. per day

© Underwood & Underwood

Londoners kept from work by the strike on the "Tubes" waiting for the busses which, until army trucks were put at work, were the only mode of transportation available, unless the party walked

© Western Newspaper Union



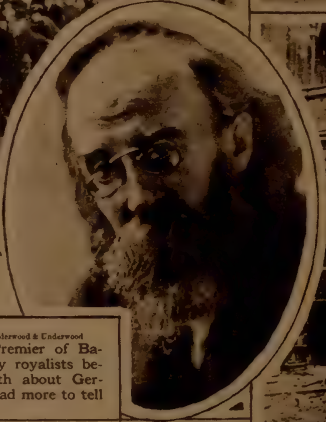


Photo from Underwood & Underwood

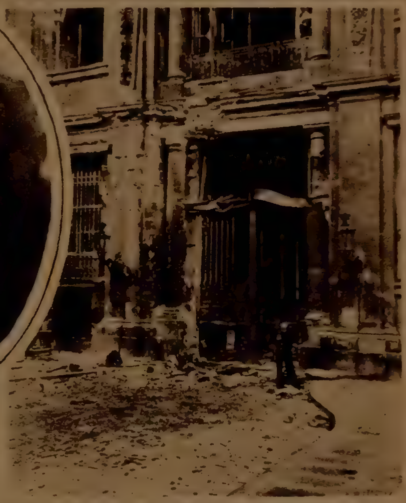
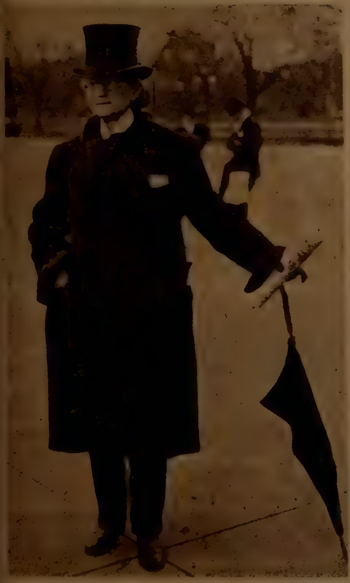
Kurt Eisner, radical Premier of Bavaria, who was shot by royalists because he told the truth about Germany's war guilt, and had more to tell



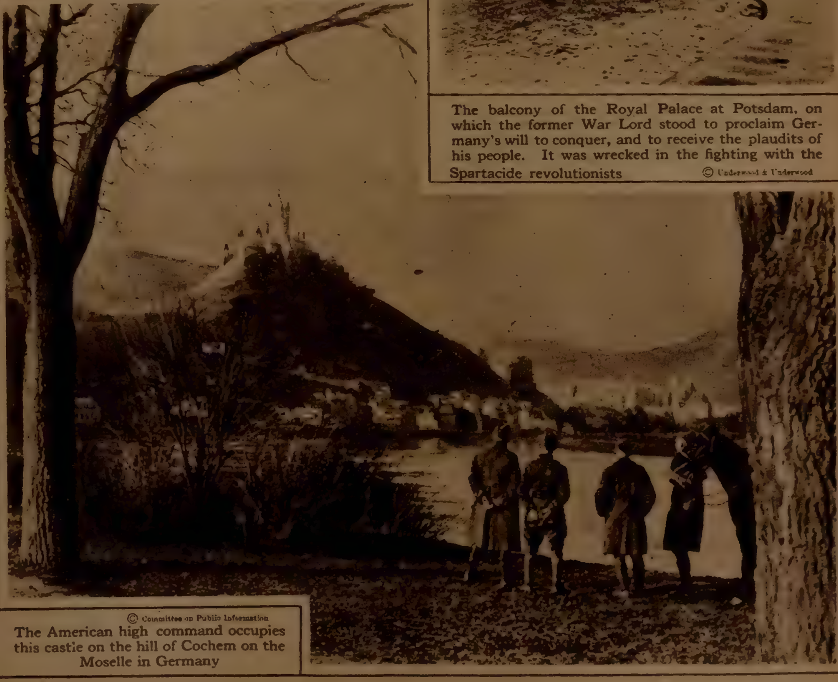
The balcony of the Royal Palace at Potsdam, on which the former War Lord stood to proclaim Germany's will to conquer, and to receive the plaudits of his people. It was wrecked in the fighting with the Spartacide revolutionists

© Underwood & Underwood



© International Film Service

Dr. Mary Walker, who died at the age of 87, after a life given largely to work for the emancipation of womanhood from political inequality. An army surgeon in the Civil War. Given special permission by Congress to wear male attire, she added ruffles



© Committee on Public Information

The American high command occupies this castle on the hill of Cochem on the Moselle in Germany

THE HISTORY OF THE GR

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD feels that it is doing a timely service for its readers in offering a splendid that staggered humanity. Hundreds have written to us stating that they hoped we would publish such a work. We will, and here is a brief description.

ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF THE GREAT WAR

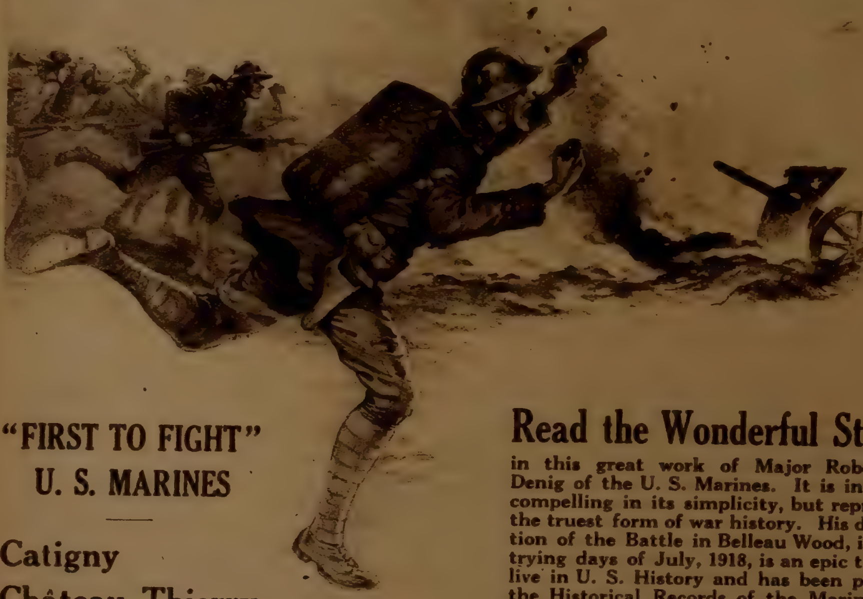
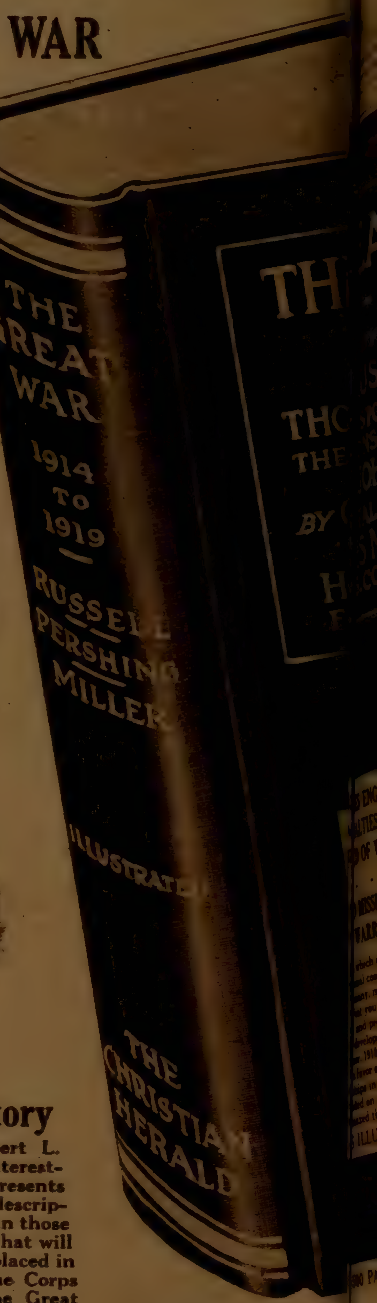
THOMAS H. RUSSELL, A.M., LL.D., the editor-in-chief of this thrilling history of great world events, has done his work in a masterly manner, and received invaluable assistance from governmental official sources, not only from our own but from the British, French and Canadian Governments.

THE GREATEST OF ALL DRAMAS unfolds itself in the pages of this work, so intense with the thrilling stories of eye-witnesses that the reader gasps at the tremendous and startling spectacles caused by this war of many nations. Actual photographs, many of them furnished from the records of the Allied Governments, embellish the work throughout, and are in themselves a great pictorial history.

WE SEE A PICTURE OF an intrepid American airman bringing down from the clouds a German adversary. Our splendid birdmen brought down 845 enemy machines in their sky duels. A portrait gallery of our most successful "aces" will appear in the supplementary volume. The history gives many thrilling and never-to-be-forgotten stories of great heroism in the air and on land and sea. Detailed descriptions of the battles that made our gallant sons immortal are unfolded by eye-witnesses, who tell simply but impressively what they saw. As the reader finds himself absorbed with the intense human interest unfolded in the hundreds of pages of clear text he suddenly comes to groups of pictures made from official photographs and finely printed on plate paper showing the men in the trenches, portraits of the famous leaders of Allied armies, "Going over the Top," the terrible implements of war such as tanks, submarines, dirigibles, battle airplanes, big guns, gas and flame attacks, transports, etc., the March of our boys to Germany after the armistice was signed, President Wilson and General Pershing receiving American troops at Humas, France, on Christmas Day, 1918, are historical pictures worthy of note.





"FIRST TO FIGHT"
U. S. MARINES

Catigny
Château-Thierry
Belleau Wood
St. Mihiel

Read the Wonderful Story

in this great work of Major Robert L. Denig of the U. S. Marines. It is interest-compelling in its simplicity, but represents the truest form of war history. His description of the Battle in Belleau Wood, in those trying days of July, 1918, is an epic that will live in U. S. History and has been placed in the Historical Records of the Marine Corps at Washington. This history of the Great War is replete with authentic stories of the unforgetable events of the winning of Right over Might. Read the closing paragraphs of this announcement about the free supplementary volume bringing the war to the signing of the peace terms and including

32 PAGES OF NEW WORLD MAPS IN COLORS

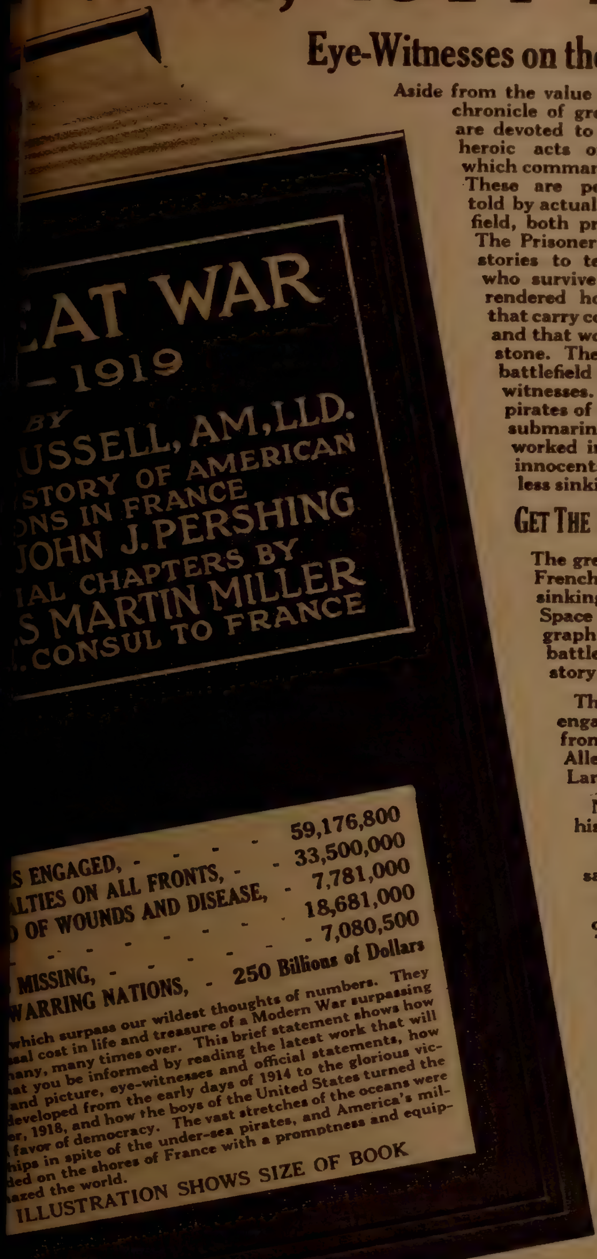
GENERA

of American operatio
From a literary, aut
our readers as a com

EVERY HOME SHOULD HAVE A COPY OF THIS SPLENDID HISTO

WAR, 1914-1919

THE WORLD'S GREATEST DRAMA



EAT WAR
—1919
BY USSELL, AM, LLD.
STORY OF AMERICAN
ONS IN FRANCE
JOHN J. PERSHING
IAL CHAPTERS BY
S MARTIN MILLER
. CONSUL TO FRANCE
S ENGAGED, - - - - - 59,176,800
LTIES ON ALL FRONTS, - - 33,500,000
OF WOUNDS AND DISEASE, - 7,781,000
- - - - - - 18,681,000
- - - - - - - 7,080,500
MISSING, - - - - 250 Billions of Dollars
WARRING NATIONS, - which surpass our wildest thoughts of numbers. They sal cost in life and treasure of a Modern War surpassing nany, many times over. This brief statement shows how at you be informed by reading the latest work that will and picture, eye-witnesses and official statements, how developed from the early days of 1914 to the glorious vic-er, 1918, and how the boys of the United States turned the favor of democracy. The vast stretches of the oceans were hips in spite of the under-sea pirates, and America's mil-ded on the shores of France with a promptness and equipazed the world.
ILLUSTRATION SHOWS SIZE OF BOOK

500 PAGES, FINE CLOTH AND GOLD BINDING

Eye-Witnesses on the Battlefields

Aside from the value of the history as a chronicle of great events, chapters are devoted to thrilling stories of heroic acts on the Battlefields which command your admiration. These are personal experiences told by actual combatants in the field, both privates and officers. The Prisoners of War have their stories to tell. The wounded who survive and the refugees rendered homeless tell stories that carry conviction with them and that would move a heart of stone. The fearful state of the battlefield is described by eye-witnesses. The story of the pirates of the sea, the enemy submarines, and how they worked in their slaughter of innocents, such as the ruthless sinking of the Lusitania.

GET THE BOOK—It Is Not Possible to Do It Justice in this Limited Space

The great German siege guns that were thought to be invincible and the French artillery in action are shown from actual photographs. The sinking of great battleships by submarines is shown in thrilling pictures. Space does not permit even a brief description of the hundreds of photographic plates that do so much to help the reader visualize the great battles he is reading about in the illuminating pages of this graphic story of the Great War.

The reader will find the government reports of the number of men engaged on all fronts. The campaigns on the great western and eastern fronts and in Russia, Italy, Serbia, Mesopotamia, and General Allenby's victorious defeat of the Turks and redemption of the Holy Land are told in vivid narrative.

No American can forego this opportunity, in justice to himself and his family. He should not fail to secure a copy of this splendid book now.

How complete is it? you ask. Right down to President Wilson sailing for the Peace Conference.

BUT HERE IS OUR FURTHER PROMISE to every one who purchases a copy of The History of the Great War for $2.50, postpaid, The Christian Herald will send a supplementary volume bound in cloth to include the further history of the War SINCE the signing of the armistice in November, 1918. This valuable supplement will not only include the report of the Peace Conference, but will have a new series of corrected as defined by the decisions of the Peace Conference and the terms of Peace, and bringing the World War down to the signing of the Peace terms.

32 PAGES OF WORLD MAPS IN COLORS

The big book is nearly ready and will be mailed soon, and the supplement will follow as soon as it is possible to complete it.

SHING'S OWN STORY

iven in full, with his glowing tribute to our fighting boys.
ictorial standpoint we cordially recommend this book to e Great War at moderate cost.

SEND IN YOUR ORDER TODAY

CLIP THIS AND MAIL TODAY

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Bible House, New York

Gentlemen:—

Please send me, postpaid, one copy of The History of the Great War, by Thomas H. Russell, A.M., LL.D., and others, as described in your announcement.

I enclose $2.50 to pay for the same. It is understood that in consideration of this order you are to send me free of charge when ready your new supplement, cloth bound, giving the history of the Peace Conference and its decisions, as well as a set of new world maps in colors, with latest corrections as defined by the Peace Conference, together with further information about the war since the armistice was signed.

Name ....

Street ....

Town .... State ....

READY REFERENCE OF THE WORLD'S MOST DRAMATIC EVENTS

J. H. Jowett, D.D.
Rev. R. Braunstein
C. C. Albertson, D.D.

Daily Meditation

C. M. Sheldon, D.D
Rev. E. W. Caswel
Prof. W. H. T. Da

The Possession of God

SUNDAY, March 2. I John 4 : 7. "Every one that loveth knoweth God." It is the appointed order of the soul's progress that we move through prayer into the ministry of love, and then there breaks upon the soul the unfolding glory of the Lord.

Love is our spiritual organ. It is the eye with which we see spiritual things. It is the ear with which we hear spiritual things. Love is the medium through which all our spiritual discoveries are to be made. Without love we can no more truly apprehend and appreciate the secret things of God than we could peer into the beauties of nature if we had no eyes, or into the riches of bird-song if we had no ears.

And so it happens that multitudes of people set out to know God without the necessary instrument. They take other instruments, but the really essential one is left behind. Perhaps they take a disciplined intellect, or they take gathered stores of learning. They may take literary and artistic sensibilities. They may even take a passion for knowledge, but they do not take a pure and fervent love-spirit which has become their own through the ministry of prayer. Therefore they have not got the right medium for the sort of knowledge they are seeking. Love which is prepared by prayer is the only medium through which we can peer into the heart of God.

This kind of love not only gives us knowledge of the Lord, it gives us possession. For in this realm knowledge is possession, for knowledge is life.

But what kind of love is this? Is it a sort of pleasant emotion that tolerates everything? Is it a goody-goody nature? Is it gushing sentimentalism? That kind of love takes us nowhere. The really magical love is the love which is ours through prayer. In profound prayer God's holy love steals into our lives like streams from the hills.

Yes, God loves love into us. And the love we receive is clean and strong. It makes no covenant with evil. It does not mingle with iniquity in a sort of soft agreeableness. It is holy because God's love is holy, and in its pure chivalry we have heart communion with God. We have the fellowship of the Holy Spirit. J. H. J.

The Religion of Loyalty

MONDAY, March 3. Rev. 3 : 8. "Thou hast kept my Word, and hast not denied my name." These words give us a portrait of an absolutely loyal soul—that of the messenger of one of the seven churches of Asia. Dr. Josiah Royce speaks of Christianity as a religion of loyalty. Faith and love and loyalty are kindred terms. The simplest definition of the Christian life is "loyalty to Christ." The spirit of independence is in the world. Two words seem to be in opposition, two ideas in collision. They are authority and liberty. Is the man under authority therefore not free? Is there no place for authority in freedom? Not only is authority consonant with freedom, but there can be no permanent freedom without the recognition of authority. Loyalty is the recognition of authority and obedience to it. Jesus Christ is the central source of authority in religion. What he says we must do, whatever the cost may be. History has no brighter pages than those which relate the story of souls who have put loyalty above their own opinions, their own desires, and even their own rights.

Ecclesiastical authority is a diminishing quality, but spiritual authority is another thing. The authority of creeds, councils, and conferences is feeble, but the times demand increasingly loyalty to the authority of conscience, the authority of the Holy Spirit, the authority of duty as revealed in the Word of God and in the providences of life. The soul that is awake fails not to hear the Master's call to worship and work, to prayer and pity, to clear thinking and high living, C. C. A.

Obedience Without Love

TUESDAY, March 4. Luke 11 : 42. "Woe unto you, Pharisees! for ye tithe mint and rue and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment and the love of God: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone." In the tragedy with which the life of Jesus closes the Pharisees and scribes were the moving spirits. The Lord's encounter with them which Luke relates in this chapter helps us to understand the external causes of his passion and martyrdom. The Pharisees prided themselves on their elevated morality; the Lord shows them that it is of quite a low type. They had applied the Jewish law of tithes with a great show of scrupulous conscientiousness: even on such insignificant trifles as mint and rue they exacted the church-tax which Moses had required of all the possessions of the Israelites as an offering to the sanctuary. It was not wrong in itself that they made this demand: the tax was due. But of such rigorous constructionists of the terms of the law it was to be expected that they would insist with still greater force on the great fundamental principles underlying the divine law of holiness. In this respect they had failed in an astonishing degree: their judgment of the moral worth of actions was superficial; they judged by appearances only, as the Lord told them on another occasion, and never inquired into the righteousness of an action. Moreover, they were ready to apply the law to others, but not to themselves. To the great requirement of the law, namely, the love of God, they paid little attention. Every action which the law enjoins it enjoins as a filial duty which God's children owe their Father in heaven. Every action is to be an expression of the love they bear God; it is to be performed with the single purpose of manifesting their faith and gratitude to God, and for the extension of his glory. The service, therefore, which the Pharisees pretended to render God, being void of the high motives which must prompt that service, was a soulless affair, a shadow without substance. It might raise them in the esteem of ignorant and vain men, but it could only incriminate them in the sight of God. Thus does the eye of Truth easily look through all holy shams in this world. W. H. T. D.

The Transfiguration

WEDNESDAY, March 5. Mark 9 : 2. "And he was transfigured before them." The transfiguration was preliminary to the crucifixion. After that wonderful night in the mountain, Christ's face was ever set toward Jerusalem. The two heavenly visitors had talked with him about Calvary and the resurrection. It seemed a cabinet meeting of the heavenly ministers with the great Ambassador. Moses and Elias stood for the law and the prophets of the past; Jesus, for the end of the law, the fulfilment of prophecy of the future. What a sublime pinnacle in human history was this scene! Here the visitors beheld the glory they had longed for in life, and the three favored disciples had witnesses to the immortality of men and to the fact that we shall know each other there. All heard the voice of the Father, testifying to the deity of the Son—"This is my beloved Son; hear ye him." There is none other name but Jesus only. The disciples, after that heavenly vision, saw Christ in a light never before realized; they knew the splendor of divinity was veiled in his flesh. He was the Unchangeable One ever after. They were commanded to tell no man of this revelation until after the resurrection, perhaps because a vision is an individual affair, useful mainly to those who see it, not being understood or believed by others.

When our Lord arose from the tomb, the transfiguration became an added glory revealed to all Christ's followers, but originally it was a vision given for a special purpose, like that which Isaiah, Paul and John beheld that they might become greater workers in the mission of bringing the world to Christ. Ordinary experiences of Christian people must not be depreciated because of the fact that some have had remarkable visions. E. W. C.

Three Types of Ministry

THURSDAY, March 6. John 3 : 30. "He must increase, but I must decrease." The new minister stood before his people and in this his first sermon outlined his platform, which, when summed up could be put thus: "Now that I am here, let me do all I can for you." The members were perfectly willing that he should. The minister did his own work and also the work of everybody else. He broke down. Likewise did the church lose its power. The year ended with a complete loss on every hand. The minister left for an "easier field."

A new pastor was secured. He too outlined his plan and program. Summed up it could read like this: "Now that I am here, do all you can for me." Strange to say, they did. All that they did for the man would fill up this page. Suffice it to say that the life of the church became anæmic. The Kingdom interests suffered by the neglect. The Church declined in spiritual values and efficiency. The result was another change of pastors.

Again there was a "new minister." He, too, in his first sermon gave an outline of his policy. It was a great sermon and a wonderful word picture of Jesus Christ. In it he said nothing about the congregation or himself. The sum and substance of his sermon was: "Here is Jesus Christ; do all you can for hi The Church did. It had a vision. New memb were added. Benevolences were doubled. Missi ary boxes were sent out. Everybody went about ing good. The Church grew stronger in grace became a power in the community. That was seve years ago. There has not been a change of past in all that time. This little story speaks for itself is its own commentary. R. B

Sober, Righteous, Godly

FRIDAY, March 7. Titus 2 : 12. "Teaching that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, should live soberly, righteously and godly, in this pr ent world." In these words Paul outlines the perf life. We must live soberly toward ourselves, righ eously toward our fellow men, and godly toward th eternal world. So these terms concern our duties self, to others than self, and to God.

The sober mind is the mind that observes a wi ratio in the natural constituents of life. It does n make too much of pleasure or of gain, of wealth of power. It sets due value on temporal and etern things. It prays to be delivered from unbelief one hand and from superstition on the other. It re ognizes the peril of excess in any direction. It se the beauty, the harmony, the perfect symmetry the life of Jesus, of whom a modern scholar has sai "Behold the Man: his head forever cool, his hea forever warm!"

The righteous mind seeks a clear vision of the righ eousness of God. God's standard of righteousne vastly differs from ours. Obedience to the law a swers earthly demands for righteousness. Matth Arnold's notion of religion was merely "morality up with emotion." How vastly above all such n tions of righteousness is God's requirement—t practice of justice, the love of mercy, and humble d votion in heaven's sight. This it is to live righteous

And what is it to live godly? Daniel's was such life, whose open chamber windows were symbols an open soul, a spirit forever looking out toward t eternal. Some one has characterized this attitude "hospitality toward God." A modern philosoph has defined religion as "an enthusiastic temper of r sponse to the universe." Substitute for the wo "universe" the word "God" and we have no quar with the definition. To live godly in this prese world is to live as in God's sight. All this we ought do, and all this God offers us help to do. C. C. A.

Cheerful Funerals

SATURDAY, March 8. I Cor. 15 : 55. "O deat where is thy victory?" During my first pastora in Vermont I had on an average three funerals a wee for two years. I found it was the custom at that tim for the minister to preach a long funeral sermon at least an hour, and harrow up the feelings of th family by dwelling on the hopeless loss that had befallen it. The minister who could provoke the greatest mourning and put the whole audience to tear and sobs was the greatest preacher in the community There was hardly a ray of hope held out to the mourners, and the emphasis was laid on the mournful sid of death.

Is it not about time, after all these years of universal death and Christianity's exultant victory over i that we started the custom of cheerful funerals?

There are at least three things that can be said a a funeral to cheer people up:

(1) Any human being whose life has come into ou to love has brought something that can never di Love is never lost and cannot be destroyed any mor than matter. The family is richer and better if has loved and been loved.

(2) If the person who has gone was a Christian h has not died at all. He is in the "place" prepare for him by the Master himself. That place is fre from pain, sorrow, sickness and death. What folly to mourn that any one dear to us has gone to make his home in such a place as that? There cannot be any such thing as a doleful death of a Christian. But in our common funeral customs we act as if an irreparable loss had been sustained. Where is the "victory" that Paul emphasizes?

(3) If our friends have any knowledge of th earthly life they have left, how can they be happy even in heaven, if they see us mourning and grieving continuously after they are gone? If we want to make those whom we have loved happy, we ought to be happy ourselves.

When I die, I want my people to sing the most exultant and triumphant song in the church hymnbook. No dirge, but a pæan of victory. Let us have cheerful funerals. C. M. S.

The Search

By

GRACE LIVINGSTON HILL

([illegible])

Author of "The Witness," "The Measure of a Man," Etc

CHAPTER XV

ALL day the shells had been flying thick and fast. When night settled down the fire was so continuous that one could trace the le front by the reflection in the sky.

ameron paced back and forth at his under the stars and cried out in oul for God. For days now Death stalked them very close. His com- s had fallen all about him. There ned to be no chance for safety. And e was God? Had He no part in all hell on earth? Did He not care? ld He not be found? All his seeking praying and reading of the little k seemed to have brought him no er. He was going out pretty soon, the natural order of the battle if gs kept on, into the other life, with- having found the God who had mised that if he would believe, and e would seek with all his heart, he ld surely find Him.

nce in a Y. M. C. A. hut on a Sunday t a great tenor had come to enter- them, and he had sung almost the y words that the stranger back in the tes had written in his little book:

with all your hearts ye truly seek Him,
Ye shall ever surely find Him,
Thus saith your God!"

nd ever since that song had rung its nderful melody down deep in his rt he had been seeking; seeking in the ways he knew; with a longing t would not be satisfied. And yet eemed to have found nothing.

o now as he stood beneath the stars, king up, his soul was crying out with longing of despair to find a Saviour, Christ of his soul. Amid all the dderings of the battle-rent earth, concussions of the bursting shells, ld even God hear a soul's low cry?

uddenly out in the darkness in front him there flickered a light, only a ck of a glint it was, the tiny spark of igarette, but it was where it had no iness to be, and it was Cameron's iness to see that it was not there. ey had been given strict orders that re must be no lights and no sounds to e away their position. Even though thoughts were with the stars in his rch for God, his senses were keen and the alert. He sprang instantly and ntly, appearing before the delinquent a miracle.

"Halt!" he said under his breath, ut out that cigarette!"

"I guess you don't know who I am!" ggered a voice thick and unnatural, t yet had a familiar sound.

"It makes no difference who you are, can't smoke in this sector while I'm guard!" and with a quick motion he ght the cigarette from the loose lips d extinguished it, grinding it into the und with his heel.

"I'll—have you—c-c-co-martialed fer s!" stuttered the angry officer, step- g back unsteadily and raising his fist.

In disgust Cameron turned his back d walked away. How had Wain- ight managed to bring liquor with n to the front? Something powerful d condensed, no doubt, to steady his rves in battle. Wainwright had ever en noted for his cowardice. His eath was heavy with it. How could a n want to meet death in such a way? turned to look again, and Wain- ight was walking unsteadily away er the line where they had been for- dden to go, out into the open where e shells were flying. Cameron watched n for an instant with mingled feelings. d he called himself a man, and dared think of marrying such a woman as th Macdonald! Well, what if he did into danger and get killed! The world s better off without him! Cameron's art was burning hot within him. His emy was at last within his power. No e but himself had seen Wainwright ove off in that direction where was rtain death within a few minutes. It s no part of his duty to stop him. He was not supposed to know he had been drinking.

A shell went ricocheting through the air and Cameron dropped as he had been taught to do, but lifted his eyes in time to see Wainwright throw up his arms, drop on the edge of the hill, and disappear.

The shell plowed its way in a furrow a rod away, and Cameron rose to his feet. Sharply, clearly, in the brief lull of the din about him he heard his name called. It sounded from down the hill, a cry of distress, and it did not sound like Wainwright's voice:

"Cameron! Come! Help!"

He obeyed instantly, although he had no thought of its being Wainwright, strange to say. He crept cautiously out to the edge of the hill and looked over. The glare of the heavens made objects below quite visible. He could see Wainwright huddled as he had fallen. While he looked the injured man lifted his head and struggled to crawl feebly, but fell back again. Cameron felt a sense of relief that at last his enemy was where he could do no more harm. Then, through the dim darkness he saw a figure coming toward the prostrate form, and stooping over to touch him. It showed white against the dark, and it paid no heed to the shell that suddenly whistled overhead. It half lifted the head of the fallen officer. and then straightened up and looked toward Cameron; and again, although there was no sound audible now in the din that the battle was making, he felt himself called.

A strange thrill of awe possessed him. Was that the Christ out there whom he had been seeking? And what did he expect of him? To come out there to his enemy? To the man who had,been in many ways the curse of his young life?

Suddenly as he still hesitated, a verse from his Testament which had often come to his notice returned clearly to his mind:

"If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave there thy gift before the altar; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift."

There was no time now to argue that this man was not his brother. The man would be killed certainly if he lay there many minutes. The opportunity would pass as quickly as it had come. The Christ he sought was out there, and he must lose no time in going to Him. There might be death for him, but that didn't matter. There certainly was something far more distasteful than death if it meant doing anything for his enemy, but "if with all your heart ye truly seek" echoed in his soul, and he crept slowly forward over the brow of the hill, and into the eye of the searchlight, going toward that white figure above the huddled dark one; creeping slowly, painfully, with bullets ripping up the earth about him. He was going to the Christ, with all his heart—yes all his heart! Even if it meant putting by his enmity forever!

Somewhere on the way he understood.

When he reached the fallen man there was no white figure there. He was not surprised nor disappointed. The Christ was not there, because he had entered into his heart. He had found Him at last!

BACK at the base hospital they told Wainwright one day how Cameron had crawled with him on his back, out from under the searchlights and the shells, and into safety. It was the only thing that saved his life, for if he had lain long with the wound he had got, there would have been no chance for him. Wainwright, when he heard it, lay thoughtful for a long time, a puzzled, half-sullen look on his face. He saw that everybody considered Cameron a hero. There was no getting away from that the rest of his life. One couldn't in decency be the enemy of a man who had saved one's life. Cameron

PURITAN
OIL COOK STOVES

Reversible Glass Oil Reservoir

Make Good Every Time

WHATEVER the occasion may be, the Puritan Oil Cook Stove does its work on time, promptly—and in addition gives you the comforts of a clean, cool kitchen.

It gives you confidence to prepare a big meal for the family, or a party dish for the little folk—for the Puritan satisfies all cooking purposes with a cleaner, hotter flame, and without the muss of coal or wood.

You set your utensil in a clean, hot flame that comes up through the grate—like gas. Turn the indicator on the burner—low, medium or high—and the flame stays set at that point, without watching. At full heat the indicator's automatic wick stop prevents smoking.

The Puritan gives long service because the burners—the vital parts—are made of brass.

Reversible Glass Oil Reservoir

This new feature of the Puritan makes quick, clean handling of kerosene oil—an ideal way for the housewife.

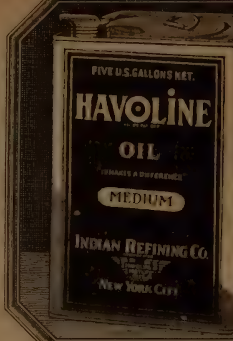
Puritan stoves are sold by reliable dealers everywhere.

THE CLEVELAND METAL PRODUCTS CO.
7730 Platt Ave. Cleveland, O.

See your dealer or write for free Puritan booklet No. 24

HOUSEHOLD PRODUCTS

Look for the Triangle trade mark



The Oil that keeps pace with Motor Improvement

THE name Havoline on lubricating oil epitomizes certain things that it will profit you, as the owner of a passenger car, truck, or tractor, to remember.

Havoline Oil is one of the oldest motor lubricating oils. A score of years of patient development have made it what it is today. It has kept pace with motor improvement

Heat will not break up Havoline Oil

It does everything that a motor lubricating oil should and can do Thousands upon thousands of motorists have discovered that Havoline Oil makes their cars run as smoothly and quietly as a placid river

The name Havoline is more than just a guarantee of quality. It conveys a singularly persuasive satisfaction to the purchaser; for it is a symbol of not only unusual worth, but of prolonged years of craftsmanship behind it.

One of the grades of Havoline Oil exactly fills the need of your car, truck, or tractor, whatever its make, type, model, or length of service. Your dealer will tell you just what grade of Havoline you require. Whether you buy it by the gallon for your car or by the barrel for your tractor, you will find that this distinguished oil will save you repairs, breakdowns, idleness, and expensive replacements.

Havoline greases are compounded of Havoline Oil and pure, sweet tallow. Clean to handle and correct in body had won out in a final round. It wouldn't be good policy not to recognize it. It would be entirely too unpopular. He must make friends with him. It would be better to patronize him than to be patronized by him. Perhaps, also, down in the depths of his fat, selfish heart, there was a little bit of gratitude mixed with it all. For he did love life, and he was a mortal coward.

INDIAN REFINING COMPANY, NEW YORK
Incorporated
Producers and Refiners of Petroleum

So he sent for Cameron one day, and Cameron came. He didn't want to come.. He dreaded the interview worse than anything he had ever had to face before in his life. But he came. He came with the same spirit with which he had gone out into the shell fire after Wainwright. Because he felt the Christ asked it of him.

He stood stern and grave at the foot of the little hospital cot and listened while Wainwright pompously thanked him, and told him graciously that now that he had saved his life he was going to put aside all the old quarrels and be his friend. Cameron smiled sadly. There was no bitterness in his smile. Perhaps just the least fringe of amusement, but no hardness. He even took the bandaged hand that was offered as a token that peace had come between them who had so long been at war. All the time were ringing in his heart the words: “With all your heart! With all your heart!” He had the Christ, what else mattered?

Somehow Wainwright felt that he had not quite made the impression on this strong man that he had hoped, and in an impulse to be more than gracious he reached his good hand under his pillow and brought forth an envelope.

When Corporal Cameron saw the writing on that envelope he went white under the tan of the battlefield, but he stood still and showed no other sign.

“When I get back home I'm going to be married,” said the complacent voice, “and my wife and I will want you to come and take dinner with us some day. I guess you know who the girl is. She lives in Bryne Haven up on the hill. Her name is Ruth Macdonald. I've just had a letter from her. I'll have to write her how you saved my life. She'll want to thank you, too.”

How could Cameron possibly know that that envelope addressed in Ruth Macdonald's precious handwriting contained nothing but a Christmas card such as she was sending to all her old acquaintances in the service, with a scribbled Christmas greeting across the corner?

“What's the matter with Cammie?” his comrades asked one another when he came back to his company. “He looks as though he had lost his last friend. Did he care so much for that Wainwright guy that he saved? I'm sure I don't know what he sees in him. I wouldn't have taken the trouble to go out after him, would you?”

More and more Cameron's influence had been felt quietly among his company. In his presence the men refrained from certain styles of conversation, and when he sat apart and read his Testament they hushed their boisterous talk, and lately some had come to read with him. He was generally conceded to be the bravest man in their company, and when a fellow had to die suddenly he liked Cameron to hold his hand.

So far Cameron had not had a scratch, and the men had come to think he had a charmed life. More than he knew he was beloved of them all. More than they knew their respect for him was deepening into a kind of awe. They felt he had a power that they knew not of. He was still the “Silent Corporal.” He talked not at all of his new-found experience, yet it shone in his face in a mysterious light. Even after he came from Wainwright with that stricken look, there was above it all a glory behind his eyes that not even that could change. For three days he went into the thick of the battle, moving from one hairbreadth escape to another with the calmness of an angel who knows his life is not of earth, and on the fourth day there came the awful battle, the struggle for a position that had been held by the enemy for four years, and that had been declared impregnable from the side of the Allies.

The boys all fought bravely and many fell; but foremost of them all, passing unscathed from height to height, Corporal Cameron led them in fearlessness and spirit; and when the tide at l was turned and they stood triumpha among the dead, and saw the ener retiring in disorder, it was Cameron w was still in the forefront, his white fa and blood-stained uniform catching t last rays of the setting sun.

Later when the survivors had all co together one came to the captain wi white face and anxious eyes:

“Captain, where's Cammie? V can't find him.”

“He came a half-hour ago and volu teered to slip through the lines tonig and send back a message,” he said husky tones.

“But, captain, he was wounded!”

“He was?” The captain looked startled. “He said nothing about it

“He wouldn't, of course,” said t soldier. “He's that way. But he w wounded in the arm. I helped hi bind it up.”

“How bad?”

“I don't know. He wouldn't let n look. He said he would look after when he got back to the tent.”

“Well, he's taken a wireless in h pocket and crept across No Man's Lar to find out what the enemy is going do. He's wearing a dead Jerry's un form!”

The captain turned and brushed t back of his hand across his eyes, and low sound between a sob and a whi pered cheer went up from the gathere remnant as they rendered homage their comrade.

FOR three days Cameron's messag came floating in telling vital secre that were of vast strategic value. The they ceased, and the anxious captai and comrades looked in vain for wor
Two more days passed—three—and sti no sign that showed that he was aliv
The word went forth “missing!” an “missing” he was proclaimed in th papers.

That night there was a lull in the se tor where Cameron's company wer located. No one could guess what wa going on across the wide dark spa called No Man's Land. The capta sent anxious messages to other office and the men at the listening-posts ha no clue to give. It was raining and chill bias sleet that cut like knives wa driving from the northeast. Wat trickled into the dugouts, and soppe through the tents. Men wet to the ski shuddered their way along dark passag and waited. Only scattered artille fire lit up the heavens here and ther
It was a night when all hell seemed l loose to have its way with earth. T watch paced back and forth and pray or cursed, and counted the minutes t his watch would be up. Across t blackness of No Man's Land, poc marked with great shell craters, the raged a tempest, and even a Hun wo turn his back and look the other way such a storm.

Slowly, oh, so slow that not even th earth would know it was moving, cre and crawled a dark creature forth fro the enemy line. A thing all of spir could not have gone more invisibly Lying as motionless as a stone; stirri every muscle with a controlled mov ment that could stop at any breat lying under the very nose of the Germ guard without being seen and gone wh next the guard passed that way; slowl painfully gaining ground, with a tra of blood where the stones were cruel, a a holding of breath when the fit searchlights played across the wa struck more than once as the scatte fire continued; faint and sick, it co tinued to creep, chilled and sore a stiff, blinded and bleeding and torn.

“Halt!” came a sharp, clear voi through the night.

“Pat! Come here! What's that whispered the guard. “Now watch
I'm sure I saw it move— There! I going to it!”

“Better look out!” But he was o and back with something in his arm
Something in a ragged, blood-soake
German uniform.

They turned a shaded flashlight in his face and looked.

“Pat, it's Cammie!” The guard wa sobbing.

At sound of the dear old name th inert mass roused.

“Tell Cap they're planning to sli away at five in the morning. Tell hi wants to catch them he must do ! Don't mind me! Go quick!"

voice died away and the head ped back.

ith a last wistful look Pat was off to captain, but the guard gathered eron up in his arms tenderly and ed him like a baby, crooning over in the sleet and dark, till Pat came with a stretcher, and they bore to the dressing-tent.

nd while men worked over his silent others were hastily preparing, and short time a great company of dark s, closely massed, stole forth across Man's Land till they seemed like a t dark sea rolling on to engulf the y.

ext morning the newspapers of the d set forth in largest type the glori- victory, and how the Americans had n upon the enemy, cut them off the rest of their army, and wiped whole salient.

it while the world was rejoicing, eron lay on his little hard stretcher e tent and barely breathed. He not opened his eyes nor spoken n.

CHAPTER XVI

NURSE stepped up to the doctor's desk:

"A new girl is here ready for . Is there any special place you her put?" she asked in a low tone.

e doctor looked up with a frown:

ne of those half-trained Americans, ppose?" he growled. "Well, every helps. I'd give a good deal for half zen fully trained nurses just now. ose you send her to relieve Miss ings. She can't do any harm to ber twenty-nine."

sn't there any hope for him?" the e asked, a shade of sadness in her .

'm afraid not!" said the doctor tly. "He won't take any interest ving, that's the trouble. He isn't g of his wounds. Something is bling him. But it's no use trying nd out what. He shuts up like a ."

e new nurse flushed outside the as she heard herself discussed and her firm little lips in a determined as she followed the head nurse n the long rows of cots to a little ve at the end where a screen shut patient from view.

iss Jennings, a plain girl with tired , gave a few directions and left her her patient. She turned toward cot and stopped with a little soft of recognition, her lips growing e and set as she took in the dear liar outline of the fine young face re her. Every word she had heard ide the doctor's office rang dis- ly in her ears. He was dying! He not want to live! With another gasp that was like a sob she slipped er knees beside the cot, forgetful of duties, of the ward outside, or the ible return of the nurses; forgetful verything but that he was there, her of the years!

E reached for one of his hands, the one that was not bandaged, and she her soft cheek against it, holding breath to listen. Perhaps even now nd that quiet face the spirit had de- ed beyond her grasp.

here was no flutter of the eyelids . She could not see that he still thed, although his hand was not , and his face when she touched it seemed warm. She drew closer in agony of fear, and laid her lips nst his cheek, and then her face y, with one hand caressing his other k. Her lips were close to his ear .

John!" she whispered softly, "John! dear knight!"

here was a quiver of the eyelids now, int hesitating sigh. She touched lips to his and spoke his name again. int smile flickered over his features f he were seeing other worlds of ity that had no connection here. still she continued to press her face nst his cheek and whisper his name. t last he opened his eyes with a be- lered, wondering gaze, and saw her. old dear smile broke forth:

Ruth! You here? Is this—heaven?"

Not yet," she whispered softly. it it's earth, and the war is over! I've come to help you get well and take you home! It's really you, and you're not 'missing' any more."

Then without any excuse at all she laid her lips on his forehead and kissed him. She had read her permit in his eyes.

His well arm stole out and pressed her to him hungrily:

"It's—really you, and you don't belong to anybody else?" he asked anxiously, searching her face for his answer.

"Oh, John! I never did belong to anybody else but you. All my life ever since I was a little girl I've thought you were wonderful! Didn't you know that? Didn't you see down at camp? I'm sure it was written all over my face."

His hand crept up and pressed her face close against his:

"Oh, my darling!" he breathed. "My darling! The most wonderful girl in the world!"

WHEN the doctor and nurse pushed back the screen and entered the little alcove a little while later the new nurse sat demurely at the foot of the cot but the voice of the patient rang out joyously:

"Doctor, how soon can I get out of this? I think I've stayed here about long enough."

The wondering doctor touched his patient's forehead, looked at him keenly, touched his pulse with a practiced finger, and replied:

"I've been thinking you'd get to this spot pretty soon. Some beef tea, nurse, and make it good and strong. We've got to get this fellow on his feet pretty quick, for I can see he's about done lying in bed."

Then the wounds came in for attention, and Ruth stood bravely and watched, quivering in her heart over the sight, yet never flinching in her outward calm.

When the dressing of the wounds was over the doctor stood back and surveyed his patient:

"Well, you're in pretty good shape now, and if you keep on you can leave here in about a week. Thank fortune, there isn't any more front to go back to! But now, if you don't mind, I'd like to know what's made this marvelous change in you?"

The light broke out on Cameron's face anew. He looked at the doctor smiling, and then he looked at Ruth and reached out his hand to get hers:

"You see," he said, "I—we—Miss Macdonald's from my home town—and"—

"I see," said the doctor, looking delightedly from one happy face to the other; "but hasn't she always been from your home town?"

Cameron twinkled with his old Irish grin:

"Always," he said solemnly, "but you see she hasn't always been here."

"I see," said the doctor, looking quizzically into the sweet face of the girl and doing reverence to her pure beauty with his gaze. "I congratulate you, corporal," he said, and then, turning to Ruth, he added earnestly: "And you too, madame. He is a man if there ever was one."

IN THE quiet evening when the wards were put to sleep and Ruth sat beside his cot with her hand softly folded in his, Cameron opened his eyes from the nap he was supposed to be taking and looked at her with his bright smile:

"I haven't told you the news," he said softly. "I have found God! I found him out on the battlefield, and he is great! It's all true! But you have to search for him with all your heart, and not let any little old hate or anything else hinder you, or it doesn't do any good!"

THE END

◆

THE Blue Triangle, as the Y. W. C. A. War Work organization is called, is operating three large women's hotels in Paris. One of these, the Hotel Petrograd, last year fed an average of 500 women workers each day, with 1,000 on Christmas. The hotels at Brest and Bordeaux have been outgrown and enlarged, and those at Havre and Tours are crowded, and tea and club rooms have recently been opened in Rome.

HEINZ

OVEN BAKED

BEANS

All authorities agree that most of us eat too much meat—and that is bad for everyone. Most of us agree that too much meat at present prices is very extravagant—and that is bad for everyone. Heinz Baked Beans—baked in real dry-heat ovens—have a greater food value than the same amount of meat, and will make you healthier. Heinz Baked Beans are so economical as compared with meat that they will make you wealthier.

When you see how the family enjoys Heinz Baked Beans and how often they want them served, and then realize how easy they are to prepare for the table—you will be wiser.

HEINZ
BAKED BEANS
WITH PORK AND TOMATO SAUCE

One of the 57

All Heinz goods sold in Canada are packed in Canada

for a "FRESH START"

The world is going to be a fresher, brighter place to live in.

But you'll need help! And whatever saves work for womankind on the inside of the home, gives her more peace—and more liberty for outside work.

That's where Gold Dust saves work—inside the home.

Here are a few uses for Gold Dust which women themselves have suggested to us. Perhaps some of these uses will give you a fresh start, and help, too, when you come to spring cleaning this year.

For FLOORS cheerfully, clean

* *

For shining smooth TILING

* *

For easy modern DISHWASHING

* *

For bright SILVER-CLEANING

* *

For greaseless KITCHEN RANGE

For fresh sanitary MOPS

* *

For keeping BROOMS clean

* *

For glistening CUT GLASS

* *

For purified DRAINPIPES

* *

For softening HARD WATER

* *

For "sweet" DAIRY UTENSILS

For spotless KITCHEN CHAIRS

* *

For white unspotted DRAINBOARD

* *

For cleansing FIRELESS COOKERS

* *

For bright NICKEL FITTINGS

* *

For brightening STONE HEARTHS

THE N.K. FAIRBANK COMPANY

FAIRBANK'S
GOLD DUST
Washing Powder

GOLD DUST

Let the Gold Dust Twins do your work

The Heart and the Hom

Father-and-Son Dialogue

By Charles M. Sheldon

AGE of son, between fifteen and nineteen. Age of father, old enough to know better.

Son: "Where are you going tonight, Father?"

Father: "I have an engagement at the Chamber of Commerce. We have a smoker."

Son: "I was going to invite you to come on down to the Y. We play basket ball with the Baptists on the Sunday School League. It's going to be a fine game. Can't you come?"

Father: "Well, hardly. You see, I made this engagement some time ago. Good luck to you."

Son (next evening): "Couldn't help me with my math. tonight, could you, dad? Awful hard."

Father: "Sorry, but I am on a committee at the Social League to discuss a plan for entertaining strangers coming to town."

Son: "Say, dad, I am one of those strangers. Where do you entertain 'em?"

Father (next evening): "I want you to stay at home tonight with your mother. I am going to a meeting of the Home-seekers' Union."

Son: "I was planning to go to a dance at the college assembly. I have made a date with a girl."

Father: "Who is she?"

Son: "You don't know her."

Father: "Oh, well, go ahead. Your mother won't care."

Son (next evening): "We're going on a hike with the Boy Scouts tomorrow, dad. Can't you come along?"

Father: "No. It's my day for golf. I'm on a match. Couldn't miss it."

Son (next morning): "Come on to church with me, dad. We've a dandy preacher. You'll like him."

Father: "Excuse me. That golf match made me tired. I'll stay at home and rest up on the morning paper. Better get along. You'll miss Sunday school."

(Son goes out, wistfully looking back at his "dad." Slow music to the tune of "Where Is My Wandering Father Tonight?" Above dialogue and scene enacted in thousands of homes in America every week. Curtain.)

Carrots for Pies

By Marion Harland

OUR next letter deals with an esculent the value of which is partially (if tardily) discovered by housemothers who are not quite content with canned vegetables all winter long, and hanker after other homely "kindly fruits" of Mother Earth besides the invariable potato and malodorous cabbage and turnips. Carrots are palatable and not inelegant when mixed with creamed green peas, and, as one household has lately found out, with beets. They are even better when scraped, parboiled, halved lengthwise and fried to a nice brown. Now for one mother's recommendation of them to connoisseurs of New England's best-beloved pie:

"We use carrots in place of pumpkin for pies. Our boy could not tell the difference. When asked what kind of pie he had for lunch at school, he 'thought it pumpkin,' and when told it was not, said: 'Well, I don't know what it was, but it was good, anyway!' Yet he will not eat carrots as a vegetable.

"It is impossible to cook them as soft as pumpkin, I find, although I always add a little soda to the water when putting them on to boil and cook as long as I would pumpkin. Sometimes I use ginger and cinnamon as for pumpkin; sometimes omit ginger, using nutmeg; sometimes I use all three, much less ginger and nutmeg than cinnamon. Save out whites of eggs, beat and put on top of pie if you wish it to be a little extra nice."—MRS. F. M. (Connecticut).

Having lately had the misfortune to be served with a restaurant pie that was absolutely ruined by ginger, the memory of the infliction makes me s still! I take leave to emphasize member's caution against the l use of a "condiment that bites too To our way of thinking—and tast pumpkin and the more delicate pie are better with the ginger left altogether.

Is Your Kitchen Sink T Low?

By Laura A. Kirkman

"IT'S all right to read articles a having one's kitchen sink enough so that one needn't get a back from bending over when was dishes," said Mrs. Busy Houseke "but how about we women whose were built in low, and who can't a to go to the expense of having raised?"

Here is the answer to that ques an old piece of chicken wire and small nails will give the same resul having the kitchen sink raised. after all, it is the dishpan that we higher when washing dishes, and can be achieved by the wire and in the following way:

Have the wire cut to cover the sur of the sink. Drive a nail into eac the four corners of the sink, and h the wire over them—thus forming a roof over the sink, upon which the d pan may stand. The wire is more tary than a wooden support would and it should be dried each time a use and hung up with the dishpan.

The efficient housekeeper is ever the alert for strength-savers, time ers and money-savers; and this quest of saving one's back is not an unim tant one.

Food for Children

FOUR meals a day are desirable the youngsters between eight twelve years of age; but they m consist of the right kind of food. I well for all mothers to remember t milk is one of the best foods availa for growing children. Here are menus suggested by the home econo ics workers at the New York State C lege of Agriculture for children of t age:

Breakfast: Cereal with thin crea poached, boiled or scrambled eggs, m with bread and butter; fruit may added.

Mid-morning meal: Glass of m and a cracker.

Dinner: Small piece of steak or ro fish or chicken, potato, cabbage cook for a short time uncovered, or ot vegetable, bread and butter and mi some simple dessert or custard, or fru or bread and jelly.

Supper: Eggs or cream soup or mi toast, bread and butter, stewed fruit, bread and jelly.

Household Suggestions

USING imperfect sewing-machi needles is poor economy. Kee good supply of new ones on hand.

You can make one pair of near- stockings grow where two grew bef by using the legs of one pair to m feet for the other pair. Most patte services furnish patterns.

Are you afraid that new lavend cotton or linen waist may fade? the color by soaking in a pail of wa with a teaspoonful of sugar of lead.

The home vegetable garden should crowd out the flowers. Find a few sp for your favorite varieties. Nast tiums or morning glories will transfor an ugly fence into a mass of greene and bloom.

No country can become richer th its lands. And can any country ha ideals higher than the ideals of its home

A lot of bother, you may think; b if you rinse the feet of your stockin each night the added wear the stockin will give will pay for the bother.

A half cup of vinegar and a teaspo of alum added to a pail of water is you need to make fast that blue cott or linen of which you are suspicious.

What Sacrifice Will You Make for Christian Unity?

By H. K. CARROLL, LL.D.

IT GOES without saying that the divisions of Christianity are not a source of strength, but of weakness. We may not all feel, as some do, that every division is a schism and that schism is a sad sin; but we must acknowledge that divisions which no longer represent real differences are unnecessary and detract from the power and influence of the Church of Christ.

So far as legal right is concerned, we may not dispute the claim of any denomination to a separate existence. That belongs to the sphere of religious liberty. It may divide and sub-divide as it lists, without challenge, in this free country, from others. It follows that unification or reunion of separated bodies may not be brought about by any force except the compulsion of love and goodwill. The organic union of any two or more bodies is only desirable and helpful when the consent of both is voluntary and unforced.

Assuming that the more united Chris-ianity is, the stronger and more effec-ive it will be as a conquering force in the world, the question comes home to the representatives of every denomina-ion: How much do we desire the Unity of the Church of Christ? What are we willing to contribute toward it? What are we ready to sacrifice or surrender of our denominational peculiarities which divide us from other churches of he same faith?

Premising that no one should be asked to surrender any fundamental article of faith—and that minor differences in doctrinal views, such as each denomination recognizes as belonging to the sphere of individual liberty, are permissible, are we willing to bring our denominations, with their assets of spiritual life, personal and practical resources, methods of work, and all that makes for success and efficiency, into a United Church of Christ, anxious to contribute not as little but as much as possible?

THIS is the spirit, it seems to me, that ought to obtain in any such union as is contemplated. Who was the greatest and happiest patriot in the great world struggle? Was it not he who gave most? This will not be a con-est to see how a maximum of sacrifice can be got out of other denominations and a minimum from our own. That is the principle upon which sharp busi-ess bargains are driven. It is foreign to the spirit of Christ and his Gospel. The Master spared himself not at all, but gave to the utmost to secure the world's redemption. Ananias and Sapphira were cursed, not because they did not give, but because, feigning to give all, they held back part of the price.

While the plan of union is in process f formation, and no one can say what t will be, how far it will go, or what it will require of the denominations which hall enter it, it is idle to attempt to orecast it. We may assume, however, hat:

(1) It will not propose to disband the enominations and create a new or-anization out of the ruins. When the rmies of the Allies were united against he Teutonic foe, they were not first isorganized and then organized anew.

(2) That no denomination will be sked to sacrifice any essential of the hurch of Christ, either in faith or ctivity.

(3) That no denomination will be equired to give up its form of organiza-on for one of rigid uniformity. Neither hrist nor the apostles laid down any ne definite system as obligatory. Epis-opal, presbyterial and congregational ystems appeal equally to the Scriptures n support of their organizations.

(4) Liberty in the use of various ethods of local church work will not e destroyed. There must be elasticity n this sphere of activity for Baptist, Methodist, Friend, Lutheran, Presbyte-ian and Episcopalian. That is to say, omprehension does not narrow; it roadens.

THERE has been no little apprehension on these points. It may be safely assumed that the purpose of the Philadelphia movement for the organic union of the Evangelical Churches is not to destroy, but to fulfill, and that it wants the full power and effectiveness of every denomination for the United Church, and not a part simply. It may be assumed also that such adjustments will be attempted as will (1) allow members to pass from one body to another with as little difficulty as possible, and (2) that interchange of ministers will be provided for. Other desirable features are (3) a short, comprehensive and acceptable name for the United Church, (4) a general body of direction, and (5) such adjustments as will establish and regulate comity between local churches in the same community, so as not to have too many churches in desirable and too few in undesirable sections of populous places.

The question of sacrifice and surrender is apt to loom large before those accustomed to large liberty, as in America. But reasonable people are always willing to make them when the end to be accomplished is a good one. We say truly enough that our money is our own and we have a right to spend it as we choose; but government levies its taxes upon us, and we must pay, whether we want to or not, on penalty of having our property seized, and we willingly submit for the sake of the good of the greater number, which embraces our own. In countless matters of law and order and public safety and health, we sacrifice and surrender willingly our personal rights for the promotion of the interest of all, and gain by it. Society and government cannot exist unless this principle is recognized.

And it is not different in the realm of religion. We cannot be followers of Christ except by subjection of our wills to his. The cross was not for the Son of God alone, but for every disciple also.

IT IS in this spirit that we must approach the subject of organic union, the merging of denominations into the Church of Christ, remembering that sacrifice and surrender are the condition of all the best things in human life, whether social, national, or religious. It may seem hard in the doing, but once done the surprise is that it was so easy.

Perhaps there is nothing of which denominationalists are more tenacious than the name by which their religious body is known. It is seldom the least contested point in negotiations for organic union. It may be the least important of the questions in dispute, but it costs something of pride and memory and affection to surrender it. It would be a happy thing if the maze of denominational titles had some thread as a clue, such as Church of Christ (Methodist), Church of Christ (Baptist), Church of Christ (Presbyterian), and so on.

And beyond all, the results are so satisfying. The Master declared a great principle when he said that those who forsook brethren or sisters or father or mother or wife or children or lands for his name's sake should receive an hundredfold, and inherit everlasting life. It is also true that the sacrifices made for country, for community, for society, for family, for church bring rich reward in happiness and benefit conferred and received in the individual life. The sacrifice we make for the church is returned many times over.

What can the denominations contribute toward one united Church of Christ? Themselves, with all their assets, resources, powers, effectiveness, influence. And what they give they do not lose, because their contribution immensely strengthens the whole of which they are a part, and whatever strengthens and benefits the whole strengthens and benefits every part. Whatever a denomination brings into a united Church it receives again in increased measure. This is the mystery and miracle of the Gospel plan of self-sacrifice.

What! Postum?

"Do you mean to tell me this is the drink I have read so much about!"

"You're like many others, Jack, who think they must have coffee—you're surprised to find that this healthful cereal drink has a really delicious, coffee-like flavor."

"There's a Reason" for POSTUM

Minute Tapioca Croquettes

Cook 3 heaping tablespoons Minute Tapioca with one cup drained liquor from boiled kidney beans, add 1 teaspoon tomato catsup and seasoning, mix with one cup mashed kidney beans and shape into croquettes. Roll in flour, beaten egg, bread crumbs; fry in hot fat. Sauce: Mix one tablespoon butter and flour, add 1 cup strained tomatoes; chop 1 spray parsley, 1 onion, 1 green pepper, seasoned with salt and pepper, add together; simmer 10 minutes.

Minute Tapioca

Change your menu. Give your family a treat in the form of Minute Tapioca croquettes. You will find a new dish that lessens your problems, and one that your family will call for often. Minute Tapioca croquettes are energy building and they have a delightful flavor.

MINUTE TAPIOCA COMPANY, 93 East Main St., Orange, Mass.

Minute Tapioca

1200 TO 1 BEAN. A Gigantic Wonder—over 200 pods have been grown on a single plant—all well filled, producing over 1200 beans from 1 bean planted. Plants grow strong and erect, branching out in all directions, bearing pods up well from the ground, which literally load the plants; beans being pure white and of best quality.

Plant in your garden or any good soil, after danger of frost, any time up to June 15 only 1 Bean in a hill, and it will mature a crop in about 80 days, ripening very evenly, and the growth and yield will simply surprise you. My supply is limited and I can offer only in sealed packets, each containing over 60 Beans with growing directions. Order early to be sure of them.

Sealed packets 10c each; 3 pkts. 25c; 7 pkts. 50c; 15 pkts. $1 postpaid.

My New Seed Book is filled with High Grade Garden Seeds at lowest prices. It's mailed free. F. B. MILLS, Seed Grower, Dept. 31. ROSE HILL, N.Y.

Bathe the Blade in 3-in-One Oil

This simple little "stunt" does two important things for the man who uses a safety razor—any make.

It takes the pull out of the razor. And it speeds up the shave.

Try it yourself tonight. Pour into a glass enough

3-in-One

The Universal Shaving Oil

to cover the bottom. Adjust a new blade ready for shaving and place razor in glass. The 3-in-One should just cover the blade. See picture above. Leave it so over-night. Then —oh, what a clean, quick, easy shave you'll get in the morning! Don't wipe oil off the razor because 3-in-One softens the beard—no pulling.

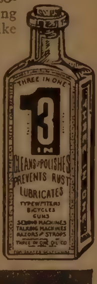
No need to remove blade to cleanse during or after shaving. Merely hold razor under running faucet to rinse off lather and hair particles.

After shaving, replace razor in glass as before. Leave it there between shaves. The 3-in-One covering the blade absolutely prevents rust from forming between the microscopic saw-like teeth on the cutting edge—preserves its sharpness—keeps the razor in perfect order, always ready for the next shave.

3-in-One is sold at all stores East of the Rocky Mountain States, 15c, 25c, and 50c in bottles; also in 25c Handy Oil Cans.

FREE A generous sample of 3-in-One Oil sent free. Write for it if you wish to try before you buy.

THREE-IN-ONE OIL CO.
165 CR. Broadway
New York

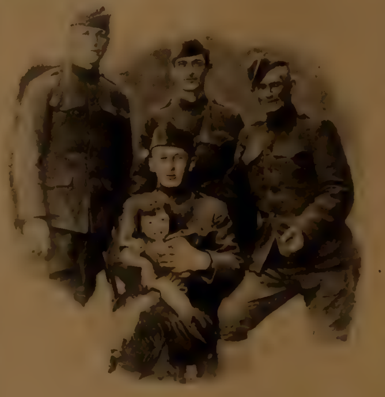


The Yankees' Joan of Arc

Little Girl, the Only Member of a French Family Left Unkilled by Huns, Is Now the Daughter of Company B, Sixtieth Engineers

By ROBERT H. MOULTON

WAR correspondents have portrayed the tragedy of France—her desecrated cathedrals and ruined cities; military critics have expounded the science of counter-offensives and the massing of millions of men, as their contribution to the epic picture; but the incident of "The Baby the Huns Forgot" has never been told till now. It came in the form of a letter, and concerns Sergeant Morton Perry, Company B, Sixtieth United States Engineers, and his "three musketeer" pals. Sergeant Perry's home is in Chicago.



The mascot of Company B

On a hot, muggy day last August, in a corner of France near the Toul sector, the Sixtieth Engineers were proceeding over a devastated area lately evacuated by the Germans. Company B had been assigned for reconstruction work to what had been a village. Most of it was in ashes.

Picking their way through the ruins, Sergeant Perry and his three comrades came to the remains of a cottage. The roof had been burned, but the four walls still stood. They first entered the kitchen. The stove and furniture had been wrecked and the walls defiled. They passed on to the living-room. It, too, had been wrecked.

They entered the bedroom. Across the bed lay the mutilated bodies of an aged man and woman. Beside them lay the bodies of three girls.

Sergeant Perry and his three comrades were preparing to depart when they were startled by a faint cry. They looked about. Under the bed, huddled against the wall, was a two-year-old girl.

Although Perry is six feet two in his stockings and weighs proportionately, he squeezed under the bed and put a brawny arm around the child. She stopped crying. She was attired in a frayed gunny-sack slip and was weak from hunger. The golden tint of her bobbed curls was hidden by the grime and dust of her ruined home.

Perry and his pals had just passed unmindful through an enemy barrage, but, the letter asserts, their eyes were moist as they carried the child out into the open, away from the German handiwork, and the bodies of mother and father and three sisters she would never see again—a tiny human document of stricken France.

They carried her back to the dug-out headquarters of their company, and there she has been since, up in the front of the American battle line, far from any woman's hands, yet receiving the most tender care. She has been adopted as the mascot of Company B.

Oh, yes, and they have named her —Joan of Arc!

The Young Girl's Room

"HOW can I give my daughter a pretty room without incurring great expense?" is a question which mothers in moderate means find themselves puzzling over.

With a little careful thought the young daughter may have a pretty yet inexpensive bedroom. Let us see how this can be achieved:

White furniture is the daintiest for young people, and the cheapest kind of furniture may be bought and painted white at home. The necessary articles will be: bed, bureau, combination bookcase-desk, small table, small rocking-chair, straight desk-chair.

The room can also be papered by the novice. Striped pink-and-white wallpaper would be a pretty choice, although either blue or pink forms an appropriate color scheme for the young girl's room.

The floor carpet or rug should be of some dark, unnoticeable color—gray looks well with pink and blue. If a large rug is the choice, the borders of the floor should be painted or stained in harmony with the rug.

Cretonne valances at the windows will give a touch of daintiness to the room. These should be made with a short ruffle extending across the top of the window, over the white scrim curtains, and falling down on either side of the window. Valances and white curtains should be of even length and may reach either to the sill or to the floor.

If desired, a bed-covering and pillow-cases of the cretonne may be used. In this case the cretonne pillow-cases will slip over the white pillow-cases in the daytime.

Bureau covers of the same cretonne help to carry out the color scheme, and a low wooden chest covered with cretonne will be found useful for articles of clothing not in constant use.

L. A. K.

Big Business Facts

AUTOMOBILES exported from the United States since the beginning of the industry in this country have exceeded $700,000,000 in value.

Most of the 6,000,000,000 bushels of potatoes produced in the world are grown in Europe and North America, and represent a value of from $5,000,000,000 to $6,000,000,000 per annum.

The "favorable trade balance" of the United States during the war period exceeded that of the 125 years from the adoption of the Constitution to the beginning of the war. The excess of exports over imports during the 51 months of the war aggregated $10,900,000,000, while that from the adoption of the Constitution to the beginning of the war was but $9,007,000,000.

◆

THE Christian Herald is a fine paper and I enjoy it more and more every week. ALBERT BELL.

Churchville, N. Y.

Drink Water Eat Bran

Did you ever know a doctor who did not urge that?

Bran is Nature's laxative. Fine foods clog the system—bran stirs action.

Omitting bran usually leads to drug taking, and that's bad.

Each luscious dish of Pettijohn's supplies a day's bran requirement, hidden in flavory flakes.

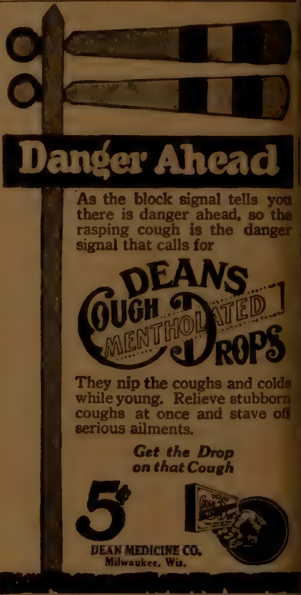
You will like this dish, and like its after-effects. Try it for a week.

Pettijohn's

Rolled Wheat—25% Bran

A breakfast dainty whose flavory flakes hide 25 per cent. of bran.

Also Pettijohn's Flour—75 per cent. fine Government Standard flour, 25 per cent. bran. Use like Graham flour in any recipe. (3015)



Danger Ahead

As the block signal tells you there is danger ahead, so the rasping cough is the danger signal that calls for

DEANS MENTHOLATED COUGH DROPS

They nip the coughs and colds while young. Relieve stubborn coughs at once and stave off serious ailments.

Get the Drop on that Cough

5¢

DEAN MEDICINE CO.
Milwaukee, Wis.

Learn Photography

Good-paying positions in the best studios of the country await men and women who prepare themselves now. For 24 years we have sucessfully taught

Photography, Photo-Engraving and Three-Color Work.

Our graduates earn $25 to $75 a week. We assist them to secure these positions. Now is the time to fit yourself for an advanced position at better pay. Terms easy; living inexpensive. Largest and best school of its kind. Write for catalog today.

ILLINOIS COLLEGE of PHOTOGRAPHY
Box CH., 970 Wabash Avenue, Effingham, Illinois

A High School Course In Two Years

Learn in your own home. Here is a thorough, complete, and simplified high school course that you can finish in two years. Meets all college entrance requirements. Prepared by leading members of the faculties of universities and academies.

Write for booklet. Send your name and address for our booklet and full particulars. No obligations whatever. Write today—now.

American School of Correspondence, Dept. H 2493D, Chicago, U. S. A.

onference of Mayors and Governors

ADDRESSING the Conference of Governors and Mayors on March 3 at Washington, President Wil- said that the meeting had been called liscuss the proper methods of restor- all the labor conditions of the coun- to a normal basis as soon as possible. said that America was more fortu- e than the nations of Europe in hav- suffered less dislocation of industry, l "that if we have a common purpose can realize that common purpose hout serious insurmountable difficul- ."

n the reports of the states no excep- ıal unemployment was reported ex- t in Arizona, Montana and West Vir- ia, where copper mines in the first states and coal mines in the last one e idle because of the sudden termina- ı of the war. Connecticut faced the blem of the reemployment of 46,000 nition workers. Florida announced need for 2,000,000 laborers in truck dens and citrus orchards. Illinois reported as anxiously awaiting the . of Federal control of utilities in er that normal life might be resumed hin the state.

Director of Railroads Hines on March ld the delegates that the government ıld not return the railroads to their ıers at once; that a way would be nd to finance the railways, in spite he failure of legislation in the Senate; that the Railway Administration ıld go on with projected improve- ıts and would now bend its energies ard restoring the service to a condi- ı as good as or better than it was ore the war. He intimated that rates l fares would not be raised, but that ght rates on building and road ma- als might be lowered to stimulate loyment.

'he conference adopted resolutions oring such a reduction in rates as . Hines suggested, condemning doc- es which inveigh against God and ernment, disapproving government ng of costs but approving government approval of price schedules as a step toward establishing a new basis of values, favoring government assistance in solving the financial problems of public utility companies, asking for the early settlement of government contracts and the lifting of restrictions on industry and materials, and urging a continuation of the government survey of natural resources and the continuing of the free Federal employment agencies.

Mr. William Piggott, spokesman for Seattle, said "the panic about Bolshevism in the country is all a bogey" and that "the American working people have the best homes and the best working conditions in the world and can change their government by the ballot instead of by force." He said, however, that mayors and governors should act more courageously in dealing with unrest.

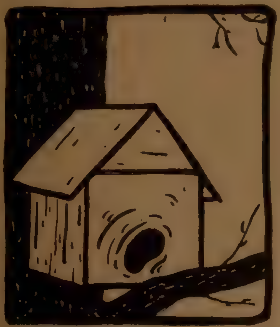
Reports to the Federal employment agencies on March 5 showed unemployment increasing slightly, 365,400 men being idle in the East. Positions for 81,901 persons were found in two months. Of 23,658 soldiers listed at Camp Upton 8,658 were returned to their old jobs and 7,886 to new positions.

◆

A Good Friend Gone

GEORGE H. HORNBY, born at Davenport, Iowa, August 21, 1858, died at Omaha, Neb., November 17, 1918. Mr. Hornby was a many-year friend of the Christian Herald, and of every good cause. He was especially interested in the missionary work of his church, Methodist Episcopal, and in the Methodist hospital at Omaha, Neb., and the Christian Home at Council Bluffs, Iowa, of both of which he was a trustee. As head of a great mercantile company at Valentine, Neb., he wielded a considerable influence as a citizen as well as in religion, and he gave liberally of his time, interest and money to the church, the prohibition cause and the charities which claimed his interest.

Alan's Bird-House



DO YOU think it's too early to make a bird-house and set it up?" n said to his father the other day.

Not a bit too early," replied his ıer. "In fact, if the house is too v-looking and ells of paint, the ls won't nest in You'd better get ıp soon so that weather can sea- it a little before birds are ready ıse it."

o Alan started once to make one. s is how he did it: found a wooden 7 x 7 inches are, and covered open top of this with a board ich had a large ot-hole in it. This thole provided door of the bird- use. He then stood the box on one side and made a slanting roof over the top part by nailing two light boards together in a peak which rose above the box. The little "attic" or triangle of waste space thus formed on the top of the box he boarded up front and back.

The little bird-house now had a decidedly attractive appearance, but to make it still prettier he painted it a dark green. Before setting it up in his back yard he put a handful of old string just inside the knothole with a few ends falling out, so that the birds would be attracted by this ready-made nesting material.

L. A. K.

A Church Run by Women

HE war forced the women of America into many lines, and it also forced n into the business of running a ırch. We all recognize the part wo- n has always taken in the church, but s time the activities of the women s the result of official action.

The church that will put women in ırge of its affairs is Brantly Bap- Church, Baltimore, Md., of which Henry M. Wharton is pastor. The on of the church was forced by war- conditions, for the war has taken men from the congregation. The cancies left were filled by the women o were elected at a meeting held at church.

At the beginning of this movement . Wharton invited 400 of the women the church to meet him in conference d explained to them the conditions produced by the depletion of the ranks.

The women mobilized by consolidating all the women's societies. The church was then divided into ten sections, each presided over by a director.

These sections attend to church attendance, finance, the two Sunday schools, and all of the varied interests of the church.

◆

A New Roosevelt Book

DR. FERDINAND C. IGLEHART is writing for the Christian Herald a work of appreciation to be entitled "Theodore Roosevelt, The Man as I Knew Him." It will be ready shortly in book form and full announcement will appear in an early issue of the Christian Herald.

DURABLE DURHAM HOSIERY
Trade Mark

Hosiery for all the Family—Long-Wearing and Good-Looking

You will really be surprised at the exceptionally long wear of Durable-DURHAM. And it is so thoroughly comfortable and good-looking that every member of the family will enjoy the wearing.

The carefully woven yarns, so thoroughly reinforced at points of hardest wear will stand the hardest wear. The Durham dyes prevent fading or turning green after wearing and washing.

These qualities in stockings mean true economy and besides, Durable-DURHAM Hosiery is surprisingly reasonable in price, selling at 20c to 50c a pair.

DURABLE DURHAM HOSIERY
FOR MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN
Made Strongest Where the Wear is Hardest

There are styles for every season of the year, for work, dress or play and the same honest wearing value is woven into every pair. The tops are wide and elastic; legs are full length; sizes are accurately marked; soles and toes are smooth, seamless and even.

You should be able to buy Durable-DURHAM Hosiery at any dealer's. If you do not find it, write to our Sales Department at 88 Leonard Street, New York, and we will see that you are supplied.

A free Catalog showing the many Durable-DURHAM styles will be mailed upon request.

DURHAM HOSIERY MILLS, Durham, N. C.
88 Leonard Street, New York

Two of the many fine values in Durable-DURHAM Hosiery.

CARROLINA
A silk mercerized stocking of very fine appearance and wearing quality. Regular and out-sizes. Anti-run stitch to prevent thread running down leg, high spliced heels, special stitch knit in foot and ankle to hold shape, extra toe-guard splicing.
Price 50c pair

TAR HEEL
A medium weight sock with 3-thread, strongly reinforced heels and toes. Elastic ribbed top securely knit on. Feet and toes are smooth, seamless and even. Black, tan and white.
Price 20c pair

Durable-DURHAM Hosiery is not a product of child labor. No person under 14 years is employed. Industrial conditions under supervision of experts trained in U. S. Government courses on employment management. Average working day is 8 hours and 15 minutes.

When Johnny has the Croup!

That's a cough with a croupy rattle, so hurry for the Musterole and rub it in right over the chest and neck. How it will tingle at first and then grow ever so cool. And how it will reach in and penetrate right to the spot! It will dissipate all the stuffy congestion which causes that hacking cough.

Why shouldn't grandmother swear by Musterole for colds and coughs? It is better than a mustard plaster—good as that was in the old days. And the explanation is this:

Musterole is made of oil of mustard and other home simples. It penetrates under the skin, down to the part. Here it generates its own heat, and this heat disperses the congestion. Yet Musterole will not blister. Musterole, on the contrary, feels delightfully cool a few seconds after you apply it.

Try Musterole for Bobby and Helen and Dorothy's croup—and for your own cough, too. Try it for rheumatism—it's a regular router out of all congestions. Always keep a jar handy.

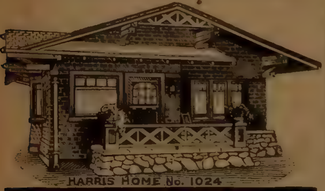
Many doctors and nurses recommend Musterole.

30c and 60c jars—$2.50 hospital size.

The Musterole Co., Cleveland, Ohio

BETTER THAN A MUSTARD PLASTER

MUSTEROLE
WILL NOT BLISTER
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.



$1133 BUYS THE MATERIAL TO BUILD THIS HOME

Improved Sensibly. Cut-to-Fit. Approved by Carpenters. When You Build "THE HARRIS WAY" you build to stay. Exclusive cutting and bundling features—special advantages for the careful Home Builder. It is the best, safest and most sensible way to build your ideal home right, without the waste of a single penny.

LOW PRICE STILL IN FORCE

If you are needing a house, either for investment or for a home, write us.

$10,000 FREE Plan Book

Write today for our beautiful $10,000 HARRIS HOME PLAN BOOK now ready. 100 Designs, with floor plans, prices, etc.; explains how we save 25 to 33 1-3% on finished cost. Write Today

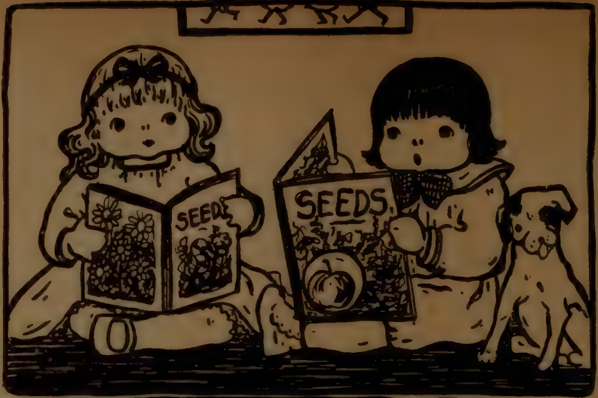
Get our FREE Blue Print Plan offer

Your protection—Every sale iron clad guaranteed

HARRIS BROS. CO. Dept. CX-202, Chicago

YARN AT A SAVING. Superior Quality Germantown Zephyr and Knitting Worsted, direct from the mill at lowest prices. All the popular colors. Send for free samples. Agents wanted.
AMERICAN SPINNING CO., 33 N. 4th St., Philadelphia

MENDETS — WONDER MONEY MAKERS mend leaks instantly in all utensils, hot water bags, etc. Insert and tighten. 10c and 25c a package postpaid. AGENTS WANTED. Collette Mfg. Co. Box 444-A, Amsterdam, N.Y.



GARDENS

It's hard to plan our garden beds
When there's so much to plant;
We'd like to crowd in everything
But Father says we can't.

Tom's only choosing things to eat,
But I'll have Four O'clocks,
Sweet Peas and yellow Marigolds
And tall, gay Hollyhocks.

Elizabeth FitzHugh.

Some Great Preachers I Have Known

Continued from page 328

perspiring. After his startling introduction he continued: "I have been asked to speak for Congregationalism. Sir, I would not be wet through for all the isms in the world."

Then he went on to give an eloquent talk, in his most dramatic style, on the word "Endeavor."

Dr. Parker's People's Bible is a splendid monument to his learning, his insight and his eloquence, and Spurgeon's Treasury of the Psalms and other commentaries are treasuries of Biblical lore indeed.

THREE great expository preachers I have known—Charles Haddon Spurgeon, Joseph Parker, and Alexander McLaren, these three; but the greatest of these was McLaren. It was my great privilege on two occasions to sit in the pew of the Union Church of Manchester to listen to this wonderful expounder of the Scriptures in the morning, and to preach for him in the evening, while once I was his guest for a day in his hospitable home. The last time I saw him was near the end of his life, and when, after the morning sermon, I went into his study, the frail old man, his face, incredibly seamed with wrinkles, appeared as strong and vigorous as ever.

He lived but a few months after this, but his works will live, I believe, for centuries. There is no such mine of Biblical lore as "Sermons Preached in Manchester" in many volumes. His illustrations, an art in which he excelled all other preachers, open ten thousand windows into the truth, and sometimes it seems into the very heavens. I can think of no better course in Biblical Theology for a young minister or Sunday school teacher than McLaren's sermons, for he covered almost all the Scriptures from Genesis to Revelation, some portions of the New Testament most minutely. His style is a well of English pure and undefiled.

If the plan of this article, as well as my space, did not confine me to the great preachers who can now speak to us only through their books, I would like to tell my readers of my dear friends, Dr. John Clifford, the grand old man of the Free Churches of Great Britain, Dr. F. B. Meyer, Dr. Jowett, whom England has won back from New York greatly to our sorrow, Rev. John Pollock of the noted St. Enoch's Church of Belfast and president of the European Christian Endeavor Union, and of Dr. James Stalker, all of whom have blessed me by their intellectual vigor, their sympathy, and their Christian spirit.

◆

Odd Facts About Animals

CATS were known in England before the Norman conquest.

A camel has twice the carrying power of an ox.

There are no fewer than one thousand eight hundred known sorts of lizards in the world.

A goose has been known to live fifty years, a swan one hundred years, a sparrow forty years, a hen ten years, and a robin twelve years. Pheasants sometimes live fifteen years.

Hawks fly at the rate of one hundred and fifty miles an hour.

A dog has lived thirty-nine days without food.

A good-sized turtle gives eighty pounds of tortoise-shell.

The first settlers in Brazil paid one thousand five hundred dollars for a cat. and for kittens their weight in gold-dust.

C. C. S.

The Joy of having Your Own Rose is more than satisfaction and delight in the possession of something beautiful. Sure bloom roses in your own garden enable you to exp affection or sympathy to others, spontaneously—inexpensiv

CONARD ★ ROSES BLOOM

Each Conard star size rose plant bears a STAR tag, guarantee of bloom, or we replace—part of our orig and successful STAR ROSE SERVICE.

SPECIAL MARCH OFFER

Three strong Conard Rose Plants, each a queen of its c
Ophelia—exquisite blush
Gen. McArthur—intense red
Duchess of Wellington—rich yellow
By Parcel P
$2.00 C. O.
postage ext
(For other sizes, see Catalog)

STAR ROSE SERVICE also supplies you, free on req with 52-page Catalog and (until March 31) with Sp List showing right selection for your particular sect

CONARD & Jones Co. ★ WEST GROV Box 140, P
Rose Specialists Backed by 50 Years' Experience
Robert Pyle, President Antoine Wintzer, Vice P

A WOMAN FLORIS

4 Hardy Everblooming Roses On their own roots ALL WILL BLOOM THIS SUMMER 25

Sent to any address post-paid: guaranteed to reach you in good growing condit

GEM ROSE COLLECTION
Melody, Pure Yellow.
Warrior, Blood Red.
Ophelia, Salmon Flesh.
Aurora, Bright Pink.

SPECIAL BARGAINS
4 Carnations, the "Divine Flower," all colors, 25c.
3 Choice Ferns, - - 25c.
5 Chrysanthemums, 25c.
5 Beautiful Coleus, - 25c.
3 Flowering Cannas, 25c.
3 Choice Dahlias, - 25c.
3 Choice Hardy Iris, 25c.
8 Lovely Gladioli, - - - - - 25c.
8 Superb Pansy Plants. - - - 25c.
10 Pkts. Flower Seeds, all different, 25c.

Any Five Collections for One Dollar, Post-Paid. Guarantee satisfaction.

Once a customer, always one. Catalog Free.

Miss ELLA V. BAINES, Box 44, Springfield, Oh

Succulent vegetables, blooming flowers, velvety grass, grow from

Thorburn's Seeds

Thorburn's Seeds are seeds selected by a house famous through 118 years for quality. You don't buy seeds—you buy wha grows from them. Send for 1919 catalogue

J. M. Thorburn & Co.
53 Barclay St., through to 54 Park Place
New York City

Ranger Electric Lighted Motorbike

30 DAYS FREE TRIAL

and freight prepaid on a ne 1919 "RANGER" bicycle. Writ at once for our big catalog a special offers. Take your choi from 44 styles, colors and sizes in th famous "RANGER" line.

Marvelous improvements. Extr ordinary values in our 1919 price offer You cannot afford to buy withou getting our latest proposition and Factory-to-Rider prices.

Boys, be a "Rider Agent" a make big money taking orders f bicycles and supplies. Get o liberal terms on a sample to intr duce the new "RANGER".

TIRES, equipment, sundries a everything in the bicycle line half usual prices. Write Toda

MEAD CYCLE COMPAN Dept. G-71 Chicag

CONDON'S CRYSTAL WHITE GLOBE ONIO

The Big Money Making Crop. Seven hun bushels from one acre is what our customer Dorothy Busgen made last season. To help do as well and to introduce to you our North Grown Live "Sure Crop" Seeds we will you 250 seed of this most perfect White O and our BIG 1919 GARDEN AND FARM GUIDE FRE
Send Postal Today
CONDON BROS., SEEDS
Rock River Valley Seed Farm
BOX 31 ROCKFORD, ILLIN

A BACK YARD GARDE

On a small plot of ground will save you many doll in a year. We have for this purpose a special assortm of seeds. Our catalog tells about it and many other b gains. It is free. Send today.
IOWA SEED CO., Dept. 45 Des Moines, Io

r. Taft Explains League of Nations

)RMER President Taft, who spoke before the President at the meeting in New York on March 4, de- l his time mainly to a detailed ition of the proposed League of ns covenant. He referred to Sena- odge's resolution of Monday, and he thought the Senate would not delay peace by refusing to ratify a y embodying the League covenant, dvised Mr. Wilson to profit by onstructive portion of Mr. Lodge's ks and by the helpful criticism of opponents of the present draft of League plan.

r. Taft made it clear that in limita- of armaments each nation would own choice decide whether to abide ie decision of the executive council t, but he declared that this clause more vital to our allies than to us. xplained also that no action of the itive council could force us to ad- to our shores or to our citizenship les such as the Japanese whom we t wish to exclude. He said that if, r the covenant, the nations of the l should unite to force Japanese igration upon us, they might as y do so without the covenant. He ght, however, that there could be jection to a clause excluding purely nal questions from mediation by Executive Council.

ferring to the charge in the Senate the League covenant would pre- our resisting a border raid from ico, Mr. Taft said that the attack ss the border would of itself release om our covenant and restore com- ly our right of self-defense.

e declared the international boycott enalty of heavy, withering effect, y to frighten any member of the gue from a reckless isolation of its nant, and he showed clearly that exercise of military power by the gue must depend upon the common voluntary agreement of the nations e face of danger. He expressed the ion that force would first be asked ations adjoining the outlaw nation, that, following the expression of the utive Council as to proper means e used against a recalcitrant, the tion as to "whether the United es shall declare war or what forces all furnish is remitted to the volun- action of the Congress of the United es under the Constitution, having rd to a fair division between all the ons of the burden to be borne under League and the proper means, ther by the boycott alone or by the ance of loans of money, or by the aration of war and the use of mili- force."

e showed how this interpretation he document would leave American ons to attend to American problems, ss the danger were sufficient to re- e the participation of the world, but he said that appropriate words ought to be added to "show distinctly this distribution of obligation," in order to relieve those anxious about the Monroe Doctrine. Mr. Taft showed also how, by this interpretation of the League covenant, the United States was relieved of participation in "little wars all over the world."

Mr. Taft also showed the impossibility of Great Britain, through her colonial representation in the body of delegates, securing more than one vote in the Executive Council, since the covenant limits the British Empire to one delegate, and he showed further how the requirement for unanimous action in the mediating activities of the delegates prevented a British union against America.

Mr. Taft said he hoped the treaty of peace which the President should bring back from Paris would include the League of Nations, and he said: "Responsibility for postponing peace is with the body that fails to ratify it." He declared that the League would stand "as the living evidence of the united power of Christian civilization to make this treaty a real treaty of peace," and that such a league would "save Europe from the chaos and despair of further war and the inevitable triumph of Bolshevism."

Referring to the oft-quoted warning of Washington against entangling alliances, Mr. Taft said Washington attacked "offensive and defensive alliances with one nation against another, "and that Washington would today "be one of the most earnest and pressing sponsors of the covenant."

Regarding alleged unconstitutionality Mr. Taft said that any treaty was constitutional which did not change our form of government or take away territory of a state without its consent. He said that the proposed covenant did neither of these, since "the only fixed and immediate obligation is the levying of a boycott when a nation begins war in violation of its covenant."

He said regarding the possible loss of sovereignty: "The covenant takes away the sovereignty of the United States only as any contract curtails the freedom of action of an individual which he has voluntarily surrendered for the purpose of the contract and to obtain the benefit of it. The covenant creates no super-sovereignty."

In closing Mr. Taft said: "This covenant should be in the treaty of peace. It is indispensable in ending this war, if the war is to accomplish the declared purpose of this nation and the world in that war, and if it is to work the promised benefit to mankind. We know the President believes this and will insist upon it. Our profound sympathy in his purpose and our prayers for his success should go with him in his great mission."

The Clergy Club

HE Clergy Club of New York should be more widely known. r or five hundred of the clergymen this city and vicinity, of various rches, have united in an organiza- for intercourse and mutual help- ess. The rooms of the club are in Fifth Avenue Building, at Twenty- d Street—a central and convenient tion toward which many of the sit lines converge. Religious peri- als are provided; there is a library which leading publishers send the st publications. Restaurant facili- are provided at reasonable rates. etings of members are held, at which inguished visitors are received.

t is "an interchurch association of gymen resident in the City of New k and its suburbs, and of elect lay- —for relaxation, and for the social, olarly and spiritual fellowship of its mbers." It is the pioneer of such clubs. visible proclamation of life-partner- in the extension of the Kingdom of , expressed in the cooperative main- ance of a suite of rooms by ministers of ion and laymen associated with them. private meeting-place, conveniently to all denominational headquarters, religious leaders from all boroughs and suburbs of the city, for personal and committee uses.

A house of hospitality, for interchurch acquaintance, conference and cooperation, through the free availability of attractive rooms, always open, to advance these purposes.

A retreat for concentrated mental work.

A rendezvous for the wives and families of members, at a point of vantage to witness the public parades on the city's greatest avenue.

A scholarly benefit to members lacking other access to the latest theological, philosophical and sociological magazines and books.

The lowest-priced club in the city—with library, reading-room, writing-room, telephone and restaurant facilities, all for ten dollars a year.

An intown address and appointment center for clergy from a distance, at five dollars a year.

The club would welcome to its membership all the clergymen of New York and neighborhood. It thinks that no other organization offers to a minister so much for so little. For further information and membership application write to, or call on, Dr. Walter Laidlaw, 200 Fifth Avenue, Room 248.

Like Foods From Fairyland

Yet Shot from Guns

Puffed Grains are bubbles, so light and airy that they seem like fairy foods.

Yet they were created by a scientist—Prof. A. P. Anderson.

They are made for a hygienic purpose—to make whole grains wholly digestible.

To this end they are steam-exploded and are shot from guns.

Not Toy Foods

To children these are food confections. They are flaky and flimsy. The taste is like toasted nuts.

At breakfast they are tidbits. In bowls of milk they are almond-flavored dainties. In candy making they are used like nut meats.

But mothers should remember that Puffed Wheat and Rice are whole grains, and children get too little whole-grain food.

More than that, every food cell is exploded, so every atom of the whole grain feeds.

Few methods of cooking break even half of the food cells. This method breaks them all.

Serve In Abundance

Children delight in Puffed Grains. Wheat, corn and rice were never served in such enticing form.

These are flimsy, flavory bubbles, puffed to eight times normal size.

But the great fact is that no other method so fits these grains for food. They are suitable for any hour because they do not tax the stomach. Let children eat all they will.

Puffed Wheat

Puffed Rice

Corn Puffs

All Bubble Grains
Each 15c
Except in Far West

Ways of Serving

With cream and sugar.
With melted butter.
Mixed with fruit.
In bowls of milk.
In soups.
On ice cream.

Also crisp and lightly butter for hungry children to eat dry. They are better than peanuts or popcorn.

The Quaker Oats Company
Sole Makers

(3035)

Strengthen Your EYES!
Preserve Your Most Precious Possession

Your sight is your most precious gift. Weak eyesight means weak power of observation, eye strain, eye disease, and untold inconvenience. Take no chances with your eyes—you cannot get along without them. Make them stronger every day instead of weaker. Let us send you Bernarr Macfadden's wonderful new Course in "Strengthening the Eyes." Send no money—just mail coupon.

Glasses Do Not Remove the Cause of Eye Trouble

Instead, the eyes come to depend on them more every day. Glasses are eye crutches! They simply bolster up the eyes—they do not strengthen them. It has been definitely proven that practically all defects of the eyes can be cured without glasses. Most people now wearing glasses can be freed from the inconvenience, and expense of constant breakages, by strengthening and correcting their vision through the simple, yet effective eye educational exercises recommended by Mr. Macfadden.

Eye Defects Removed

This remarkable new Course teaches you how to use your eyes without strain at all distances—how to do without glasses—how to remedy cross eyes or squint eyes—how to restore the normal sight—how to restore perfect control to eye nerves and muscles.

Beneficial Results at Once

No drugs, medicines or operations. The course includes a simple, yet thoroughly scientific system of eye educational exercises which strengthen the eyes exactly as the muscles of the body can be strengthened through body exercises. Results are immediate, and improvement continues daily. One woman writes: "I notice a great improvement in my eyes since learning to use them right." Another user says, "Your Eye Strengthening Course is fine. My eyes are already improving." Still another writes, "Words cannot express my great gratitude for these excellent books." (Names on request.)

Send No Money

Let us send you this new Course "Strengthening the Eyes" on five days' approval. There are twenty-eight simple little lessons which will show you the way to strengthen and preserve your sight—the gift of the gods! Try the exercises, then return the Course if not satisfied and you will owe nothing. If, however, you feel that the Course will help your eyes wonderfully, send only $5.00.

Mail Coupon!

If you value your eyes, if you wear glasses and want to get rid of them, if your eyes are weak or strained, or if you want to insure freedom from eye troubles, mail coupon now and investigate this New Course "Strengthening the Eyes." Send no money—but mail coupon now, as this offer may never appear again.

Physical Culture Publishing Company,
Dept. 3903
119 W. 40th St.,
New York City

Physical Culture
Pub. Co., Dept. 3903
119 W. 40th St.,
New York City

Gentlemen:
Send me your Course "Strengthening the Eyes" which I will return in 5 days or send you $5 in payment for the course.

Name....................................

Address....................................

Wilson and Foch say

"A man has deprived himself of the best there is in the world who has deprived himself of intimate knowledge of the Bible."
—Pres. Wilson.

"The Bible is certainly the best preparation that you can give to an American soldier going into battle to sustain his magnificent ideal and faith."—Marshal Foch to N. Y. Bible Society.

Answer this "Call to the Colors"

Be a Trained Christian Worker These two great leaders voice a direct appeal to intelligent men and women—to busy teachers, physicians, students, office, industrial and home workers, farmers, mechanics, soldiers—as well as to ministers, missionaries, evangelists, etc. Never was there such a great demand for those who really know the Bible. There is personal profit beyond anything you can imagine in prayerful, systematic Bible reading and study. Get ready! Start at once! The

Correspondence Courses

of the MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE will give you a system to study by—a guide, a teacher. You will be a personal pupil—time, place and amount of study under your control. Examinations are written, assuring accuracy in your work.

WRITE TODAY Over 5,000 enrolled last year. 8 different courses. Terms nominal. Send now for Free Prospectus.

THE MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE
Dept. 1563 153 Institute Place Chicago, Ill.

God's Hand in a Nation's Life

International Sunday School Lesson for March 30
Joshua 24 : 14-28

A Review Lesson

By. Rev. George D. Allison, Ph. D.

THE story of the beginnings of any nation is of interest in proportion as that nation has influenced the world by its idealism or its contribution to the richness of human life. We are all eager to know whence came the greatness of Greece, of Rome and of Judea. But the moral gifts which God has bestowed upon the whole world through Israel's sense of duty and of holiness are even more marvelous than the gifts of beauty and philosophy which came from the land of Phidias and Plato or the gift of political organization which came from the City of the Seven Hills. So we have reviewed once more the rise of the Hebrews, coming forth out of the bondage of Egypt, led by one of the mightiest figures in human history, developed providentially by a course of rigorous experiences, until we see them as they were when they had gained a secure footing in their fatherland. The Exodus, "the way out," has become the familiar parable of all national and individual experience: struggling, advancing, falling, rallying—and ever God leading on!

We believe with all our hearts that in every unjust situation God is saying again what he said to Pharaoh, "Let my people go, that they may serve me." Our missionaries today are laboring in the spirit of Moses to lead out the backward peoples of the earth from bondage to superstition, ignorance and fear. Our Church at home has realized in the universal study of industrial conditions during the past year that God's people cannot serve him fully when there is a sense of bitterness in their hearts, or when the struggle for food and shelter engages every energy of the body and the mind. He could not give his message to the world through Israel while leaving them in the brickfields of Pharaoh. In the turmoil of our day the Exodus has new application as we see that it has both a religious phase and an economic phase, and that the two are interrelated. How eagerly we hope that in solving the problems of today we may be like Moses in the sense of a divine obligation resting upon all of us in our common social and industrial life!

The Lowell centenary reminds us of the great saying of that poet and patriot when Guizot asked him how long the American Republic would endure. He responded, "As long as the ideals of the founders continue dominant." That was also true of Israel: for while the ideals of Abraham and of Moses, of Joshua and of David, of Amos and Isaiah were dominant her place was sure. When she descended to the religious formalism of the Pharisees and the commercialism of Tyre, she was doomed. The whole world is interested today in the ideals of America, because under God she has a place of spiritual and political leadership in these times of readjustment and the birth of new nations. In America as in Israel, God's hand may be seen moving through her chosen leaders, the outstanding events of her history, and her laws and customs of common life.

God's Hand in Chosen Leaders

God works through men. History teaches that so plainly that we ought to make the main business of church and school the production of men whom God can use. He works through the exceptional man like Moses when he puts his versatile gifts at the disposal of God's Spirit. He works through the valiant and whole-souled man of less conspicuous abilities like Joshua: He can use the well-disposed outsider like Jethro to advance the cause of his kingdom in practical ways. He can even use the Aarons who seem to have a vein of constitutional instability, but he cannot rely largely upon them. He can use the common men of the rank and file; yes, he needs them innumerably, when they catch a vision of his will in the organized life of society and the state. The great deliverers always have hearts that burn with sympathy for the people. Moses, the greatest figure in the early history of the Jews, yearns over the suffering, wayward, troubled multitudes of his time. His symbol of office was no sword or scepter, but a shepherd's crook.

How much the world needs Moses-like men now, whom our God will surely raise up! Not noisy demagogues, for it were better to be "slow of speech and of a slow tongue" so long as the words that God himself gives were spoken forth bravely. In our time the conditions of ordinary life are being transformed by men of social sympathies, rightminded men who see the wrong and also see the right that ought to be. Our danger is from the men who tear down but do not build anew, the anarchistic minds that are as far from the conception of a city of God as the crudest of exploiters of the people.

God's Hand in Outstanding Events

What a series of incidents we have reviewed together: the defiance to Pharaoh, the crossing of the Red Sea, the camp at Sinai, the wilderness journey, the survey of the land, the fall of Jericho! They are vivid illustrations of the providential moving of God in history, which can be matched, we know, in the events of the founding of our own free country. The Czecho-slovaks have had their marvelous journeys in search of freedom, and the Belgians their sojourn in bondage during contemporary days. The God of all the earth has led them as truly as he led his peculiar people of old.

The same ever-living God is watching over the changing conditions of the lives of his children as they develop in our time, who of old guided the people of Israel as they passed out of slavery into the life of the wandering nomads of the desert, thence into settled communities in Canaan with the building up of ordered social life. He gave them laws and lawgivers according to their changing needs. He influenced their souls through the customs of their religion and the accepted code of their common intercourse, with ever the gentle pressure toward the higher, the more spiritual, the more divine order. We learn of the way in which the Hebrews built upon old foundations of ritual and custom and by divine inspiration transformed every feature of ancient worship with a loftier consciousness of the holiness and the purpose of the Almighty. We have seen the primitive blood-revenge giving way to more humane ideas of justice between man and man. We have seen the purification of ritual from the orgiastic elements of primitive religions. Little obscure sentences in the law have to do with remarkable prohibitions of long-continued abuses of the instinct for worship. We see growing the sense of the solidarity of the Hebrew people, "he is thy brother" becoming a watchword against extortion and wrong. We see the growth of a new spirit toward the alien and the slave, not found among other races. Gradually law and custom were remolded nearer to the will of the Father. And that process continues still. Our life is changing radically all the while. As God's servant David Lloyd George says, we must not speak and think of resuming "before the war" conditions, but must press on into a new world wherein dwelleth righteousness.

Progress God's Watchword for His People

"Speak to the children of Israel that they go forward" was the challenge of Jehovah to Moses and his generation. "Behold, a new thing will I do," saith the Lord to Isaiah again and again. Progress under God inspired the sacrifices

RO-SAN
Indoor Close
The origi chemical closet. M comfortable, healthful, conve
ent. Takes the place of all outd toilets, where germs breed.
ready for the long, cold wint
Have a warm, sanitary, comf able, odorless toilet right in house anywhere you want it. Do go out in the cold. A boon invalids.
GUARANTEED ODORLESS
The germs are killed b chemical in water in t container. Empty once month as easy as ash Closet guaranteed. Thir days' trial. Ask for catal and price.
ROWE SANITARY MFG. CO.
1603 6th St., Detroit, Mi
Ask about Ro-San Washstan
Hot and Cold Running Wa
Without Plumbing.

600 Shaves
Yes, and more. That's the record of many men shave themselves. Old blades sharper than new—in 10 sec
For all Safety Razors.
velvety shaves for life wit wonderful, new Rotastro
Just drop blade in, turn ha
Nothing to get out of order.
chine gives "heel and toe acti just like a barber strops a 10 Days Free Trial—wri booklet and state make of Burke Mfg. Co., Dept. 299, Dayt

This FRE
Shoe Boo is crowded with photogra and descriptions of Ez W
Shoes for Men, Women Children. Ez Wear sh are sent postpaid, guar teed to combine comf style and quality, to perfectly or money be Amazingly low prices.
Send for your copy tod
THE SIMON SHOE
EZ WEAR
Save Money with this big Shoe Book
The H. V. Simon Shoe 1589 BROADW
BROOKLYN

HOOSIER STOVES & RANGES FRE
To try in your home 30 days free no matter where you Show your friends, send it back at our expense if you want to keep it. Million members of families enjoyin comforts and pleasure
"Hoosier" Stoves & Ran perfect bakers and heaters, tifully finished, smooth
design, guaranteed for year
Write for our big free book ing photographs, describing assortment of sizes and de of Steel and Cast Ranges, Cook and Hard Coal Heaters, to select explaining our free trial. Send today.
HOOSIER STOVE C
164 State St., Marion,

ORNAMENTAL FENCE
6 Cents per Foot and up. Costs less than wood.
designs. All steel. For Lawns, Churches and Cemeteries. Write for free Catalog and Special Prices.
Kokomo Fence Machine Co. 499 North St., Kokomo, Ind.

Cuticura Soap
Ideal for the Complexion
All druggists, Soap 25, Ointment 25 and 50, Talcum 25
Sample each free of "Cuticura, Dept. M, Boston."

Enjoy Foot Comfort
Forget your feet. Make walking ea and enjoy solid comfort by weari
Pneumatic Perfection Arch Cushi
65c Post Paid
Prevent Flat Feet and Fallen Arch
Make your shoes easy as old slippers give quick relief to tired, aching feet. No metal, light, durab
For men and women. Fit any shoe. (State size and width Changeable at will. Send for Free Catalog.
Pillow Shoe Co., Dept. 3, 184 Summer St., Boston, Ma

CASH FOR OLD FALSE TEETH
We now pay higher prices wheth broken or not. Send now. Cash sent by return Packages returned at our expense if our offer is refu
Highest prices also paid for OLD GOLD JEWELRY, GO
CROWNS, BRIDGES, DENTAL GOLD, PLATINU
DIAMONDS and SILVER. Send for latest catalog of new jew
United States Smelting Wks., 344 Goldsmith Bldg., Milwaukee,

You can be quickly cured, if y
STAMMER
Send 10 cents coin or stamps for 70-page book on Sta mering and Stuttering, "Its Cause and Cure." It tells ho cured myself after stammering for 20 years.
Benjamin N. Bogue, 5502 Bogue Building, Indiana

Primary and Junior Songs
For EASTER—TULLAR-MEREDITH CO., 249 W. 36th St., New York
Don't bother with the scattered, incidental music for the Depts found in the usual services, but get a few copies this book and have something from which to make up su programs for the future. Send 25c for complete copy a our new Easter Services entitled "Morn of Light" an "Victory Divine". Moneybackifyouwantit.

he Reformers of the sixteenth cen- y and the labors of the evangelists he eighteenth and nineteenth. So have reason to believe we are in the succession of God's servants when sweep of world-wide missions hes us up in joyous study and ver and enlarged giving as we listen ur leaders, the missionary statesmen ur various denominations. We have n hopes of a new and larger Christian ty among all who today labor for the Kingdom of God in our own land. We watch and pray for the best things to come from the stupendous changes the Great War has made in our own land and abroad.

"I have seen with the eyes of God!" exclaimed Donald Hankey on his return from fighting in France. Lord, open our eyes that we may see thy hand beckoning us on, with something of the clearness and reality that we now see thy leading in ancient Israel.

Sunday School Methods

By FRANK L. BROWN

General Secretary World's Sunday School Association, American Section

'lans for the Returning Boys

HE stream of soldiers and sailors is flowing homeward at an accelerating pace. What to do with m and for them is the question fac- the Sunday schools of America. It been estimated that a million of m have been Sunday school atten- ts. This would seem to be a conserv- e figure, and would average only five h from the 200,000 Sunday schools he country. From my own school Brooklyn 245 have gone. We have t 242 Testaments from the school to m. Other schools have kept in touch h their lads for months past by Tes- ients and letters. The tide of cor- ondence with them has been a heavy . Precious links have been estab- ed with hundreds of thousands of boys by pastors, superintendents teachers. The foundation has been for the days that are now here.

he War Camp Community Service other welfare organizations have in w going into communities on a larger le and bidding for the returning boys for community support by offering rogram of entertainment and ser- e. If the Sunday schools and churches ll make an adequate program for the s in each community the other or- izations would not be necessary.

May I suggest some practical plans interesting and holding these boys the church and school as soon as they ll return and to tie them up to worth- ile service?

. Announce their return from the pul- superintendent's platform, church endar, and local press. Send a wel- e letter or a welcome committee to call on them and invite them back to the Sunday school and church.

2. Plan a monthly or bi-monthly welcome service on Sunday night. Provide reserved seats for the boys, note their special lines of service, and emphasize in the sermon the call to Christian service. The Heidelberg Press, Fifteenth and Race Streets, Philadelphia, publish for such a service in leaflet form two appropriate songs—"You are welcome" (Louden) and "Is your name on His Honor Roll?" (Louden).

3. The pastor or superintendent should be the chairman of a committee of three or five of your wisest men to personally interview each boy in an informal way to ascertain if any spiritual experience, any purpose for higher living, has come to him out of the experiences of the war. This should all be noted on a card such as we use in our school, reading as follows:

REPORT ON MEN DISCHARGED FROM SERVICE

Name ————.

Address————.

Is he now a church member?

Does he desire to unite with the church?

Has any special spiritual experience come to him since he went into service?

What form of Christian service does he choose in class, school or for life?

Is he looking for a position, and in what line?

Class No.

(Signed) Teacher or Committee.

4. Before each boy should be placed some concrete form of service in the class, Sunday school, church, community or the world field. There is need for teachers of boys' classes, or a challenge to start and build up such a class might be made. Leaders are needed for recreation groups of boys. Or a group of boys might be formed for instruction in the form of service specialized in by the soldiers or sailors, such as aviation, signalling, engineering. Or the call of the missionary leaders and theological seminaries for strong men to be trained for service might be presented. Or some of these young men who have qualified as officers should be trained through the right books and practice work for additional Sunday school officers in an officer training class.

5. The committee spoken of should interest themselves in obtaining employment for the unemployed soldier.

6. A Christian service flag should be made with a place for stars for every boy who takes up some form of Christian service upon his return as teacher, class committeeman, group leader, officer of Sunday school or special helper.

7. Form the boys into an organization with social and service features. Provide a room where they can meet evenings for games, reading and social times. The saloon will soon be gone. The church must house these young people under its own roof or in some place built for this purpose, to justify itself before the community.

8. Plan a membership campaign to overcome the Sunday school attendance lapse of the last two years, and use the returning boys as captains and members of teams to put the campaign across. The drive should be for all the returning boys in the community, whether members of a Sunday school or not. Class and school goals should be set for this drive and meetings of teams held for report on membership gain as in other drives to which the public has now become accustomed.

ut Your Boy Right

WHEN your boy was learning to read, his early steps were in carefully selected, long approved pages. It is when he branches out for himself that the critical period in his reading habits arises. Parents of more than 500,000 American boys chose the right road by giving their sons The American Boy, a sane, constructive magazine, and a safe outlet for the natural reading enthusiasm of normal healthy boys. Give it to your boy!

$2 a year—20c a copy at newsstands

THE SPRAGUE PUB. CO.
6 American Building Detroit, Mich.

THE AMERICAN BOY

"The Biggest, Brightest, Best Magazine for Boys in all the World"

omfort ndoor Closet

Odorless, Sanitary, Germ-proof. Needed in every home. Set up by anyone in any room. Sent on FREE trial.

WOOD SEAT AND COVER

bolish cold out-door closet. Germ life killed y chemicals. U. S. Health Bureau approves. oards of Health endorse it. Exclusive territory to gents. Catalog FREE.

OMFORT CHEMICAL CLOSET CO. 543 Factories Bldg. Toledo, O.

HURCH FURNITURE

Pews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book acks, Tables, Desks—EVERYTHING. he finest furniture made. Direct from our actory to your church. Catalog free.

eMoulin Bros. & Co. Dept. 54. Greenville, Ill.

DER'S PASTILLES Standard relief for ASTHMA (Inhala- .) All Druggists, 50 cts., or trial size for 2c. stamp.

WELL & CO., 50 D Main St., Charlestown, Mass.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS

Bring people to church. Their clear, beautiful, sustained, far-reaching tones are a power for good. Your church should have one. Durability guaranteed. Inexpensive. Art catalog & buying plans free.

The Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co. Dept. B51 Cincinnati, O.

DIVIDUAL COMMUNION CUPS

Should be used by every Church. Trial free.

OMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO., Box 150, Lima, O.

"THE SHOE THAT HOLDS ITS SHAPE"

W.L.Douglas

"THE SHOE THAT HOLDS ITS SHAPE"

$4.00 $4.50 $5.00 $6.00 $7.00 & $8.00

IF you have been paying $10.00 to $12.00 for fine shoes, a trial will convince you that for style, comfort and service W.L.Douglas $7.00 and $8.00 shoes are equally as good and will give excellent satisfaction. The actual value is determined and the retail price fixed at the factory before W.L.Douglas name and the retail price is stamped on the bottom. The stamped price is W. L. Douglas personal guarantee that the shoes are always worth the price paid for them. The retail prices are the same everywhere. They cost no more in San Francisco than they do in New York.

Stamping the price on every pair of shoes as a protection against high prices and unreasonable profits is only one example of the constant endeavor of W.L.Douglas to protect his customers. The quality of W. L. Douglas product is guaranteed by more than 40 years experience in making fine shoes. The smart styles are the leaders in the fashion centers of America. They are made in a well-equipped factory at Brockton, Mass., by the highest paid, skilled shoemakers under the direction and supervision of experienced men, all working with an honest determination to make the best shoes for the price that money can buy.

CAUTION—Before you buy be sure W.L.Douglas name and the retail price is stamped on the bottom and the inside top facing. If the stamped price has been mutilated, BEWARE OF FRAUD.

For sale by 106 W.L.Douglas stores and over 9000 W. L. Douglas dealers, or can be ordered direct from factory by mail, Parcel Post charges prepaid. Write for Illustrated Catalog showing how to order by mail.

W.L.Douglas

President W.L.DOUGLAS SHOE COMPANY,
165 SPARK STREET,
BROCKTON - - MASS.

FOR MEN
FOR WOMEN
W.L.DOUGLAS $5.00 SHOE
BOYS' SHOES
Best in the World
$3 $3.50 $4

The Hinds Honey and Almond Cream

TOILET NECESSITIES

possess qualities of surpassing excellence. Each and every one will do its particular part, most agreeably and economically, in adding charm to your complexion—to neck, arms or hands. Not only personal gratification but comfort and improved skin-health will follow their daily use. You may have used the liquid cream for years, but you should try the others. Let Mr. Hinds send you a complete descriptive booklet free.

SAMPLES: Be sure to enclose stamps with your request. Hinds Honey and Almond Cream 2c. Both Cold and Disappearing Cream 4c. Talcum 2c. Trialcake Soap 8c. Sample Face Powder 2c., Trial Size 15c. Attractive Week-end Box 50c.

Hinds Cream Toilet Necessities are selling everywhere, or will be mailed, postpaid in U. S. A., from Laboratory.

A. S. HINDS 291 West Street Portland, Maine

GUNN Sectional Bookcases

are safe to buy because you get full value. A handsome Style Book, mailed free, will give you an excellent idea of the various styles—Colonial, Mission, Queen Anne, Clawfoot and Standard—and detailed information about them. They have features others do not have.

A Guarantee that Guarantees

We guarantee our bookcases to be the best that up-to-date facilities and skilled mechanics can produce from the best materials obtainable. Built in one factory, under personal supervision, and special attention given to the building and finishing of each unit.

THE GUNN FURNITURE CO. 1820 Broadway, Grand Rapids, Mich.

GUNN OFFICE DESKS
WRITE FOR CATALOG

Why does Swift & Company handle poultry, butter, and eggs?

For the identical reason that your retail dealer handles them.

He has the ice box necessary to keep meat fresh and equally necessary to preserve poultry, butter, and eggs.

And he can reduce his expenses for rent, salesmen, and delivery service, by selling more goods.

And he can serve you—because you often like to buy poultry, eggs, butter, and cheese, when and where you buy your meats.

It would be inexcusably wasteful if he did not do this.

Just so with Swift & Company.

The retail dealer finds it a convenience to buy other goods besides meat from us.

We have the equipment—refrigerator cars and refrigerated branch houses built to keep meat fresh and just as necessary to preserve poultry, butter, and eggs.

And we have the distributing organization—branch supply houses, salesmen, and delivery equipment taking our goods to the retailer's store.

It would be an inexcusable economic waste to use this nation-wide distributing organization for nothing but meats.

Our entire selling cost is kept down by volume of business, made larger by handling poultry, butter, and eggs.

Swift & Company furnishes the most direct marketing route from the farm to the retail dealer.

Swift & Company, U. S. A.

Established 1868

A nation-wide organization owned by more than 23,000 stockholders

Young People's Topics for March

The Practice of Kindliness

Epworth League Topic. Gen. 45 : 1-15

LOVE makes us kind; the greater our love the more sincere our kindliness. It requires no especial talent to be unkind; it takes both thought and skill to be always kind. We like to appear bright. Wit that stings is good for a laugh; repartee that hides a wordy rapier brings us adulation, and we follow the easy way and then perhaps grieve, truly, but too late, over the broken friendship or the opportunity given to one more kind in speech. But we may be unkind though silent. We may withhold a word of cheer for which a heart is longing, or we may fail to invite one among an intimate group and the omission may hurt deeply, or we may hear a character defamed and keep silence. On the other hand, we may be always willing to omit the obvious but jarring joke, we may keep a sunny smile ready to cheer the weary or downhearted, we may take pains to invite the one the others overlook, we may spring quickly to the defense of the one wrongly accused, we may be ready to feed the hungry, comfort the sorrowing, inspire the discouraged, give a lift to the weary, and we will find, if we thus practice kindliness, that the world has reserved for us riches of joy untold.

Developing Self-Support on the Foreign Field

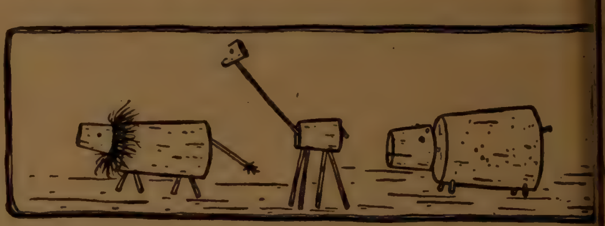
B. Y. P. U. Topic. I Cor. 9 : 1-14

IT IS obvious that, if the Mission Boards were to be compelled to support forever each native church established in mission lands, the work would expand only as fast as gifts increased. But from the beginning the converts have been led to see their obligation to support, so far as they may, their own churches and to provide for the evangelization of their countrymen through support of native teachers, Bible colporteurs and preachers. Considering the fact that the earlier converts, most of them even today, are from the poorest classes in each field, it is little short of marvelous that the native churches should have do well as they have. But the n Christians have taken a pride in gi and their sacrifices would shame of us in the homeland. As a result are many self-supporting church mission lands, many which requir moderate help from us here, and which support workers on fields them, while every member is an e gelist in some degree. Thus we ar only releasing our own mission m for new fields, but we are building living, vital church which will some take for Christ the lands now heat

On the Fence

Christian Endeavor Topic. Matt. 11-26

IT IS not comfortable to be on fence. It is hard to keep the tion, it is all too obvious, and if occupy it too often we lose our influ with both sides. The longer we on the fence the harder it is to stay the more difficult it is to come dow the right side. When we do jump frequently find our position worse t before. The judicial temperamen good, but it is a poor defense for a str dler. The world demands of a man t he have opinions, and it has more spect for a man whose opinion is usu wrong than for one of no marked opi or for one who waits to learn the tem of the company before risking exp sion. There is one subject, however, which we may not temporize. We m choose Christ or reject him; we m cleave to good or be counted the fri of evil; we must serve God or deny h So often young people say, "I'm enj ing life too much to be a Christian; w I get ready to settle down I'll b Christian," trading the certain jo Christ for the passing shadow of f ing pleasure. But when they " ready" the joy of life has run out their Christian life, if it is begun at never touches the heights or sounds t depths. Get off the fence today. T longer you stay there the more wob becomes both the fence and your cap ity for decision.



A Cork Menagerie That Molly Made

By LAURA A. KIRKMAN

ALTHOUGH Molly loved the company of children of her own age, still she thought that her baby brother was the very best company in the world, and often she preferred to sit and make him funny little animals out of corks of different sizes and matches, rather than play with the older children.

She made these animals by poking four matches into the side of a cork, for legs upon which the animals might stand; into one end of the cork she pushed a quarter-length piece of match and on the other end of this short piece she speared a very small cork for a head; at the other end of the cork which represented the body she poked in another quarter-length piece of match as a tail.

Of course she drew eyes and mouth upon the cork head of these animals ink, and had lots of fun making the all a little different in appearance so to represent the various wild anima For instance, she pinned a little pie of yellow fringe behind the head of o animal, to make it look like a lion. A other animal she declared was a gira because its match-stick neck was eve longer than its match-stick legs! T hippopotamus had a bigger head tha the other animals and very, very sho legs and tiny eyes.

Molly kept these animals in a b when the baby was not playing wit them, so that they would not be broken for she said she wanted to go on adding to their number until her little brothe had a big menagerie!

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Graham C. Patterson, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Edward S. Babcox, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.50 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

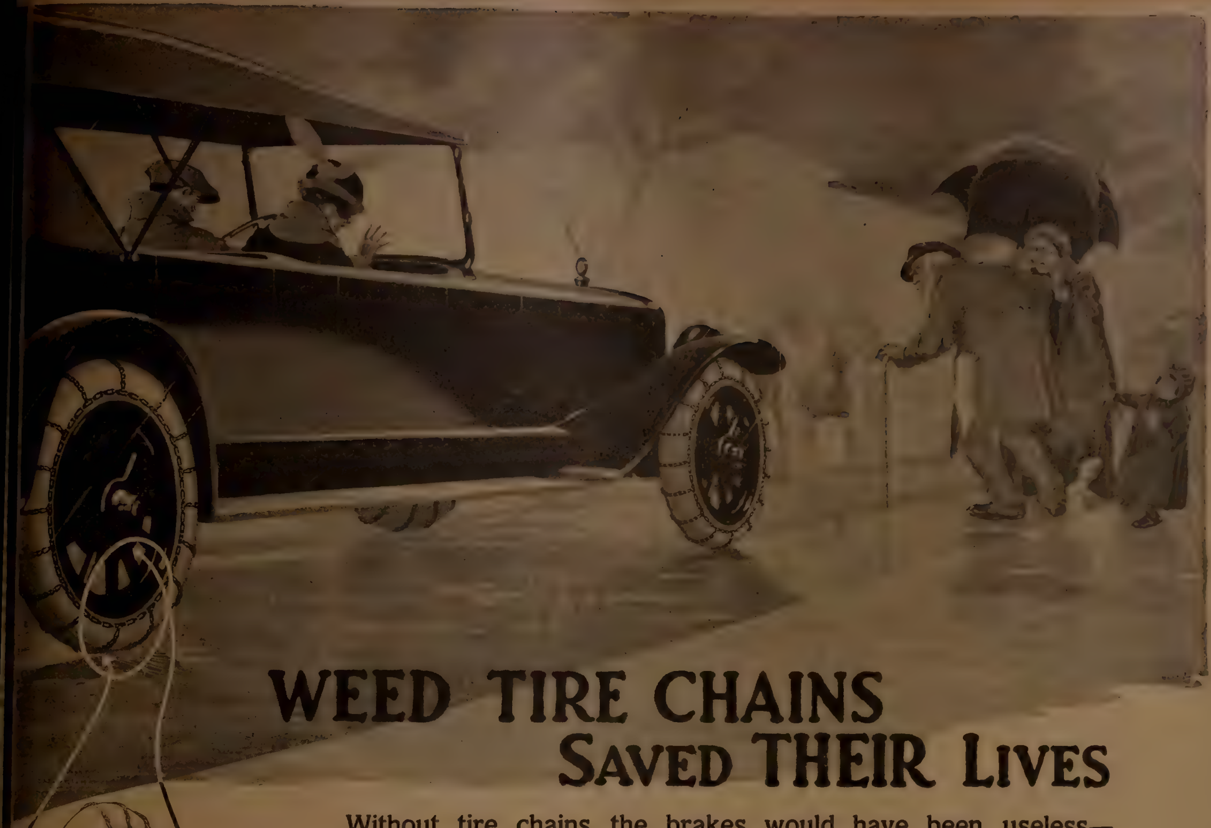
CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa



WEED TIRE CHAINS SAVED THEIR LIVES

Without tire chains, the brakes would have been useless—with brakes alone, disaster could not have been prevented.

The above picture illustrates one of the numerous situations in which you may be placed during bad road weather—when suddenly some one appears directly in your path and, in a fraction of a second, you must apply your brakes and bring your car to a quick stop. It is then you require a firm, unfailing grip on the road which can only be obtained by equipping all four tires with

WEED TIRE CHAINS

Cars with Chainless tires on wet, greasy, slippery pavements lack brake power to the same degree as they would if their brake linings were made of wet, greasy, slippery bands of rubber. Tire Chains are the most effective supplementary addition to brake power—in fact, brake efficiency is largely dependent upon the use of chains.

No matter how expert and careful you are when driving on wet pavements and muddy roads, the treacherous bare tires defeat your very best efforts to prevent a skid or bring your car safely to a sudden stop.

The memory of one accident spoils future enjoyment in the use of a car so don't run the risk of such accidents. Don't forever forfeit the pleasures and comforts of motoring. Safety and confidence can surely be yours by equipping all four tires with Weed Chains.

ood Brakes and Veed Tire Chains gether—ndoubtedly the reatest factor in reventing motor ccidents.

THE NAME WEED ON EVERY HOOK

WEED

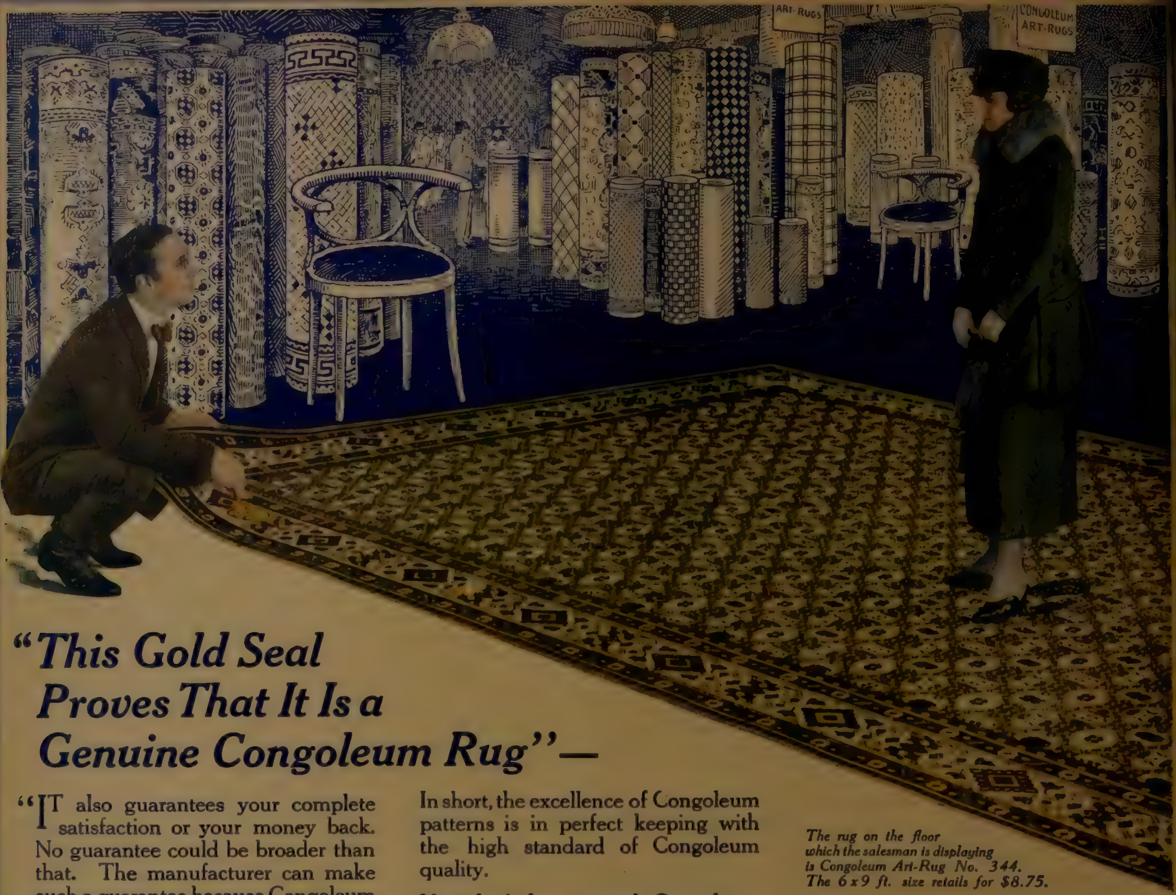
American Chain Company, Inc.

BRIDGEPORT A·C·C CONNECTICUT

In Canada: Dominion Chain Company, Limited, Niagara Falls, Ontario

Largest Chain Manufacturers in the World

The Complete Chain Line—All Types, All Sizes, All Finishes—From Plumbers' Safety Chain to Ships' Anchor Chain



The rug on the floor which the salesman is displaying is Congoleum Art-Rug No. 344. The 6 x 9 ft. size retails for $8.75.

"This Gold Seal Proves That It Is a Genuine Congoleum Rug"—

"IT also guarantees your complete satisfaction or your money back. No guarantee could be broader than that. The manufacturer can make such a guarantee because Congoleum has the quality to back it up.

"Beautiful? Yes. These rugs are even more beautiful in your home than in this store. They are made in rich blended colors. That's what makes the designs so soft and refined.

"And the variety of Congoleum patterns is ample to satisfy a very wide range of taste—from the simple tile effects to the more elaborate forms of artistic design."

You can easily pick out a Congoleum Art-Rug which in both coloring and pattern will be in complete harmony with the furnishings of the room you have in mind.

In short, the excellence of Congoleum patterns is in perfect keeping with the high standard of Congoleum quality.

You don't have to tack Congoleum Rugs down at the corners. They never curl or kick up. They hug the floor close without fastening. That means it's easy to clean them. A few swishes with a damp mop does the work.

Your dealer has Congoleum Art-Rugs in the following sizes:

6 x 9 feet	$ 8.75	9 x 9 feet	$12.75
7½ x 9 feet	10.60	9 x 10½ feet	14.85
9 x 12 feet	$17.00

Send for Free Rug Color-Chart

To see the other pretty patterns before you call on the dealer, get this rug chart that shows the actual colors. A convenient guide in picking out the patterns you like best. Send your name and address to the nearest office, and let us show you how to beautify your floors for little money.

Congoleum Floor Coverings

Congoleum Art-Carpets, in a special width of three yards, offer a seamless covering for many rooms, and are made of the same sanitary, durable, waterproof fabric as the Art-Rugs. Price $1.10 per square yard.

Congoleum (2 Yards Wide) is our original line. Made in a splendid variety of beautiful designs suitable for kitchen, pantry, bathroom, etc. Price $1.00 per square yard.

Prices in the Far West and South average 15% higher than those quoted; in Canada prices average 25% higher. All prices subject to change without notice.

The Congoleum Company
Department of
The Barrett Company
Philadelphia Chicago Montreal San Francisco Boston Toronto
Winnipeg Vancouver St. John, N. B. Halifax, N. S.

CONGOLEUM
Gold Seal
ART-RUGS
REG. U.S. PAT. OFFICE

Look for the Gold Seal

Always look for the Congoleum Gold Seal when you buy. It is pasted on the face of all Congoleum Art-Rugs and every two yards of Floor-Covering. If you don't see the Gold Seal, insist that the dealer show you the name "Congoleum" on the back of the material. This Gold Seal gives you the protection of our "money back" guarantee.

ART-RUGS AND FLOOR-COVERINGS
CONGOLEUM
GOLD SEAL
GUARANTEE
SATISFACTION GUARANTEED OR YOUR MONEY WILL BE REFUNDED
A DAMP CLOTH WILL REMOVE SEAL IF IT STICKS TO GOODS

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1919, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

$2.50 a Year NEW YORK, MARCH 29, 1919 Ten Cents a Copy

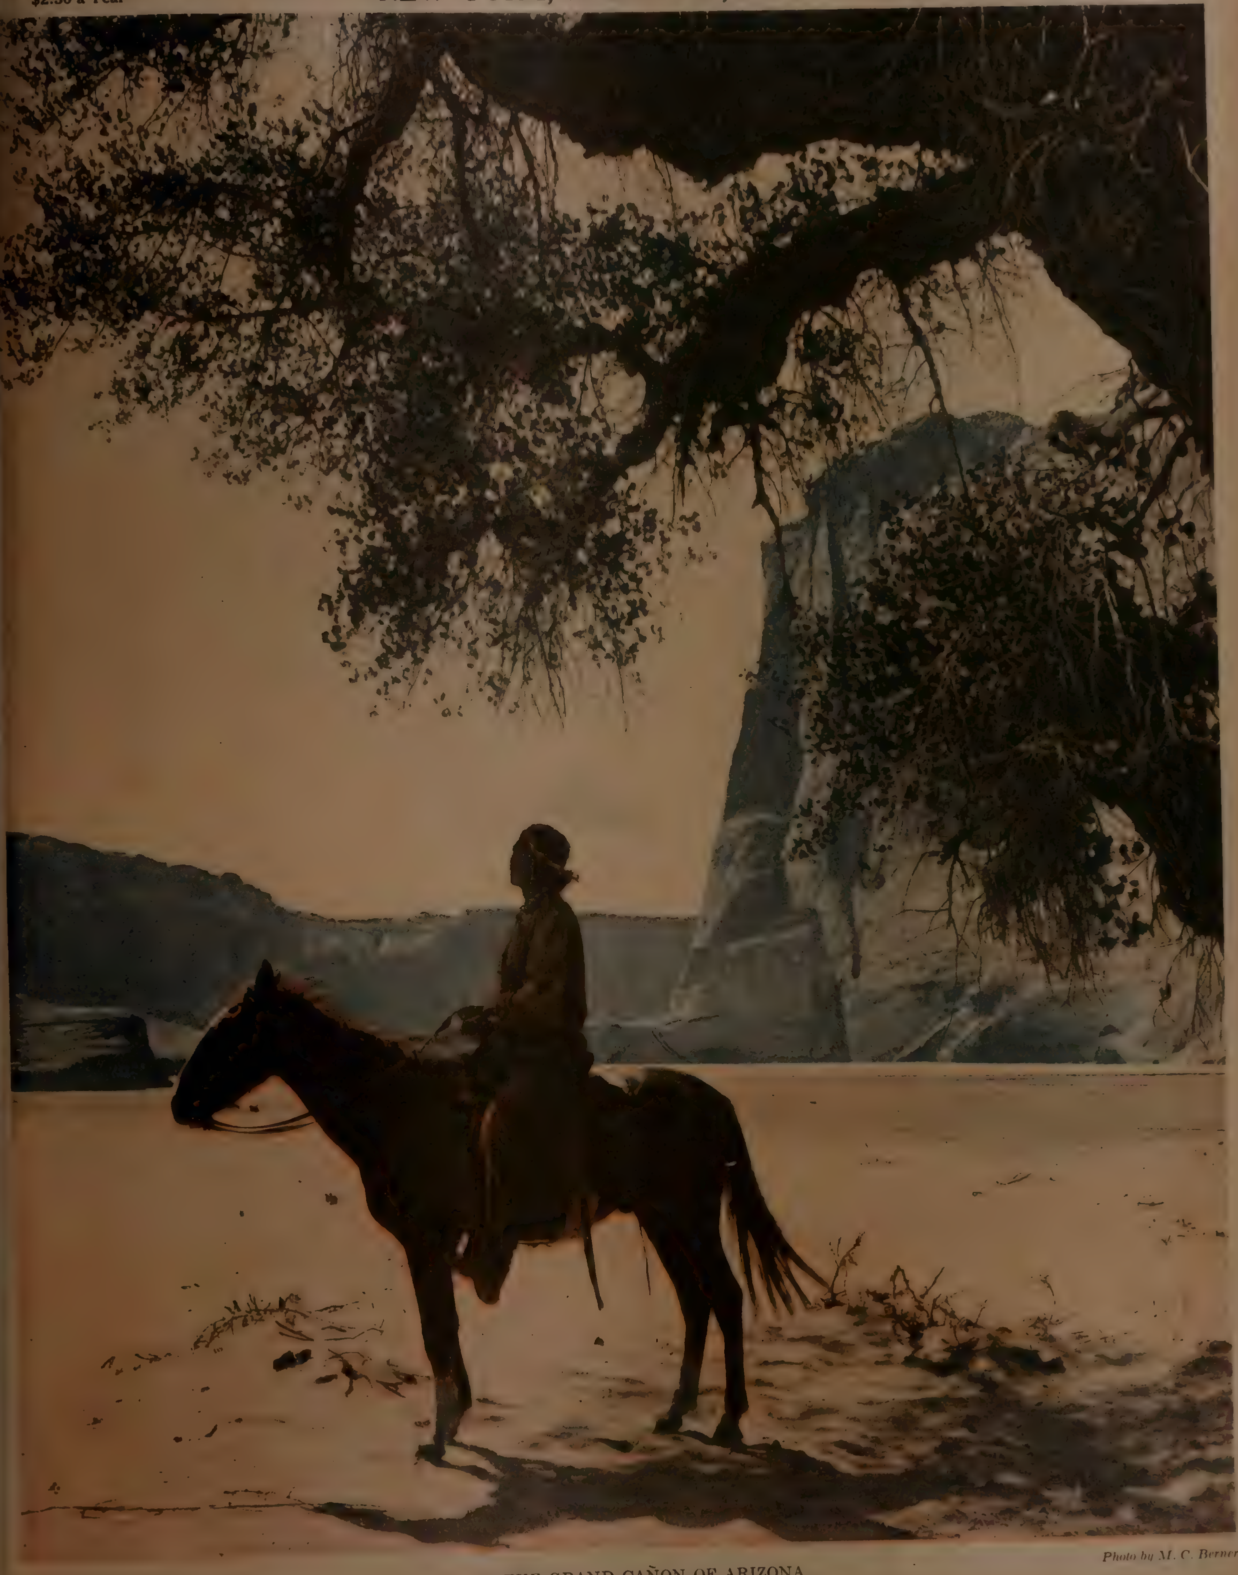


Photo by M. C. Berner

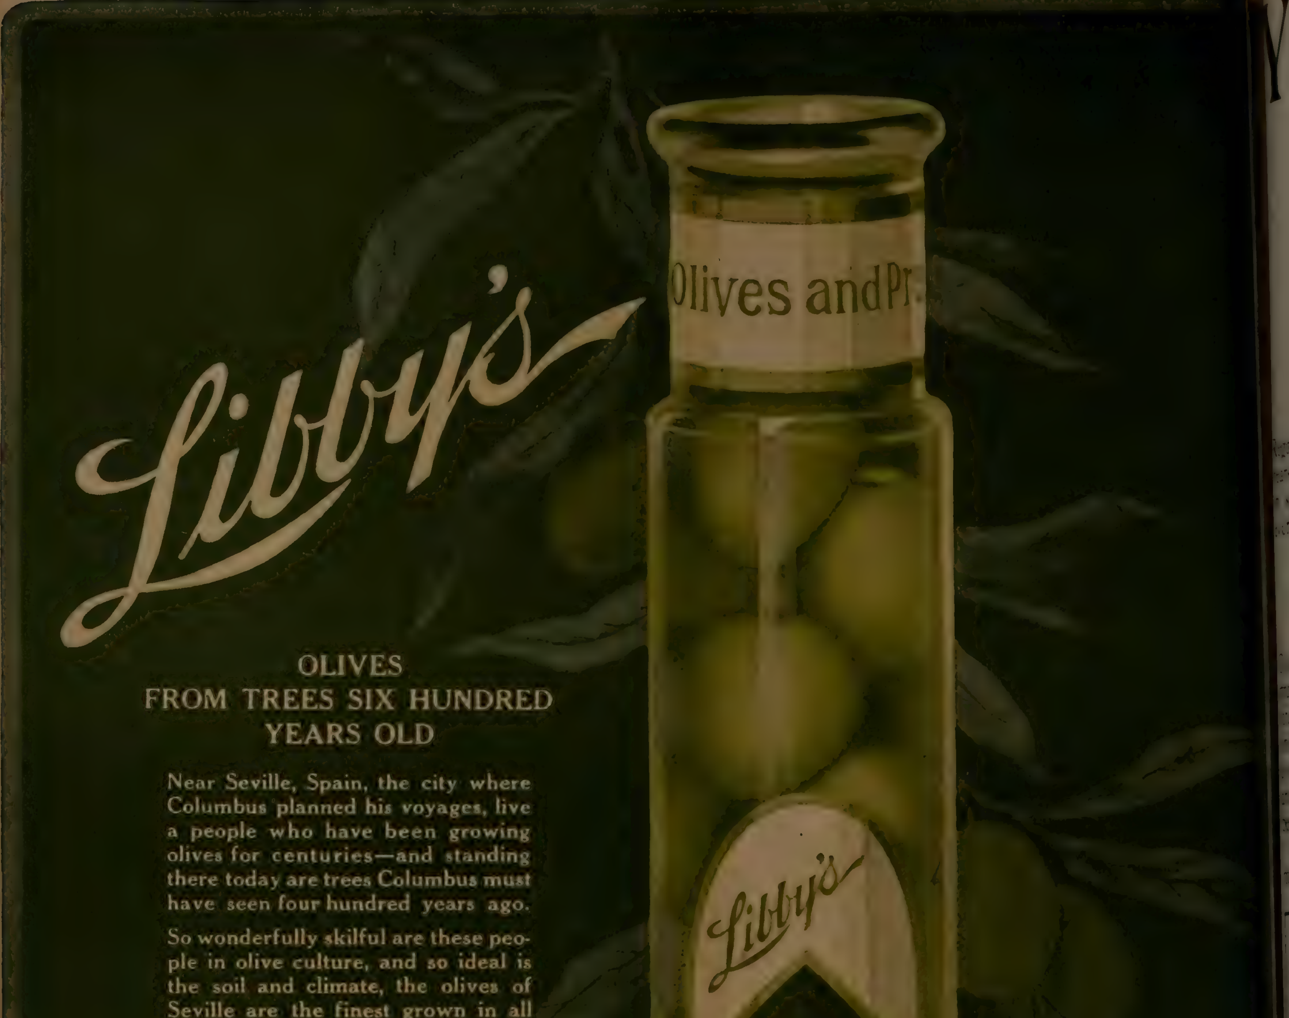
IN THE GRAND CAÑON OF ARIZONA



Libby's

OLIVES FROM TREES SIX HUNDRED YEARS OLD

Near Seville, Spain, the city where Columbus planned his voyages, live a people who have been growing olives for centuries—and standing there today are trees Columbus must have seen four hundred years ago.

So wonderfully skilful are these people in olive culture, and so ideal is the soil and climate, the olives of Seville are the finest grown in all the world. Libby's Olives are the choicest of the crop—each a perfect specimen, picked one by one by hand—the selection of our own experts whom we send to Seville. Order them for dinner tonight—a rare delight awaits you.

Libby, M^cNeill & Libby
1003 Welfare Bldg., Chicago

Your Opportunity

To Gain Greater Vitality, More Energy and Better Health—To Acquire Greater Personality—To Forsake the Inferior Life!

Why Be Sixty-five in Body When Less Than Thirty in Years?

Regardless of how old you are—regardless of your years—you can grow younger in body, younger in spirit, younger in ambition and younger in every characteristic that gives greater living power, greater earning power and greater pleasure power. You can gain thinking power, reasoning power, health power and pleasure power, as you may desire.

Why Take Less Than Your Full Share?

Conscious Evolution can easily and quickly demonstrate to you that you are only half as dynamic, vital, well, strong, energetic, brave, authoritative, only half as forceful, dominant, self-reliant, daring, courageous and but half as progressive, masterful, aroused, powerful and creative as you may easily become, through higher personal evolution.

Everywhere throughout the land men and women, in every walk of life, through Conscious Evolution are secretly and privately advancing themselves in life, happiness, joy and power—through consciously employing the principles of evolution. Whether you are a Doctor, Lawyer, Banker or Business Man, Financier, Mechanic, Soldier, Sailor, Laborer, Philosopher, or Scientist, Conscious Evolution is for you. It is for those who wish to make their existence on earth a source of higher, supreme satisfaction.

Daily Results

"Problems that formerly worried me are now so easy as to seem almost unreal, since I gained power of personality through Conscious Evolution."

"Conscious Evolution has made me conscious of new energy, of a better power of mind. I seem tireless. I seek action, instead of stagnation, as formerly."

"I am filled with a new zeal."

"I would not take fifty thousand dollars for the power which in six weeks Conscious Evolution has given me."

"I am happy to say that I received your instructions, and that in spite of travelling a good deal, my health is remarkable at ninety years of age."

"I am certain I am gaining in every way, for I feel as full of 'right,' and energy, as a wild cat."

"I owe my rise from the position of a country insurance agent to virtual head of one of the largest insurance companies of the world entirely to the power of personality Conscious Evolution has given me."

"My weak will and personality for years made it possible for my business partners to rob me of my proper share of profits. Conscious Evolution gave me courage, self-reliance and power of personality, and I made my partners pay me $160,000.00, out of which they had bulldozed me during my feeble and powerless days."

"Ten seconds from the time I started Conscious Evolution, I felt myself more alive and energetic."

"Worth more than a thousand dollars to me in increased mental and physical capacity."

"I note from your system a marked strengthening of my will power and concentration. I feel the interest of life much more keenly."

"I have been enabled by your system to do work of a mental character previously impossible for me."

"I cannot recommend your system too highly, and without flattery belie that its propagation has been of great benefit to the health of the country."

"I became aware of the beneficial power of Conscious Evolution at the end of the first ten seconds."

"In ten seconds Conscious Evolution proved itself to me."

"Conscious Evolution can demonstrate its great power for every good in half a minute. It did this for me."

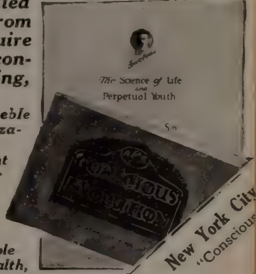
"Conscious Evolution sent a message of energy, health and power through me in twenty seconds, which has been increased from day to day."

"When your first letter of instructions reached me, I was tired and blue. I read it and saw the 'light.' My blues disappeared. I used my energies for about ten seconds, and my tiredness left me. Conscious Evolution is increasing my every power of mind and body as I wish and as you promise."

These Introductory Books Are Free

Swoboda has published for distribution two remarkable books which explain his system of Conscious Evolution and what it has already done. Write for these books—not because Conscious Evolution has meant so much to 262,000 other men and women, not because there is scarcely a prominent family in the country that hasn't at least one member a pupil of Swoboda, but because they contain valuable ideas for you. Conscious Evolution is being personally used by many of the most prominent physicians, and such men as Woodrow Wilson, Charles E. Hughes, the Rockefeilers, the Vanderbilts, the Goulds, the Huntingtons, the Cudahys, the Armours, the Swifts, and McAdoos for advancing themselves in energy, health, vitality and power of personality.

Write for these books because they mean so much to YOU in multiplied living power, earning power and personal power. They are filled from cover to cover with the vital facts about yourself and how you can acquire the degree of power in body and mind that you so consciously or unconsciously desire. They explain the dangers of excessive deep breathing, excessive exercise, and excessive muscular development.



CONSCIOUS EVOLUTION and THE SCIENCE OF LIFE show how to double or even treble your power of mind and body; not by tedious, prolonged study, but by a process of energization which raises the very level of your life and mental power.

CONSCIOUS EVOLUTION and THE SCIENCE OF LIFE supply the key to dominant personal power, dominant business power, dominant success power, dominant mental power and dominant will power. They show how to change your aimless and fruitless life and attitudes into ambition, inspiration, enthusiasm and the higher success.

These books show how to amazingly increase your power of will and personality, as well as your power of body for every action, for every purpose and process.

Conscious Evolution is a new science, and no one can afford not to know at least the simple facts about it. These facts show how Conscious Evolution overcomes weak will, poor health, feebleness of mind and body.

They show how to overcome the inferior, pleasureless, feeble and unsatisfactory life, by giving the means to the successful, superior and abundant life.

Conscious Evolution also shows how to arrest the aging of the body, and how to remain young, energetic, vigorous and active all of the days of life.

These books are absolutely free and there is no obligation now or after. These books are yours to keep, that you may attain a higher understanding of yourself and of evolution and the means to a higher existence.

Even if you gain but one idea or the realization of the one principle of life through CONSCIOUS EVOLUTION and THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, these books will be of eternal advantage to you.

Just write your name and address on this page, tear it out and mail it to Swoboda, or draw a ring around your name on your letterhead, or merely send a postal, giving your name and address. Do it today! This is your opportunity! Now is your turn! This is your day! This is your hour! Write NOW.

ALOIS P. SWOBODA, 2268 Berkeley Bldg., New York City

ALOIS P. SWOBODA, 2268 Berkeley Bldg., New York City

Please send me your free copyrighted books, "Conscious Evolution," and "The Science of Life."

Name.............

Address.............

City.............

State.............

CREX
GRASS RUGS

TRADE MARK REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

Thrift and Its Necessity

Even tho the fighting has ceased stupendous tasks still confront us.

To ensure a lasting and enduring peace there must be no let-up in our determination to save. The necessity of thrift is world-wide.

In the purchase of rugs economy can be practiced without the sacrifice of comfort and good taste.

CREX grass rugs are most logical non-expensive floor covering for every room in the house as well as the porch.

Used the year round they effect a great saving not only in money but in labor and care of the housewife. Convince yourself.

CREX De Luxe Weave

An exclusive, patented fabric. Unusually smooth. Beautiful soft tonal effects in harmonizing colors. A rare achievement in grass rug manufacture. Most suitable for indoors and enclosed porches.

CREX Herringbone Weave

Another patented and exclusive CREX product. Heavier and more durable than any other woven grass rug ever produced. Ideal for porches and rooms where severe wear must be considered.

CREX Regular Weave

The standby of the CREX family. Twenty years of supremacy and unquestioned popularity. Truly the "people's common-sense, non-extravagant floor covering. Reliability and price are dominant factors.

Patterns—Colorings—Sizes

Your choice of patterns is wide and varied—our catalogs show them all. Green, Blue, Brown and Old Rose predominate in solid and combination colors. Sizes range from small mats to large rugs.

Imitations and Substitution

All grass rugs are not CREX. Don't be deceived by imitations. Genuine CREX rugs have the name woven in edge of side binding—it's your safe guide to satisfaction. Don't take any substitute.

Free Color-Catalog

We will mail to you free on request beautiful color reproductions of all CREX patterns. Suggestions of different room-treatments and rug sizes are also shown. Write for your copy today.

WHEN BUYING GRASS RUGS BE SURE THE NAME
[illegible]
IS WOVEN IN THE SIDE BINDING
ITS YOUR PROTECTION AND OUR GUARANTEE

CREX CARPET COMPANY
212 Fifth Avenue - - New York

Your Dealer

If your dealer does not happen to have in stock the pattern, size or color of CREX rugs you want write to us giving full particulars. We want you to be satisfied.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME
SUBSCRIPTION, $2.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR
ENTERED AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER JANUARY 25, 1909, AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW YORK, UNDER THE ACT OF MARCH 3, 1879
VOL. 42—NO. 13. PRICE 10 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

THE TRUTH ABOUT THE Y. M. C. A.

rst to Answer the Call, It Has Led All hers in Faithful and Efficient Service. A eply to the Organization's Critics, Authorized by Dr. Mott e following article, prepared at the National War Work Council Headquarters, M. C. A., bears the authorization of Dr. John R. Mott, General Secretary.]

© Underwood & Underwood

Dr. John R. Mott, General Secretary, War Work Council, Y. M. C. A.

SOMETIMES we are too close to things to perceive what is going on right under our eyes. Some of us are just beginning to realize that the Young Men's Christian Association has heard and answered a world call. And the events leading up to it are so interng and so significant, the future so full of portents, t the observer may well pause and ponder whither institution is trending and why. The whole story ls with service and sacrifice, the call to duty, the eptance of responsibility, the faithful performance ard tasks by a devoted army of men and women, now the reward of world recognition that comes after deeds well done.

he Young Men's Christian Association was one he first American institutions to offer its services the government in the war. It will be one of the to demobilize in war work, because of the calls t are coming, bringing new opportunities and new ies.

Vhat an immensely significant thing it is that the nch and Italian governments have urgently rested the American Y. M. C. A. to extend and make manent its work in their countries! How wonderful it is when Serbia and Greece appeal to the Y. M. C. A. not to go home when the war is over but to stay and help the civilian population! What a fascinating thing it is to feel that the soldiers of India and China, of Portugal, of Cuba, of Great Britain and Belgium, all have felt the kindly help of the Y. M. C. A. during the war! What a splendid thing it is that every call has been answered cheerfully and willingly, whether it came from the soldiers of tottering Russia or from the bold Czecho-Slovaks fighting their way across Russia and founding a new nation!

Fifty yards from the German lines at Nigre in Lorraine

The story of the Y. M. C. A. war work starts with the story of an organization ready and prepared for the call. Why was it that our government, when it entered the war, asked the Y. M. C. A. to take charge of the welfare work of the army and navy? Because it was equipped and ready to do it! Its network of associations had spread over the continent. It had five thousand executive officers and more than $100,000,000 invested in buildings. It had raised up leaders and won the confidence of business men. It had served the government in the Civil War and gone to the front in the Spanish-American War. It had reached out into China and Japan and India with its helpful influences. In the Russo-Japanese war it had ministered on the plains of Manchuria to 700,000 Japanese soldiers, its work so impressing the emperor of Japan, a non-Christian, that he made a gift of $5,000 to this Y. M. C. A. war work. It had gone to the Mexican border with General Pershing, and there it was that he learned of its capacity for serving the soldier.

FROM the beginning of the World War in 1914 the Y. M. C. A. found itself in service. Its leaders were struck with the dire need of the prisoners of war for help, and it is one of the remarkable facts that the American Y. M. C. A. has been permitted to serve the prisoners of war on both sides of the struggle. It was able to save the lives of tens of thousands, to save the sanity of thousands more, and through its spiritual ministry to rescue multitudes from despair. British, French and Russian prisoners in Germany will never forget the Y. M. C. A., nor will German prisoners in Russia.

The Association, when the United States entered the war, answered the call of the government and undertook to devote its strength, its personnel, its resources to doing a great good work for the soldiers, the sailors, the marines. In this country there had to be established in cantonments and camps one thousand huts and tents, with a staff of 4,000 secretaries. The Y. M. C. A. accompanied the armed forces of the United States from the time it cheered them as they were leaving home to the time they left the cantonments for overseas. It carried with them the spirit and the thoughts of home, gave them a pleasant place in which to read, to write letters, to hear good music and entertainment, to attend lectures, to have the religious service to which they were accustomed. It did not leave the boys adrift at loose ends.

OVERSEAS the work grew and expanded from one tent in Brest to more than 1,500 huts in rented buildings and tents, to dugouts under the front-line trenches. A vast organization was built up. Men scurried over France buying building materials. Labor was scarce. Prices were high. Railroads were in control of the government. Overseas tonnage was in the control of the armies. A motor transport system was started.

When the armistice was signed, the Y. M. C. A. had more than 7,000 workers abroad. The huts and the front-line dugouts were centers of service for a great force, including the noble corps of men and women who put the touch of home into the canteen. Realize what it meant for the soldier to have a warm place in which to dry his feet, to write a letter home, or read a magazine, or catch a friendly smile, after drilling or fighting in the mud and sleet and rain. The Y. M. C. A. huts were always warm and cheerful, even if coal was $60 or $70 a ton. There the soldiers played their games, put on their amateur shows, watched the movies. The Y. M. C. A. hut became their home, their theater, their library and their church.

The Association also looked after their recreation. Hundreds of athletic directors above draft age; between one and two million dollars' worth of baseballs, bats and athletic goods of all sorts; everything needed to keep the homesick men busy and fit, baseball being the great safety valve, and all sports recognized as indispensable aids to the fighting morale. A hundred entertainment troupes gave free entertainments at all available points. More than four million feet of moving picture films were shown every month to a nightly attendance of 300,000. Free musical instruments, concerts by musicians and musical companies played their part in making life cheerful for the doughboys.

At the huts the boys wrote the letters that the folks at home so eagerly waited for. The Y furnished the writing-paper and envelopes, over ten million sheets a week. It furnished the desks, the place to write. Its reading-rooms had hundreds of thousand dollars' worth of magazines and periodicals. It offered educational facilities so that ambitious boys who had left high school, college or night school to go to war might go on with their studies. This meant two million dollars' worth of text-books and school materials for the boys, and the services of educational directors, lecturers and teachers.

American doughboys in the Y. M. C. A. clubhouse at Aix-les-Bains. The building was once the palace of a French aristocrat SOMETHING of the magnitude of the work accomplished and in progress begins to reveal itself. The Y. M. C. A. not only carried on the work of recreation with the American Expeditionary Forces at debarkation points, in camps, in the front-line areas at the direct command of General Pershing, but it assumed under his direction the conduct of the recreation centers established in the great leave areas where the soldiers went on their vacations. General Pershing was fighting the German bullets, machine guns and all their damnable inventions for warfare; but he was fighting disease, he was fighting homesickness, loneliness; and the most insidious thing he was fighting was vice. Realizing that the soldiers need vacations in clean pleasant places far removed from the vicious plague spots of the big cities, he sent the boys to selected areas which had been cleaned up. With them he asked the Y. M. C. A. to go. When the boys got there they found palaces transformed into clubhouses, large auditoriums for lectures and services, and all the amusements from mountain climbing to baseball that men and boys enjoy.

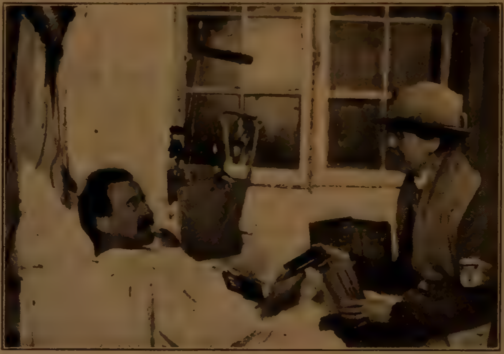
The Y was expanding. It was giving service. At home it had thrown open all of its associations to the armed forces. It was sending men overseas with the boys on the transports to brave the submarine dangers. It was carrying on campaigns to induce the boys to write home. It was urging the boys to be prompt with their remittances home, sending for them free of charge more than 275,000 remittances totaling $16,000,000. Whatever the government called upon the Y. M. C. A. to do, it was doing cheerfully and gladly. It had been placed under military discipline. Its men wore the army uniform. When G. H. Q. or the War Department called it obeyed. Many of its supplies were turned over to the government when needed for war purposes; many of its automobiles had been impressed into war service. It had enlisted in a big undertaking; to help the nation win the war. It was doing it with every energy at its command.



Taking the "Y" to the French army. A woman worker taking comforts to a wounded poilu

So it was when the army needed the men for military purposes who were employed in canteen work in the Quartermaster's Department, the Y. M. C. A. took over this service from which the army with its staggering tasks wished to be relieved. The Y. M. C. A. consented and undertook the work of selling supplies to the men of the army, although in its original plans this work had not been contemplated. So, in addition to looking after the soldier's recreational and spiritual needs, the Y. M. C. A. became his general storekeeper.

This required a great business organization. Supplies at first had to be bought in the open market in France, England and the United States. Overseas tonnage and motor transport had to be arranged.

Yet the business men running one store or two or three enterprises contemplate what it meant to establish abroad in a country at war fifteen hundred general stores in the short space of time of seven months, which grew from nothing up to an organization selling $5,000,000 worth of goods a month.

The War Department ordered the Association to sell goods to the soldiers at cost plus transportation charges and marine insurance. This was done, and the service was conducted at a loss of several hundred thousand dollars. When it became possible for the Quartermaster Department to do so, it began selling goods to the canteen department at cost, thus eliminating the expense of transportation and insurance and permitting prices to be lowered. The soldiers got the entire benefit of these reductions in prices. Goods were sold at cost, and through the government's large buying power and absorption of transportation charges the boys were buying articles abroad for less than they could be purchased in retail stores at home.

General Pershing has just publicly praised the Y. M. C. A. for its canteen work, which has now closed. To Mr. Carter he wrote the following letter:

"My Dear Mr. Carter: I have received your letter of January 29 asking whether in view of the present changed situation it would be possible for the army to assume full responsibility for the maintenance of post exchanges throughout the American Expeditionary Force.

"As you correctly state, the Y. M. C. A. undertook the management of the post exchanges at my request at the time when it was of the greatest importance that no available soldier should be taken away from the vital military functions of training and fighting. As the reasons which impelled me at that time to request you to undertake this work no longer exist I am glad to approve your suggestion. In reaching this conclusion consideration has been given to the new burdens in connection with entertainment, athletic activities and education that you have assur have accordingly given directions that the arm themselves take over and operate their ow exchanges.

"In making this change permit me to than for the very valuable services and assistance the Y. M. C. A. has rendered to the Americ peditionary Force in handling these exchanges. icapped by a shortage of tonnage and land tra tation, the Y. M. C. by extra exertion serv army better than coul been expected, and yo be assured that its a been a large factor in th great accomplishments American army. Ver dially yours,

"John J. Pers

Homer Rodeheaver mous as Billy Sunday's leader, says that he ha 368 separate groups o diers and that the m preciate the way the took care of them af lowed them into the tre He says also that they ciate the religious servic

"I was at all points spoke to thousands and sands of men, and und conditions, from safety rear to exposure at the with the shells furnishin chorus to my trombone voice. This is my ex ence: that the men like services, and the of joined in asking for meetings. They were str evangelistic meetings, t

"When I was facing four to ten thousand the night before they to go over the top, and k I was looking into the of hundreds who would n come back, it was no tim trifle. The men did want entertainment, and preachers who thought did found out their mistake right soon. I never fo the boys. I said right at the start, 'Now, boys, I going to talk to you about the things you learne home and in church and Sunday school, about highest things, and before I get through I'm g to put up a personal appeal to you to take Je Christ as your Saviour and Friend, if you hav done so already; and I tell you this now so that one can say he was tricked; and if any of you d want to stay in a meeting where that's sure to h pen, you'd better slip out quietly now, so that the be no misunderstanding.' Never a boy left, and ne did I fail to give them a chance to express themsel for God. I tell you, there never was such an opp tunity for evangelistic preaching of the right s Not that I preach, I only talk and sing. The poin that I never once heard a criticism that there was much preaching. That is the nonsense of writers w don't like to have anybody mention religi Pussyfooting is the one thing the boys despi

"There's a reason why there hasn't be more preaching. There have been plenty able preachers in the Y service overseas, b when these men got over they found such need of different kinds of work that they c the needed work first and preached when th could get a chance. Why, it's simply ma velous how these gifted ministers turned i meet the wants of the soldiers. Often th put on overalls and handled freight so t the boys might have their supplies. A tho sand cars of freight were handled in one mon by Y. M. C. A. secretaries—not because th wouldn't have liked to do something else, b because there was no one else to do it."

Mr. Rodeheaver had every opportunity see. He was at the Y huts behind the fro lines and in the cities and in the front lin among the dugouts.

CONCERNING the religious work of th Y. M. C. A. overseas, there are two se of critics. One says the Y. M. C. A. did to much of it, the other says too little. The tru is probably in between. What Mr. Rodeheaver says about the eagerness to hear re preaching is borne out by Dr. Truett of Texas, th leading preacher of the Southern Baptists, by Dr Francis, Gipsy Smith, Dr. Fosdick, and all the othe eminent preachers who know how to appeal to th manly in man. No doubt there were some narro men here and there; but in the main there is littl ground for the charge that a gospel of fear or selfishness was preached. Judge Ben Lindsey thinks he ha discovered the reason for the animosity he foun against the Y. M. C. A., which he was in France to serve, in the fundamental objectives issued by the

Continued on page 362

A Woman Pleads for Stricken India

By *MARIE L. GAUTHEY

Miss Gauthey has written for the Christian Herald the most remarkable account of famine conditions in India that has yet appeared in any publication. She writes as an eyewitness and participant in the scenes she describes. Her appeal for aid from Christian America should stir many to aid in mitigating these sufferings

THE Punjab and the Central Provinces, Gujerat and the Deccan, are the most hard pressed in this present famine. This means that about 150,000,000 people are rising hungry every day, living hungry all the and retiring hungry. Many every day, no er able to stand, drop dead. It is estimated in many places in India the death rate week now equals the normal annual death rate. have come from the Kolapur section, 200 miles h of Poona, a section that has had its full share his suffering. The whole section remembers the al help received from Christian Herald friends in last famine. In Kodoli, the Brownie Orphanage monument to this fund. Many of the present lty were 1899-1900 famine orphans. Elders and ons of that church were beneficiaries also of the ine of 1899-1900.

his large indigenous Christian community, scatd over thirty-four villages, is only typical of many rs. Its needs are not unique by any means. These istians have worked hard for the Kingdom in this t of India. For the last two years their evanstic efforts have brought in hundreds of souls. adherents now number between 3,000 and 4,000. ming industries have been the main support of se people. Since November, 1917, there has been rain, except for a few showers in May, 8, August and November. The high t of living struck India about two and -half years ago. Cloth soon became hibitive; then all the work in the fields sed, and food was soon beyond the ch of the poor. Cloth rose to three and times the prices of 1913; and grain, instead of being sold at eighteen pounds for cents (a rupee), became 4 to 5 pounds 33 cents. Spices one-quarter of a cent, ugh for one mess of rice, went up to ht cents.

In May, 1918, the rain came and the mers rejoiced and planted. Soon the ds sprang up, but the sun continued to ze down. All of June and July, usually ny months, not a bit of rain! The athen did their best to make their idols e them rain. The Christians prayed for n. All were expectant.

From August 3 to 11, showers came. rained enough for the grass to get a little een. The cattle were getting thinner and inner, and many from the worst famine stricts were killed off, being sold for food.

On August 11, the Sunday school lesson s the "Good Samaritan." On that Suny the Sunday school took up a collection r the Armenians. In the morning, the fering was 23 rupees. The church, not lling to be behind, took up a collection the afternoon. They also raised 23 pees. These were thank-offerings for the in of the past week. In many homes durg the week the grain was divided into lves. One-half the family ate, and the ther half they brought to the church for e offering. These poor Christians, already underfed, knew how to truly sympathize with those Armenians who had ffered for three years.

AFTER this Sunday came anxious days of watching and waiting for rain. Not ill late in September, and then only a few howers! The first crop of zondala, the grain used by ll classes to make bread, was gone. No crops at all ere saved. Wheat was almost ruined. The American peanuts were also gone. The rice crop was a ailure, except in a small section near the coast. These atter rains again brought hope to the disheartened eople. They planted their second crops. Again he sun came and blazed away until November 7, when more showers came; but in the interval all had nce again dried up.

Now no more rain can be expected until May, 1919, and no crops can be harvested until December, 1919. Grain can be purchased only at high prices, for it has een buried deep out of sight by unscrupulous people, n the hope of a still higher rise in prices.

During the time that elapsed between the early and the latter rains, influenza raged in India. It first came in July, and took a heavy toll among the poor and underfed masses. But during August, Septemer and October it raged worse than any previous plague. In Bombay City alone, the death rate was 7,000 a day for days at a time. In our villages, up till November 25, the death rate was awful. As we visited our thirty-four villages, often only one or two men were found on their feet. The rest were either sick or dying. The water supply was the hardest thing to handle. After the meager supply in the water jars was finished, there was very often no one strong enough to refill the jar. Medicines also gave out. Try as we would, some day 1,200 persons received medicines and yet many were left out. The food problem was terrible, too. Many mothers and housewives were found dead in the very act of crawling to the fire to cook the food for the family. By the fireside, stricken they fell! The dead were abandoned in their houses, while the living crawled to the neighbors in hopes of recovery.

AFTER the influenza, then what? What had they to help them regain their strength? Nothing. How they would come in to see us, walking long distances, stopping every once in a while on the way. They made all these efforts in the hope that the white man, the missionary, would feed and help them until their strength returned. Often the expectant mothers came along, too. Six out of eight of these on an average lost the child they were bearing. In many cases the mother died also.

The Alice Home for widows and orphans at Kolapur. The older persons in this picture were, many of them, orphans of the former famine who were saved for lives of Christian service by the gifts of the Christian Herald Family

From October 15 to 27 Kodoli station received forty children, mostly of Christian parentage. These were from twelve days to seven years old. The fathers brought the little ones, the mothers being dead; neighbors brought in orphans. There was only one thing to do. We had to take these children. As in 1900, we placed the little ones in homes with foster-mothers to take care of them; the larger ones, after a few days' detention because of filth and disease, were put in the boarding-schools. For foster-mothers we tried to find widows, thus giving worthy women a means of support. In Kodoli we had twenty-eight widows added to our already large list. In a country where the word "widow" and "harlot" are synonymous, it is obvious that the problems are many. What can we do for all these? Who shall care for them? How can we continue to preach the Gospel of peace and good-will unless we also feed and clothe them?

Let me try to describe to you the daily, I might say hourly, scenes around our bungalow, from before dawn until late at night: Before the light of day, one hears coughing. It is a small group from a village five miles away. The men no longer walk upright. They totter with the aid of a stick. Their bodies are barely covered with ragged shirts, their eyes sunken, until the sockets seem as big as saucers. Their limbs are merely bones up to their hips. What have they come for? One hates to ask them what they have come for. The answer is given you in their appearance. "Nothing to eat, we cannot work!" are their only words. These are Christians of two years' standing, who for Christ's sake gave up all connections with their heathen relatives and with idolatry. These have suffered much.

Next comes another delegation: a mother, widowed, she has four children. The little ones have skinny limbs and big stomachs and sunken eyes. The mother's eyes are red from crying. The widow's lot—nothing left but debts and little ones to bring up! No work to do, no work in the fields, no work in the towns. "What is to become of us?" she asks. "You must help us. My husband was good to me. We were both received into the church; our children are all yours. Now, give me a garment and take my children. I'll go begging, but don't leave these children to perish." What is there to do for such as these? Relief work for the mother, and the orphanage for the little ones. But how can this be accomplished?

NEXT comes a large, representative body of men, twenty-five in number. They say: "We are now over eighty Christians in our village. We have come to see if you won't give us a building to put up." Relief work again.

Then comes in the heat of the day a man, almost too gaunt to stand. He has brought five children, all boys but one. He says: "Before I die, I want my children safe in your keeping." The youngest is a baby less than one year old, the oldest, nine years of age. The father says proudly: "I'll go back and try and stick it out, but these (the children) you must keep." All afternoon the women come, and little, lone children come, all with the same cry: "Food, clothes, work." Night begins to fall, but the crowd stays. Where can they go? To where can they return? The desperateness of it makes help imperative; but where, oh, where are the missionaries to get funds to do all these extras outside of the regular budget? The orphans in the existing schools are already receiving a little less food than usual. The high prices demand a reduction in some way. There are no funds to be stretched out from these institutions. So one goes over all the accounts and finds no money to feed and clothe the large crowds outside. Yet they come.

These are our own indigenous Christians. In ordinary times they live from hand to mouth, just making the two ends meet. One year of high prices, then the influenza, and no work in the fields since May, have brought a fearful calamity that has overwhelmed both the community and the individual. We, the missionaries, might well be paralyzed with the horror of the catastrophe, and ask to be excused from even looking upon the misery, but for the fact that we must appeal to our friends to send help.

Relief work can be made for men and for women. Buildings can be put up, roads repaired, wells deepened and more land prepared for cultivation.

For widows there can be sewing work of various

Continued on page 365

---

* Miss Gauthey has spent eleven years in India at the Kodoli Station, Gujerat, under the Western India Presbyterian Mission.

CAPITAL AND LABO

PARTNERS

Profit-Sharing Plans That Are Proving Successful in Operation

FIVE PRACTICAL SYSTEMS. By ERNEST I. MITCHELL

Of Mallory, Mitchell & Faust, Chicago, Ill.

THE business and laboring men of America have every reason to be proud of the part they have taken in the great world war. Without their cooperation the conflict would have continued considerably longer, with a consequent loss of additional millions of men and billions of money.

This same spirit must guide us in the consideration of the many problems which confront us not only in the reconstruction period but for all time to come.

The world has made great strides forward since August 1, 1914. The old order of things has passed. Humanitarianism wlil influence us in our relations, man to man. Business men must realize that labor is entitled to just compensation, rational hours and proper working conditions. They must take a sympathetic interest in the welfare and aspirations of their workers.

On the other hand labor must realize that capital is entitled to and must have a profit in keeping with the hazards of the business.

Capital and labor must work hand in hand. Profit through service should be the governing factor. American business and laboring men will solve their problems satisfactorily. Of that we are confident. But everyone must do his part.

Under the general term of profit-sharing, various systems which distribute a share of the profits of a business among its employees, have been set in operation.

Equal Division of Profits

By TOWNER K. WEBSTER

President Webster Manufacturing Company and Amalgamated Machinery Company

> The great problem is how to unite men without crushing them. . . . The trouble with the average employer is that he is so engrossed in the task of creating an efficient organization to express his own individuality, that he has forgotten to extend the same privilege to his employees.
>
> ROBERT B. WOLF.

ON the theory that workingmen who help build up a profitable industry are entitled as a right to an interest in the business's success, some proportional arrangement of distribution of profits must be arranged; thus at the end of the fiscal year, after a proper depreciation has been charged off and a proper reserve set aside and a dividend of not to exceed 10 per cent. paid to hold capital in the business, the remainder should be divided equally between capital and labor.

Thus a business with a capital of $100,000, one-half of which is fixed and the other half liquid, employing seventy-five men and making 20 per cent. on a turnover of $400,000 after charging off 10 per cent. depreciation on fixed assets (capital) and 15 per cent. on the entire capital in reserve and paying 10 per cent. on the common stock, would have $50,000 to be divided.

This arrangement would give capital a return of 35 per cent. and labor a return of 33⅓ per cent. on its earnings.

The case cited is only an example. The amounts to be charged off for depreciation and to be put into reserve would vary with the nature of the business. By varying the percentages the percentage to capital and labor can be made about equal. It would be necessary, of course, in such an arrangement to have a workingman or several on the board of directors.

FIVE PROFIT-SHARING PLANS

Broadly speaking, the profit-sharing principle divides itself into five major groups:

(1) Profit-sharing in the real sense of the word, with these essential features:

Amount to be distributed varies with and depends upon the net profits of the concern or upon the amount of dividends paid the stockholders.

Proportion of profits for distribution is definitely determined in advance.

Benefits of plan extended to at least one-third of the total employed, and including employees in occupations other than executive or clerical.

Method of determining individual shares is known, at least in a general way, to the participating employees.

(2) Limited profit-sharing, with these essential features:

Same as in profit-sharing plan above.

Benefits of the plan limited to less than one-third of the total employed, and excluding employees other than executive or clerical.

(3) Bonus plans, under which the divisible fund does not depend upon or vary with the net profits of the enterprise, but upon any one of the following factors:

Price for which commodity manufactured is disposed of—the so-called sliding-scale wage.

Gross receipts or gross profits—a variant of the sliding scale.

Estimated probable profits on business.

Wages or salaries earned and length of service.

Length of service and thrift, as shown by the participant's ownership of stock of the employing company or maintenance of a savings account.

Savings of the prospective participants as shown by subscription or ownership of a specified amount of stock of the employing company, or savings accounts.

Amount of savings collectively effected in production or operation.

(4) Benefit Associations which are effected by the following factors, in distributing their funds:

Where the industry concerned contributes materially toward the maintenance of such fund.

Where the industry concerned makes a merely nominal contribution toward this fund.

Necessities in each individual case.

Length of service of membership in association.

(5) Pension Funds with these determining factors:

The fund maintained wholly by the company itself.

Contributions or assessments made on the employees by the company for aid in maintaining this fund.

Amount allowed each year by the company definitely determined upon in advance.

Amount set aside to be a percentage of the annual payroll.

Method of arriving at amounts of pensions awarded each person is governed by:

Length of service.

Wages earned.

Individual necessity.

It will be noted that there are two outstanding features which are common to all five plans of profit sharing. First, the adoption of any of these systems of profit division with employees is entirely voluntary on the part of the employer. At any time the right is reserved to lay off, discharge or disqualify undeserving employees from further participation in the benefits of the plan.

Second, it is commonly understood by all concerned that shares in the profit or bonuses paid are entirely separate from the employee's regular wages; nor can any of these plans be made the basis for an implied contract for hire.*

STRICT PROFIT SHARING

As a nation, America has been too busy and her production of wealth too rapid to pay much attention to improving industrial conditions.

Profit sharing, as confined to plans under which distributions of certain proportions of the net profits of the company are made to at least one-third of the total employees, has been very limited in the United States. The number of such plans known to be in operation did not exceed sixty in 1916, although since the war, a number of industries have adopted this plan of sharing profits.

LIMITED PROFIT SHARING

The number of establishments that share some proportion of their profits with a few of their more important employees greatly exceeds the number of industries which have adopted "Group 1" plan.

Out of eighteen concerns usin limited Profit-Sharing Plan, in onl did as many as 40 per cent. of th ployees participate. In four esta ments, the proportion was from 40 per cent.; in two it was from 20 per cent.; in five it varied bet 5 and 10 per cent., and in the rema five concerns less than 5 per ce the employees participated in the fits of the plans.

THE BONUS PLAN

Bonus plans of profit sharing, ecially those involving stock subscript or the payment of percentage bon on earnings, based upon length of ser are largely in use. Properly speak however, this is not really a pr sharing plan, since the supplement moneys given the employees do bear any direct relation to the net p its of the concern itself.

THE BENEFIT ASSOCIATION

The Benefit Association idea enjoyed a wide-spread adoption am American industries. However, this p also fails to strictly classify as a profit-sharing scheme, due to its dependence of association with annual profits of the company.

With the enactment in recent ye of workmen's compensation laws wh do not, as a rule, protect employ injured outside of working hours, E ployees' Benefit Associations have assumed a n importance.

Not only does such welfare legislation leave t worker unprotected, as referred to above, but it fa to provide for injuries which cause disabilities last less than two weeks. Here the Benefit Associati steps in and assumes the protection of the worker f both of these unprovided for contingencies. Th the employees appreciate this form of welfare p vision, even though it is not really a profit-sharing pla

THE PENSION FUND

The Pension Fund has only come into general usa among manufacturers in the last few years. Whi employers are more and more concerned with th humanitarian side of industrial activity, this plan not without its practical benefits.

It tends materially to stabilize labor, reduce over head expense due to "firing and hiring" and towar moderating labor unrest generally. The fact tha these are actual results, due to the adoption of th Pension Fund plan, has had the effect of inducin many other industries to establish such funds.

STEADINESS OF SERVICE

One of the most successful means of dealing wit the problem of absenteeism has been to make workers' participation in profit-sharing plans contingent upon punctuality and steady service.

Another effective system to encourage prompt and perfect attendance among employees has been to award extra vacation time, with pay. The following choices have been offered workmen:

One day's vacation with pay each month.

One extra day's pay every month.

Accumulation of vacation time due, to be taken at one time. Thus, a year's perfect record would yield two weeks' vacation with pay.

Accumulation of extra money granted yearly, same in the meantime being deposited in the local bank.

Many plants maintain a welfare worker, usually a woman, who constantly keeps in touch with all absent employees. If an employee is absent because of dissatisfaction with his work the matter is taken up by the welfare visitor with the department head, and an adjustment of the trouble sought.

If sickness is causing the absence the company sends a physician who cares for the patient at the company's expense. This service tends to create a better feeling between employee and employer, to maintain steadier production, increase the output and prove more profitable for all concerned.

---

*Some discharged employees of a profit-sharing firm, brought suit against a company; the plaintiffs maintained that the publicly announced profit-sharing plan of the company was equal to a contract of employment respecting wages, applicable to all employees of a certain class. They alleged that the employer, under such conditions, had no right to discriminate between different groups of employees, giving profits to some and not to others. The courts held, however, that profit-sharing moneys were mere gratuities, and the employer alone may decide how and to whom such a plan shall be extended.

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President and Publisher
GRAHAM PATTERSON

Vice President and Managing Editor
GEORGE H. SANDISON

The Bolshevist Agitation

IT HAS been truly said that the worst things are those that never happen. We frighten ourselves by conjuring up the bugaboo of approaching trouble, forgetting that, in such a condition of mind, every danger is magnified. The Bolshevist agitation, however, has not our nation by surprise. Its presence on this ient has been manifested many times during the ind its reappearance now is the logical outcome iditions in Europe which have stirred up extrem- ere to an unusual degree. Their activity is suf- ly shown by the statements of witnesses before enate committee investigating Bolshevism.

wing the situation calmly, the impression is un- able that while the movements of the various ns of the dissatisfied foreign element in this coun- ave found a common cause in Bolshevism on to unite, this fact need not necessarily be re- d with serious apprehension. In spite of dis- d economic conditions resultant from the war, ndustrial population is today better off than the trialists of any other country in the world. To , therefore, Bolshevism can hold out no sub- ial inducements, and they are in no serious dan- being led away by imported enthusiasm, which o logical reason for existence in America. More- American labor has been loyal throughout the and now that the long struggle is ended it will nite with any foreign element in plotting to over- the government for which it has fought cally and made sacrifice.

have already said that Bolshevism is an im- d menace. It is not indigenous to the soil of our epublic, nor does it spring from any of our exist- onditions. In a land of free men, with the high- pportunities open equally to all and with inde- ence within the reach of every one willing to make ffort, it is unreasonable to think that any inocu- of our population with the virus of anarchy and ution could be successful. We have our own lems, it is true; but we shall prove equal to their ion in the future as in the past.

e overturning of oppressive authority in Europe nevitable. Count Ilya Tolstoy has expressed the that the intellectuals who foresaw the present in Russia would yet save that country by so en- ening its people to the true and reasonable meth- f a solution of their troubles that the present ex- s would cease. Every revolution is attended by sses, for it is inevitable that the fiery counsels of rism should sway the aroused multitudes. But movements, in order to spread, must be fed with uel of an intense, well-founded and widespread ntent. Such fuel assuredly has been abundant urope. Here, save in the hearts of a foreign ele- who have brought their old-world grievances to hores, it has no legitimate existence.

ealing with the revolutionary propaganda, now its character and extent are definitely ascer- ed by our government, should not be a difficult er. With the loyal and substantial support of American people behind it, we believe our govern- is equal to the task. Bolshevism in the revo- nary press will be made to yield to proper mea- s. Localized Bolshevism in certain sections in our cities, and propaganda in the schools, will doubt- be looked after effectively. It is not a time for ging in panic over threats of terrorism, neither is ime for inactivity or indifference. Unemployment be remedied by every available means. Op- sive conditions must be ameliorated. Exorbitant must be reduced to reasonable figures. Causes iscontent, where they exist, should be properly sted. It is a time to review our attitude as citi- toward each other. It is an opportunity for all desire peace, progress and prosperity in this land pply the principles of the Golden Rule more prac- y in business. Such an application would give the tus to Bolshevism in America. Europe discovered late that it had left undone many things it ought ave done. We have made the discovery in time.

Is Royalty Immune?

WHEN the imperial flag was hoisted over the royal palace in Berlin one Saturday night in March, the Spartacans believed, in those few hours, that they had the situation in hand. Al- gh the standard was hauled down before daylight, the Reds defeated by the troops of the Ebert gov- ent, the affair assumes a significance beyond the incident itself. It may be that the silent exile Holland, who by many is believed still to have a g military following, is yet looking forward with of a possible restoration. Is the Spartacan revolution one of his inspired agencies to accomplish this purpose? Is Hindenburg, who the cable informs us has gathered an army of 100,000 veterans of the great war ostensibly to fight the Bolsheviki, merely waiting an opportunity for uniting the royalist forces in a bold stroke to restore the dethroned dynasty? There are possibilities in the present situation which would seem to warrant such a suggestion.

Meanwhile, the commission of the Peace Congress which has been investigating the whole subject of responsibility for the war has had three subcommittees at work for several months. An immense amount of evidence has been secured, which is said conclusively to fix the responsibility of planning and precipitating the world conflict upon the fugitive ex-Kaiser and certain military leaders. Famous legal experts have examined the evidence. Their difficulty lies not in fixing the guilt on the ex-Kaiser and his associates, but in finding a method of punishment for the criminals. International law affords no way of dealing with such a case. Royalty, they tell us, is apparently immune from punishment. There is no statute under which justice can be meted out to a guilty monarch. Europe discovered a way to punish Napoleon, and England also found means to deal with Charles I. These, according to our modern experts, must have been dealt with extrajudicially. That some conclusion will be reached by the Congress may be reasonably expected, even though it should only take the form of publicly proclaiming to the whole world the guilt of the accused. Such a verdict would be an alarm signal and a warning to coming generations.

Things That Abide

OUR returning soldiers who have passed through the fiery ordeal at the front are bringing back with them so many vivid and precious memories that it is a pity that any one of them should be lost. Together they would fill volumes of experience that would find many readers. Here, for instance, is one chaplain who tells of the surprise of a captain on hearing that there was in camp even one man who did not believe in the existence of God. "When did that man land at Brest?" asked the captain. "How long has he been at the front?" Knowing as he did the spirit of the men under his command, he felt that none but a rank newcomer could hold such a view. Another, a captain of artillery, who had been in the trenches for months, told the same chaplain: "Every illusion I ever had as to the value of material things is gone forever since coming here; while every vision I ever had as a young man has been enhanced a thousandfold. I know that nothing remains, nothing counts, nothing matters, except the unseen and the eternal." While the religion of the spiritually aroused American soldier has been much discussed, the great central fact is assured that he has "found God." "I have never had any religion," said a soldier from Kentucky as he lay dying. "Is it too late now?" It was not too late, for, as the chaplain testifies, the boy, with his new faith awakened and his whole soul clinging to the Cross, saw the light and was satisfied before he "passed out."

It is the testimony of scores of chaplains that those boys of ours who fought so heroically, who loved their "buddies"—their bosom comrades—and were ready to die for them, had also come to know and to love the Saviour, and to look to him for help when hearts and bodies alike were sore tried. Having learned to know the only things that count and abide, they will be satisfied with nothing less now.

Roosevelt and the Bible

ONE of the biographers of ex-President Roosevelt writes of the ex-President's great love of books. His reading was omnivorous; indeed, his whole career was replete with evidence that "reading maketh the full man." He was equally at home in the literature of history, of travel and exploration, of science, of warfare, and of statesmanship. Familiar with the classics and with the great epics of the world, he loved literature not only as a satisfying study, but as a recreation. Like many other Americans, however, the Bible was his favorite, and his intimate acquaintance with it was made evident on many occasions. The Psalms he loved for their literary charm, their strong faith and uplifting philosophy. He had a clear comprehension of the New Testament and the sublime teaching of its wonderful Gospel message to mankind. Like Lincoln and other Bible-loving Americans, he received many an inspiration from its noble language and its deep, searching truths. So keen was his memory that he could quote literally Scriptural passages concerning which any dispute had arisen. In a very marked sense, his familiarity with the Bible gave strength and character to his whole career. So it is with every one who makes the inspired Word his special study and who takes delight in regulating his life and actions by its counsel.

A Poet's Vision

FIFTY-FOUR years ago Walt Whitman, writing under the inspiration of his singular genius which men then thought erratic and even incoherent, penned these wonderful lines, entitled "Years of the Modern":

> "I see not America only—I see not only Liberty's nation, but other nations preparing;
> I see tremendous entrances and exits—I see new combinations—I see the solidarity of races;
> I see that force advancing with irresistible power on the world's stage;
> (Have the old forces, the old wars, played their parts? are the acts suitable to them closed?)
> I see Freedom, completely armed, and victorious, and very haughty, with Law on one side and Peace on the other,
> A stupendous Trio, all issuing forth against the idea of caste;
> —What historic dénouements are these we so rapidly approach?
> I see men marching and counter-marching by swift millions;
> I see the frontiers and boundaries of the old aristocracies broken;
> I see the landmarks of European kings removed;
> I see this day the People beginning their landmarks (all others give way);
>
> . . . .
>
> —What whispers are these, O lands, running ahead of you, passing under the seas?
> Are all nations communing? is there going to be but one heart to the globe?
> Is humanity forming, en masse?—for lo! tyrants tremble, crowns grow dim;
> The earth, restive, confronts a new era."

This poem, which reads like the work of a veritable prophet, at the time it was published was regarded as one of the wild dreams of a man whom the world could not comprehend or accept seriously. It has just been dragged forth into the light by a writer in the London Times, who asks: "Is this not prophecy—the human utterance of the divine?"

A Leader of Men

OVER thirty years have passed since the American public began to recognize in Samuel Gompers, the reserved and thoughtful head of a great labor organization, a man who gave evidence of qualities that would yet bring him to the front in national affairs. His whole career has justified this foreshadowing. There is no one in America who can speak with more authority and assurance in his own field. It is not surprising, therefore, to find that he has undertaken the task of producing a book on American Labor and the War. In his book Mr. Gompers sets forth the attitude of the workers on all the great questions that have arisen during the last four and a half years. He shows their attitude toward the war itself, which is best described in a single vivid sentence of his own: "This is no longer a war; it is a crusade for human freedom!"

This is the interpretation the workers themselves apply to the great tragedy which has swept over a large part of the world. Loyal to the republic, they found inspiration in its ideals and they fought and were ready to sacrifice, and many did sacrifice, their lives for those ideals. They built the republic's fleets, its defenses, its armaments, singing the songs of loyalty as they wrought. Their creative and constructive power made victory possible. They bore the burdens lightly, knowing the greatness of the stake at issue—the salvation of civilization and human freedom. Mr. Gompers himself says: "No class has more to lose and less to gain in war than the workers, yet no class rendered such sacrificial service during the war or has such staggering burdens afterward. In war, labor sees the results of years of struggles for wider justice swept away. In one mad moment the clock of industrial progress may be turned back a generation." Now that the war is past, labor, having witnessed the violation of peace pledges by world rulers, believes that the opportunity has come for the laboring men of the world to help lay anew "the foundations for an international peace that will safeguard and minister to the interests of justice, democracy and larger opportunity for all." The workers of this nation are more hopeful than ever of the outcome. They have gotten a broader vision and understanding.

THE PEACE BABY

A Short Story

By ANNIE HAMILTON DONNELL

THE fair head tilted thoughtfully.

"I might wash Bennie's pajams myself." They were soft and easy to wring. The laundry counted 'em two pieces, too, and two pieces counted! With swift decision the young wife of "Bennie" and mother of a Bennette pulled forth the gay-striped pajamas from the things-to-send and added them to the pile of things-not-to. That pile was growing.

"If sheets weren't so big—crib sheets aren't!" She added the crib sheets to her own pile. She pulled out all the pillow-cases and added those. Laundry bills mounted up so these days, she sighed, and of course she was perfectly strong enough one way you looked at it (not Bennie's way) and of course you could get things dried and out of sight before Bennie came home with the sun shining like this—

Mrs. Bennie removed several more bulkier pieces from her laundry basket. She regarded what was left with that charming and thoughtful little tilt of her fair head.

"Bother sheets! Bother the tablecloth! Me for 'em! I'll save the whole old bill this week and buy Sweetness those little woolly-bully socksies—there now, hear Mother talk, Sweetness? Heroic Mother!—Oh, Sweetness, I wish you liked to cut teeth! If you begin to fret again—"

Sweetness promptly began. The poignant little wail filled the small, hot room. Of course with Sweetness fretting right along it would not be easy to do a big washing—but it wasn't easy to buy little wool stockings either. The little wool stockings won out.

"Sweetness, listen! Mother will rock you in the humpity-hump chair and then she will tuck you up beautifully in that nice big basket and put you out on the porch to have a nap. A nap, Sweetness—you hear? You owe that to Mother after last night! Besides, Mother's a washwoman today to warm your little pink toes! Sweetness, you ought to be a clean baby with a laundry for a grandfather and a washwoman for a mother!"

That always would seem queer—having Sweetness the own grandchild to the Mammoth Steam Laundry and the Mammoth Steam Laundry not know it.

"I shan't tell it!" quoth this proud young mother. "All we've got to do with—with Grandfather Mammoth is pay his little slips every week, and we won't do that this week!" And speaking of Mammoths, grandfathers or otherwise, reminded her she must telephone 'em not to call for her basket this week. As soon as she got Sweetness to sleep—she mustn't forget it.

But Sweetness dallied with sleep, though patiently — humpity - hump, humpity-hump — the young mother rocked in the favorite chair. It was nearly an hour before it was safe to slide the little warm armful—oh, e-asy, very e-asy!—into the basket-bed and slide the basket-bed out onto the cool porch. It was so cool out there that a good many covers were needed, and the last cover of all must be tucked snugly in all around, with just a sufficient breathing-hole. Then with a sigh of relief Mrs. Bennie hurried to her washing.

Many things worried Mrs. Bennie as she soaped and rubbed and wrung. Times were "hard" in the little home-of-three, especially since Bennie's siege of typhoid at the hospital. But Bennie was well again and would never, never drink out of anything but the little paper cups tucked, so carefully wrapped, into his pocket every morning. And the hospital bills were paid, and Sweetness almost had a tooth, and the sun was shining and would dry the clothes beautifully.

"And it's a darling world!" cried Mrs. Bennie, and worried no more. She sang now instead, and it was amazing how you could rub to music! The work progressed rapidly. Every few minutes Mrs. Bennie stopped and listened, but no fretful little wails from the front porch. Sweetness was having a perfectly splendid nap. Once when the young mother took a flying little trip from her tubs to "see with her own eyes" she caught Sweetness in the very act of that perfectly splendid nap. His rosy little face, visible down through the periscope of built-up covers, was so adorable she had to hold herself with both hands to keep from kissing him awake.

"You beautiful!" she murmured, "you'd make the hardenest sinner believe in God." Anything so tinily perfect and exquisite—so miraculous—turned out of his workshop. Unbelieving must cease forever at this little rosy vision down through the periscope.

She went back to her work, unconsciously stepping softly as befitting feet that had just stood on holy ground. Her singing after that was unconsciously a hymn. Out in the small back yard, hanging her clothes, she handled the tiny one's very tenderly.

"All on the outside for everybody to see!" laughed the mother of the tiny clothes. "There's a baby in that house," everybody'll say, and envy us."

Grandfather Mammoth—if he went by— But he never would know it was his baby hung up to dry on this line! He didn't even know he had a baby.

"It's a pity not to know," sighed Mrs. Bennie, "and just on account of me. Why, I'm all right—there's nothing the matter with me!" She laughed at her own defiant little thought, but the laugh was too wistful to count as mirth. She could never get over being the one "on account" of whom Bennie and his father had parted and each gone separate ways. Humble-birthed she might be, but not humble-hearted! In love, the love that overflowed her own life into the world-life—that set her up on a pedestal above them all—she was very far from being humble. Bennie and Bennie's little son had made of her a queen.

"It's a darling world! I love every one of it!" sang the heart of her, then stopped a-singing. For there was of course Grandfather Mammoth in the world—

"Well, I'd go half way," she cried. "That would be fair. And if I carried Sweetness in my arms—half way—and if he loved Sweetness at sight—" He would love Sweetness at sight. Then she would love him and by very virtue of her being the mother of Sweetness he would have to love her! The reasoning worked out beautifully to that triumphant climax. It was very satisfactory reasoning. Grandfather Mammoth loving her because he had to and Bennie and Bennie's son because they were his —if this was a darling world what would that be!

In this pleasant dreaming she hung out her washing, but she woke up suddenly when she went back to her baby in the basket. For there was no baby, no basket. She stepped gaily out onto an empty porch—an awful, frightening, agonizing emptiness that caught her by the throat, shook her soul.

"Sweetness!" but there wasn't any Sweetness. She stared unbelievingly, but seeing—not seeing—was, had to be, believing. With a bound she was down the steps, was out on the street, was at the neighbors' houses—was everywhere. But no one could help her. It was Monday morning and the whole little servantless street had been at its tubs or somewhere at the back of the houses out of hearing and of sight of what had happened to Sweetness.

"Nothing could have happened!" moaned the distracted young mother. "She was having such a beautiful nap! I watched her having it—there's Bennie calling! I told 'em to tell him to the minute—"

She flew to the telephone.

"Bennie? Oh, yes, yes, it's me! But it isn't Sweetness—Bennie, he's gone! In the clothes basket—I tell you he's gone! He was having such a beautiful nap—he had his little fist under his chin; you know how. Bennie, how quick can you get here? Run! No, no, I can't tell you how—oh, yes, yes, I've telephoned the police. I've looked even down the cracks of the porch floor—Bennie, if you don't come quick I think I shall go crazy.—Oh, oh, I must stop and give you a chance to come!"

She had stopped. To all intents and purposes the world had stopped, too. What could a world do at turning round and round without any Sweetness in it? The impetus was gone.

In the spacious and really luxurious office of the Mammoth Steam Laundry an old man turned this way and that restlessly in his swivel-chair. Benjamin Edson was, according to the philosophy of many, as old as he felt and he felt very old. How long was it since the savor had gone out of life? He fell to reckoning. His wife had been dead two years; his son had been—dead almost two. All Benjamin Edson's calamities had been bounded by those infinitesimal bits of a lifetime—two years, much could happen to a man, he had found. Much—and nothing. For this monotony of dragging weeks and of lonely months that constituted life to the poor man now was just that—literally nothing. He lived in a vacuum.

It was seldom that he came here and circled about in his swivel-chair. He was not needed here; things were nicely adjusted to a man and to a steam-washer. The business went on without him, steamily, successfully. He only came today, he told himself with a gleam of humor, because of his need of a swivel-chair.

If Ben hadn't been a fool—why must boys be fools, really sensible and level-headed boys like Ben? Over a girl—always a girl! What was that French quotation, about cherchez-ing the girl? His lips curved upward for a fleeting atom of time at the jumbled quotation, then were again sad old lips, set in a stern straight line.

Well, the boy'd made his bed and was lying on it somewhere. Where? How had the girl turned out? He wondered a little about that, but mostly about the degree of hardness of Ben's bed. And while the man tilted there uneasily in his office chair and wondered his uneasy wonderings, the whole big building around and above and below him seethed and jarred with the good honest toil of Monday morning. Men and women and machinery took their allotted parts. Men and women and a little, very little, child. The child's part could hardly, however, have been called "allotted," though perhaps, after all—who can tell? The Taskmaster of us all—over and above all the seething toiling-places—how do we know the allotted parts that he gives out? Even to little, very little ones?

Delivery trucks bustled up to the big building with a busy air and unloaded their hampers and bags and baskets. They were passed along from hand to hand to the proper room for their own unloading. From one of the baskets, as it passed, issued a most startling but lovely little sound. It surely—did sound—like—a baby's crow!

"Gracious!" uttered a startled voice. And that was exactly what it was—a gracious little sound. It continued, and instant confusion and excitement surged about it.

"Gracious—hark!"

"I'm harking. I guess I know a baby's laughin'!"

"Set it down, quick, Jim. You help me here, Addie; it scares me to look alone!"

But there was nothing about the smiling little that they uncovered. S ness—for of course you without looking that it Sweetness gazed upward the amazed, crowding with perfect friendliness that continuing little smile. Ri about the city in a beautiful jolty t and being swung like this from han hand was even splendider than b rocked in the humpity-hump chair.

"The perfect darlin'!"

"The little sweetness!"

"Look at it laughin' away, will But, goodness gracious, where—"

"That's what I want to kno where?"

The competent voice of Addie chimed in, with its frank scorn.

"Where's all o' your eyes? Ain't the footy-heads! Don't you see little pillow an' the blankets? W ain't it as plain as day that the li kid was havin' an innocent little when Jim comes crankin' along—"

"And swoops it up for a baske wash!"

Addie had solved the miracle Sweetness-in-the-basket. The elem of mystery was eliminated, but remai the element of deliciousness, delight.

"But whose kid?—You tell me th Addie Gallagher!"

"Yes, go ahead, Addie—it's up you."

Somewhere in the city a mother crazy with fright; there was need Addie's hurrying. She was on her kn beside the basket, doing her best. this very near stranger-face Sweetn smile wavered and all but went out. B on second little thought, it broke fo again, for Addie's face was the face one who had loved a baby of her o —Sweetness recognized the secret sig

"Wait—here's a tag tied on. It tucked out o' sight. No, there any name but there's '30 St. Georg St. George Street—any o' you know I don't."

"Ask Jim—Jim'd ought to know But Jim had fled to hide his guilty It was no other than "Himself, Boss," who, happening along, gave desired information. St. George St was that little street over east, off Woo berry—what! For Sweetness was ta ing part now in the conversation.

Benjamin Edson's sight was Eye to eye, they gazed at each other he and Sweetness. Sweetness seem to be trying to tell him something in mate and lovely, he to be trying to told. Other voices broke in interrup ingly; the secret of the little code lost.

"Ji—one o' the boys brought him for a wash!" tittered one of the voice Addie's capable voice swept it asid explaining quietly.

"The little kid was usin' the wa basket for a cradle out in front of som where an' got gathered up. It wa much wonder, either. I'd have like done it myself," defending Jim gallant Addie and Jim were friends.

Himself, the Boss, was scarcely list ing, intent once more on the story baby was trying to tell, the smiling litt story.

"It belongs at 30 St. George Str that's plain," Addie was going on rath wistfully. "I could take the little th home if I could get off for an hour— used to babies—I'd come right back "Home?—Of course, of course, child must be taken home at once. very awkward blunder—very. I mu apologize in person." Benjamin Edso was suddenly released from that litt smiling, hypnotic gaze and was agai the man of business and action. Wha was to be done he would do himself an at once. His car was outside; he wou drive it fast.

"Come," he said briefly as thoug there was only Addie there. "Carry th baby. I'll carry the basket down. The is the poor mother to think of—we ca not go too fast."

"Ain't I been thinkin' of your po

Continued on page 364

Bolshevism and Labor Unrest

THE Senate Committee investigating Bolshevism and Radical Propaganda had laid before it, on March 10, memorandums m the Solicitor General of the st-Office Department to show that re was a wide-spreading movement oughout the country in which the W. W., the anarchists, the radical Solists, and other groups with extreme ws, were uniting to overthrow the erican Government through a bloody olution, and establish a Bolshevist ublic. The I. W. W. was portrayed the most dangerous, because the best ganized. Additional evidence on arch 11 showed the I. W. W. had 8,334 ions in the country, and at they had 4,567 recruiting encies in addition. The eater part of the agitation is carried on through the eign language press. The lice of New York on March rounded up 164 men and omen who were holding an archistic meeting at an ast Side headquarters. A rge amount of radical litera- re was captured. Of the 4 reds seized, four were ld for deportation. In nnection with the arrests was shown that the expo- nts of overturning the overnment by force had cal headquarters in New ork, Akron, Ohio, Pitts- urg, Chicago and in Canada d had 6,000 active mem- rs. Of 187 reds arrested in raid in Waterbury, Ct., on larch 9, six were held for eportation.

The New York harbor strike, lthough settled as far as it lated to Government and ailway boats, proved a tubborn obstacle to commerce throughout the week nding March 17. Steve- ores refused to handle merhandise landed by boats aving non-union crews. The oal traffic of the harbor was ied up, and Transatlantic iners were forced to cancel heir sailings through inability to obtain fuel. It appeared probable n March 15 that privately owned oats might be commandeered and perated by the Government.

The harbor strike in Buenos Ayres, Argentina, which had lasted 2 months, completely paralyzed commerce, and the nation was planning to take over the harbor traffic as this was written.

A general strike in Havana, was, on March 10, delaying the sugar harvest.

On March 12 a strike was called on the traction lines in northern New Jersey, serving 141 cities and towns. Over 5,000 men were on strike, for recognition of the union and higher wages for shorter hours. On March 13, the War Labor Board called before it the parties in the strike, and the Board appeared, on March 17, to have brought about an agreement to end the strike.

An attempt to establish Bolshevism in Buffalo under cover of a strike failed to materialize. The Buffalo strikers demanded that the City Council provide office room and facilities for the "Workers, Soldiers, Sailors and Farmers Council," and demanded also reduction of working hours in all industries except railroads to 4 hours a day and the suspension of rent charges, taxes and interest against families out of employment.

OP
167 THE ROSERY 167

© Underwood & Underwood

Auto trucks turned into jitneys to relieve the traffic tie-up caused by the New Jersey trolley strike

The Week in the World's News

GERMANS GIVE UP THE SHIPS. Being assured by the Allied armistice commission that Germany would receive the necessary food supplies, estimated at 350,000 tons a month until August, the German delegates on March 15 agreed to turn over the merchant ships. The ships released have a total dead weight displacement of 3,500,000 tons. The cargo ships are allotted largely to Britain and France, the big passenger ships to the United States. Nine great liners will be delivered at German ports, manned there by American bluejackets and put into the transport service. The largest, the Imperator, 52,000 tons, is now imbedded in mud and sand. It will take a month of dredging to free her. When all the ships are in service the homeward movement of American troops will be accelerated by from 30,000 to 40,000 on each round trip. The ships will carry back food for Germany. The German delegates asked that large quantities of condensed milk be included in the first shipments to reduce the high rate of infant mortality in Germany which they said would be trebled if milk were not soon obtained. Mr. Hoover said that "We are glad to grant this request, as, when all is said and done, we are not fighting women and children." The first food to go to Germany is to be paid for by German credits in neutral countries, later food by shipments of coal, potash and other products of creative industry.

THE PEACE CONFERENCE. While the President was speeding eastward on the George Washington, the War Council was getting ready the terms for Germany. It was finally decided to limit the German armies to a strength of 100,000 men with 4,000 officers, maintained on the basis of 12-year enlistment, Germany being forbidden to use conscription. This was held to foreshadow the elimination of conscription. The German navy was also to be restricted to a personnel of 15,000. The forts along the Rhine are to be dismantled. The German manufacture of munitions of war is to be greatly curbed, and the River Rhine is to be internationalized.

It was expected on March 12 that the preliminary outline of the treaty could be presented to the German delegates at Versailles about March 20, and it was expected that the conferences to work out the terms and to prepare the final treaty would be completed by sometime in May. President Wilson's ship reached Brest on March 13 at 7:45 P. M. He went ashore at 9:45 and left for Paris at 11, his train reaching Paris at 12:07 A. M. Friday.

The President was met at Brest by Colonel House and at Paris by President Poincare and Premier Clemenceau. He had been kept advised by wireless of the developments and was ready to plunge at once into the work of expediting peace, being in conference with Lloyd George and Clemenceau before evening.

Because of their disinterested position it was reported that the President and the American delegation would be expected to act as umpires in questions of boundaries and readjustments in which interallied opinion is not unanimous. It was expected that Holland would be asked to send delegates to discuss a new treaty to replace the treaty of 1839 which guaranteed Belgium's independence and neutrality and which Germany reduced to a "scrap of paper."

The League of Nations Union meeting, in London, on March 13, adopted a resolution asking that the Peace Conference include in the final compact of the League of Nations, an unmistakable guarantee of religious freedom.

Germany's delegates to the Peace Conference were named on March 17. Count von Brockdorff-Rantzau, foreign minister, heads the delegation which includes Dr. Edward David, first President of the National Assembly, Max Warburg, an official of the Hamburg-American line, Dr. Adolph Muller, Prof. Walther, M. A. Schücking and Herr Geisberg.

TO AID EMPLOYMENT. The nation-wide organization of the Council of National Defense will take up the re-employment in industry of soldiers and sailors, taking over some of the functions of the United States Employment Service for the continuation of which the recent Congress failed to make the necessary appropriation.

CARRANZA CALLS CONGRESS. The Mexican Congress was called to meet in special session May 1, to consider the petroleum situation, the sole bank of issue and legislation to further profit sharing in industry. The law at present taxes petroleum production heavily under a license system which does not recognize the property rights of owners or protect their undeveloped lands. Britain, France and the United States have made diplomatic protests against this situation. The bank is expected to stabilize Mexican currency and the profit-sharing to give the peon a fair share in the product of his toil. Carranza was said on March 16 to have gained complete mastery of the State of Morelos, where Zapata had held sway for ten years. Zapata was reported a fugitive.

INTERNATIONAL RED CROSS. Henry Morgenthau, former American Ambassador to Turkey, and Henry P. Davison are in Europe reorganizing the International Red Cross for the services of need and human welfare which it can perform better than any other agency. A convention will be held at Geneva thirty days following the signing of the Peace treaty, at which will be formed a World League of Mercy.

A RADIO RECORD. On March 13 effective wireless transmission between England and Australia, 12,000 miles, was celebrated by the exchange of official messages.

TO TUNNEL THE CHANNEL. Great Britain and France are now actively engaged in perfecting plans for the construction of a tunnel under the English Channel. The tunnel will carry railroad tracks, telephone and telegraph wires, superseding the present cables, and pneumatic tubes for carrying letters and parcels.

TO FINANCE RAILROADS. It was announced on March 11 that the conference between railroad and financial officers, the War Finance Corporation, and bankers had resulted in a plan by which the money needed by the railroads for improvement would be made available. Treasury warrants which will be used as collateral for loans, will be issued to railroads.

BERLIN REDS SURRENDER. Having gained the upper hand over the Reds the Ebert Government in Berlin issued orders to its soldiers to take no prisoners, and to execute every armed person found on the streets. On March 12 the Spartacides asked for terms and were told that they must surrender. It was estimated that the damage done in Berlin during the recent disorder amounted to $150,000,000.

VICTORY LOAN APRIL 21. The Secretary of the Treasury announced on March 12 that the 5th Liberty Loan drive to be known as the Victory Liberty Loan would open on Monday, April 21, and end Saturday, May 10. The bonds will be in the form of short term notes, running 5 years.

LITTLE RHODY WOULD BE SURE. After a second refusal to ratify the National Prohibition Amendment by the legislature of Rhode Island a resolution was introduced into the General Assembly on March 12 providing for the institution of proceedings by the Attorney General of Rhode Island in the United States Courts to determine the constitutionality of the 18th or Prohibition Amendment to the Constitution.

DEBS MUST SERVE SENTENCE. The Supreme Court of the United States on March 10 in an unanimous opinion confirmed the sentence of 10 years imprisonment on Eugene V. Debs, Socialist leader, convicted under the espionage law of attempting to interfere with recruiting and enlistment. The decision was said to settle the fate also of Victor L. Berger, and his associates, who nevertheless intended to carry his case through the courts.

KOREANS REBEL. Korean desire for self-determination caused disturbances throughout Korea on March 10, 11 and 12, which resulted in bloodshed and the arrest of some 40,000 Koreans. Although the Protestant missionaries and Christians were at first accused of instigating the trouble, investigation disclosed that less than 15 per cent. of the participants were Christians and that the foreign missionaries had had no part in fomenting the trouble. The officials declared the disturbances had disclosed a flaw in the administration of Korea which would be rectified.

Imagination and Life

*A SERMON BY REV. JOHN ROACH STRATON, D.D.

TEXT—Prov. 4 : 23. "Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life."

WHEN the Hebrew wise man cautioned us to keep our hearts with all diligence, saying that out of them are the issues of life, he caught an intuitive glimpse of the truth which our modern science has more and more systematized and amplified. Surely, too, he could never have used a more forceful figure than that of the "heart." This organ of man's body is the most marvelous of all, not excepting the brain itself, for even the brain is dependent on her faithful handmaiden, the heart. All of the blood in the human body passes in a never-ceasing stream through this organ. The heart contracts itself at an average rate of sixty times to the minute when the body is in a state of health. That means that it beats 3,600 times an hour, and at each one of these contractions it throws out an average of two ounces of blood. In other words, about 350 pounds of blood pass through the heart every hour during our lives. And in order to send this blood out even as far as two feet into the great arteries, we are told that the heart must meet a resistance equivalent to a weight of 12,600 pounds! This marvelous muscle goes cheerfully forward with this gigantic task minute by minute, hour after hour, year in and year out, sometimes as long as 100 years, before it grows weary of its duties and ceases its faithful throbbings.

We are all familiar with the expression "heart failure." Our medical friends sometimes cover their mistakes with the statement that the patient died of "heart failure." This is a very safe assertion, for death can never come until the heart fails. Truly, out of it are the issues of all physical life, and when it fails of its task, or is interrupted in its duties, the entire majestic machine that we call man crumbles into death and dust.

The Hebrew mind seized upon a striking figure of speech, therefore, when it made the heart the center of man's spiritual being. The ancient Hebrew included in this broad term all of the faculties of man's nature, including in secondary degree also the judgment and the will. But the center of the thought in the use of this figure is at the point of the affectional nature. The things that are accepted by the judgment are acted upon by the will, after the affections have seized them and made them their own.

The will, the conscience and the judgment have been fully considered and often discussed by thinkers of every land, but all too seldom has that regal power of man's nature, the imagination, been considered. Yet at last it is one of the most constructive and vital of all our powers, for it is intimately connected with the affections. The imagination is the picture-making faculty of man's being. It is that magical power by which even a word is expanded until it becomes a vision. It is that faculty by which the distant is brought near, the unseen is made real, and that which is merely suggested to the understanding is visualized until it becomes a concrete and startling reality.

DWELL for a moment upon this wonderful power in the realm of man's intellect. Notice, first, that the imagination is the faculty which makes history real to us. At the touch of its magic wand we can summon the bygone ages and make them live again. Man finds in a cave a few jars and bits of stone and a rude charcoal sketch upon the wall, and this powerful faculty seizes upon these things and bodies forth the conditions and the activities of the stone age and the habits of the cave man. Through the imagination we may thus watch the procession of the ages passing in gorgeous and inspiring pageantry.

In a few moments of time, the mind of man, with the aid of his imperial imagination, can thus sweep across the vanished ages and recreate the days that are gone. How barren and empty would be the record of the past but for this marvelous faculty which makes it live and thrill again with the very throb of reality itself!

It is the imagination, too, which enables us to follow the stately steppings of these master minds in art and literature. Through it we may be with Tennyson in his "Dreams of Fair Women," and we may watch the visions that glorified the cell of John Bunyan. Inspired by mighty Shakespeare, we may laugh with Falstaff, or explore the tragic soul of Hamlet, or ride with Ariel on the wings of "The Tempest." With Dante, we may traverse even the appalling regions of the damned; or through Milton's sightless eyes we may behold the resplendent visions of the upper world. All literature, biography, poetry and romance would be insufferably barren and dull were it not for the quickening and vitalizing touch of man's picture-making power.

THIS faculty exercises also an enormous influence over morals. On one side it may be a feeder of vice and crime. An unregulated and unconsecrated imagination, dwelling upon the fancied sweetness of forbidden things, may lure its owner like a siren to infamy and sin. In that deeper region of the mind where we are beyond the reach of public opinion and the judgment of our dearest friends, the true warfare for righteousness comes. Some of the holiest of men have written of their strife against the influences of the imagination, as it sought to restir the old thought-springs of a former and lower life. Goethe once said: "I have within my own breast the germ of every crime," and this germ needs only to be warmed and vivified by an active imagination to lead on to moral infamy.

The imagination is the mother of all our great ideals. An ideal is simply an idea that has been thought into and thought through until we have gotten on the other side of it, and made it a principle of conduct and character. The imagination visualizes and personifies Purity, Honor, Honesty, Truth and Love, and woos and wins the heart by the fascination of their exquisite charms.

Again this faculty is a potent power in morals because it is the great feeder of our sympathies. Many a harsh word spoken in anger and haste within the home would be left unuttered if the thoughtless speaker could look into the future and see the patient face thus smitten into grief by his hard words lying still and white in the majesty of that which we call death. One has said, "Every morning, every evening, I said to myself: How much ought I not to forgive, for we shall remain so short a time together."

Must we not believe that the rich and more favored elements of society would manifest more sympathy for the backward and poor if only they gave freer play to the imagination? Surely the rich woman could not spend a fortune upon her gowns and fritter away her days in idleness and selfish living, if in imagination she would only look at her pinched and hungry sister, perhaps only a block away, striving and struggling in penury and rags to nurture up her little brood.

Our commercial life would have a heart in it if the captains of industry would give fuller play to the imagination and allow their sympathies to be kindled by it. Here is the director's room of a great corporation. It is the time of the annual business meeting. The directors—sleek and well fed—are seated about the massive mahogany table. The manager of the firm rises in his place, smiles upon them, and says: "Gentlemen, I am pleased to bring you in this year a very favorable report. We have amassed so many thousands or hundreds of thousands or millions of dollars. We can declare such and such a dividend and then there will be left in addition sufficient for the cutting of a luscious 'melon.'" And they pass out, congratulate the manager, shake hands with each other in high good humor, and think, perchance, that that is all there is to the year's work. But as God sees it, that is not all of the year's work. Frequently behind that scene there are other scenes—scenes where men toiled the weary year through, underfed, poorly clothed and perplexed by the problem of supporting and educating a growing family on a too slender wage. There are pale-faced women; there are sunken-cheeked girls, whose chests are narrow, whose fingers are worn from endless toil, and some of whom have been driven to sin by the awful specters of want and pride. And there are sometimes, too, the slight, dwarfed forms of little children, even in their tender years, driven to labor, stunted and wronged and undone by the mighty forces of mammon and the modern greed for gold. Thank God, this is not true of all business! Thank God that many are catching the vision! Thank God that we are getting away from that ignoble and base slogan, "Business is business," and we are coming to see that business is life, and that it may be even love and brotherhood and fellowship and service! A right play of the imagination will usher in humanity's brighter and better day.

IN OUR busy age the religious use of the ima tion is too much neglected, and often even ent ignored. Meditation is all but a lost art amon We need to get the fever and the haste out of blood. We need the majesty of calmness. We to be still and know that God is God, and to med in his law day and night, and then we shall be l away from the sordid, the temporal and the base, our spirits will expand before the absorbing and g ous visions of the Eternal.

If we will but open the way, the Holy Spirit, mo upon the imagination of man, can lead us through fair and blessed fields of divine truth and make Bible story marvelously real. Starting with the jestic record of the beginnings in Genesis, where stands in the heavenly reaches of eternity past, sweeping down the ages through the record of pa arch, prophet and priest, we may stand at last in very presence of the Son of God himself. We see him heralded by angelic hosts, born of a Virg sanctified womb, living out his life of matchless bea and crowning it with his vicarious death. We see him in the winsome sweetness of his childhood the budding strength of his manhood, in the glory his power as Lord of nature and ruler over de until at last our hearts break with his in the shad of Gethsemane and supreme anguish of the cross; we fall down at his nail-pierced feet, exclaiming w Thomas of old: "My Lord and my God!"

BRIERLEY raises the question of the profou significance of the imagination in an apologe connection. Behind the imagination the affectio and behind the affections the will; and then he as "Behind the will, what?" and says that we must a swer, "God!" Even science, he well says, is beginni to discover that our separate faculties are not the selves originators. "They are but the organs o deeper life, fed from sources that are otherwhe Man is constructed so as not to be complete in hi self. He is a planet that moves around a Sun. He never know the true harmony or healthy developm of his being until his earthly life is consciously link with a heavenly." Thus we see man, not as a creatu of the dust, as modern materialism would have us b lieve, with a life but for a day; but we see him in h true dignity, through redeeming grace as a child God, as a citizen of a divine kingdom, and as a pilgri journeying on to God's bright home. Though "e hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor has it entered in the mind of man to understand the things that Go is preparing for them that love him," still through t blessed gift of the imagination we can enjoy in a vance some of the happiness of heaven and catch som part of the vision of its supernal glories.

William Law, in "The Serious Call," makes th suggestion:

"Before you begin your psalm of praise and re joicing in God, make this use of your imagination Be still, and imagine to yourself that you saw th heavens open, and the glorious choirs of cherubim and seraphim about the throne of God. Help you imagination with such passages of Holy Scripture as these: 'I beheld, and lo, a great multitude that n man could number, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands. And they all cried with a loud voice, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb.' Think upon this until your imagination has carried you above the clouds, and has placed you in their eternal music."

Through God's infinite love in endowing us with such royal powers of mind and heart, we may thus dream, not only of the reality of his own being, but also of that "land that is fairer than day." Heaven is not as real to us as it was to our forefathers because we do not think enough about it. Through the imagination we may behold the divine city, the New Jerusalem, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. We may look upon the gates of pearl and the golden streets of that bright home of the soul into which the kings of the earth shall bring their glory and honor, and where nothing shall ever enter that defileth or maketh a lie. With enraptured hearts we may hear the celestial choirs and see the circling clouds of white-winged angels and the unnumbered hosts of the redeemed.

Yea, in awe and wonder and with gratitude unspeakable we can lift up our eyes even to the rainbow-circled throne of God himself, and see, in ineffable glory, triumphant and redeeming Love ruling forever in that land upon whose blissful shore there falls no shadow and rests no stain!

---

*Pastor, Calvary Baptist Church, New York City.

l. Jowett, D.D.
. R. Braunstein
Albertson, D.D.

Daily Meditation

C. M. Sheldon, D.D.
R.S. MacArthur, D.D.
Rev. E. W. Caswell
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

The Incalculable Element in Life

DAY. Acts 12 : 7. "And behold, the angel the Lord came upon him." Peter seemed to e shut up in invincible captivity. His mate- al bonds could not be broken through. He prison." He was "bound with two chains." in the custody of "four quaternions of sol- And all this servitude was inspired by the s vigilance of malice. It seemed a hopeless lot. But now into the dark record there strange light. "And behold, the angel of the me upon him." That is the incalculable ele- life. Herod had foresight along certain lines provided circle after circle of security. But overlooked the emancipating angel at whose ch all his securities were flimsier than paper which are stretched across the track of a fire. nister of the Lord appeared, and Peter's chains m off his hands.

is another example of the ministry which the eaves out of its calculations. "The grass with- he flower fadeth, but the Word of our God shall or ever." The pessimist in the Church and out ops at the word "fadeth." He gazes upon the nal fields and woods. The leaves are falling. ory is departing. The fruitful field is becoming rness. The scent of decay is in the air, the om- mell of death. And the pessimist moans a sort iem. "The grass withereth, the flower fadeth!" ms as if all is over. But he has overlooked rtling word "but" behind which there hides a that holds the power of a new spring. "The withereth, the flower fadeth, but the Word of d shall stand for ever." That is the word which the Lord who makes and unmakes seasons, g the garden into a desert, or making the wilder- lossom like the rose. J. H. J.

The Indispensable Church

NDAY. Heb. 10 : 25. "Forsake not the as- embling of yourselves together." No creed can e held without some medium for self-expression, ithout opportunity for inward inspiration and hment. See how it is with music. Given a mu- mind, and two things are needed; namely, self- sion and inspiration. Expression calls for an ment. So the musician gets himself a flute, vio- ano, organ, or if he be no player, an automatic ment. He writes music for others to play. His al impulse finds these outlets, and he feeds his with the music of others' creation. He attends ts and recitals. They are as necessary to him d. So it is with religion. It too must find ex- on. "The Lord's remembrancers" cannot keep . The dearth and death of religion are the re- f the silence that has frozen so many souls and so many lips. John Wesley was wise in pro- for the class-meeting and the prayer-meeting g his societies. "Speak, that I may see thee," ocrates to a youth. "What do you think about ubject?" said one friend to another. "I do not ," was his reply; "let us talk about it and see." ext to impossible to keep our faith and keep si- bout it. The love of God in human hearts de- s self-expression. Then there is the demand for ous inspiration. This is what the sacraments rdinances are for. It is what the assembling of aints is for. A Western farmer spoke about the tries of the church to him while his sons were in the war. He said, "It has helped me carry d keep up hope." So faith is fed, and so the that begins with half belief purges itself of its weakness. While life lasts there may be lurking lief to check our progress toward perfection. But is worship as a defense against it. And there ayer. "Help thou my unbelief." Weak faith s stronger with each courageous confession.

C. C. A.

Ceremonial Purity

ESDAY. Luke 11 : 44. "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are as graves appear not, and the men that walk over them are ware of them." According to the church laws of ews contact with a corpse, even indirectly, as by hing the bier on which a dead person was carried e burial-ground, rendered a person ceremonially ean. Walking over a grave would have the same . A person might do this unconsciously and un- tionally, and thus become unclean without know- t. This is the point of comparison. The Lord the Pharisees that they are not what they seem. a grave sinks, so that its mound becomes level the surrounding ground, and grass grows over it, and flowers bloom on it as on the meadow of which it has become a part, nobody imagines that a few feet below the surface there is a chamber of corruption, where death works its last fearful effect upon man. On the surface everything seems teeming with life and loveliness, but this is only a thin veil hiding from the sight of men the utter extinction of life and the saddest decay. Such is Pharisaism as it appears to the penetrating eye of the Lord. The human heart was designed to be the dwelling-place of the Most High. The Lord told his disciples that the Father and the Spirit would come to them and dwell in them, if they believed his word. Where God is there is life in its highest form. Where God dwells there is his temple. But the heart becomes a grave when the true regard for God and his word becomes extinct in a person. His physical life goes on, his reason functions as before, his natural will power is being exercised as usual, there may even be some attractiveness about his ways, and a certain formal religiousness; but the real life, the life that is of God, is gone out in him. He carries death in his bosom and contaminates all he comes in contact with. When men discover his true inward state they feel repelled as if a breath from a charnel house had struck them. "How little do men often conjecture how it is with our hearts!" W. H. T. D.

Rust and Wear

WEDNESDAY. Matt. 16 : 26. "For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" The remark is often made, "It is better to wear out than rust out." Men say it with a satisfied air. The saying is all right as far as it goes, but the majority of those who are fond of expressing themselves in that way never seem to consider that it is possible to rust out in the very process of wearing out, and that it is probable to do both at the same time. We are in danger of losing our souls in our trade by becoming the slaves of our business. On many a tombstone could be written the epitaph, "Here lies John Doe; born a man, died a plumber." There are other values in life besides money-making and possession accumulation. There are riches innumerable that cannot be computed in terms of dollars or measured with a foot rule. There are the daily revelations of God, by which and through which he seeks to approach and make himself known to man. He manifests himself in literature, music, art, travel, nature, friendships, the Sabbath rest and sanctuary inspirations. There are helpful ministries in which we may become a part. There are burdens to lift and lonely hearts to cherish. The chief business in life is not to make money, but to "prove and make our souls." We are to be spiritual-minded, do good, seek the beautiful, love mercy, and money is to pay the expenses.

The old story of Frankenstein, of a creature constructed by a medical student from bones gathered in the dissecting room, and brought to life by electricity, which finally destroyed its creator, is the story of many a life. To wear out constructing a big business is often the means of rusting out the soul, which is more important and bigger than any business. Such a life lacks balance. R. B.

The Fulness of the Godhead

THURSDAY. Gen. 1 : 1. "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." These are majestic words; nothing more sublime is found in any literature. They are worthy to be the opening sentence of the greatest book in the world. Were it not that we have become so familiar with this verse, its reading would wake our admiration and secure our reverence. The Bible nowhere attempts to prove the existence of God; the Bible as a revelation from God necessarily assumes his existence. This verse virtually denies atheism because it assumes theism; it denies materialism, because it asserts creation; it rejects pantheism, because it declares the personality of God.

The first verse of the Gospel by the Evangelist John is profounder in its theistic philosophy and mystery. It is, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." This verse sets forth the eternal pre-existence of Jesus Christ, his personal existence with the Father, and his divine essence as God. The writer goes back to the origin of all things, and there he finds God as Creator. The third and fourth verses of this same chapter affirm that all things were made by Jesus Christ, and that without him not anything was made. The God of Genesis is the Word of John's Gospel. The work of creation is distinctly ascribed to Jesus Christ. A similar ascription is made in Colossians 1 : 16, 17; so also in Hebrews 1 : 2.

We thus see that Jesus Christ is the Creator of this physical universe. He is our Prophet, our Priest, our King, our Creator, our Preserver, and our Redeemer. Preservation is continuous creation; and redemption is the loftiest function of the Almighty. Redemption is the creation of the race. Not God the Father, not God the Spirit, but God the Son is the glorious Personality of the blessed Trinity, through whom creative and preservative power manifests itself in this world. It pleased the Father that Christ should have the preeminence in both creation and redemption. In him dwells all the fulness of the Godhead bodily.

R. S. M.

The Pentecostal Gift

FRIDAY. Acts 1 : 8. "Ye shall receive power." Power to make the mountains of sin flow away into the sea of forgetfulness. Power to level the little hills of self till the soul is one beautiful plain of harmony and fruitfulness. Power to cut a channel for the river of life and peace, ever flowing through this garden of the Lord. Power to wash your spirit whiter than the snow, like the purity of Paradise, where birds sing, flowers grow and hope eternal springs from the soil of the soul.

The very atmosphere of this life-giving power is restful, luminous with the light of the sun of righteousness. All the glory and joy of the first Eden is recreated where sin once abounded. "All power belongeth unto God." "All power in heaven and in earth is given unto me," says Jesus, and the Holy Spirit on Pentecost transmitted this power of deity to the early church. Power to become like Christ, to witness for him, live and die for him, and reign eternally with him.

Many Scripture passages express characteristics of this power, such as "endued with power from on high," "filled with all the fulness of God," "create in me a clean heart, O God," "sanctified holy and preserved blameless unto the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ," "have ye received the Holy Spirit since ye believed?" Are not many of our hymns prayers for this purity?

God's words thus lift up an ideal we all may reach, and our songs sing of an altitude we may obtain. The whole Christian world should pray that this baptism of fire may burn up all the dross of sin and make mankind fully ready for Christ's second coming and for eternal residence with him in glory. E. W. C.

Christian Democracy

SATURDAY. Matt. 23 : 8. "One is your Teacher, and all ye are brethren." When America went to war the habits of thousands of people were revolutionized. Girls who had spent most of their time in social frivolities suddenly found themselves doing Red Cross work, going to the front as nurses, serving in heroic ways for the relief of distress at home and "over there."

One of these transformations occurred in a young woman who had been a butterfly of fashion, living in a town near one of the great military camps. With other girls of her set she ministered to the social needs of the soldier boys, inviting them to her home for Sunday dinner, entertaining them at the Rota Club, and entertaining them as social equals. Many of these boys were college-bred and were handsome and attractive in their uniforms.

After the armistice was signed, a wave of reaction swept over many hearts and the tension of suspense was followed by a return to old selfish habits. Many of the boys in the camp came into the town, after their discharge from military service, seeking work.

One young woman who had nobly served others during her brief apprenticeship in unselfishness one day came out of the kitchen where she had gone to give an order to a servant and said to her mother, "What do you think, mother! I found Lieutenant B—— delivering our groceries! He said he had worked part way through college before he enlisted for the officers' training camp, and he took the first job he could find! I invited him to come to dinner next Sunday."

"You must not do that!" the mother said sharply. "Go back and excuse yourself from such an invitation. He is not in our set!"

"But we had him here several times, mother! He is in every way worthy."

"It is not the same," said the mother.

"You mean, mother, that the overalls are not as good as the uniform?"

Alas for our boasted American democracy! The boy in overalls did not dine next Sunday with the American family. Of what use is all this talk about making the world safe for democracy if we have none of it ourselves! "For all ye are brethren," said the Master. C. M. S.

NOTE
OVE

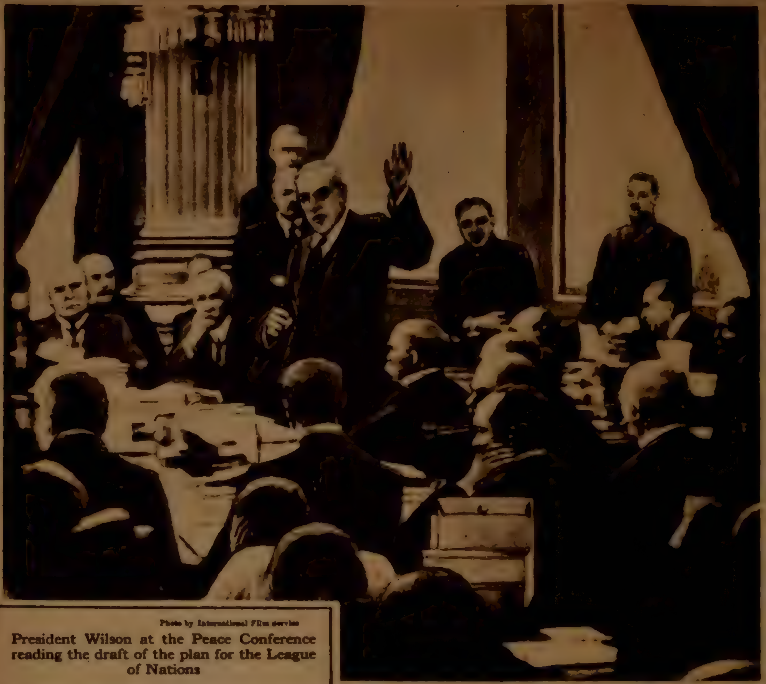

Photo by International Film service

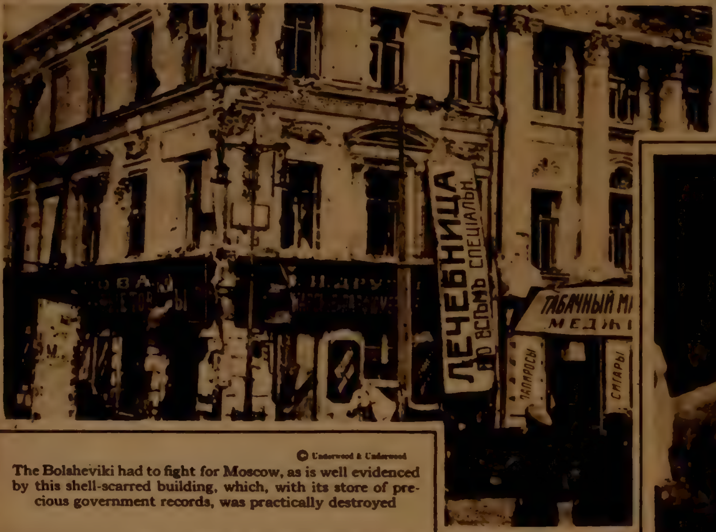
President Wilson at the Peace Conference reading the draft of the plan for the League of Nations

Photo by Paul Thompson

Soldier assistants at the Peace Conference, working on a map of the new Poland



© Underwood & Underwood

The Bolsheviki had to fight for Moscow, as is well evidenced by this shell-scarred building, which, with its store of precious government records, was practically destroyed

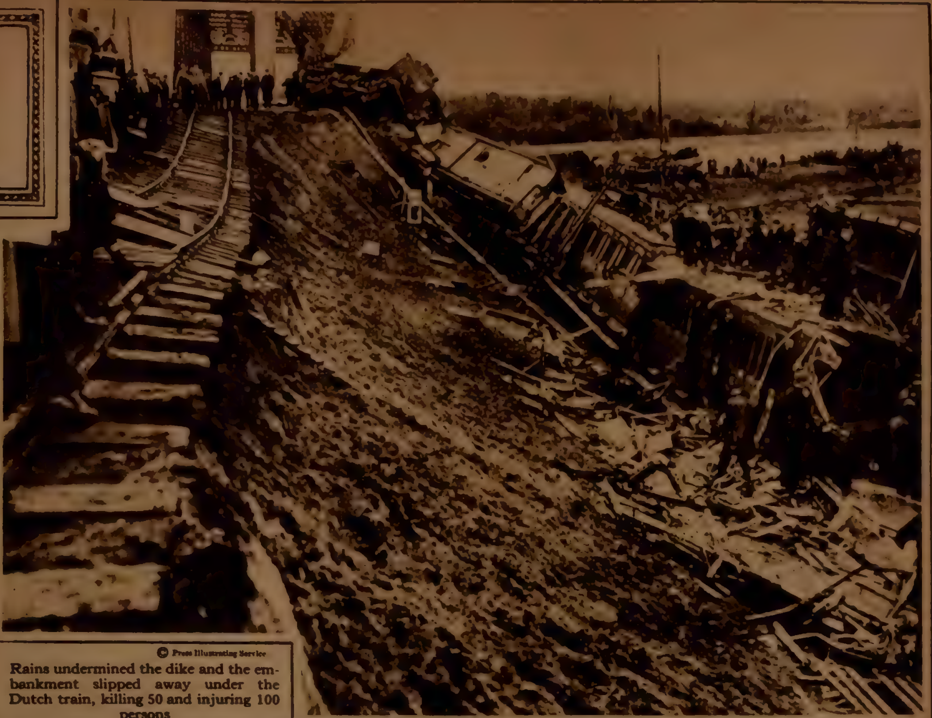
Unloading flour for American troops at Archangel, Russia

U. S. Official Photo

© Press Illustrating Service

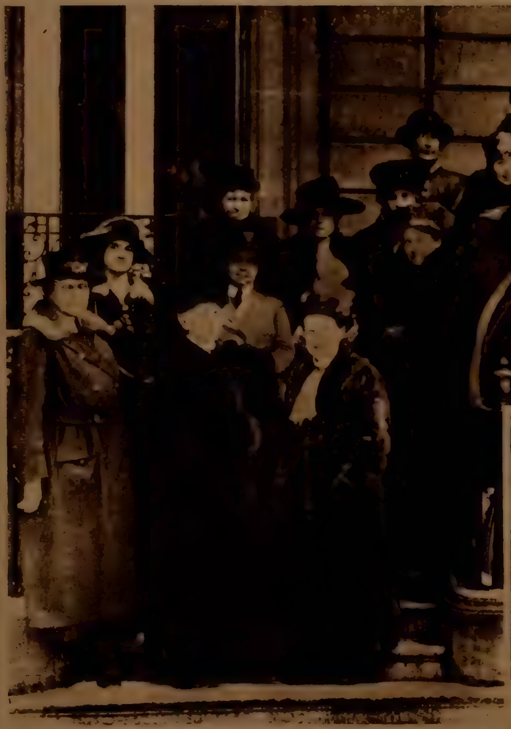
Guildford, England, tried girls of the Land Army as road cleaners and repairers. Now other District Councils are doing it. Here they are clearing away a recent snow

ROM
EAS



© Press Illustrating Service

Rains undermined the dike and the embankment slipped away under the Dutch train, killing 50 and injuring 100 persons



Interallied Suffrage Committee which called upon the President in France and asked that the world's women be represented at the Peace Conference. First row, left to right: Mrs. J. Borden Harriman (U. S.), Mme. Schlumberger (France), Mme. Pichon-Laudry (France). Second row: Mrs. Rublee (U. S.), Dr. Davis (U. S.), Mme. Brunsching. Third row: Mrs. Fawcett (Gt. Br.), Mrs. Stratchey (England), Miss Smith (England). Fourth row: Mme. Brigode (Belgium), Marie Parent (Belgium). Fifth row: Miss Boyle (So. Africa), Mlle. Van den Plas (Belgium). Sixth row: Mme. Sonnino Carpi (Italy), Mlle. Mitzhouma (Poland)

The "little German band" in the prison at Tours, supervised by the U. S. Army. Fritz is well fed and clothed and looks it

© International Film Service

How the Churches Get Together in Asia

Christian Unity Ahead in Mission Lands

By H. K. CARROLL, LL.D.

THE world is tremendously in earnest in insisting on a League of Nations, and what the world wants, if it wants it badly enough, the world gets. When necessity takes the reins, fear, doubt, expediency and other time-serving drivers have to find a back seat. Necessity came to the front at the critical period of the war, and united the Belgian, French, English and American forces under one command, and Foch led them to the greatest victory the world ever saw. The object sought was great enough to compel agreement. And men, when they count up the cost of the war in lives—ten millions; in wounded and crippled—twenty millions; in treasure—two hundred billion dollars; say there must never be another. It must be prevented. The object is so great that it compels agreement to achieve it. Here the realist joins hands with the idealist, and those who have faith in God and humanity believe that there will be a league, a real effective league which time and experience will help to make ever more and more perfect.

If comity and unity, federation and cooperation are good for sovereign nations, why not also for churches? Their founder was an idealist. He prayed that his followers might all be one. Men sometimes say that Jesus Christ, the Idealist, set forth principles and purposes and attainments which the world cannot measure up to. It would be truer to say, does not measure up to. Peter fell short of it, through lack of faith, courage and knowledge. But when he came to understand the purpose of the life, death and resurrection of the Master, he became an idealist himself, and preached the idealism of the Gospel, and patterned his life after the perfect life of the Saviour.

TO PROPOSE that the denominations put their forces together for some great object which no one of them is strong enough to achieve, nor all of them separately, is no more unreasonable, or impossible, than was the merging of the armies of the Allies.

The churches themselves have the proof of this in their own work. If they do not talk much about it, nor think much of it, it is because the demonstration is not within their daily view. All the churches have work in other lands; but the mass of them know little or nothing about it, and it is scarcely ever in their thought, except when they see a live missionary and are asked for their missionary contribution. And not one in a hundred, perhaps, knows the conditions under which their missionaries live and work.

These conditions—a multitudinous heathenism covering India, China, Africa, as the waters cover the sea; different from Christianity as the night from the day; hostile, unfriendly, unresponsive; surrounding the individual missionary with walls of suspicion, distrust and dislike—these conditions long ago drove the lone missionary to seek the companionship, conversation, fellowship, sympathy, encouragement and helpfulness of other missionaries within reach, whether of his own or other denominations, it mattered little.

Then, when mission stations multiplied and converts increased, and evangelism, training, education, literature, medical and publishing work pressed unduly, and the home treasury was inadequate, necessity suggested economy of men, means, effort, and brought in cooperation, federation and union to meet the conditions. And always it was the missionaries in the field, and not the Church at home, that proposed these several steps. The missionary was face to face with the conditions and was spurred by necessity, while his supporters at home were at such a distance that they could not for years understand his impelling motives. They saw but one thing, their denominational work; he saw also the work of others. They never imagined that their denominational name did not stand, in the midst of a rampant heathenism, for exactly what it stood for at home. And it took years of stern necessity to show the inadequacies, the inconsistencies, the incongruities, the utter uselessness of setting up in Asia and Africa the multitude of denominational banners which distinguish our Christianity at home.

WHEN converts became intelligent, they asked why they should be called anything more or less than Christians. We know Christ as our Saviour: his name is sufficient for us. Why Luther, why Wesley, why Menno? Did not Paul condemn the Corinthians for saying, "I am of Paul, and I of Apollos, and I of Cephas?" They could not see wherein the converts of Presbyterian, Congregational, or Methodist missions differed from each other, save in names which seemed to them to have no meaning. They could not get interested in the history which created in America—

The Presbyterian Church in the United States of America;
The Presbyterian Church in the United States;
The United Presbyterian Church of North America;

or—

The Reformed Church in America;
The Reformed Church in the United States;

or—

The Methodist Episcopal Church;
The Methodist Episcopal Church, South (south of what?);

or—

The Northern Baptist Convention;
The Southern Baptist Convention.

These geographical designations had no application and no meaning in China or India. Moreover, wherever the native Christians of China, or India, or Japan, or Korea, have had the determining voice they have chosen simple designations, like that of Antioch. Refusing to see in the divisions of Europe and America an example to be emulated, they have contented themselves with names like these:

Church of Christ in Japan (Presbyterian and Reformed).
Methodist Church of Japan (Methodist Episcopal, Southern Methodist Episcopal, Methodist Church of Canada).
Holy Catholic Church of Japan (Church of England and Protestant Episcopal).
Holy Catholic Church of China (Anglican: England, Australia, Canada, United States).
Church of Christ in China, Presbyterian General Assembly of (not yet complete, but expected to include) English, Australian, Canadian and American Presbyterian and Reformed bodies.
South India United Church (United Free of Scotland, American Presbyterian, Reformed in America, English and American Congregationalists).
Presbyterian Church of India (North) (Presbyterians of Scotland, Ireland, Canada, America).

These are actual organic unions, mostly of members of the same denominational groups, but in South India embracing both Presbyterians and Congregationalists. Similar unions have taken place in other fields. And it should be added that though Northern and Southern Presbyterians cannot unite in the United States, their missions abroad have in every country, where both are represented, organized their converts into one United Church, as in Brazil, Japan and China. One instance showing the persistence of both missionaries and native Christians in standing for an undenominational organization ought to be mentioned. The Reformed Church in America and the English Presbyterian Church worked together in Amoy, China, many years, and established native churches which were organized into a presbytery. The General Synod of the former refused to sanction an independent organization and directed that the churches in Amoy be incorporated with those of the classis of Albany. Those on the field demurred and gave their reasons for non-compliance. The reasons were not accepted by the General Synod as satisfactory, and it insisted on its action. The missionaries offered to resign, but their resignations were not accepted. The General Synod never rescinded its action, but the organization remains to this day. Tong Kwo Om, a student at Yale University, in 1884, and a member of the Chinese Imperial Railway Commission, has said: "Whenever Chinese converts obtain a hearing on the subject, they speak with no ambiguity on the immense loss of force which Christianity sustains through these divisions."

NECESSITY, which is rather a stern teacher, has brought about important measures of cooperation and federation, which are but steps toward organic union, in these particulars:

1. Delimitation of territory. All the fields are divided among the denominational missions, by mutual agreement, so that they shall not overlap. The Philippines were divided from the beginning among the denominations in such a way as to secure the occupation of most of the territory and to avoid duplication of effort. Mexico, one of the most notable instances of haphazard occupation—over-occupation along the lines of travel, and neglect of large stretches of less accessible sections—has recently, by agreement of the Boards represented, thoroughly reformed the plan of occupation by a system of sacrifices, surrenders, exchanges, transfers of missions, acceptance of new enterprises, on the basis of an unselfish desire to prevent overlapping, waste of effort, and loss of opportunity in unoccupied fields. This beautiful example shows how the mind of Christ has got hold of missionary workers and directors. In one instance high officials of a church interposed objection, but their own church council overruled them.

2. Cooperation and federation. In nothing was the weakness of denominationalism more manifest than in the educational institutions. Everywhere colleges and universities were established to give Christian education to all who would accept it; but the standard could not always be attained or maintained. Government standards, as in India, were exacting, and it required good teachers and good equipment to meet them. Necessity here again drove the missions to combination of interests and resources. As was said by heads of these institutions, mathematics and medicine, history and art, language and pedagogy are not sectarian or denominational, and why should there be Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian and Lutheran colleges to teach unsectarian studies? So union educational and hospital institutions are becoming the rule where they used to be the exception. Thirty or more of these union institutions are to be found in China alone. In Nanking University, Northern and Southern Presbyterians, Northern and Southern Methodists, Northern Baptists, Friends and Disciples of Christ cooperate.

Cooperation is also extended to evangelistic work, to publishing interests and Christian literature, also to language schools where missionaries of all denominations study side by side the language or dialect they expect to use.

The tendency in all fields today is toward cooperation, federation, organic union, and the movement has such force that opposition, if offered, could not defeat it. But the boards and the several churches which support the boards are, with few exceptions, helping it forward. The Foreign Boards of the United States and Canada, great and small, of all denominations, belong to a Foreign Missions Conference, which is incorporated, which acts for all in many matters, meets annually in January, and finds that cooperation is easy, natural and most profitable.

And now the latest proposition is that the missionary boards should unite in the "drive" for funds. The expansion of the foreign mission enterprise, its ever-increasing results and the extraordinary opportunities opening to it everywhere, brought together, in December, leaders of a number of the missionary boards to consider the idea of a more intimate cooperation in the raising of missionary money. It was seen, however, that the proposed united effort should also include the home mission boards.

These are signs of the times, and they who cannot read them are without the gift of interpreting prophecy. The day of old things is passing, the day of new things is coming in—new things social, industrial, political and religious. This is the way God indemnifies the race for the evils of war, and shows how the open sores of the world are to be healed.

A Clear-Headed Christian Woman's View of Unity

IF CHURCH members are thoroughly imbued with the spirit of Christ, it makes no difference of what denomination they are, they will work with other Christians against evil. Federation without such a membership would be useless. Could we have church membership of such a character, federation would take care of itself. We could not federate without a definite policy for the various demands of church activity. This could best be secured by beginning with local units and working toward a general plan.

During the last two years money has been given by the billions for government and war needs. Should the church be less generous in the war against evil? The Commander of Souls must have his own. The Church will never be able to meet the demands of this constructive period unless the membership pays the price for trained leadership.

The boy who sold toys in a notion store will not do so when he returns from France. The lad who left the farm will not come home to raise corn just to satisfy the needs of animal life; he has seen how his labor affects France, Italy, the world. So, too, these boys will not be willing to accept for their religious activities a twenty-minute sermon introduced and closed by choice music, nor a membership in a Sunday school where printed questions are answered by indifferent readers of lesson leaves. These boys have faced death. They have sacrificed that others might live. If the little home church will let them, they will revolutionize its plan of service.

The Church must grow to meet the needs of this tremendous upheaval of moral and social development. The denomination that does not push its walls outward will find them pushed inward by an unsatisfied public until its life is smothered by its own inactivity. The soldier received the Bible with his uniform. The barbarous deeds of the German were supplanted by acts of kindness, because the living Christ was recognized by the Allied army. The Church at home must live up to this standard set abroad. There must be a vision of the world as the field. The conception of God must be enlarged. There should be less isms and more Bible. To meet the demands of the world's constructive program the Church needs service that serves, prayer that intercedes, Bible study that finds God.

MARY B. MARTIN.

Havana, Kan.

Where John Found His Thousand Years

By REV. JAMES M. GRAY, D.D., Dean of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago

IN READING West's "Studies in Eschatology" some time ago, my eye fell on the rather odd phrase which I have appropriated for the title of this article. The article is intended as a reply those who object that the doctrine of a Millen- um is comparatively recent, and that for the most rt it is based upon a single reference in the Apoc- ypse of John.

The reference they mean is Rev. 20 : 1–10, where hn speaks of the thousand years (Millennium) as time when Satan will be bound and shut up in the ttomless pit, while the saints are reigning on the rth with Christ. At the close of this period he is sed again, and goes out to deceive the nations, ere is cast finally into the lake of fire and brimstone.

If indeed it were true that the Apocalypse is the ly Scripture in which the Millennium is mentioned, d if its mention there were limited to the single ssage quoted, would not that be sufficient itself to ablish its future historicity? How many times ist God say a thing through his inspired prophets insure its acceptance by those who believe him?

But, as a matter of fact, while the word "Millen- im," or a specific reference to the "thousand years" found nowhere else in Scripture, yet the period elf, though otherwise identified, is found in Scrip- e again and again. Readers who followed the ies of articles on Prophecy appearing in these umns last year must feel assured of this, even ough their attention was not particularly called to it the time.

DR. WEST, in the book referred to—now long out of print—makes special mention of one of these ces as that which scholars call "the little Apoca- se of Isaiah." It is found in chapter 24, verses -23, but it should be studied in the light of the ole section consisting of chapters 24–27.

What was said earlier in the articles "How to Study ophecy" and "Two Laws of Prophetic Interpre- ion" has an application here. In other words, iah, like all the prophets, speaks of the temporal l spiritual blessings which God would bestow on ael and Judah if they would be obedient and faith- but also of the judgments to fall upon them if they ed to be obedient and faithful. And then, never itting it, he speaks of the restored or renewed bless- that would be theirs when at a later time, through entance and faith, they would become obedient l faithful.

n the working out of the theme he constantly em- ys the law of recurrence to which the reader's attention has been called. That is to say, in the earliest his messages, covering chapter 1, he practically s over the whole of the ground just named in broad line. Then in his second message, chapters 2–4, goes over it again, adding details. He repeats this iis next message, and so on again and again, add- here a little and there a little, like an artist filling a picture with his brush, till he reaches his grand l comforting climax at the end. It is one of these ssages, these sections or units of his book, that are here dealing with.

t begins with a picture of that judgment on the ntile nations which shall take place in connection h the Day of the Lord and the Second Coming of Christ. The whole cosmic order is seen to be dissolved, turned upside down, because the inhabitants of the earth have transgressed God's laws. "The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunken man, and shall be removed like a cottage (or a hut)" (Isa. 24 : 20).

At this point in the picture the Lord is seen to "punish the host of the high ones that are on high" as well as the "kings of the earth upon the earth" (Isa. 24 : 21). In other words, here we have in the first class mentioned "the prince of the power of the air" (Eph. 2 : 2), "the dragon and his angels" (Rev. 12 : 7–9; 20 : 1–3), or, as Dr. West says, Satan and his legions cast down from their height to be shut up in the abyss.

THE time when this takes place is "in that Day," the "Day" we learned to identify in previous articles as coincident with the events of Rev. 20 : 1–10. It is the end of the first three and one-half years of Daniel's seventieth week. It is the beginning of the great tribulation at whose end Israel is converted, the Antichrist and his armies are destroyed, and Satan is imprisoned because Christ has been manifested in power and glory. As the prophet says, "they shall be gathered together as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison." Could it be any clearer, one might ask, that Isaiah is here speaking of the very same time and the very same events as John is speaking of in Rev. 20?

Nor is this all; for the prophet adds (verse 22), "after many days shall they be visited" (margin, "punished"). In other words, just as John says, the imprisonment of Satan and his associates at the beginning of the Millennium, when they are cast into the bottomless pit, is not their final judgment. "After many days," i.e., at the close of the Millennium, he will be loosed for a little season and go out to deceive the nations, and then it is that his final punishment falls upon him in the lake of fire and brimstone, where he is tormented day and night forever and ever.

The only difference here between John and Isaiah is that John separates the events which Isaiah combines. And this also is in perfect keeping with a principle of the inspired Scriptures. We have spoken of it hitherto as the law of double reference. That is to say, when the precise time of particular events is not revealed, the prophets sometimes speak of them as continuous, and sometimes blend two events in one. This is what Isaiah does, which we discover to be the case when we come to read John.

Quoting West again, the demonstration that these two are speaking of the same event is inductively complete. The time is the same, "the Day of the Lord." The indefinite period is the same, "after many days," i.e., a thousand years. The judgments preceding this period are the same. The resurrection occurring at this period is the same, and the judgments at the close of the period are the same. West goes into quite an argument here for which we have not space; but he also goes into something else which it is well worth while to record.

FOR example, he quotes sustaining authorities from the world of human scholarship. We mention this because those on the other side of this question are fond of classing all such scholarship with themselves.

What then shall we say of Auberlen, the distinguished commentator, one time Extraordinary Professor at Basel, who in his work on Daniel, page 330, says: "The binding of Satan is, like the thousand years, peculiar to the Apocalypse, although, strictly speaking, Isaiah prophesies the same thing in chapter 24 : 12–23."

What about Dr. C. W. E. Nagelsbach in the Lange series, who, in his comments on Isa. 24 : 11–23, goes quite at length into the subject? He tells us that the prophet's eye here sees what will take place at the end of the world. "We would not," he says, "have understood this word, if the New Testament revelation, which is nearer the time of fulfilment, did not throw light on this dark point." He then proceeds to show the harmony of the prophet with the Apocalypse of John.

And better still, as West says, is the comment of Dr. J. W. Webber on Isaiah. We can not go into it at length, but we would like to quote the endorsement of the man himself by the great and learned Delitzsch, who pronounces him "one of the first Hebrew scholars of Europe."

No, scholarship is not entirely on the other side. There is an abundance of it on this side. We have only mentioned a few names; but we are gathering data to mention many more, and one of these days, perhaps, a whole article will be given to a list of them. It would be a good thing for some weak souls, and a good strengthener of faith.

But enough has now been said to indicate where John got his thousand years. In other words, enough has been said to vindicate him from the empty charge that he was indebted to apocryphal legends and the literature of the rabbis for his conception of that period. The truth is that God revealed it to him by the Holy Spirit, just as he had previously revealed it to several of his predecessors. They were to reveal it partially to the Old Testament saints, but John's privilege and duty were to make it clear to the servants of Jesus Christ, upon whom the end of the age has come.

God's Almoners

GOD'S almoners are we,
  From out his store
He gives to thee, to me,
  Now less, now more:
Some gift, some sacred trust,
  That we alone
Of all his children must Bear swiftly on
To those who watch and pray
  In bitter need,
Doubting, while we delay,
  If God doth heed.

God's almoners! Untold
  The honor given
To us that we should hold
  The gifts of heaven
In sacred trust like this!
  Then let it not
  (The deed forgot!)
Be ours the joy to miss

Cambridge, Mass. E. E. BROWN.

Birmingham's New $100,000 Jail Emptied by Prohibition

Statement by Hon. GEORGE B. WARD, Former President of the City Commission of Birmingham, Ala.

THE city of Birmingham has the handsomest city jail in the South, ing about $100,000 and surrounded twenty acres of ground beautifully ivated.

"The normal number of prisoners confined within it before the advent of prohibition was 200 and upward. Today the number ranges from 60 to 70, most of them colored women.

"Now our new problem is, what to do with this fine jail. As a result Birmingham is forced to do its street-cleaning and garbage collection with paid labor instead of with prisoners."

Since the above was written this jail has been closed for lack of prisoners, and has been offered to the United States Government as a reconstruction hospital.

From PARIS to CHATEAU THIERR

The bridge at Chateau-Thierry where United States Marines stopped the Huns

© Underwood & Under

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

THE road from Paris to Château-Thierry isn't a war-like road—at least, the first part of it isn't. For perhaps fifteen miles it lies a smooth white ribbon that can be traveled over laughingly, between pleasant fields that are dotted here and there with tiny farmhouses. The calm face of the country shows no mark of tragedy.

But about fifteen miles from Paris the country begins to change. The change is a subtle one at first, a change that can scarcely be noticed—a change that is shown merely in a roughening of the road, and a barricade-like arrangement of great trees that have been hastily cut down beside it, and strange tangles of barbed wire that are lying carelessly in the pleasant fields. It is not until the farmhouses begin to look deserted and the crows—great, menancing flocks of them—rise up hastily from each clump of wayside shrubbery that the meaning and the nearness of actual warfare become apparent. For when the farmhouses look deserted and the crows appear in the fields, the road becomes a grim road. It is no longer a white ribbon to be traveled laughingly. It is a path that sorrow and death have walked upon. It is a road that swings an abrupt corner and pauses all at once beside a little cemetery.

There are eighty-seven American graves, narrow graves they are, and crowded close together, in that first cemetery that lies beside the road from Paris to Château-Thierry. The graves are all alike, each marked with a slim wooden cross and a cardboard rosette of red, white and blue. Only the names upon the metal tags—there is a metal tag nailed to each cross—are different.

If one walks very close down the line of graves, one can read the names that are stamped on the metal tags. But somehow I didn't want to walk very close to those narrow graves; I didn't want to be curious about the names stamped on the tags. Those graves were too hallowed, in my eyes, to need names. Every one of them, to me, held something vital—something that can never die. Every one held a bit of the spirit and grit and bravery and splendid youth that ended the greatest war in history!

I stood there, in front of that little wayside cemetery, and I didn't speak; but all about me I could hear others talking, and once I caught the fragment of a sentence.

"I wonder," somebody was asking, "if they'll be brought back to America?"

It was a soldier—a man who had fought all through that section of the country—who answered.

"I don't know," said the soldier slowly. And then he added: "But if I had died here I'd want to—stay."

BELLEAU WOOD is a dense tangle of trees and shrubbery—not so dense now as it used to be—that grows up sharply from the road to the top of a hill. Seen from a distance one thinks of what a good picnic ground it would make before one realizes the strategic value of it. For in the springtime, when the trees are in bud and the tangled shrubbery is showing a gay green color, it must be a pleasant place, Belleau Wood.

It was in Belleau Wood that our men first saw action. It was in Belleau Wood that they first went, with the fire of idealism in their hearts, to fight for the cause of humanity. And it was in Belleau Wood that they suffered their first heavy losses. As I walked through the silent places, I could picture them in their khaki uniforms, charging through the underbrush, firing around tree trunks, throwing hand grenades as they had, only a few years before, thrown baseballs.

Not long ago Belleau Wood must have been a ghastly spot. The snow, this winter, has been kind to it; for it has covered the shell holes and the shallow graves and the broken trees with a white, silent blanket that blots out a great deal of the horror. But there are still tattered bits of clothing lying about, and empty first-aid packets, and unmarked mounds. There are still pathetic bits of helmet and rifle belt—there are still unexploded bombs that must be left alone, and other exploded bombs that have done their work. One of our party, who was busily collecting souvenirs, picked up a German army boot and set it down again, hastily, after he had glanced into it. And when I strayed away a bit from the rest I came upon a ragged coatsleeve with an arm still in it. . . . And our guide said something softly under his breath when he kicked what seemed at first to be a stone.

It is easier to walk through Belleau Wood this winter than it was last spring. But even though much of the shrubbery has been cleared away, there are a great many brambles left that catch at one; many thorny bushes that tear and prick. I couldn't help thinking, as I broke a branch with inch-long prickers away from my skirt, of One who faced death on another hill, with his thorn-crowned head raised to the sky.

There is a little town that lies half way between Belleau Wood and Château-Thierry. It is called Vaux. And it was to Vaux that the Germans retreated after our men had driven them from their first stand. It must have been a pretty town once, with its cement houses and its quaint little church, but today it is only a shell—a wan ghost of a town. The walls of every house are shattered by terrific bombardment, the streets are piled with great heaps of stone and timber, the little church is a pitiful ruin. And in the gray light the broken steeple of it stood grayly against the sky like a maimed hand raised to God for help.

It was into the town of Vaux that our men pushed the Germans into a little town that they had ruined and spoiled on their march toward Paris. And it was in the little town that hundreds of them were taken prisoner, hiding like rats in the cellars of the homes they had destroyed.

I went into the cellar of one house. It was littered with wine bottles, empty and broken, mute testimony of the reign of barbarism. In one corner, among the bottles, I saw a small girl's slipper and a scrap of ribbon. In another corner I saw a religious picture with a bullet hole through it. Everywhere there was silence, the thick, musty silence that seems always trying to speak.

It is hard to describe on paper a ruined town. There aren't words that will give the reader any idea of the utter desolation of it. But if every one of you will try to imagine the town that you live in wiped of its population and shattered into a million ments, you may be able almost to picture it. Im your own Main Street lying in a heap, with a hole feet square torn in the center of it; imagine church riddled with shells, altarless and windo and roofless; imagine your own home tottering o foundations and your neighbor's house lying a ch heap of sticks beside it. And when you have ima that, multiply it by a thousand and you'll h fairly accurate picture of Vaux. You'll underst why I turned away suddenly sick at heart.

CHATEAU-THIERRY! In the years to Château-Thierry will take its place amon great battles of American history. As we drove the quiet village street I found myself visionin gray-green hordes that had been pushed back those same streets by our dust-brown columns we crossed the narrow, newly mended bridge marked a great German stand, I found mysel turing the fight that had ended in the blowing that same bridge a few short months ago.

I needn't tell you about the battle of Châ Thierry. You at home read last summer the b thrilling story of it. Some of you had sons or bro or lovers or husbands who fought over the s through which I have been riding. I can tell y the forlorn public square with a great poet's s shell-shattered but still standing in it; and of th where I had luncheon—an inn riddled by bullets of the torn houses that folk were busily repairing of the faded American flag that an old Frenchwo waved at us as we went past.

The road from Paris to Château-Thierry is a br road, after the first fifteen miles. It is a road sorrow and death have walked upon. But the something splendid, something supremely victor about it. For it is a road that the manhood of Am went down, unafraid and singing, until it met D and Sorrow—and made them turn back!

THE frost is white now on the graves near Châte Thierry. And ice is clinging in glowing, j like particles to the trees of Belleau Wood. The ing shell-holes along the Marne are drifted over snow, and the sharp outlines of many a trench h been dulled by it. And yet the trenches and the sh holes and the shattered trees and the graves are there—a vivid reminder of the first great Amer victories that were at the same time the first of supreme American sacrifices.

The PROBLEMS and the JOYS of the HOME

The Home School

By Charles M. Sheldon

THE average American youth goes to a large number of "schools" which combine to teach large variety of subjects. ese are the public school, the lege, the street, the "gang," smokehouse, the pool-room, movie, the church, the M. C. A., the Boy Scouts, ial circles like fraternities, orities and clubs, hero wor- p, the youth's own inclina- n, books, the playground, and rk.

In the midst of all these "uni- sities" which are teaching boys and girls good and bad ngs, where does the "Home iversity" come in, and what ts special duty to teach?

The subjects that belong to a rse in the Home University as follows:

The Physical Life, including nk and wholesome knowledge Sex (which many parents ed to know before they can teach , Politeness, Kindness, Thrift, Rever- ce, Industry, Self-Reliance, Discrimi- tion, Art, Punctuality, Physical Toil, rtnership, Nature, Brotherhood, World ace, Prayer, God, and the Bible.

To teach these things in this course s necessary that the parents be Chris- ns. The whole basis of instruction in e Home University must be religious, order to be true and safe.

The parent teacher must also be the ample to the child of the thing taught. teach him that it is good for him to to Sunday school and study the Bible, d then never to go to the one nor study e other, is the absurdity of instruction. all teachers the parent must be as ar as possible the thing that is taught.

No other "school" ought to be able give as complete and necessary an ucation as the Home University. To successful teachers in this university, thers and mothers do not need to be ofessional scholars, but they do need know God and love their children. braham Lincoln's stepmother was ch a teacher. He was in a real sense e product of the Home University.

The Doughnut of the Trenches

In the glory of light
That comes after the fight
  To hallow a nation's brave,
There stands forth a girl
Who in war's bloody whirl
  Helped the fighter this country to save.

THE Salvation Army doughnut girl of the front line trenches is the eroine of this song which the soldier oys are bringing home.

Ensign Agnes Sheldon was the lassie ho thought of the doughnut as army rovender. She and a group of the irls in short skirts and khaki were talk- g of the minimum of provisions and e maximum of need. "We need omething nourishing that can be uickly cooked," they agreed. "And omething that is simple, for we have w ingredients."

Ensign Sheldon rose from the council roup, struck her tambourine and houted, "Hallelujah!"

"Have you thought of something?" sked the others.

"Doughnuts!" she cried.

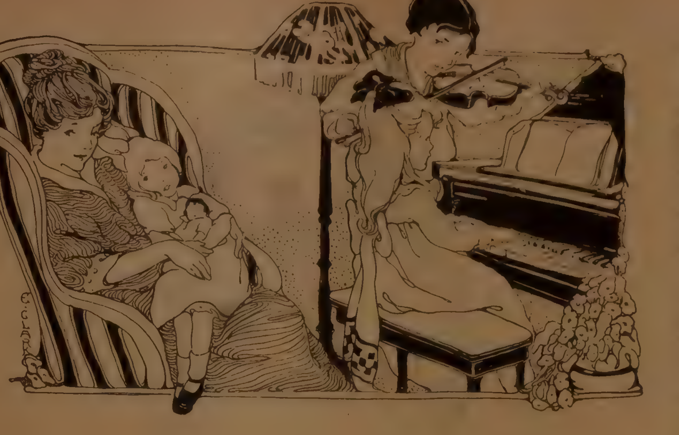
They all jumped to their feet, struck heir tambourines and shouted, "Halle- ujah!"

Here is the recipe the lassies used: 5 ups flour (add more if needed); 2 cups ugar; 5 level teaspoonfuls baking pow- er; 1 saltspoonful salt; 2 eggs; 1¾ ups milk; 1 tablespoonful lard.

The dry ingredients and the wet are ixed separately before the whole is neaded and ready to fry.

Mix all into a soft doughball and cut with a doughnut cutter. Drop into ery hot lard. It is well to clarify the ard by dropping a slice of raw potato into it. This will draw to it flakes of flour or lumps of dough that may be floating in the hot lard; also the browning of the slice will indicate how hot the lard is and whether the doughnut will quickly brown in it.

This quantity will make four dozen doughnuts.



Two Marion Harland Recipes

White Cake Filling

Make a syrup of a cup of granulated sugar and a third of a cupful of water. Simmer over a gentle fire until a teaspoonful "spins" when held in the air —thread-like—from the tip of the spoon. Beat the whites of two eggs stiff, add a generous pinch of cream of tartar and continue to whip while you pour in gradually the warm syrup. Whip steadily until you have a smooth paste about the consistency of butter. Flavor to taste, and spread between the layers of cake.

Stuffing for Poultry

Crumble stale bread very fine. If crusts are used run the rolling-pin over them. When all are fine and light, season with salt and pepper. Do not dampen it. The juices of meat exuding in cooking will suffice for this. Fill the fowl with the seasoned crumbs, packing in well; sew up or bind with soft string apertures through which the stuffing might escape.

To Rid Range of Soot

I WILL tell Mrs. W. of South Carolina how I keep my cooking range clear of soot in burning wood. Put two old discarded Mason fruit jar tops in the stove with the wood, and I think your pipe and chimney will be cleared. Once in a while throw in another. It has always cleared my stove.—MRS. F., Washington, D. C.

Ways to Cook Dandelion

IN SOME communities there is real rivalry between the housewives as to who will serve the first mess of dandelion greens. In other communities there seems to be little realization of the value of these greens in the spring diëtary. Following are tested recipes for the use of dandelions:

Dandelion soup: 1 cupful dandelion pulp, 1 tablespoonful butter, 1 tablespoonful flour, 1 cupful milk, salt and pepper, yolk of hard-boiled egg. Make a white sauce, and add to it the dandelion pulp. Just before serving the soup add the yolk of egg, which has been pressed through a sieve.

Dandelion timbales: 2 eggs, beaten, 1¼ cupfuls milk, 2 tablespoonfuls melted butter, ⅔ teaspoonful salt, ⅛ teaspoonful pepper, 1 teaspoonful onion juice, 1 cupful chopped cooked dandelion greens. Mix the ingredients in the order given. Turn the mixture into buttered molds, place the molds in a pan of hot water, and bake the timbales in a moderate oven until they are firm. Remove them from the molds, and serve them with tomato sauce.

Dandelions and tomato sauce: 2 tablespoonfuls butter, 2 tablespoonfuls flour, ¼ cupful strained tomatoes, cooked dandelions, salt and pepper. Make a tomato sauce of the first three ingredients. Add the greens, and mix them well with the sauce. Add the seasoning. Turn the mixture in the shape of a mound on to a plate, and garnish it with hard-cooked eggs or thin slices of tomato.

The Home-Made Cork Mat

By Laura A. Kirkman

BUSINESS efficiency experts declare that the weariness of an employee who must stand all day on his feet is minimized by having a cork or rubber mat to stand upon, and that, consequently, his efficiency is thus increased.

The clever housekeeper is quick to take advantage of this hint and make herself a cork mat upon which to stand when doing her washing and ironing. Such a mat is made in the following manner:

Cut two squares of sacking from a meal bag 18 x 18 inches. Sew the squares together on three sides, just as one would sew a pillow-case before putting the pillow in. Then sew straight seams through both thicknesses every two inches, running from the open side straight across the square to the opposite, bound side. Fill these long, narrow pockets with pieces of bottle corks which have been saved and cut up finely.

When each pocket is stuffed full of cork pieces, the mat will have a corrugated appearance. Bind the open edge and it is finished.

Clothes Basket on Wheels

MOUNTING the clothes basket on a wooden frame provided with small wheels lightens considerably the labor of washday. The basket and table may be painted with white enamel to make them easy to keep clean, and the basket can be filled with a much heavier load than would be practicable if it were to be carried. It can then be rolled out to the clothesline, so that the clothes can be lifted directly from it and hung on the line.

Underfed Children Handicapped

THERE is a direct relation between well-nourished children and children who are quick to learn. Underfed children may come from well-to-do homes as well as from the homes of the poor. Those who go to school with no breakfast at all and those who go to school after a breakfast of coffee and doughnuts are almost equally unfortunate.

The Child Voice

By Clara H. Burroughs

WHAT a large part music has and should have in the lives of all children! How quickly they respond to a musical idea, whether of marching or dancing or a funny song! All children should be encouraged to sing, for the voice is God-given, a priceless instrument that needs no trick for its use. And it is beautiful in childhood, before wrong and careless speaking and singing have made their inroads of injury.

We should do all in our power to encourage this sweetness of voice: by suggesting a moderate degree of tone in speaking and singing, by example more than precept. Children imitate so quickly. Mother's quiet voice or teacher's well-modulated one is sure to have effect.

Very helpful tone exercises may be given to the children to keep this beauty of voice, if given wholly in the spirit of play. Miss Alys E. Bently has devised some very interesting "tone plays." One of the best is the ring of a bell.

"Ring." Roll the r, then sing the whole word immediately, continuing the tone for a short while, using a moderately high pitch, c, d, or e. Use also "sing" and "ding" in the same way. Pretend the bell is in the hand and hold to the ear as if listening. This listening to his own voice on the part of the child tends to clarify and sweeten the tone. It is amazing how quickly children change from a bad or mediocre tone to a beautiful one when they have really heard their own voices.

The violin tone is a good one, "km," used in almost the same way as the bell, drawing an imaginary bow across the strings.

Spin an imaginary top, using "spin," "hum," "sing," to the same pitches, c, d, e. Always sing the word immediately, continuing the tone with the last letter.

For continuity of breath, the steam engine is very good: "puff," as if letting off steam, holding the f; and "tchuff," the engine starting off. The bass drum, "boom, boom," is splendid, with distended cheeks, and the snare-drum, "trum, trum, tr——um." Of course, pretend to beat the drum.

Sounds of birds and beasts are sometimes good, as the "moo—o" of the cow, "cock-a-doodle doo—o" of the rooster, "gobble, gobble" of the turkey, "zz—z" of the bee, and the same sound, pitched much higher, of the mosquito.

Encourage the child to hear tones in all life and imitate them.

These tone plays have been admirably used in interesting little songs which are exceedingly attractive to children, chiefly, I believe, because the subjects are taken from the child's experience.

Household Suggestions

HARD putty can be made as good as new by simply putting it through a common household-size food or meat-grinder, using a fine cutter, and then mixing it with the proper proportion of oil to make it pliable.

When buttonholing a scallop on fine material, stitch around the entire scalloping with the machine. This strengthens and prevents any tearing between scallops.

Save time when washing woodwork by using a piece of tin about twelve inches long to protect the wall-paper from the wet cloth. Move it along the wall above the board while you work.

To make bureau drawers and other wood surfaces slide easily, add a tablespoonful of powdered graphite to a pint of shellac varnish; stir well to mix it and apply with a brush; dry 4 to 10 hours before using. One coat is usually enough.

A Famous Author Passes Away

MRS. AMELIA E. BARR, one of the most prolific writers of fiction of the present day, died at her home, 445 Bedford Avenue, Richmond Hill, Long Island, on the night of March 10, at the age of nearly eighty-eight years. She had suffered from a heat stroke during the hot weather of last July, and had never recovered her strength. Her daughter, Mrs. Edward Munro, was with her at the end. Another daughter was in Florida, while a younger daughter, Miss Alice Barr, arrived shortly after her mother's death. The funeral was held on Thursday morning at the residence, and Mrs. Barr was buried in Sleepy Hollow Cemetery, the resting-place of Washington Irving, in accordance with an arrangement made many years before, in the family plot of the late Dr. Louis Klopsch, a life-long friend, for many years owner and publisher of the Christian Herald.

Mrs. Barr was the daughter of an English clergyman. Born in Ulverston, Lancashire, March 29, 1831, she received her education in the High School of Glasgow, Scotland. At eighteen she married Robert Barr, son of Rev. John Barr of Dovehill Kirk. A few years after their marriage, the Barrs landed in New York, the city whose antiquities were to be the theme of many of her stories. They went at once to the West, then to the South, living successively in New Orleans, Galveston and Austin, Texas, in which latter city they lived through the period of the Civil War. In 1867, while living at Galveston, her husband and four sons were carried off by yellow fever. She told the story of those sorrowful years in an autobiographical sketch, "The Red Leaves of a Human Heart." Forty years after the events there related she was able to write the story of her successes in a later autobiography, "All the Days of My Life," itself a literary masterpiece.

Soon afterward she moved to New York with her three daughters, bringing with her a letter of recommendation which gained her a position as teacher in Ridgewood, N.J. A few years later found the widow and her three daughters in a flat on Second Avenue, New York. She had written some stories to amuse her children, but had never thought of publishing them, and was doing some routine work on the New York Times, when an accident changed the course of events. She fell and sprained her ankle, and while unable to leave her room, she was visited by Miss Jones, daughter of Mr. George Jones, editor of the Times, who was allowed to examine the manuscripts which Mrs. Barr had laid away. Miss Jones took one of the manuscripts—an unfinished story—with her, and the result of her visit was the publication of "Jan Vedder's Wife," which put its author at once among the successful writers of the day and brought her fame and fortune.

Mrs. Amelia E. Barr

Of this event she writes: "On the twenty-seventh of November, A. D., 1884, I received a letter from Dodd, Mead & Co. accepting "Jan Vedder's Wife." It happened to be Thanksgiving Day, and this letter made it a memorable one, for it altered the whole course of my life. I had this letter framed, and it hangs now before me in my study as I write. Time has fa the four lines it contained, but they graven on memory's tablet, and the low paper and nearly colorless ink not hide from me the words of pron it contained."

Mrs. Barr was fifty-three years when her first novel appeared. " Lamont Case" followed, and she app herself exclusively to writing. wrote as many as eighty novels, the one, "The Paper Cap," based on la troubles in England, having been p lished in 1918. She was at work another, "The Flag of David," af beginning of her illness last July.

Some of the most popular of M Barr's stories are the following, wh treat of the history of old New York which she had made a special stu "The Belle of Bowling Green," "Trin Bells," "The Maid of Maiden Lan "A Song of a Single Note," "A M of New York," "The Bow of Ora Ribbon," "The Strawberry Handk chief," and "The House on Che Street."

Mrs. Barr established a home wh she called "Cherry Croft," on Cornw Heights, Cornwall-on-Hudson.

In 1896 she first met Dr. Lo Klopsch. Soon afterward she wrot serial story especially for the Christ Herald, called "The King's Highwa It had a unique acknowledgment in t fact that she received from an admi in the West a copy of the story in t Dakota language. For many years was a valued contributor to the pap Dr. Klopsch invited her to go to In with a shipload of relief supplies famine sufferers, but she was prevent from going by the illness of her young daughter.

The Truth About the Y. M. C. A.

Continued from page 348

Association to its workers. In the directions to secretaries, the greatest stress, he says, was laid upon the importance of saving soldiers from sin and getting them to "accept and follow Jesus Christ." The soldiers holding courage as the greatest virtue had no patience with such objectives, he declares. "The Christian religion is not a religion of individual salvation and selfish virtue." The churches and the Y. M. C. A. are failures in his judgment, because they do not preach the social religion. Well, all that can be said to that is that if he is right, and has authority to speak for the doughboys at large (which we doubt, having indeed a volume of testimony on the other side), then the Y. M. C. A. must plead guilty and take the consequences. To bring Christ to men as Saviour and Friend, supreme example of the true courage which is said to be the doughboy's first virtue; to bring him to men through the avenues of loving, helpful, self-sacrificing service—this was and is the chief objective. Not a gospel with a "cowardly ethic" of fear or reward, but the Gospel of Jesus, which makes the individual salvation the path to social salvation. And the evidence, so far as the great numbers of the men are concerned, seems to be in favor of a straight Gospel message, dealing with the great issues of life and death and the immortality beyond—such a message as could be given to a dying boy in the hospital or on the field, to help him in the supreme crisis.

THE Y. M. C. A. has no apology to make for its present program of sending abroad two hundred or more of the ablest preachers in America, so that our boys may have the inspiration of their presence and words. The experience of the men who have engaged in similar service leads to the belief that these men will be received in a manner that will write a new chapter in what is called the Doughboy's Religion.

From St. Mihiel to the Argonne, the workers went to the front-line trenches, braving danger, serving chocolate and necessities to the men going into and coming from battle. Many pay tribute to their courage and gallantry.

"I happened personally to be back of the Argonne sector while the fighting was fiercest in the last of September and early October," said E. W. Bok, editor of the Ladies' Home Journal, "and I saw the 'Y' men go to the front. And I saw them come out gassed and wounded. The 'Y' had 710 secretaries in the Argone sector. Two-thirds of these men—and there were sixty-five women, too—were under a continuous shell fire."

Over 200 more were helping at Château-Thierry and in the St. Mihiel drive. In vain generals commanded some of the brave women to seek safety in the rear. They refused. The general in command in an order of the day has placed on permanent record the grateful appreciation of the men of his division for the heroic services of the 'Y' workers in the St. Mihiel drive. And here is a single quotation from a graphic cable which reached headquarters June 5:

"Great service was rendered by the thirty American Y. M. C. A. workers stationed with trench troops under the terrific shell fire facing the German drive along the Aisne. They held their places until the last, aiding wherever possible. They served soup and coffee until the building was shattered by German shells. Workers made way back across fields swept by shrapnel, high explosives, machine-gun fire from German planes. Carried all equipment possible, took up new position with troops. Miss Herron, Cincinnati, sister-in-law of William Howard Taft, and Miss Jane Bowler, Y. M. C. A. canteen workers, particularly distinguished themselves, laboring on with troops, refugees, wounded, with villages burning about them. Robert Welwood (a Baptist missionary to India, on furlough, working with Indian troops in France) was instantly killed in an enemy air raid."

THE honor roll is long. The names of the devoted workers who have given their lives to the service of the soldiers, sailors and marines, or suffered wounds, contain those of seven killed in battle zone by gas and shell fire; three drowned; five died from wounds and other complications; thirty-seven died from accident and disease; t killed by shells and bombs; fifty-fi wounded in shell fire, gassed and ac dents; total casualties to date, 109.

The French soldier saw what w being done for the Americans and th called for it, too. It was started in o army at the request of a French gener Other generals called for it and the wo expanded with the aid of Americ money until at the close of the war 1,0 foyers du soldat were in operation, a recently the French government cabl asking that it be extended so as to tablish in all 2,000. Clémenceau hi self has seen and praised the work. is significant that now the French Go ernment wants the beneficial work tablished in the community life to b come a permanent institution. The w has brought a new civic force to Fran

Not alone did the organization mini ter to the Allied armies in France a Belgium and Italy. The Red Triang flag flew with the British flag with Ge eral Allenby in Palestine. It was wi the British in the death struggle Gallipoli. It was in Macedonia wh Bulgaria collapsed. It upheld the spiri of Greece. It comforted the army Portugal. It was on guard at the Su Canal. It tried to uphold the spirits the tottering Russian army and is st in Russia, showing the peoples of th land the spirit of America. It accor panied the Czecho-Slovaks on the memorable journey across to the Pacifi

Wherever there was a call for servi the Y. M. C. A. answered.

It gave service; it made sacrifice.

And now the calls are still coming.

The world has looked upon the w work of this organization, and to th end:

From all of the peoples of the worl are coming calls that the work shall permanently established among t civilian population.

This means that the organization h a world outlook. Its problems have no become world-wide.

New work, new responsibilities, ne opportunities.

Confidently facing the future, th Y. M. C. A. will go ahead to meet the

How Sick Animals Doctor Themselves

FEW people realize how many animals are constantly getting hurt and sick. The wild animals seldom get sick from what they eat, but the domestic animals frequently do. Wild animals get injured from fighting with other animals of their kind or in fights with animal enemies. In all cases, animals have a way of doctoring themselves that is remarkable.

Animals suffering from fever eat nothing, keep quiet, seek darkness and airy places, drink much water and sometimes plunge into the water from time to time. When a dog has lost its appetite it eats that species of grass known as "dog's grass." Cats also eat grass, catnip, etc., when sick. Sheep and cows in the same circumstances seek out certain wild plants.

If an ant's foot is cut, other ants will cover the wounded part with a transparent fluid from their mouths. If a chimpanzee is wounded it stops the flow of blood by placing its hand on the wound or dressing it with leaves and grass.

A terrier had an injured eye. It remained lying under a counter, avoiding heat and light, although it had been its habit to keep close to the fire. It adopted the general treatment—rest and abstinence from food. The local treatment consisted in licking the upper surface of its paw, which it then applied to the wounded eye, again licking the paw when it became dry. Cats, when hurt, also treat themselves by this simple method.

The methods adopted by most of the wild animals for doctoring themselves are unknown to man, but there is no doubt that every animal has the ability to skilfully doctor itself. C. C. S.

The Menace of Immigration

By FREDERIC C. HOWE

R. HOWE is Commissioner of Immigration at the Port of New York, student of economic and social problems d the author of numerous works on ese and related topics. Mr. Howe is in aris, studying labor conditions and vari- s questions of reconstruction.

DOUBT whether many immigrants would reach America during the next four or five years even under e existing laws, for several reasons.

First, for two or three years at least ere will be an extreme shortage of ipping to carry emigrants. The demand in every quarter for raw mate- ls, the quest of manufacturers for uctural materials, various sorts of brics and other of the myriad prod- ts of skilled labor to increase the de- ted stocks, will leave little room for rrying steerage passengers.

In the second place, the nations are w employing drastic means to keep eir people at home. It is now nearly possible for individuals to emigrate. e loosening of the present restrictions ll come slowly and gradually at best. rtainly the existing immigration laws the United States are pretty strict and icacious. Besides other limitations, exclusion of illiterates is particularly ective in keeping out undesirable peo- from Russia and from backward ntries which might be thought likely be represented by heavy emigration. isting laws would serve to exclude m fifty to seventy per cent. of those o might wish to enter the country.

On the other hand, one must bear in nd that in the last four and a half ars 400,000,000 people of the old rld have been shot in pieces. Con- quently the desire to emigrate must st in the minds of multitudes. Even the past sufferings, present distress l dreary prospects of these millions ignored as elements of disquiet, it uld not be unreasonable to assume t at least one per cent. of this vast al, on account of natural restless- s at having been denied an oppor- ity to emigrate for a period of five ars, would wish to go to America. e total of even this very moderate imate is very large. Naturally much pends upon the speed with which in- stry is restored in Europe. Unfortu- ely, European governments, perhaps h the exception of Britain, are likely to be slow in working out their reconstruction plans. Britain may have a considerable emigration, but it is likely to go mainly to the dominions. Industrial conditions in Belgium are terrible.

France views its heavy losses in men and its ability to absorb 2,500,000 in farm labor, and ought to have comparatively little difficulty in caring for her workers provided she enters upon reconstruction at high speed. In time France should be able to employ also a large amount of Italian labor in the mines, on the farms, and in the reconstruction of the devastated regions. Of Italy I cannot speak with knowledge, though I have been told that the unrest there is extremely serious. I believe that there would be a heavy emigration to the United States from Germany and Austria if the people were permitted to follow their desires.

Practically there has been no emigration to America in the last five years, and this has been an important element in the advance of wages. Meanwhile the productive power of American labor has been notably increased through improved machinery, inventions and the application of general efficiency methods. Increased wages take women out of industry rather than add them to the ranks of the workers. A striking indication of this is the great shortage of women in domestic service. This existing lack and others ought to be supplied by immigration properly regulated.

Therefore I recommend that Congress create a commission on immigration, composed of the Secretaries of Labor, Commerce and Agriculture, or three other commissioners, empowered absolutely to regulate immigration. For example, the country needs half a million women for domestic service and similar employment.

The commission officially would make the need known and then after the supply of the need has been completed precautions would be taken preventing further immigration creating an undesirable surplus of such labor. Similar arrangements in a number of other classes of immigrants desired would be made in time, the steamship lines in each case receiving due notification preventing them from conveying to our shores more than the prescribed number. In times of industrial depression immigration could be wholly suspended.

American Shipping Meets the Emergency

By EDWARD N. HURLEY, Chairman United States Shipping Board

FTER four years of privation the whole world is in desperate need all that we can send from this land plenty. The only reason why we not immediately supply that need in the fact that upward of 13,000,- gross tons of shipping had been sunk ing the war, and although American pyards wrought an amazing miracle production, still this unprecedented rt was not sufficient to overcome enormous losses.

Nevertheless, it is the American ship- ds and the tremendous energies ich built a merchant marine from ground up that are saving a large t of the world from starvation today.

The ships of our new American mer- nt marine have been moving our plus wheat crop, estimated at 450,- ,000 bushels, at the rate of 36,000,000 hels a month. This is an export vement 50 per cent. greater than the rage for the eleven months ending vember, 1918, and for the entire r of 1917. The grain in storage on uary 1, this year, as compared with vember 1, 1918, showed a decrease 60,000,000 bushels. Between De- ber 1 and January 15, 53,500,000 hels went abroad, most all of it being ried in the new American ships.

ufficient shipping had been placed he export service by January 15 this r to decrease the surplus stocks of t products by nearly 300,000 tons. anwhile the American dairyman fited from the fact that 40,000 tons of surplus butter, cheese and milk were carried overseas by our new ships. These vessels also began carrying abroad 3,000,000 dozen American eggs monthly.

This unprecedented export service has been provided for the American farmer and cattle-grower at a time when army needs absorbed between 2,500,000 and 3,500,000 dead-weight tons of the American merchant marine.

These record-breaking accomplishments have been due to the energies of American shipbuilders, who in little more than a year and a half built more than double the number of launching ways that are now owned by all other nations combined, and are building more shipping than is being constructed by all the rest of the world put together.

Do not imagine that we are building too many of these ships. The need for ships was never so great as it is at present, and this demand will continue for many years—will last until the world catches up with the tonnage it requires for transaction of its normal commerce.

◆

LAST year 15,150,303 meals were served in the cafeterias of the local and national Y. W. C. A. "The successful business man," says Miss Margaret Proctor, cafeteria director for the National Board of the Y. W. C. A., "has learned that the girl who lunches on an anæmic ham sandwich and a questionable cup of coffee 365 days in a year does not make a competent worker."

Pay Her $3

For Each Empty Package

A Suggestion to Men

The 32-cent package of Quaker Oats contains 6,221 calories—the energy measure of food value.

In meat, eggs and fish the average cost of 6,221 calories would be at least $3.50.

So each 32-cent package served in place of meats saves around $3. And the housewife who saves it should have it.

Make each empty package worth $3 in some special household fund. Then watch the fund grow.

This is how some necessary foods compare in cost, at this writing, based on their caloric value:

Cost of 6221 Calories

In Quaker Oats	$0.32
In Round Steak	2.54
In Veal Cutlets	3.53
In Average Fish	3.70
In Canned Peas	3.35
In Cod Fish	4.85

And Quaker Oats, which costs so little, is the greatest food in the list.

Analysis shows the oat to be almost the ideal food in balance and completeness.

Make Quaker Oats your standard breakfast. That's the best way to bring down food cost.

5 Cents
Per 1000 Calories

57 Cents
Per 1000 Calories

60 Cents
Per 1000 Calories

54 Cents
Per 1000 Calories

78 Cents
Per 1000 Calories

Quaker Oats

The Oat Dainty

Quaker Oats means extra flavor without extra cost. It is flaked from queen grains only—just the rich, plump, flavory oats. We get but ten pounds from a bushel.

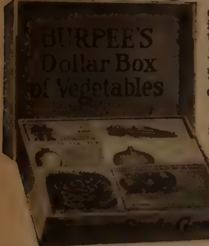
In millions of homes this exquisite flavor has made the oat dish popular.

Two Sizes: 12c to 13c—30c to 32c

Except in the Far West and South
Packed in Sealed Round Packages with Removable Cover

(3031)

Burpee's Seeds



Quality in Seeds is the first thing to consider. You cannot succeed with your garden unless you plant "Seeds that Grow."

Burpee's Dollar Box
Sufficient seed to plant a garden 20 by 30 feet. A complete Vegetable garden for $1.00.

Burpee's Dollar Box contains the following Vegetable Seeds:

Bean—Stringless Green Pod
Bean—Brittle Wax
Beet—Crosby's
Cabbage—Allhead Early
Carrot—Chantenay
Chard—Lucullus
Corn—Golden Bantam
Lettuce—May King
Lettuce—Simpson
Onion—Wethersfield
Parsley—Curled Dwarf
Radish—White Icicle
Radish—Scarlet Button
Salsify—Sandwich Island
Tomato—Chalk's Jewel
Turnip—White Egg

If purchased separately, this collection would cost $1.60. With the Dollar Box we include Cultural Leaflet and Garden Plan drawn to scale. Complete garden for $1.00.

BURPEE'S ANNUAL For 1919

Burpee's Annual is considered the leading American Seed Catalog. It contains a complete list of the best Vegetable and Flower Seeds. It will be mailed to you free upon request. Write for your copy today.

W. ATLEE BURPEE CO., Seed Growers, Philadelphia

MAULE'S SEEDS
ONCE GROWN ALWAYS GROWN

Start Your Garden Right

Maule SEED BOOK 1919

Send for Maule's Seed Book. 176 pages of most helpful garden information. Beat the high cost of living with a Maule garden. Maule's Seeds started thousands of new gardens last year—big crops were produced.

MAULE SEED BOOK

176 Pages of Practical Information FREE

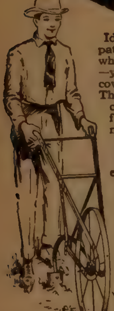
Learn what, when, and how to plant and prepare your ground for best results. Paper scarcity has limited our 1919 issue. Send for your copy today.

WM. HENRY MAULE, INC.
2132 Arch Street Philadelphia
Maule's Seeds Mean Productive Gardens

FOR MARKET GARDEN AND HOME GARDEN

All Your Garden Tools in One



Ideal for small gardens and truck patches. With its several tools—which are quickly interchanged—you can plow, open furrows, cover them, cultivate and hoe. The large wheel and "double curve"—which is an exclusive feature—elevate the draft and make the easier to operate than any other hand tool on the market. Readily adjusted for adults or children—just the thing for families where everyone helps in the garden. Your hardware dealer carries them and you will be surprised how reasonable they are in price.

Leader Garden Plow

Leader Plow Co.
Staunton, Va.

Descriptive folder sent on request.

HOOSIER STOVES & RANGES FREE

To try in your home 30 days free no matter where you live. Show your friends, send it back at our expense if you do not want to keep it. Million members of families enjoying the comforts and pleasures of "Hoosier" Stoves & Ranges, perfect bakers and heaters, beautifully finished, smooth latest design, guaranteed for years. Write for our big free book showing photographs, describing large assortment of sizes and designs of Steel and Cast Ranges, Cooks, Soft and Hard Coal Heaters, to select from, explaining our free trial. Send postal today.

HOOSIER STOVE CO.
164 State St., Marion, Ind.

The Peace Baby

Continued from page 352

mother, darlin'?" whispered Addie into the baby's ear. "I guess I know how she's feelin', only mine never came back to me."

On the back seat of the big car rode Sweetness and Addie and the basket; at the wheel rode Himself, the Boss. It seemed only a little way to St. George Street. As the big car swept in between the double files of modest little homes, toeing their precise neat lines, Addie's sharp eyes studied the numbers on the doors.

"11, 13, 15—it'll be on the other side with the evens. There's 24—there's Number 30 an' her!" For Mrs. Bennie was flying down Number 30's doorsteps out into the very roadway, waving wild bare arms.

"Sweetness! Sweetness! Oh, stop, stop here—this is where he belongs! Oh, you little, little son-baby, Mother saw you coming—come to Mother! This is Mother. Bennie, Bennie, come here! I've got him in my arms—I've got Sweetness, I tell you!"

But Bennie when he came running with long leaping steps looked not at the small face of his son, but into the face of the man at the wheel. Eye to eye, they gazed at each other—he and the man. One seemed to be trying to tell the other something intimate and lovely, the other to be trying to be told. The world stood still for the space of their silent gazing, then they moved and the world caught its breath again and went on at its turning.

Benjamin Edson climbed out from behind his wheel and stood beside Bennie on the sidewalk; their hands shot toward each other. That was all they said.

"Gracious!" breathed the forgotten Addie, in the corner of her seat. The hunger of her soul for something beautiful to happen was being fed. Her thin hands clasped and unclasped excitedly on her thin knees.

"Why!" Mrs. Bennie's eyes shone like stars. "Why, it was Grandfather Mammoth brought you back, Sweetness! He's got your chin and daddy's chin—I guess I know! He's got Bennie's wrinkles when he smiles—Sweetness, you little, little thing, what have you been and gone and done!" Suddenly she was holding him out to the man with Bennie's wrinkles and Bennie's chin. She thrust the soft bundle of Sweetness straight into his arms.

"I said I'd go half way and that's fair," she cried. "But I'm going the whole way! I said if I carried Sweetness to you—half way—and if you loved him at sight, then you'd have to love me, too, because I'm his mother— Bennie, will you look! He's loving S ness at sight!"

She stood there with her shining The current of love swept through —she was love itself. What she a was so little a piece of what sh ready to give.

"Bennie, I think—I think he is g to love me, too."

A·dear·old·friend·of·ours·is sick,
And·so·we·thought·we'd·call
To·leave·our·love, and·singing-top,
And·big·new·bouncing·ball.

·Elizabeth·FitzHugh·

Jerusalem, the World's Peace Capital

PERMIT me through the columns of your worthy paper to reach the nation's public with a suggestion that seemingly came as an inspiration some days ago, and has since held my attention with ever increasing force and conviction. The League of Nations, without a doubt and in spite of all opposition, sooner or later will become a reality. The unique and unparalleled victory of our great President for a Constitution to this end is a very positive step in the purpose of God for humanity that will at once be recognized by every one who can in the least read the signs of the times. With this new world order there comes the question of a world capital, thoroughly internationalized, where the secretariat and its Chief Officer, the Executive Council, the Body of Delegates and the World Tribunal shall preside—a question that is now being debated and is of chief concern. Why not let this capital be at the one place of all places that means most to humanity? Why should not world democracy turn for its chief seat most naturally to the cradle that gave it birth. In a word, why not make Jerusalem the world's capital?

Without any disposition to pre the rights of the Jews, after all d Jerusalem and Palestine, as a matt truth, by divine gift and recogni belong to the world?

It seems there should be fewer gre for opposition to this course than other; and, last but not by any m least, how could a world better w for the matchless primacy of Chris ity and its very Christ, that is now gling with its democracy to set a w free?

Houston T. All
Pastor Methodist Ch
Jordan, N. Y.

Friends and Workers Called Home

ON FEBRUARY 18 Dr. Adolph Frederick Schauffler, president of the New York City Mission Society, died at his home in that city of heart disease at the age of seventy-four years. He was born in Constantinople, the son of Dr. William G. Schauffler, a missionary of the American Board. After graduating from Williams College in 1867 and receiving the degree of D.D. from that college, the University of New York and Andover, he went into the Congregational ministry, serving churches in Brookline, Mass., and New York City, from which last service he was called to the presidency of the City Mission Society. In addition to his city mission work, Dr. Schauffler was for many years president of the New York City Sunday School Association and treasurer of the New York State Association, trustee of the Auburn Theological Seminary, of the Bible Teachers' Training School of New York, and of the Robert College in Constantinople. He was the author of "The Way of Working," "The Teacher, the Child and the Book," "Sparks from a Superintendent's Anvil," and "God's Book and God's Boy."

◆

Mrs. J. E. Wassen, Bloomington, Ill., 84 years; Miss S. M. Wells, Hannibal, Mo., 84 years; Private James G. Hall, News Ferry, Va., Co. C, 317th Inf., A. E. F. (killed in action in France), 25 years; Miss Elizabeth M. Ticknor, Rockford, Ill.; Mrs. Sarah A. Mitchell, Woodruff, W. Va., 75 years; S. K. Cunningham, Pittsburg, Pa., 74 years; Mrs. Abby Ann Rush, Hackensack, N. J., 92 years; Rev. Charles Milton Zimmer, Rochester, N. Y.; Mr. C. G. Wyatt, La Grande, Ore., 59 years; Mrs. Lida J. Stedman, Oronoco, Minn., 70 years; Miss Dorothy C. Green, Cortland, Ohio; Mrs. S. H. Page, North Troy, Vt., 85 years; Isabel Price, Washington, D. C.; Mrs Pratt, New Vineyard, Me., 82 Mrs. Susan C. Crosman, Auburn, 100 years; John J. Keppler, Col City, Ind.; Mrs. Francis Eliz Packer, Norwich, N. Y., 68 years.

◆

To Protect New Jersey B

THE Audubon Society of New is marshaling bird-lovers and fever sufferers in opposition to pending in the legislature which transfer the mourning dove from protected list of song birds to the bird class, in which it could be h from September 15 to Decemb The dove is not a grain-eater, bu great consumer of weed seeds, friend, therefore, of every farme hay-fever victim. The bird is prot the year round in Pennsylvania, York and the New England state and little children to be cared for ursed.

Woman Pleads for Stricken India

Continued from page 349

orphans—these can be placed in ng schools, with our Christian chil- to be placed in homes with foster- ers.

relief work is paid for in grain that ght in big quantities with govern- help. The worker is also given uarter of a cent a day for salt pices. The worker is also paid in ng.

e Church has sent us out to preach ospel of peace and hope and good- How are we to preach it to these e now? Can we approach them say, "Go in peace, be warm and ," and not give the things needful e body? What doth it profit? No; ps are sealed until we can feed and e and help. If this is true with hristians, how much more is it true with those who are still looking for proofs of the truth of our Gospel in Christ Jesus? Are we to neglect helping these thousands upon thousands who know not the Saviour? Truly he will say unto us: "I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me. Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren (even these of India), ye did it unto me." Or shall we hear him say: "I was an hungered, and ye gave me no meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me not in; naked, and ye clothed me not, inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me."

In a letter just received, it is stated that they are already receiving more children than they know what to do with.

mine Neither Waits Nor Pities. It Demands Its Victims Now

ese Gifts Have Been Received Within Two eeks, But Hundreds of Others Must Follow Lives Are to Be Saved and Christ Upheld

Kate Oehlir	$10.00
C P Norris	10.00
ice Veghte	10.00
Mrs Jas W Young	10.00
Mrs F D Tre- ine	10.00
rist's Name, West nt, N Y	10.00
as Grier	10.00
Hale	5.00
D Anderson	5.00
F McClelland	5.00
Barnett	5.00
S Wilkinson	5.00
K M Hardy	5.00
own	5.00
ie Olson	5.00
a Woodruff	5.00
who cares, Cleve- d, Ohio	5.00
Adam Cushman	5.00
Mrs W H J, White- , Mont	5.00
J S Johnston	5.00
Hayden	5.00
el M Sweeney	5.00
Mrs J W Hart	5.00
zzie Herr	5.00
Carrie Vancleave	5.00
Simkin	5.00
mith	5.00
Orpha Fisher	5.00
C R Howe	5.00
ey Williams	5.00
Hof	5.00
e W Laing	5.00
M Davis	5.00
Chas Parsons	5.00
D Williams Sr	5.00
D Williams Jr	5.00
Wright	5.00
Martha Murley	5.00
Mrs H S Loomis	5.00
Beatrice Fulcher	5.00
Everline	5.00
H H Kirkpatrick	5.00
G, Oldenburg, Miss.	5.00
Mary Robinson	5.00
Mulvany	5.00
C R Woolwine	5.00
J B Harris	5.00
B, Houlton, Me	5.00
Wilbur Bartholf	5.00
Gibbons	5.00
A J Martin	5.00
d, Waterbury, Conn	5.00
Connell	5.00
Sarah Truax	5.00
M J Royster	5.00
Hughs	5.00
H A McNamara	5.00
Rich	5.00
G Will Campbell	5.00
& Mrs Amar F hawley	5.00
A E Schold	5.00
Clements	5.00
McAdam	5.00
Chas W Peters	5.00
Hulin	5.00
W Linfoot	5.00
Pinder	5.00
& Mrs Jeanette mmerman	5.00
s J Wessel	5.00
Jannett Burger	5.00
Blankenship	5.00
E B Plemet	5.00
Claude Highest	5.00
in G Dexter	5.00
E W Sweet	5.00
Burton	5.00
e & Flora Morris	5.00
nn Buerman	5.00
Beutler	5.00
Ena Tomson	5.00
Robinson	5.00
Ida Blee	5.00
ert Conger	5.00
A Friend, Medford, Ore	$5.00
Mrs H J Grevers	5.00
Mrs J K Dien	5.00
Mrs F Sanders	5.00
Reader & Friend, Gilboa	5.00
T D, East Orange, N J	5.00
Mrs L J Tarbox	5.00
F B Westcott	5.00
Arthur G Wilbar	5.00
C F Ballon	5.00
Mrs E L Dare	5.00
J R Portor	5.00
Mrs Wm Forck	5.00
C H K Bowdoinham	5.00
Miss Ursula Heavener	5.00
A H Miller	5.00
Mrs C F Leiber	5.00
Mrs Geo W Johnston	5.00
Mrs Delia A Daly	5.00
Buell B Houghton	5.00
Harold Evans	5.00
Mrs Jane Poole	5.00
T E D Turner	5.00
Margaret Rutter	5.00
Mrs E A Gabler	5.00
—— Clarks Summit, Pa.	5.00
B E Hume	5.00
Dr C J Mentzer	5.00
N J Stair	5.00
Mrs W R Dunn	5.00
E R Sherman	5.00
J. J. Rodes	5.00
B. B. Berry	5.00
S F Springer	5.00
Mrs E F Yockel	5.00
Miss E E Sawyer	5.00
Mary Napp	5.00
Mrs Peter Murchie	5.00
V K Rood	5.00
G B de Vries	5.00
Mrs Sarah Porter	5.00
Mrs G H Delp	5.00
L B N, Smithsburg, Md	5.00
Mrs Eliza D Knoblaugh	5.00
Mr & Mrs D L Holbrook	5.00
Mrs M J McWethy	5.00
Bertha Hall	5.00
Robert A Stewart	5.00
A W Walch	5.00
Clara J Barnett	3.00
Jimmy Smith	3.00
Rhoda Hillingsworth	3.00
Mr & Mrs C M Moody	3.00
Otto Bigalke	3.00
Mr Geo E Duvey, Rev	3.00
J R Forman	3.00
Mrs E Thompson	3.00
Mrs T E Ashton	3.00
Carl Bevins	3.00
Delia S Gardner	3.00
Mrs W T Reed	3.00
Miss Carrie McIntosh	3.00
J H L, Overstreet, Fla	3.00
Mrs H J Miller	3.00
Miss Louise C Mohn	3.00
John M Buck	3.00
Tressa Garis	3.00
L M Utech	3.00
Mrs Sarah Morrison	3.00
Mrs A J Shearer	3.00
Mrs Sarah Rea	3.00
Mrs J M Prim	3.00
Organized Adult Bible Class, M E S S, St Petersburg, Pa	3.00
Mrs J J Duttweiler	3.00
Mrs C Wetherbee	3.00
Carl G. Gutknecht	2.50
Mrs W J Robinson	2.50
A D Frierson	2.50
Mrs D L Gifford	2.50
W H Tubbs	2.50
C L Head	2.50
Mr Chas C 'Kyle	2.50
Alice Cooke	2.50
Mrs W W Arnold	2.50
Mrs Chas Macon Sr	2.50
Sarah A Watkin	2.50
B C Davis	2.50
Mrs M Perry	$2.50
Mrs C E Gleason	2.00
Mrs Frances Bellomy	2.00
Mrs E Manges	2.00
Mary S Browne	2.00
Mrs Mary E Klein	2.00
W L Zalman	2.00
Miss Amelia Kantz	2.00
B W Doughty	2.00
Miss Frances Kennedy	2.00
Annie S Pettit	2.00
Mrs Agnes E Gardner	2.00
Mrs Beckon	2.00
In His Name, E B	2.00
Mrs J Sorby	2.00
Mrs W C, Kennerdale, Pa.	2.00
Mrs J A Clark	2.00
Maggie E Evans	2.00
Mrs A L Bedell	2.00
M H Butts	2.00
Ellen C Goodwin	2.00
Mrs John Hartman	2.00
Mrs W E Wilson	2.00
Friend, Thornsville, Ohio	2.00
E Fuller	2.00
Mr & Mrs H Greengrass	2.00
Mrs S Fairchild	2.00
Geo E Strate	2.00
Friend Columbia, Pa	2.00
Mary Good	2.00
One Interested, Middle Island, N Y	2.00
Mrs J A Keene	2.00
Mrs C H Pool	2.00
Mrs H B Johnston	2.00
The Widows Mite, Los Gatos, Cal	2.00
Jennie Garter	2.00
Mrs I B Brown	2.00
Mrs Bill McCormick	2.00
Thomas G Ellis	2.00
Lida L Green	2.00
Mrs F L Gilpetrie	2.00
Mrs E R Metcalf	2.00
A Reader, Chacrin Falls, Ohio	2.00
Jennie E Lester	2.00
Mrs Gus O Seaver	2.00
Anna E Long	2.00
Mrs Serena Turner	2.00
Mrs W W Jones	2.00
Mrs K H Sampe	2.00
Addie Marsh	2.00
Mrs S R Large	2.00
Old Subscriber, Malcom, Iowa	2.00
Allie Kiblin	2.00
The Widow's Mite, Albany, N Y	2.00
Mr H T Anderson	2.00
Friend, Stouchsburg, Pa	2.00
Mrs J Gesinich	2.00
M R, Pittsburgh, Pa	2.00
Ethel Stockberger	2.00
——, Windsor, Vt	2.00
H V Kennedy	2.00
Clara Voorhees	2.00
Mrs Rhoda Griffin	2.00
A A E, Rochester, N Y	2.00
Mrs Chas Halbert	2.00
A B Bowen	2.00
J H Vogt	2.00
Mrs Elizabeth Pester	2.00
Pearle Dowty	2.00
Martha Farley	2.00
Mrs W T Zeller	2.00
Emelia Brauer	2.00
Mrs Wm F Jones	2.00
Mrs W E Watts	2.00
Mrs L J McChesney	2.00
Mary M Mayer	2.00
Friend, Hawarden, Iowa	1.50
Mrs G A Glendale & daughter	1.50
Mrs John S Perry	1.50

Additional acknowledgements will appear in later issues of the Christian Herald.

d Your Gifts to India Famine Fund, Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City

Gold Medal Glenwood

"Makes Cooking Easy"

This New Range Is A Wonder For Cooking

Although it is less than four feet long it can do every kind of cooking for any ordinary family by gas in warm weather, or by coal or wood when the kitchen needs heating.

The Coal section and the Gas section are just as separate as though you had two ranges in your kitchen.

Note the two gas ovens above—one for baking, glass paneled and one for broiling, with white enamel door.

The large oven below has the Indicator and is heated by coal or wood.

See the cooking surface when you want to rush things—five burners for gas and four covers for coal.

When in a hurry both coal and gas ovens can be operated at the same time, using one for baking bread or roasting meats and the other for pastry baking—It "Makes Cooking Easy"

Gold Medal Glenwood

Write for handsome free booklet 162 that tells all about it.

Weir Stove Co., Taunton, Mass. Makers of the Celebrated Glenwood Coal, Wood and Gas Ranges, Heating Stoves and Furnaces.

Renew Strength Daily

It is not the volume, but that portion of food that is assimilated and incorporated into blood and tissue that causes renewal of strength.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

is a factor that makes for strength, that ought never be overlooked by those with tender lungs or who perchance through frailty must needs utilize every means to keep up vitality and maintain body-weight.

Scott's is concentrated, easily assimilable nourishment that builds strength.

Scott & Bowne, Bloomfield, N.J. 18-36

Vapo-Cresolene
USED WHILE YOU SLEEP

Established 1879

The Inhalation Treatment for Whooping-Cough, Spasmodic Croup, Colds, Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, Coughs.

Simple, safe and effective, avoiding internal drugs.

Vaporized Cresolene relieves the paroxysms of Whooping-Cough and Spasmodic Croup at once; it nips the common cold before it has a chance of developing into something worse, and experience shows that a neglected cold is a dangerous cold.

Mrs. Ballington Booth says: "No family, where there are young children, should be without this lamp."

The air carrying the antiseptic vapor, inhaled with every breath, makes breathing easy and relieves the congestion, assuring restful nights.

It is called a boon by Asthma sufferers.

For the bronchial complications of Scarlet Fever and Measles, and as an aid in the treatment of Diphtheria, Cresolene is valuable on account of its powerful germicidal qualities.

It is a protection to those exposed.

Cresolene's best recommendation is its 39 years of successful use.

Sold by Druggists. Send for descriptive booklet. Try Cresolene Antiseptic Throat Tablets for the irritated throat, composed of slippery elm bark, licorice, sugar and Cresolene They can't harm you. Of your druggist or from us, 10c. in stamps

THE VAPO-CRESOLENE CO., 62 Cortlandt St., New York
or Leeming-Miles Building, Montreal, Canada

CASH FOR OLD FALSE TEETH, DISCARDED JEWELRY, ETC.

Mail us useless false teeth, (with or without gold fillings), discarded or broken jewelry, watches, magneto points—anything containing gold, silver or platinum—and we will send you the full cash value by return mail (and hold your goods 10 days pending your acceptance of our remittance.) Dun and Bradstreet References.

OHIO SMELTING & REFINING COMPANY
902 Park Building, Cleveland, Ohio

FREE · Lintex COLLAR
REVERSIBLE

We will send FREE starch-finished Lintex collar so you can prove comfort and economy State size wanted

REVERSIBLE COLLAR CO., Dept. T Boston, Mass.

THE BOYS' MAGAZINE—FREE!

Send to-day for a free sample copy. Splendid stories—beautiful illustrations—handsome covers in colors. Address

The Scott F. Redfield Co. 2821 Main St., Smethport, Pa

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 85
THE C. S. BELL CO., Est. 1858, Hillsboro, Ohio

The Easter King
A Story-Cantata

Combines in one service the attractive features of a "Story and Song Service" an Easy Grade Cantata and a Carol Service. Send 25 cents for a complete copy and one each of our new Easter Carol Services entitled "Morn of Light" and "Victory Divine."
Moneybackifyouwantit

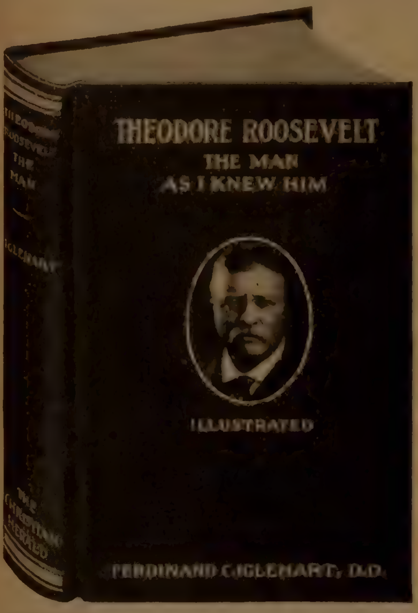
TULLAR-MEREDITH CO., 249 W. 36th Street, New York

THEODORE ROOSEVELT

THE MAN AS I KNEW HIM

By FERDINAND COWLE IGLEHART, D.D.
of the Editorial Staff of the Christian Herald

DOCTOR IGLEHART is now writing for the Christian Herald (to publish in book form) his appreciation of Theodore Roosevelt, from an intimate friendship of many years. The Author cooperated with the Colonel back in the strenuous days when Colonel Roosevelt, as Police Commissioner of New York City, made the saloons obey the law on Sunday closing. For over 20 years, the two have been intimate friends. Dr. Iglehart will honor in this appreciation the memory of a great personality who has left a warm spot in the hearts of all Americans.



THE BOOK will be printed on fine book paper and will include 16 pages of illustrations on plate paper. There will be nearly 350 pages, in 31 chapters. The binding will be fine cloth embossed in gold. Size 5x7¼ in.

AGENTS WANTED

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be very glad to appoint agents to represent this timely book. Many members of the Christian Herald family will know of some worthy persons who could act as agents (men or women). Tell them to write for liberal terms and handsome agents' outfit and start taking orders right away.

The author says in his preface that he counts the intimate and personal friendship of Col. Roosevelt for the last twenty-four years as one of the highest honors, joys and blessings of his life. In this book he tells a fascinating story of the career of Col. Roosevelt

FROM EARLY BOYHOOD TO HIS DEATH

Many of the Colonel's lifelong friends have gladly furnished the Author with valuable material for the work on Theodore Roosevelt, among whom may be mentioned:

Dr. Albert Shaw, Editor of the Review of Reviews.
Hon. Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy.
Judge Charles E. Hughes, late U. S. Supreme Court.
Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, late U. S. Senator.
Bishop Luther B. Wilson of New York City.
Dr. Lyman Abbott, Editor of the Outlook.
Will H. Hays, Chairman of the Republican National Committee and others.

SEND NO MONEY NOW—We do not want any money now. This splendid book will be ready for delivery in a few weeks. We would, however, like to have a post card from as many Christian Herald Readers as possible stating that they will take a copy when ready at the price of $1.50 a copy, postpaid. This will give us a good idea of how many copies to make for the first edition. We will notify all who order when the edition will be ready.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

God Our Heavenly Father

International Sunday School Lesson for April 6

Gen. 1 : 1-27; Ps. 103; Matt. 6 : 24-34

Bible Ideas Concerning God

By Rev. George D. Allison, Ph.D.

WE BEGIN this week a new series of International Lessons, entitled "Some Great Teachings of the Bible," and running for six months to come. These topics are excellently planned for us in accordance with one of the best methods of Bible study, one that cannot be mechanical but must be vital, the method that is not limited to a page or a chapter, but pursues great themes throughout the sacred literature. We begin the new quarter's work where the Bible begins: with the great fact of God—"in the beginning God!" We are to trace as best we may the development of the idea of God in the Scriptures, which are the living, inspired record of God's dealings with men, his children. Since our time is brief it is suggested by the Lesson Committee that we take as landmarks the statements about God in Genesis, the Psalms and the Sermon on the Mount. To our boys and girls these passages represent roughly the beginning, the middle and the end of the bound volume of Holy Writ, and suggest to them God's progressive revelation of himself and of his will to his people.

The Creator and Ruler of All

Nowhere do the Bible men argue about the existence of God. They simply tell what they have seen with their eyes and felt in their hearts of his manifestations of his nature, and argument becomes superfluous. The visible universe itself testifies to its Creator. "Since the creation of the world his invisible attributes, his everlasting power and divine nature have been so clearly perceptible through what he has made that men have no excuse" (Rom. 1 : 20). The sure instinct of the men who compiled the canon of Scripture led them to place the great account of the creation first: all comes from God, from the Spirit of God which in the beginning brooded over the face of the waters. He made the light, the land, the living creatures, and at last man, created in His own image. He made all for good, and looked upon it all with approval.

There is something lacking in the man who has never looked up with eager heart unto the hills, who has never considered the heavens, the work of God's fingers, with awe, those heavens full of blazing worlds which are so much more marvelous to our knowledge than even to the ancient sages on the plains of the Orient! God in nature revealed himself to the writer of Psalms like the 104th and the 148th, and one sometimes wonders if we are not poorer today in our appreciation of all his wondrous works. Can we give to our children, through these great Scriptures plus the vision of the forest or the sea today, such glad contact with the Creator, the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth?

Jesus loved to speak of God's care for the birds and the lilies of the field, though I am sure he loved still more to meditate on God's care for his beloved children. But I wonder if our pupils ever think of God in connection with gardens or summer scenes of glory in the country. Can we not help them to?

The Guide of History and Experience

But the Bible soon reaches more searching moral teachings about the Almighty Maker and Keeper. He is also Jehovah, the Living One, the thinking, planning, moving Spirit in the destinies of men and of nations. Though turning from time to time to the praise of God in nature the Bible writers were more concerned to discern his hand in the course of human events, both in the career of the individual believer and in the history of the race and the nation. God was with Abraham as he moved out over the desert "following the gleam." God was with the weary, sinful, struggling multitude in the wilderness of Sinai who, led by Moses and Joshua, began to be a great people.

Take this 103d Psalm and read glorious sentences—a description of psalmist's God as revealed in Heb history and also in his own soul's perience. How wonderful it is, a lation of the soul of the Hebrew p at their best! It is a picture of the Giver of all good, the Heal diseases, the Forgiver of iniquitie Lover of righteousness, like a F pitying his children, not holdin anger, with "loving-kindness from lasting to everlasting upon them fear him."

How did this great ideal develop in what ways did God reveal hims this singer knew him? Through th and sorrows of the men of old, thro the victories and the sacrifices of t heroes, above all through his ch prophets who interpreted the me of it all, step by step discovering proving forever the great truths o spiritual life.

Does the 103d Psalm awaken res
sive echoes in the hearts of our boy girls? Do we ourselves read it in ch or school with the glow of a consci sharing of the author's experience o Great All-Father? Have we also sense of God's hand in our nation's
And best of all, do we feel constraine worship him because of our own sonal experience of his forgiving singing joyously, "Bless the Lord my soul"? We certainly covet su faith for our children who are on threshold of the experiences of Therefore we must do all in our p to see to it that something like this result of their soul pilgrimage and the bitterness and disillusionment the godless. It is a great thing to lieve in a God like this God.

The God and Father of Our Lord

Jesus' thought about God some gathers up and transfigures all the truths of the Old Testament. H herited those ideals and nourished spirit, as we have, upon the experie of the past. But somehow he has gi new point and meaning to it all. T the word Father—how he has fille with meaning from his own soul his own sonship! We love to repeat sayings about God—"My Father your Father, my God and your Go
How he strived to share his marvel experience with his disciples!

Jesus lived in daily consciousnes
God, with an appreciation for his Fat which we so often fail to have.
wanted us to live like that, to rely our God, to accept our Father's ju ment of values, to seek not our own but the will of him that sent us. I hard to put into mere words what Je taught and thought about God, wh to reveal was the sum and substance all his doings. Perhaps it is clearest say that while others talked of Go wisdom or of God's might, Jesus tal most often of God's heart of love God's will to righteousness. His words are so much better than o and simpler! The theologians seek l and difficult terms to try to sum up doctrines, but he used simple storie the shepherd seeking the lost sheep the father forgiving the wayward b of the Samaritan ministering to wounded victim on the Jericho ro
And he not only told these illustrat parables, but he lived just like that,
that some one has called the Life
Jesus the human life of God. Th that knew him best declared that had incarnated himself in him. We have come so long after them and often follow the Master but halting nevertheless know of a truth that w we want to picture what God is like think of the Lord Jesus. We may a think of the field lily, or of the mount peak, or of the God of Abraham, Is and Jacob, and so indeed we do. I best of all we are convinced that the finite Power behind and throughout universe is Jesus of Nazareth. He is the apostle wrote so joyously, "the G and Father of Our Lord Jesus Chris

re Garden Knowledge

experienced gardeners of a ighborhood will find profit as pleasure in the formation of a ırden club, think the vegetable ng workers of the New York ollege of Agriculture. The meet- n be conducted on the basis of ıony meetings" to the advantage Many valuable hints for local tion can thus be obtained that be found in books or papers on ng.

ese times, when food production stressed, experienced gardeners y community will feel it is not privilege but a duty to pass on ults of garden experience when perience may save another from increase his chances of success. college workers suggest that d varieties be planted only in ıt quantity to supply the table meet the home canning and dry- ıirements.

ROWN'S
RONCHIAL
ROCHES

SORE throat, coughing, hoarseness, loss of voice, bronchial and asthmatic troubles are quickly relieved with Brown's Bronchial Troches.

ot a confection but a genuine remedy seventy years of success back of it. tain no opiates or other harmful ingredi- hence are especially fine for adults and lren.

ay be carried in vanity case or vest pocket.

sizes, 15c, 35c, 75c &
5 at all druggists.
I. Brown & Son
Boston, Mass.

e andy ependable

PAID FOR 24 YEARS

In good times and bad, in peace and in War, for 24 years we have paid 6% on Two-Year Time Certificates and 5% on Certificates pay- on demand. Interest checks are mailed annually.

u have as little as $25 to invest, you will be ested in our Booklet, "6% and Safety," g full particulars about this old and tried ution.

WRITE FOR IT

Calvert Mortgage Company
Calvert Building, Baltimore, Md.

Become a Nurse

IF YOU cannot spend three years in hospital or are past hospital age limit, send name and address on postcard for yearbook explaining the C. S. N. Home-Practice Method of studying trained nursing. State age.

The Chautauqua School of Nursing
341 Main St. Jamestown, N.Y.

ching Rashes — Soothed — ith Cuticura

ggists; Soap 25, Ointment 25 & 50, Talcum 25.
e each free of "Cuticura, Dept. M, Boston."

ched 175 Chicks

't lose one, writes G. W. Miller, of Pitts- la. Write today to E. J. Reefer, poultry 493 Poultry Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., for ble free poultry book that tells how to simple home solution that cures White over night and saves 98% of every hatch. k is free. Send for it today, sure.

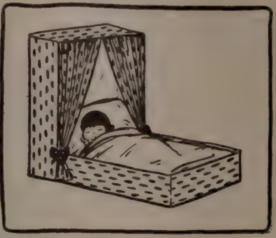
TENTS Send sketch or model for preliminary examination. Booklet free. Highest references. Best romptness assured. Watson E. Coleman, Patent 24 F St., Washington, D. C.

A Doll's Bed from a Writing Paper Box

THE girl who would like to have a bed for her little doll can make a pretty one of cardboard in the following manner:

Take an ordinary cardboard writing-paper box and cover it completely—both lower part and cover—with a piece of cretonne or pretty silk from the rag bag, either sewing or gluing this material to the box.

Now take a large needle and heavy thread and sew the cover of the box, on end, to the lower part of the box, which has been wedged into the standing cover, so as to form a headboard and canopy. The next step will be to make two curtains of the same material used to cover the box. These curtains will be gathered and sewed across the top of the canopy, one on either side but touching in the middle; they will then be parted and caught one to the left and one to the right of the pillow, with a pretty button or rosette of ribbon.



Sheets, pillow cases, blankets, a spread and a comforter will then be made to complete the little bed.

LAURA A. KIRKMAN.

A Good Time for America to Act

From the Peking Leader, December 18

LAST Friday we published the following wireless message from San Francisco:

"There will be a general exodus of brewers from the United States to China, according to statement made by Rudolph Samet, president of the California State Brewers' Association. He said: 'We are looking to China as the best place to locate. I am going to China in a few days to arrange for the construction of a two-million-dollar plant for one brewery. Other brewers are making similar arrangements.'"

We admire the self-complacent confidence of these brewers, but why on earth must they come to China? We have had enough of the Indian opium; we are still wallowing in the dust of foreign cigarettes; and now we are promised a veritable deluge of intoxicants.

China welcomes all forms of profitable but healthy trade and manufactures, but we certainly have no desire to drive out the opium fiend and then usher in the drunken sot. What do the brewers think China is? A happy hunting ground for all money-makers and health-destroyers? Apparently they think the Chinese are too sober, despite their own production of wines and spirits, and so must educate them to the delights of the Western bacchanalianism. Why don't Westerners come to teach us better manners than indulging in opium, cigarettes, intoxicants, etc.? Western civilization must be poor indeed if it has nothing better to teach us than these unedifying habits!

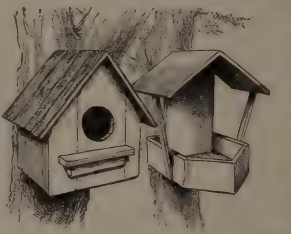
In view of the fact that Article II of the 1880 commercial treaty between the United States and this country commits both countries to prevent the importation of opium by each other's nationals into each other's territories, we hope the United States Government will put an immediate ban on such pernicious activities in this country.

◆

A New Occupation, that of "farm mechanic," will be an outcome of the world war. The Federal Board for Vocational Education is preparing to train disabled soldiers, formerly farm boys, for such work. With the scarcity of labor on the farm, the board looks for a more extensive use of farm machinery in the future, and the soldiers will be trained to handle and repair tractors and other farm machinery.

Homes for Bluebirds

ANY one wishing to have a pair of bluebirds near his home every year has but to erect a bird house in the back yard, and if there are any homeless bluebirds in the vicinity they will soon find it. It need not be elaborate. In fact, a small wooden box with a hole cut in one end large enough for the bird to enter is all that is necessary. Fasten this securely in some tree eight or ten feet above ground or on top of a post. About the first of April the bluebirds are searching for suitable nesting sites—hollows in trees, deserted woodpeckers' holes and bird boxes.



The bluebirds are among our most useful birds, as they destroy large numbers of insects. These, indeed, are their principal food, so the bluebirds can be accused of practically no injury to vegetation beyond the taking of a very few cherries and berries.

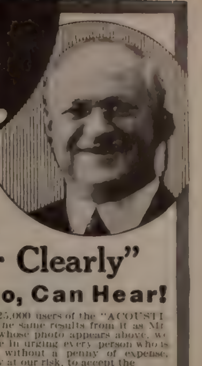
Get Your Garden Book Now—FREE

IF YOU expect your soul to be gladdened along in April by the sight of young tomato plants pushing up through the black soil in symmetrical rows of tender green; if in May you expect to be eating crisp radishes and spring onions of your own raising; if in June you expect to remark very casually to your guests that the lettuce out of which the salad is made "grew right out there in the back yard"; if in July you expect to sink your incisors into a luscious buttered specimen of corn on the cob from your own garden; and if in August you expect to be betting your neighbor that you'll produce a ripe watermelon before he will—GET YOUR GARDEN BOOK NOW!

The Garden Book to which we refer is the official illustrated how-to-do-it book published by the United States Department of Agriculture. A plot of ground, even if it's no bigger than a blanket, plus this book, plus a little work, means fresh vegetables that are really fresh all summer.

Address The Christian Herald Information Bureau, Frederic J. Haskin, Director, Washington, D. C., enclosing a two-cent stamp for return postage. Say Garden Book, and write your name and address plainly.

This Bureau will answer any question. Send stamp for written answer.



DEAF?

"I
Now Hear Clearly"

You, Too, Can Hear!

Inasmuch as 325,000 users of the "ACOUSTICON" have had the same results from it as Mr Garrett Brown, whose photo appears above, we feel perfectly safe in urging every person who is hard of hearing, without a penny of expense, solely and entirely at our risk, to accept the

1919 Acousticon
For 10 Days' FREE TRIAL
No Deposit—No Expense

Since the perfecting of our new 1919 "ACOUSTICON," it is smaller, better and just as strong as ever.

All you need do is to write saying that you are hard of hearing and will try the "ACOUSTICON." The trial will not cost you one cent, for we even pay delivery charges.

WARNING! There is no good reason why everyone should not make as liberal a trial offer as we do, so do not send money for any instrument for the deaf until you have tried it.

The "ACOUSTICON" has improvements and patented features which cannot be duplicated, so no matter what you have tried in the past, send for your free trial of the "ACOUSTICON" today and convince yourself—you alone to decide. Address

DICTOGRAPH PRODUCTS CORPORATION
Successors to The General Acoustic Co.
1314 Candler Building New York
Canadian Office, 621 New Birks Bldg., Montreal

MADE TO YOUR ORDER $1.85 SEND NO MONEY

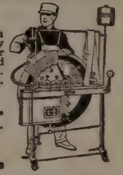
To Prove Our Fine Quality we offer these fine pants for dress or business, many handsome styles, genuine through and through worsted goods, beautiful narrow weave, smooth silky finish, guaranteed for 2 years solid wear and satisfaction and regular $5.00 value or MONEY BACK. These stylish $5.00 pants, while they last, only one pair to any customer, by prepaid express, for only $1.85

Cash Profits You can earn a lot of extra money by sending orders for your relatives and neighbors. Young Grant Case made big money first week and a good income his first year. Get his own book about it Free—also fine tailor book, cloth samples and simple directions. All goes to you Free with first letter. Just send us your name—TODAY.

We Pay Express

$1.85 Buys $5.00 Value

CHICAGO TAILORS ASS'N
Dept. 1565, 515 S. Franklin St., Chicago



AN EASY WAY TO MAKE MONEY

Don't be content to plod along on a small salary. Be independent. Go in the tire repairing business. One man says "I made big money the first day." Others average very high a month. Very little capital needed. Jobs plentiful. Every motorist a possible customer. No experience needed. We teach you.

SHALER Tire Repair Outfit

Improved Wrapped Tread Method
Used by Tire Manufacturers

Does as good work as the big high priced vulcanizing outfits. A boy can use it. It's the only vulcanizer that has Automatic Heat Control, and can't undercure or overcure a tire. Requires no watching or regulating.

FREE Book

"How to Open a Tire Repair Shop." It tells how to make big money. Don't delay. Write quick.

C. A. SHALER CO.
2351 Fourth St. Waupun, Wisconsin

DON'T DIE IN THE HOUSE

ROUGH ON RATS

Never-Failing Exterminator

No need to be troubled with rats and mice. "Rough On Rats" never fails to clear the premises of these pests when used according to directions. It is not a ready-mixed exterminator; rats do not learn to avoid it because the food you mix it with can be changed as necessary. It tempts old and young rats alike. At drug and general stores. "Ending Rats and Mice"—booklet—sent free.

E. S. WELLS, Chemist, Jersey City, N. J.

You Can Decrease the Cost And Increase the Joys of Living by Reading

TODAY'S HOUSEWIFE

This attractively illustrated magazine will help solve your Cooking, Health, Cleaning and many other household problems. It will also afford your entire family many hours of pleasure and in addition the inspiration and encouragement that always make both present and future brighter.

The lessons in Domestic Science now appearing in TODAY'S HOUSEWIFE are of incalculable value—their worth cannot be measured in dollars and cents to the woman whose heart and soul are wrapped up in the welfare and happiness of her family.

Every coming number of TODAY'S HOUSEWIFE will be so brimful of tested recipes and household pointers of priceless value that you will get many times your money's worth without even considering the many refreshing short stories, great serials and our superior Crochet, Knitting, Fancy Work and Fashion Pages.

Every number is worth more than the newsstand price (15c per copy) to any home-loving woman.

Our Special Offer to Readers of Christian Herald

IN order to introduce this "homey" and indispensable journal to you we will enter your order for 13 Big 15c Numbers for only $1.00, with the privilege of sending 50c with order and 50c in 30 days.

Mail This Coupon Today

TODAY'S HOUSEWIFE
12 Main St., Cooperstown, N. Y.

Please enter my order for 13 months for TODAY'S HOUSEWIFE ($1.95 newsstand value) for $1.00. I enclose 50c and agree to send the balance of 50c within next 30 days.

Name ....

Address ....

To College or Not to College. That is the question that may be troubling some young man or woman you know. We have a Scholarship Plan that enables earnest young people to raise the necessary funds for a college education. Details furnished free on request.

Young People's Topics for April 6

Our Relation to God (Praying)

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic. Mark 11 : 19-26

"DON'T you ever call on me again to lead in prayer!" How often you hear this protest at the close of a meeting. Yet the protester would be much displeased if you were to suggest that his protest to a degree belied his profession as a Christian. We walk with Christ. Would you walk day by day with a friend and say nothing to him? Would you, when you did speak, break silence only to ask a favor of him? How glibly our conversation proceeds when we talk with earthly friends! How deep the silence sometimes when a leader asks for a season of prayer! We are not ready, through lack of practice, to talk to him whom we profess to love and serve. We forget that not our skill in speech but his overshadowing Spirit is to be our guide in public prayer. We have, perhaps, the idea that saying our prayers night and morning is praying, and our usual form won't do in public, it is too occupied with things we want, too little freighted with love for other souls and burden for the world's unsaved. He said, "Seek ye first . . . righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." We look upon prayer as a vehicle through which we may become possessed of goods, place and power. We pray, "Lord, give me this," when we should pray, "Lord, use me, teach me thy will." We should be much in prayer, not so much on our knees nor with our head bowed in reverent hands, as with our spirit opened toward God as we work. We walk with him. Let us talk with him and let us listen while he talks with us. Thus we may pray without ceasing and yet accomplish our daily tasks. Another thing we often forget: While we are told that the prayer of faith will move mountains of difficulty, we are also told that we need not come seeking God's forgiveness—and the first prayer must always be for forgiveness—until we have forgiven those who have sinned against us. An unforgiving heart is an impassable barrier for prayer, an unbridged chasm which God's grace may not span. Forgiveness must come first, then prayer. If we forgive, if we have faith, if we pray much in secret, not for things but for grace and guidance, we will find our tongues unlocked in public and our spirit ready to guide our fellows to the holy place of prayer.

Our Relation to God (Trusting)

Epworth League Topic. Ps. 91 : 1-16

(This topic was treated in the issue of February 8 as the Christian Endeavor topic for February 16.)

Two New Bible Society Men

THE Board of Managers of the American Bible Society at a recent meeting elected Mr. Churchill H. Cutting, for some time vice-president of the society, as president to succeed Mr. James Wood of Mount Kisco, N. Y., whose resignation has been accepted after a term of service which began in 1911. Mr. Cutting is a retired merchant and a prominent Baptist layman, and his father was a distinguished Baptist clergyman.

On the resignation of Dr. John Fox in July, 1918, a committee was appointed to secure a secretary who should share the burden of administration with Dr. William I. Haven. After careful consideration the committee recommended the appointment of Mr. Frank H. Mann, of New York City, a young layman who has long been identified with Y. M. C. A. and mission work, from mission schools in the mountains of his native state of Virginia, to the Y. M. C. A. in Havana and city missions in New York. The Board of Managers accordingly elected Mr. Mann, and he at once took up his duties and gave himself with enthusiasm to his new responsibilities.

Mr. Mann was born in Petersburg, Va., in 1883, and is a nephew of Governor Mann of Virginia. Immediately after leaving college he conducted a mission school in the mountains, and after the Spanish War was for some time assistant secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in Havana. In 1905 he came to New York and entered the service of the Charity Organization Society. He enlisted in the Field Artillery at the outset of the war, and bore his part in the struggle for world freedom.

Even the Dog Works

EVERYBODY works in Europe—even the family dog. "Living a dog's life" is not fun abroad, for the dog is made useful, and not kept for an ornament. Long before war was declared, the dog was onto his job. He is harnessed into milk and vegetable carts and has to work long hours each day. If he is a large dog he is often drafted into service to draw his master or mistress to market in a rude cart made especially for dog power. And here is a faithful Irish dog, seen in Killarney, driving home a pair of horses. You can tell from the poise of Doggie's tail that he is enjoying the job. A. J. S.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Graham C. Patterson, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Edward S. Babcox, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.50 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

DAWN

a new novel by
ELEANOR H. PORT
Author of "Just Davi

"More than anyone else
Porter gives back to us joy of knowing that this beautiful world."

Illustrated. $1.50 net.
At all bookstores

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN CO., BO

The MIRACLE of M

Drinking Your Way To H

You know in a general way that milk is good for if you knew what a precious life-giving fluid it re you knew the almost miraculous results it pr those who drink it intelligently, be truly amazed. For anemi tion, constipation, any difficult stomach, liver, kidneys, heart o Bright's disease, rheumatism other ills for which physician reliable remedy, the right use o most invariably overcomes the tr instance, feet and hands that ly cold and clammy, become life-like a few days after begi marvelous self-treatment. Benarr the famous physical culturist, in with Dr. Sanford Porter, the milk ist, has written a book of pricele titled: "The Milk Diet. How To

You May Have I

It will be a revelation to you. Se months' subscription for PHYSICA MAGAZINE at the regular price o will mail you the book at once. CULTURE MAGAZINE should be reading every month. Its inspirati on Health, Hygiene and Success-I be of great value to you in many w broadly circulate this unique maga send it to you for 3 months for 50c Mr. Macfadden's above mentioned Write TODAY.

PHYSICAL CULTURE PUBLISHIN
119 West 40th St., Dept. 17A, New Yo

Don't Wear a Truss

Brooks' Appliance, the modern scientific invention, the wonderful new discovery that relieves rupture, will be sent on trial. No obnoxious springs or pads.

MR. C. E.

Brooks' Rupture Applianc

Has automatic Air Cushions. Bind draws the broken parts together as you a broken limb. No salves. No lies. Du cheap. Sent on trial to prove it. Protec U. S. patents. Catalog and measure mailed free. Send name and address

C. E. BROOKS, 498 State St., Marshal

How to Relie DEAFNE

Science has at last devised a remarkable instr the treatment of Deafness. Just a few minute tion in your own home each day is required. Us to wonderful restoration of hearing. If you noises—if you are only slightly hard of hearing totally deaf, don't delay—the Aurasage may be of bringing back your hearing.

Wonderful New Metho

The Aurasage calls into play the dormant organs strengthens them by exercise and breaks down t congestion which causes 95% of all deafness. Aurasage ten days free in your own home witho in advance—we gladly send it to you by prep post—no cost to you if it fails to help your heari today for valuable booklet and our great FRE the new 96 Tone Mears Ear Phone. Address

MEARS EAR PHONE CO.
Dept. 83, 45 W. 34th St. New Y

Rider Agents Wan

Everywhere to ride and exhibit the new Ranger "Motorbike" completely equipped with electric light and horn, carrier, stand, tool tank, coaster-brake, mud guards and anti-skid tires. Choice of 44 other styles, colors and sizes in the famous "Ranger" line of bicycles.

DELIVERED FREE on approval and 30 DAYS TRIAL. Send for big free catalog and particulars of our Factory-direct-to-Rider marvelous offers and terms.

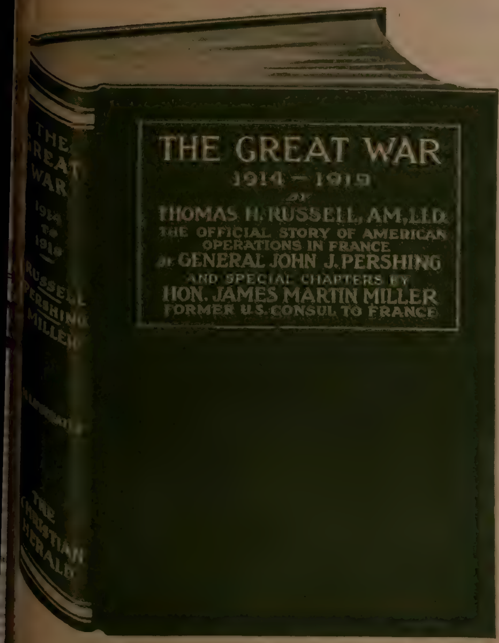
TIRES Lamps, Horns, Wheels, Sundries, and parts for all bicycles—at half usual prices. SEND NO MONEY but tell us exactly what you need. Do not buy until you get our prices, terms and the big FREE catalog.

MEAD CYCLE COMPANY Dept. G-71 CHICAGO

Good News for Christian Herald Readers



THE GREAT WAR
1914 – 1919
BY
THOMAS H. RUSSELL, AM, LLD.
THE OFFICIAL STORY OF AMERICAN OPERATIONS IN FRANCE
BY GENERAL JOHN J. PERSHING AND SPECIAL CHAPTERS BY
HON. JAMES MARTIN MILLER
FORMER U.S. CONSUL TO FRANCE
THE GREAT WAR 1914 to 1919
RUSSELL PERSHING MILLER
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

Over 750 Pages Including Supplementary Volume

THE History OF THE Great War

WILL SOON BE READY FOR CHRISTIAN HERALD
Readers

Send Your Order NOW!

The Christian Herald feels that it is doing a timely service for its readers in publishing and offering a splendid

ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF THE GREAT WAR

Hundreds have written to us stating that they hoped we would publish such a work. We will, and here is a brief description.

Thomas H. Russell A.M., LL.D. the editor-in-chief of this thrilling history of great world events, has done his work in a masterly manner and received invaluable assistance from governmental official sources, not only from our own but from the British, French and Canadian Governments.

The Greatest of All Dramas unfolds itself in the pages of this work, so intense with the thrilling stories of eye-witnesses, that the reader gasps at the tremendous and startling spectacles caused by this war of many nations. Actual photographs, many of them furnished from the records of the Allied Governments, embellish the work throughout and are in themselves a great pictorial history.

We See a Picture of an intrepid American airman bringing down from the clouds to destruction a German adversary. Our splendid birdmen brought down 845 enemy machines in their sky duels. The history gives many thrilling and never-to-be-forgotten stories of great heroism in the air and on land and sea. Detailed descriptions of the battles that made our gallant sons immortal are unfolded by eye-witnesses, who tell simply but impressively what they saw. As the reader finds himself absorbed with the intense human interest unfolded in the hundreds of pages of clear text he suddenly comes to groups of pictures made from official photographs and finely printed on plate paper showing the men in the trenches, portraits of the famous leaders of Allied armies, "Going over the Top," the terrible implements of war such as tanks, submarines, dirigibles, battle airplanes, big guns, gas and flame attacks, transports, etc. The march of our boys to Germany after the armistice was signed, President Wilson and General Pershing receiving American troops at Humas, France, on Christmas Day, 1918, are historical pictures worthy of note.

General Pershing's Own Story of American operations in France is given in full, with his glowing tribute to our fighting boys. From a literary, authoritative and pictorial standpoint we cordially recommend this book to our readers as a compact record of the Great War and at moderate cost.

Mobilized Armies Engaged	59,176,800
Casualties on All Fronts	33,500,000
Killed and Died of Wounds and Disease	7,781,000
Wounded	18,681,000
Prisoners and Missing	7,080,500
Costs to the Waring Nations	250 Billions of Dollars

These are figures which surpass our wildest thoughts of numbers. They measure the colossal cost in life and treasure of a Modern War. This brief statement shows how necessary it is that you be informed by reading the latest work that will tell you by pen and picture, eye-witnesses and official statements, how the Great War developed from the early days of 1914 to the glorious victory of November, 1918, and how the boys of the U. S. turned the tide of battle in favor of democracy. The vast stretches of the oceans were bridged with ships in spite of the under-sea pirates, and America's millions were landed on the shores of France with a promptness and equipment that amazed the world.

Eye-Witnesses on the Battlefront Aside from the value of the history as a chronicle of great events, chapters are devoted to thrilling stories of heroic acts on the battlefields which command your admiration. These are personal experiences told by actual combatants in the field, both privates and officers. The prisoners of war have their stories to tell. The wounded who survive and the refugees rendered homeless tell stories that carry conviction with them and that would move a heart of stone. The fearful state of the battlefields is described by eye-witnesses. The story of the pirates of the sea, the enemy submarines, and how they worked in their slaughter of innocents, such as the ruthless sinking of the Lusitania.

Read the Remarkable Story in this great work of Major Robert L. Denig of the U. S. Marines. It is interest-compelling in its simplicity, but represents the truest form of war history. His description of the Battle in Belleau Wood in those trying days of July, 1918, is an epic that will live in U. S. History and has been placed in the Historical Records of the Marine Corps at Washington. This history of the Great War is replete with authentic stories of the unforgetable events of the winning of Right over Might.

No American can forego this opportunity to secure a copy of this splendid book now.

How complete is it? you ask. Right down to President Wilson sailing for the Peace Conference.

But Here is Our Further Promise to every one who purchases a copy of the History of the Great War for $2.50, postpaid, The Christian Herald will send a supplementary volume, bound in cloth, free of charge, to include the further history of the War since the signing of the armistice in November, 1918. This valuable supplement will not only include the report of the Peace Conference, but will have a new series of 32 pages of World Maps, in Colors, corrected as defined by the decisions of the Peace Conference and the terms of Peace, and bringing the World War down to the signing of the Peace Terms.

The big book is nearly ready and will be mailed soon, and the supplement will follow as soon as it is possible to complete it.

[illegible] Coupon and Mail TODAY

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
2 Bible House, New York

Gentlemen:—

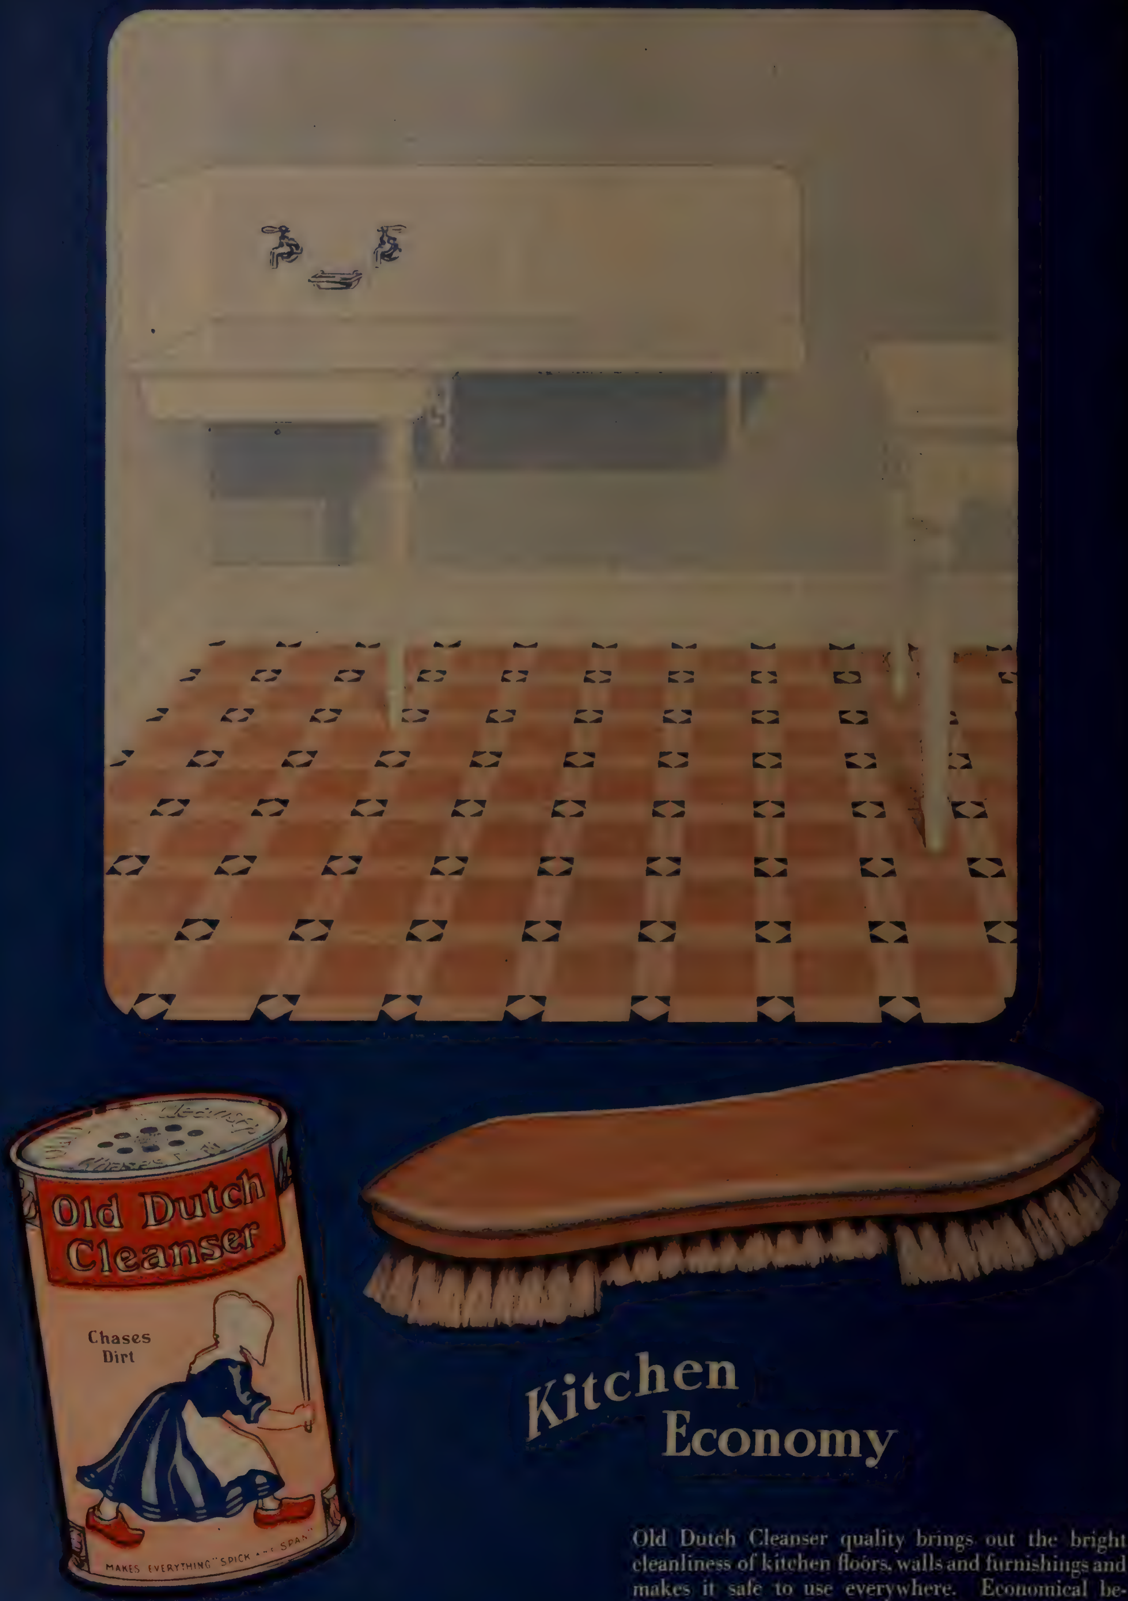
Please send me, postpaid, one copy of The History of the Great War, by Thomas H. Russell, A.M., LL.D., and others, as described in your announcement.

I enclose $2.50 to pay for the same. It is understood that in consideration of this order you are to send me free of charge when ready your new supplement, cloth bound, giving the history of the Peace Conference and its decisions, as well as a set of new world maps in colors, with latest corrections as defined by the Peace Conference, together with further information about the war.

Name...

Street...

Town .... State.............



Old Dutch Cleanser
Chases Dirt
MAKES EVERYTHING "SPICK AND SPAN"

Kitchen Economy

Old Dutch Cleanser quality brings out the bright cleanliness of kitchen floors, walls and furnishings and makes it safe to use everywhere. Economical because it does more and better cleaning with less work.

Christian Herald

$2.50 a Year NEW YORK, APRIL 5, 1919 Ten Cents a Copy

THE SHEPHERD AND HIS FLOCK

Photo by American Colony, Jerusalem

WHEN one is maid-of-all work, as well as mistress, Ivory proves itself again the ideal soap. Ivory Soap, as most housekeepers know, is a wonderfully efficient, all-round cleanser. Yet, because it is also the best possible soap for bath and toilet, it leaves the hands soft, white and attractive for one's social duties.

Ivory makes such rich, thick, dirt-softening suds that it handles the most difficult housecleaning quickly and thoroughly. It is so pure and mild, so free from alkali and all harsh materials, that you can safely use it for cleaning your finest furnishings, paintings and fabrics.

Practically everything in the house can be beautified by a renovation with Ivory Soap. For expert instructions on cleaning many things which receive attention only at house-cleaning time, if at all, write for "Unusual Uses of Ivory Soap." Address Dept. 2-D, The Procter & Gamble Co., Cincinnati, O.

PROCTER & GAMBLE STANDARD PRODUCTS

IVORY SOAP . . .

IT FLOATS

. . . 99 44/100 % PURE

THE·BIBLE·HOUSE
HOME·OF·THE·CHRISTIAN·HERALD
NEW·YORK·CITY·N·Y

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

BSCRIPTION $2.50 PER ANNUM
BLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

GRAHAM PATTERSON
Publisher

GEORGE H. SANDISON
Editor

VOL. 42—NO. 14. PRICE 10 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

RED AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER JANUARY 25, 1909, AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW YORK, UNDER THE ACT OF MARCH 3, 1879. COPYRIGHT, 1919, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN OUTLOOK ON THE CHURCH OF THE FUTURE

By REV. PETER AINSLIE, D.D.

DR. AINSLIE within the last ten years has come prominently to the front as a leading advocate of Christian Unity. His "Message of the Disciples for the Union of the Church" (Yale lectures, 1913) helped to give the movement its early impulse. He is President of the Association for the Promotion of Christian Unity, and in his writings and his teaching as a pastor of the Disciples of Christ, has been instrumental in greatly advancing the movement. His breadth of spiritual vision and his continuous contact with the Unity movement since its inception qualify him above almost all others for foreshadowing the future, as he has done in this article for the Christian Herald

MANY people are interested in the Church of the past, with its creedal definitions and its schismatic controversies, until here in America alone we have hundred and eighty-six different ous bodies. But I am interested, e future, with its possibilities of ge and its atmosphere of coopera-

e unions that have recently oc- d, such as that of the three largest eran churches in America into one, dications that in the future we will e surprised to read of Methodist s, until all the Methodist churches in America e classified into one church, likewise the entire yterian group and the Baptist groups, etc. The p unions must come first. If the various bodies ethodists cannot be gotten together, it is idle to about getting Methodists and Presbyterians to- er; but the groups will gravitate together. The p unions of the past confirm this.

en we may look for a union of evangelical Protes- . The Presbyterians have already struck a note has found cordial response in the thought of six- Protestant evangelical bodies. The Philadelphia erence on Organic Union, which met in Philadel- December 4–6, 1918, had back of it a remarkable urst in the General Assembly of the Presbyte- Church in the U. S. A., which met in Colum- Ohio, last May. With that enthusiasm the Pres- rians issued their call, and they found an equally usiastic response, indicating that not one com- ion, but many communions are concerned re- ing Christian Unity. The Ad Interim Committee his movement meets monthly and is working on s and methods which will shortly be made public.

HILE the Presbyterian movement has been dealing with American Protestantism, the copalians have been diligently at work since 1910, ing with a world conference on Faith and Order. ee deputations have been sent to Europe in its rest—one to the Anglican Church, another to the -Anglican churches of Great Britain and Ireland the third to the Continental churches of Europe. nerous conferences have been held and others in preparation. Tons of literature have been cir- ted in various languages to all parts of the world. ouraging responses have come from every com- nion in Christendom, indicating a world-weariness r the divisions of Christendom.

arious other movements have been serving in iliary capacities, with promising results. The ciples in 1910 started their Association for the Pro- tion of Christian Unity and they have given them- es to intercessory prayer, friendly conferences ough the years between themselves and various er communions, and the distribution of hundreds thousands of pages of irenic literature by persons from various communions in the interest of a united church. The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ has been a very definite factor, although dealing indirectly with Christian Unity; nevertheless, its emphasis on service has made possible the present-day advance.

The National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches in England has made a similar contribution. There are a number of other organizations that are either working directly or indirectly to the union of the Church.

THE experiences of the war have changed the viewpoint of multitudes, both ministers and laymen. The things that appeared primary have either been obliterated entirely, or are holding secondary positions, while the great underlying principles of our common faith are coming to the front, as if by an unconscious swell of a divine tide of mercy and peace. These changes have not been superficial, but they have stirred to the very depths the souls of men.

With these influences of the past, we are necessarily forced to look forward, not simply through a day, but through ten or twenty years, to the Church that shall be. One thing we can feel very confident of in looking out upon the future, and that is that the Church of God is growing toward Him, and therefore the individuals are growing toward each other; it may be reversed and we may say that there is unmistakable evidence that Christians are growing more cordial in their sympathies toward each other, and therefore are growing toward God. This necessarily means the lessening of carnality and the deepening of spirituality. With a spiritual Church, there will be no impossibilities before us. There will be difficulties, and great difficulties, but only a spiritual Church united in Christ and serving for the common good will be able to triumph over these difficulties.

In those days we will not talk so much about what you believe and what I believe on this point of theology and the other point, but we will talk about the preciousness of Christ to ourselves, and the possibility of making Him more precious to others. We will not be contending that the way one does this and the way one does that has certain preeminence, but we will be more attracted by the beauty of Christian living and we will seek to emulate each other's virtues rather than rivaling each other's successes.

It is not too far in the distance to see denominational schools passing into interdenominational institutions, and denominational papers passing into interdenominational journals; the love of a party will lessen in the love of the whole Church of God. Both secular and sectarian education will be adjusted to the principles of Christian education; for, after all, the greatest need of the hour is Christian education. Jesus is the one Teacher of the world, and He must teach if the present-day wrongs are ever to be righted. Only a united Church can voice His triumph.

The problem of social regeneration will receive such consideration, and persons of various religious training shall so work together that the making of one's fellows better in bearing such fruit of the Spirit as will prove his kinship to Christ will hold priority over the little things of opinion and prejudice that for centuries have separated the churches. A new sense of international relations will make all feel more kindly toward other nations and races, among whom will stand Jesus in His divine relationship of Saviour to all. Various forms of church government will prevail, but they will not antagonize each other; various methods of work will be used, but they will not overlap each other; there will be freedom in the interpretation of the Scriptures and freedom in the service of Christ; but the United Church will minister in unquestioned fidelity to Jesus as Lord and Saviour, and the right to differ on matters of Scripture interpretations will be as naturally accorded to one's fellows as the right to differ in the choice of food, or the choice of clothes, or the choice of locality in which to live.

Not only will missionary enthusiasm receive a new impulse that will send the very best of our young men and young women into foreign fields for service, but the United Church will awaken the very best young men and young women in the heathen nations to follow Christ. The best everywhere will turn necessarily to Him whose best evidence to the right to reign in the lives of the multitudes will be the United Church around the globe. Her credentials will not be creedal, but, instead, will be in the terms of personal affection, when Jesus affirmed, "By this shall all men know that ye are My disciples, if ye have love one to another."

WHAT a great world lies before us in the coming years! The wrongs of this day corrected and the possibilities of the days to come exceeding our most hopeful dreams, except in the mind of Jesus and the Hebrew prophets. Many of us long for the day. Our best appreciation will be found in making our contribution to the unity of the Church of God now in order that the day may hasten when the United Church of God shall be a fact, which is destined to come as sure as the tides of the sea or the stars of the sky!

Lodge-Lowell Debate on League

THE attention of the people was centered on March 19 on a discussion of the League of Nations held in Symphony Hall, Boston, in which Senator Lodge opposed the present plan and Dr. Abbott Lawrence Lowell, President of Harvard University, upheld it. Three thousand people heard the debate and 100,000,000 listened in on the wire. What must have been their surprise to see these two practically in agreement, though reaching the position of agreement from opposite sides. Both declared the text loosely drawn and open to too many interpretations and both asked for a specific recognition of the Monroe Doctrine.

SENATOR LODGE began by saying that in order to meet misrepresentation, he would state his position, which he did as follows: "It has been said that I am against any League of Nations. I am not—far from it. I am anxious to have the nations, the free nations of the world, united in a league, as we call it, a society, as the French call it, but united to do all to bring about a general disarmament."

Declaring that all of us are agreed in desiring the security and peace of the world and that most of us were desirous of doing what we could to make peace more secure, he said, "The question before us is whether the League that has been drafted by the Commission of the Peace Conference will tend to secure the peace of the world as it stands and whether it is just and fair to the United States of America."

Adverting to the reasonable criticisms of the covenant, he said: "Individual inconsistencies have no relation to the merits of any question. If nobody ever changed his mind it would be a stagnant world."

He said that wars between nations came through national contacts, political, commercial, etc., and that the League of Nations created many new contacts, making it necessary to examine its provisions with the utmost care. The draft he found to be loosely and obscurely drawn and he quoted former President Taft, a supporter of the plan, as saying, "Undoubtedly the covenant needs revision."

Declaring that he would make constructive criticism of the plan he discussed at some length the sections referring to the decisions of the Executive Council, and showed that while in certain cases the decisions were required to be unanimous, it was not stated in other cases whether the decisions must be unanimous or whether a majority could prevail.

HE SAID that the Monroe Doctrine was a fence that we put around to exclude other nations from meddling in American affairs, and he showed how the fence had grown more definite through the years until it had been strong enough to shut Japan out of Magdalena Bay in Mexico. He continued: "They say that if we demand the exclusion of the Monroe Doctrine from the operation of the League they will demand compensation. Very well. Let them exclude us from meddling in Europe."

Mr. Lodge declared also that immigration, the tariff and the question of our coastwise trade were all questions that we could not submit to any outside body of men.

He noted also the absence from the plan of any provision for an honorable withdrawal from the League.

He declared most important of all Article X, which obligates each nation to guarantee against external aggressions the political independence and territorial integrity of every nation a member of the League. He said that we asked no guarantees but that this plan put upon us the obligation to maintain the "territorial integrity and independence of every part of the far-flung British Empire" and he said the honor and good faith of our country would be at stake. He continued, "Now, this is a tremendous promise to make. I ask the fathers and the mothers, the sisters and the wives and the sweethearts whether they are ready to guarantee the political independence and territorial integrity of every nation on earth against external aggression and to send the hope of their families, the hope of our nation, the best of our youth, forth into the world on such an errand." The reporters heard a voice answer "Yes" while a chorus called out "No."

The Senator called attention to the fact that had the League of Nations, as thus planned, existed in 1776, France could not have helped the American Colonies to achieve their independence and had it existed in 1898 we would have been helpless to rescue Cuba. He asked his audience to think over his questions and to "remember that we must make no promise, enter into no agreement, that we are not going to carry out in letter and in spirit, without restriction and without deduction.

PRESIDENT LOWELL entered into a concise discussion of what a League of Nations ought to do. He also declared: "The covenant is very defective in its drafting. In places it is so obscure that the meaning is often inaccurately expressed and sometimes doubtful. It is easily misunderstood and has in fact been widely misunderstood."

In order to avoid the danger of ambiguities President Lowell suggested the addition of an article as follows: "The obligations assumed by the members of the League are only those which they agree to assume by this covenant and not others which they do not hereby agree to assume. Furthermore, the powers possessed by the organs of the League are those, and only those, conferred upon them by this covenant."

Mr. Lowell outlined the principal obligations assumed by the members of the League, as the protecting and preserving of territorial integrity and independence of members of the League, the submission of disputes to inquiry by the League, the carrying out in good faith of an award, and the obligation not to resort to war against any member of the League without previous arbitration or until three months after an award or not at all with a member abiding by an award.

He held it obvious that submission to arbitration must be compulsory, and that the punishment for offenders against this rule must be such that no nation would venture to incur it. This would be the real solution of the problem of peace. "If the League is thus bound," he said, "we won't have to send our sons to far lands. You might as well say that one rough would attack eleven policemen," which was loudly applauded.

Mr. Lowell gave some time also to showing the advisory nature of the findings of the Executive Council, even extending to their decisions as to any member's fair share in military action against a breaker of the covenant, the plan leaving the matter of complying with the recommendations entirely to the nation concerned. He declared the international boycott contemplated as the first penalty or sanction of the breaking of the covenant to be "a form of sanction highly unlikely to be defied." He said that the obligations, which also included the publishing and filing of treaties, the fair treatment of labor and freedom of transit for persons and merchandise, were devised for the most part with the object of preventing war.

He declared that the plan did not create a superstate, and that most of the objections were bogeys, stating as an instance that the fear that England with six votes to our one in the body of delegates might hold a preponderant influence. He balanced this by our most certain ability to influence the votes of Panama, Nicaragua, Haiti and Santo Domingo.

Mr. Lowell said, discussing the traditions of Washington, that: "The time has come when the nations should cooperate to put an end to war so far as possible and from this humane effort the United States must not stand aloof," and he asked Senator Lo whether he would not vote for the covenant of Pa if it was amended as he wished and if he would st the amendments he desired.

REGARDING the Monroe Doctrine Mr. Low declared it his opinion that: "The United Sta would be justified in asking and ought to ask fo clause in the covenant that no foreign power sh hereafter acquire by conquest, purchase or in a other way any possessions on the American con nents or the islands adjacent thereto."

Mr. Lowell took up the charge of unconstituti ality and showed that Congress had in times p adopted treaties which when adopted abridged powers, and that it was distinctly within its powers so ratify.

He said: "The war has taught us the cruelty, horror of modern war and the absolute necessity stopping it if civilization is to be preserved. . . . T days of American isolation have passed away forev . . . The destiny of America is forward and we m look ahead. . . . The covenant is imperfect, a poorly drawn, but it is framed on the right lines. T substance of the plan, the principles on which it founded, are correct and should be accepted and a proved. The hour is rapidly approaching when must decide whether our country shall take its pla like a great and generous nation, side by side wi others as guardians of law, order and justice in t world, or whether it shall turn its face away from world in agony."

SENATOR LODGE in answering declared that this League is to be in such form that it will read promote peace instead of breeding dissension a quarrels, as I believe it will, if it will be put in su shape that it will bring no injury or injustice to t United States, of course I will support it. I hope fr my heart it will be amended. I hope that such league will be framed somewhere. In my belief, will not be done in Paris."

The Senator called attention to the course of form Presidents in like situations and said that if Preside Wilson had laid the draft of the proposed League b fore the Senate for discussion and suggestions would have had the amendments laid before hi which the Senators thought necessary and "T battle would have been more than half won by t mere submission," and he asked for an early treaty peace with Germany. "Is the League of Nation he asked, "so weak that it has to be carried in a rider on the treaty of peace?"

He then outlined the course of the United States a protector of the weak and said he did not wish keep America isolated but wished to keep her mast of her fate, declared that the Senate would undou edly carry out the wishes of the American people a declared, in closing, "The verdict of the people, whi it will be in favor of doing everything that this migh nation can for the preservation of the world's peac will not allow the United States to be put into a pos tion where she will be in any degree injured, weakene or crippled. I want to see her stand, as she alwa has stood, for the right, for mercy, for help and bene to all men, to the oppressed and those who strug for freedom, all alike. Let her go on in her benefice career, and I want to see her stand as she has alwa stood, strong and alive, triumphant, free."

The debate was reported to have greatly cleared t atmosphere at Washington. While Senator Lod did not claim to speak for the Senate, it was felt th he had expressed the feeling of the majority of Sen tors of both parties and that his suggestions, wi those of President Lowell and Mr. Taft, would c tainly result in such a rewriting of the covenant would make its ratification by the Senate certain.

Hungary Turns to Bolshevism

"AS PROVISIONAL President of the Hungarian People's Republic, I turn as against the Paris Peace Conference to the proletariat of the world for justice and support."

Thus ended a manifesto issued by Count Michael Karolyi to the Hungarian people and to the world, announcing the resignation of his government in favor of a Socialist-Communist Government of Workers', Peasants' and Soldiers' Councils under the Presidency of Alexander Gorbai with Bela Kun, a leading Hungarian Bolshevist, as Foreign Minister.

The new government issued a proclamation declaring that "The proletariat of Hungary has taken all power in its own hands. By the decision of the Paris Conference to occupy Hungary, the provisioning of revolutionary Hungary becomes utterly impossible. . . . The Revolutionary Government will begin forthwith work for the realization of Communist Socialism. The Council decrees the socialization of large estates, mines, big industries, banks and transport lines, declares a complete solidarity with the Russian Soviet Government, and offers to contract an armed alliance with the proletariat of Russia."

There was a report that, in spite of Allied occupation of most of Hungary outside of Budapest, made necessary by recurring disorders, the Hungarian Republic had secretly formed an army of 70,000 men. There was also a report that the Russian Reds had an army on the line from Brody to Stanislau, ready to march at once to Budapest, a two weeks' march. Hungary was being invaded on March 24 by this Russian army and by a Czechoslovak army. Czechoslav regiments in Northern Hungary were reported to have mutinied.

Agents of the Bolsheviki were also reported to have invited the workmen and peasants in Bohemia, Rumania, and Serbia to form an armed alliance against the aristocracy, land owners, dynasties, and the workmen of Germany and Austria were said to have been invited to follow the lead of Hungary and break off relations with the Paris Peace Conference.

The Bolshevist coup in Hungary was reported to have startled Berlin, where armed force had just co quered a Bolshevist outbreak, but where the fires s smoldered. Germany was in fact said to be rapid approaching a similar overturn, food and steady wo being given as the only certain antidotes to this fev of proletarianism.

Meantime the Allied representatives in Paris we planning to create in Poland, Czechoslavia and R mania buffer states against Bolshevism.

The Week in the World's News

BRITISH MINERS WIN. The Government Com mission investigating the demands of the Briti and Welsh miners, who wanted 30 per cent. i crease in wages and internationalization of the min reported on March 20, a majority recommending t reduction of the work day from 8 to 7 hours from Ju 16th, and to 6 hours after July, 1921, with slight

Continued on page 396

Rival Systems Striving to Win Minds of Japan's Women

Going to Sunday School. Girls of the Methodist High School at Hiroshima, Japan

TWO great powers are fighting for an alliance with the womanhood of Japan in a struggle that will determine the future of the Orient Empire.

Hiroshima that struggle has crystallized. The s are face to face.

the one side—Buddhism, led by a genial, wealthy apanese called Yamanaka.

the other side—Christianity.

e young girls of Hiroshima, future mothers of n, are being sought through education. A girls' school is the weapon of Christianity; another eapon of Buddhism.

e Christian High School has flourished so that tracted the attention of Yamanaka.

manaka was a strong Buddhist and a leader in novement to revive and reform Buddhism and lish it as a bulwark against the rapid encroach- of Christianity.

decided an excellent way to do this was to found h school for girls which would be more attractive the Christian women's. So he erected fine build- and installed modern methods. He hired good ers. All the paraphernalia of the best Western ls was taken over. In fact, the curriculum was t as close as it could be to that of the Christian ol not far away. All except as to religion. Bud- n was a prominent feature of the institution—the old-fashioned Buddhism, but the new form h has borrowed freely from Christianity, even n to the Sunday school hymns. The girls were ht to sing the famous old Christian hymns with the word Buddha substituted for that of Christ.

umner R. Vinton visited both high schools and photographs recently. He was cordially re- ed by Yamanaka, the Buddhist school founder, by the corps of teachers. They put the girls ugh their paces for him. He saw their games, cially the popular sport of walking a swinging and their Swedish calisthenic exercises, and was ved to enter their schoolrooms.

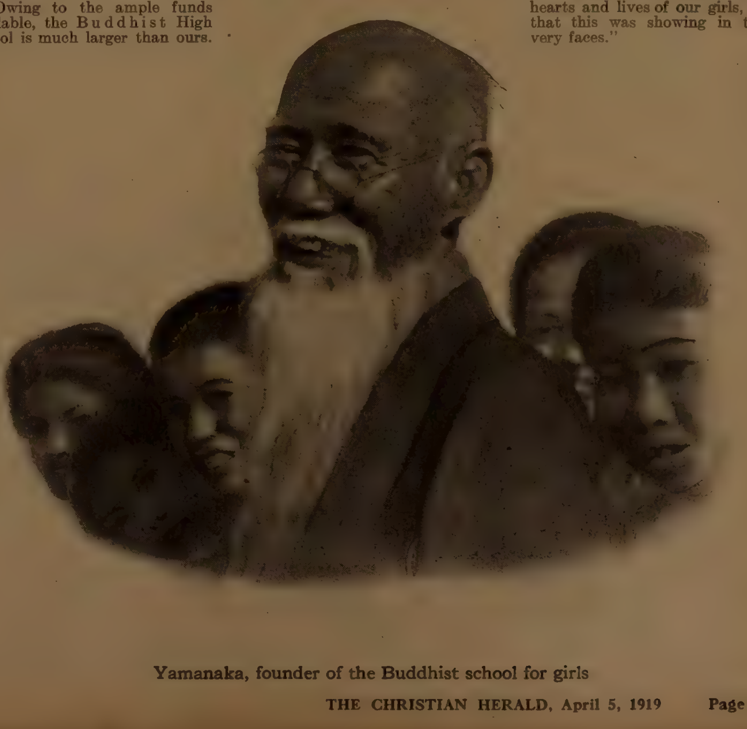
stead of the Buddhist school drawing patronage the Christian rival, he found that both were ded, for the demand for modern education for en is lively in Japan.

A curious development," said Mr. Vinton, who es from a family that has produced more mission- than any other in America with one exception, that Buddhism is falling into the background in naka's school.

When Yamanaka started it his purpose was to exalt Buddha, and Buddhism was constantly instilled in the hearts of his girls. But Buddhism is stressed less and less every year. Perhaps it is not too much to hope that some day the heathen religion will disappear entirely and this school also will become a Christian institution.

"Owing to the ample funds available, the Buddhist High School is much larger than ours. Its equipment is excellent and the instruction is adequate, so far as I could judge.

"But I thought I could detect in the faces of these young girls a different spirit from that of the pupils in our schools. It seemed to me that Christianity was making more beautiful the hearts and lives of our girls, and that this was showing in their very faces."



Yamanaka, founder of the Buddhist school for girls

Roads from Anywhere to Everywher

By H. COLIN CAMPBELL

ONE day early in February of this year a dairy farmer in central Illinois found that because of a railroad wreck he could not make his usual daily shipment of milk to the market on which he was dependent. This man owns a large farm and many blooded Holstein cattle, and the output is shipped daily to Springfield.

Illinois roads have not been noted in the past as inviting rapid or pleasant transportation; yet, because of the mild winter, the roads upon which this farmer was dependent were in unusually good condition, and as he happened to have an automobile, seventy-five gallons of milk were taken sixty miles and delivered according to schedule.

Possibilities attending the construction of permanent roads are well illustrated in this man's experience. Delivery was possible only because the road was in excellent condition. Had it been in such shape as usual during February, the trip would not have been attempted. With permanent highways, long-distance milk delivery by automobile and truck may become generally common, as it is already common in several counties or communities where roads have been merged into county-wide systems and adequately hard-surfaced.

The milk story is but one example of how the dinner table of each of us is dependent upon rural transportation; and rural transportation means transportation over the highways, not over the railroads. The cost of living continues to increase—at least it does not go down so that the surplus in our pocketbooks is noticeable. Individuals, associations and organizations everywhere are daily concerning themselves with these self-evident facts. One group asserts that the reasons for increased prices for the high cost of living is the lessened ability for production as compared with the greater capacity for consumption—almost world-wide food shortage. Another declares that the cause is the decreased purchasing value of the dollar. We have more money or credit than ever before, so the dollar is worth less. Another argues that labor and other expenses incidental to production have increased abnormally and that here lies the reason for the high cost of living. Each of these expressions contains part of the proof. However, there are other reasons.

We have today in round figures about 2,500,000 miles of so-called highways in the United States. Less than 12 per cent. of this total can, by any stretch of the imagination, be considered as improved. No other nation that can lay claim to being civilized or progressive possesses such a wretched highway situation. Our internal commerce exceeds the interforeign commerce of the entire world. It has been estimated that 90 per cent. of this commerce must at some time be hauled over the public roads. The average haul over these transportation arteries has been estimated at a little more than 9.4 miles. Careful investigation has fixed the cost of hauling these products—the things that come to your dinner table and to mine—as 23 cents per ton mile. The cost of hauling per mile over the splendid roads of France is estimated to average about seven cents per ton. The average cost in England is about 11 cents.

California has 1,200 miles of these permanent, smooth paved roads

If our main highways were improved with permanent surface, we would certainly save eight or nine cents per ton per mile in hauling the immense interstate commerce that each year originates from agriculture, mine and forest. We would save in transportation certainly more than $700,000,000 per year, and our loss in transportation over our wretched roads certainly exceeds this sum because the loss is made up of many items other than wear and tear on vehicles, excess gasoline consumption, horses worn out before their full period of usefulness has been real millions of dollars' worth of good marketable rotting or spoiling on the farms because it can brought to a market that is crying to buy it.

We cannot compete with other nations in th keting of agricultural, mineral and manufa products unless we immediately remedy the def our highways.

The greatest handicap which the farmer had the war to increased production was the cer that his increase could be profitably marketed- it could be marketed at all. In many sections fa fail to raise certain important crops b the cost of hauling them over miserable try roads is so great that the books sho instead of profit. Conservative esti seem to confirm the opinion that mo one-third of our perishable foodstuffs reaches the consumer, because of bad

The farmers cannot successfully co with the farmers of other countries they are given highways that are every day in the year. Highways cheapen transportation thus reduce the and hence the profits of production ma business of farming worth while.

No better time could be selected vigorous campaign in every little haml community, in every household even, cure really improved roads. It is a cons tive estimate to say that at least half o total amount expended for highwa struction goes for the direct employme labor, and right now we are confront labor situation due to the changing of lions of men from government empl army and navy—to civil life.

Right now is a good time—and it is made use of—to promote nation-wide i est in highway improvement, as is evide by the bond issues passed, pending or agitated in many of our states.

On the first of March there were avail or about to be made available, sums highway improvement aggregating n $1,250,000,000. Once the agitation for hibition had properly crystallized, the m ment spread so quickly over the nation the required number of states rushed to on the dry band-wagon. The good roads move is sweeping the country today in just the same The greatest incentive to this was perhaps give the voters in Illinois and Pennsylvania, who November decided that they would spend $110, 000 as a start only to give their respective states that really were roads: $60,000,000 in Illinois, 000,000 in Pennsylvania. More than that, they cided that they would be ready, when peace came provide the employment needed for returning sold

Wide pavements not only facilitate, they attract traffic. They make a busy highway of a once quiet road. This stretch east of Painesville, Ohio, was laid in 1915 sailors who might for any reason find their former tions filled.

ichigan, Oklahoma, Minnesota, Texas, Colorado, t Virginia, Georgia, Alabama, Oregon, California, ng other states, are agitating or have passed bond s ranging from $10,000,000 to $100,000,000—all oads.

ot only did Illinois pave the way for this enthusi- action, but it also pointed the way to raise the ey so that those who use the roads most might be t benefited and be made to pay for it, yet in no case the burden be unreasonable. Moderate increase otor vehicle license fees will in a definite time not take care of Illinois's $60,000,000 bond issue and rest, but leave to the state, to its people, a system ads so permanently built that genera- s to come may enjoy their benefits.

ere is another slant of the road ques- that has swung the right way during past two years. Most of the road ey we have been spending has been llowed up in maintenance of roads t would not stay built—in construction lived and gave indifferent use for five six years only and at the end of that e had to be reconstructed at a cost ost equal to the original. We have rned that narrow roads will not do be- se, once the highway is permanently roved, the former neglected thorough- becomes the one earnestly sought out d used by traffic in ever increasing ume and weight.

nd traffic is changing. While a few rs ago the horse-drawn vehicle pre- minated, today the automobile and tor truck have the right of way. Each these has developed amazingly. The tomobile serves a distinctly business as ll as a pleasure end. The motor truck distinctly commercial and in its com- rcial aspect has many ramifications.

For example, there are today on our hways refrigerator motor trucks oper- ng over regular routes on regular edules merely because the communi- s which these packing-house-to-table ites serve are threaded with concrete ids.

And these trucks beat the best railroad edules. Why? Because there is no iting at the freight station receiving or in a long weary line of trucks until ur truck's turn comes to back up to the or and discharge or receive its load. o hours' time saved at each end of the l route means four hours to use in making the run er the concrete road, and usually two hours is all at is necessary. The paved surface pays.

Mud and slush no longer isolate this farming country from its near-by city market. The permanent pavement insures every-day-in-the-year business

Recent tests made by one of the big car and truck anufacturers in Cleveland showed that even the st earth road in best condition required twice as uch gasoline to move a given motor-truck load a iven distance as was required to move the same load ver concrete pavement.

Roads must be wide enough for traffic lines to pass. The apparent economy in the narrow pavement is all in the laying and not in the use, for soft, muddy margins mean stalled trucks and blocked roads

The saving of gasoline was the only thing computed. It goes without saying that on the nearly half million trucks and five million cars in the United States, the aving of half the usual consumption of gasoline would epresent an enormous item running into many mil- ions, that yearly would build miles of permanent roads.

The other savings not computed are reduced wear and tear on vehicles and tires, lessened consumption of lubricating oils, less wear and tear on mechanism because there are no dust, ruts, mudholes to uselessly consume power and all the accessories that go to make it.

In the past, roads have frequently been planned from nowhere to nowhere. Most of our roads today extend between those two points. The idea of systems now predominates, a road that will get you from where you are to where you want to be.

And with state systems we immediately have national systems, because borders are linked to borders and coast then linked to coast.

No one asks today whether roads pay. It should have been made evident in the early part of this discussion that roads pay the farmer. They pay the manufacturer who is dependent upon the forest and mine for raw material. They pay every one living in a country devoid of any resources other than scenic attractions, for tourists are generally out to spend money, and even if a country has nothing but scenery to attract, then roads will pay that country, and therefore are profitable to it.

Road developments are occurring so rapidly that one can hardly keep track of them. One of the latest is that with extensive county systems the principal towns in the county equipped with fire-fighting apparatus will be able to extend the benefits of the city or town fire department to the farmer living on a paved road that will permit reaching his farm in a few minutes at most. All that remains to be done to make this effective now in several localities is to make certain that at the other end of the line there is a dependable and sufficient water supply or that the fire equipment include motorized chemical apparatus.

Once the Pacific Northwest was strictly a lumbering country. Comprehensive highway systems radiating from Puget Sound to various interior points have taken up the slack in the cut-over lands, and now dairying has the upper hand. The cleared lands of this region, coupled with the mild winter climate, have proved ideal for dairy farming. The county engineer of one of the Washington counties bordering Puget Sound says there are large dairy herds throughout the district.

Prior to the good roads movement, dairying was closely confined to regions served by railways and boats. A few condenseries were in operation, but the possibilities of growth for this branch of agriculture seemed so limited as to be almost hopeless. All that is changed now. Wherever highways traverse sections suited for dairying, there may be seen fine herds of contented cows. Along the roads near farms are roadside platforms, locally known as milk stations, where the big motor trucks stop to take on milk for market or condensery.

A common sight is trucks or trucks with trailers transporting immense logs from forest to mill or to the water front for rafting. Loads of 30,000 pounds, sometimes consisting of a single log only, speed over the concrete roads without leaving a single trace of their passage.

A similar story could be told of many other communities which have forged ahead, sometimes quite unheralded abroad, in their road improvement work. In the East, and radiating from every city where roads will permit, motor-truck express routes have sprung into successful operation during the past year or more.

Some of these, often in spite of the roads, have proved profitable from the very start. Greater profit, however, can come only from better roads, and better roads will mean a reduction in transportation charges that will still leave the greater profit to the truck operator and cut a slice from the high cost of living.

The postal department is operating many of its rural routes with motor trucks, and in its budget for this year has made request for many millions to be used for extending rural delivery by motor truck. Many cities are centers of stock-shipping activity. In Indianapolis from 300 to 500 motor-truck loads of live stock a day come into the local stockyards. And so the story goes.

At first, of course, the truck-owner expected great hostility on the part of the railroads. Possibly there was some such feeling for a while; but the truck-owner presently became aware that the railroads, instead of objecting to truck traffic, were beginning to welcome it as an adjunct to their own systems. Trucks are taking away the unprofitable short haul from the railroads and making of it a profitable haul for themselves. Instead of hurting the railroads, truck traffic is helping them, by bringing huge amounts of perishable freight, which it would otherwise be impossible to ship, to a thousand junction points all over the United States.

Now certainly is the time. Roads must be built, for we need them badly, and no other form of construction will so generally spread its benefits over this country as state-wide, nation-wide roadbuilding for permanence.

A Symposium of Eminent Opinions o a World Pledge to Peace

Higher and Higher Idealism

By GEORGES CLÉMENCEAU
Premier of France

ALL of our plans are based upon the splendid platform laid down by President Wilson. In perfect harmony with the principles which he has enunciated, we are striving for higher and holier idealism in the conduct of the affairs of the world. Divested of all mercenary aspirations, we join heartily and unreservedly in the effort to make a better world and one of simple justice to all mankind.

Assuming World's Burdens

By LAWRENCE T. SHERMAN
U. S. Senator from Illinois

AFTER a protracted study of the proposed League of Nations and meditation on the state of our own country, I have decided to continue to be an American.

I cannot come to the conclusion that we are to turn ourselves into the economic knight errant of the world. We have already been the Good Samaritan for most of the world in its cosmopolitan troubles and are now asked to assume all its burdens in perpetuity. Our army and navy are to be subject to the decrees of a majority vote of the associated nations of the Old World.

Any document written should declare that war except in self-defense is an international crime. I am not willing to sign a treaty that will place the power of sending us to war in nine men assembled in some star chamber in Europe.

The draft for the League provides that any small sovereignty may select its own guardian nation. I do not wish anything wished on us that way.

If we are to assume that the covenant of the League of Nations proposed is to become binding upon us, it will impose onerous burdens upon both our lives and fortunes. It would be well, therefore, to turn our attention to strengthening our domestic industry.

It seems to me it is time for us to attend to the affairs of our household. In enlarging our horizon and becoming the principal trustee of civilization, we are apt to forget our own family affairs, with the usual result following the neglect of home duties.

"A Trumpet Call from the Heights of Heaven"

By MORRIS SHEPPARD, United States Senator from Texas

TO ALL those who pray, "Thy Kingdom come," the suggestion of a Society or League of Nations for the preservation of the peace of the world is like a trumpet call from the heights of heaven. It summons mankind to a purer civilization, a holier existence. It is the most sacred, the most inspiring opportunity the children of men have ever had to translate the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man into mortal institutions. The song of the angels in the skies of Bethlehem is at last to be written into human governments and laws, and the whole world is about to swing nearer to the throne and will of God.

An End of Old Conventions

By HERBERT ASQUITH, Former Prime Minister of Great Britain

LET me ask, in all seriousness, of all fair-minded men and women, was there ever a moment when it was more vitally important to the largest interests of mankind that we should combine in a fashion so appealing and so impressive in asserting the supreme value, and therefore authority, of human brotherhood?

Lift up your eyes and try to realize what is the meaning of the strange and menacing presence which you see, if you have vision enough, in every quarter of the sky.

The war has not opened out an easy and direct road to a millennium. It has taught the world that under modern conditions war itself is not only a crime but an anachronism. That is a matter of infinite consequence, but after all it is only a negative result. But it has had other and perhaps more far-reaching effects.

We have been living in this Western world—and I speak here of America as well as Europe—very largely on social and industrial conventions. There is nothing in history more impossible either to dispute or explain than the vitality of conventions. Stone walls and iron bars are nothing to the thraldom of unreflecting habit.

And then suddenly a moment comes when for some reason or another the mass of men open their eyes and join their hands.

Down goes the Bastille as quickly as did the walls of Jericho.

Nothing is so important as the temper with which we watch and handle this new development. Of one thing you may be quite certain, that mere negation and mere repression will not suffice. A League of Classes may seem to the common judgment as Utopian as did, less than five years ago, a League of Nations.

But let us keep in touch with facts.

The artificial and brittle bonds of convention have served their purpose and had their day.

Triumph of Brave Devotio

By SAMUEL GOMPERS
President American Federation of Lab

IN THE formation of a League of tions we are about to reap the har of what we have sowed—a sowing ungrudging sacrifices and brave de tion to the principles of humanity brotherhood.

The Test of Christianity

By JUNIUS B. REMENSNYDER
Pastor St. James Lutheran Church, New Y

I HAVE very positive convictions to the duty of the Christian Chu in the world overturn and new featu caused by the war. Therefore I c gratulate the Christian Herald o effort to interject the true Gospel sp into the field of humanity plowed hates and miseries and fertilized w the best blood of the race.

Good will among men as a substit for force—can it succeed between tions? That is the test that Christiani is going through today. These words the Christian Herald are the very on and the only ones that can fit the cri and seize the opportunity. In casti them far and wide, with its immen circulation, it is sowing the seed of reco ciliation and hope upon a battle-to world, whose harvest of good will incalculable.

Provides for Every Need

By ROBERT L. OWEN, United States Senator from Oklahoma

THE opportunity of forty centuries is at hand to proclaim the peace and thereby promote the happiness of mankind through a League of Nations.

The proposed draft contains many vital agreements protecting the nations from war.

First, a mutual pledge to respect and preserve the territorial integrity and existing political independence of every nation.

What pledge could be more gigantic or more magnificent or more to be desired?

Is the pledge worthy of credit?

The representatives of over twenty nations, willing to send their soldiers to the battlefield to protect liberty and civilization, are behind it; dynastic military autocracies have fled to cover. The Hapsburgs are gone. The Hohenzollerns have fled. The Romanoffs are dead. The petty kings of Germany have resigned and fled the country. There is no king of Bulgaria or of Greece. The Sultan of Turkey no longer exists.

The democracies of the world have conquered the world by military forces, and they can maintain their prestige and power by cooperative action along intelligent lines without in any degree impairing the internal sovereignty of any nation.

The proposed plan provides every conceivable means of reparation, conciliation and adjustment of every international dispute. It provides for progressive disarmament.

It proposes to nationalize the making of arms and munitions of war.

It provides for control over international shipment of arms.

It provides means to foresee and prevent war.

It provides for the formulation of a world opinion and for the establishment of world opinion based upon a knowledge by nations of each other through a meeting of representatives in a common council chamber where they can look each other in the face and talk freely and frankly of the affairs of the nations of the earth.

From the vast mass of inarticulate men, women and children there rises a flood of voices, of spiritual voices, calling for peace on earth, good will to men, and for the recognition upon earth of those great doctrines taught by the Son of God.

These great doctrines of justice, of mercy, of peace, are about to be established on earth, backed with power, with moral power, with spiritual power, with man power and with the power of the organized forces of civilization.

America is vindicating the prophecy of France in the great bronze statue given by France to America, representing America as the Goddess of Liberty raising the blazing torch of light—liberty enlightening the world.

Chained to a Body of Death

By ALBERT J. BEVERIDGE, Former Senator from Indiana

WE ARE told that we shall disappoint the world if we refuse to join a League of Nations. If any business house made contracts on that principle how long would it keep out of bankruptcy?

Who says the world will be disappointed and by what authority is this message delivered? Of course, certain European Powers would be disappointed because they have everything to gain and nothing to lose by getting young, strong and solvent America to underwrite their ventures.

What of the remainder of the world? Will the nations of South America be disappointed if we escape the trap? Will Norway and Sweden and Holland and Denmark and Switzerland and China and Spain? Or do they no longer count? Now that the test has come, are small and weak nations no longer to be considered? What has become of the self-determination of peoples?

We are instructed that we can be no longer "isolated." How have we ever been isolated? Not financially, not commercially, not socially. We have been isolated only in a political sense—only in the sense that we have not bound ourselves to take part in alien quarrels.

God forbid that the American people ever allow themselves to be chained to that body of death, a permanent polit cal alliance, involving them forever historic and alien animosities, in racia and alien hatreds.

It is said that we are now a worl power, and that we must take up ne burdens. We are, indeed, a world powe and we do not intend to surrender th position and become the tail of an ternational kite.

We welcome new burdens if they ar legitimate; but we decline those be longing to others which they are eage to unload on us.

League to Prevent War

By TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY
U. S. Senator-Elect from Michigan

I AM very glad to tell you that although I do not approve of the tentative draft of a Constitution for a proposed League of Nations, as recently published in the press, and for the reasons very clearly set forth by Senators Knox and Lodge in their recent speeches in Congress, I am strongly in favor of a League of Nations which will prevent war and provide a reasonable amount of disarmament and at the same time insure the independence of the United States.

Must Preserve National Spirit

By CHARLES E. HUGHES, Former United States Supreme Court Justice

AMERICA must find what is best in the way of a League of Nations. Whatever we do, we must make no engagement which we do not understand.

I believe in dealing with this question in a calm, thoughtful way, without emotion. I do not believe in crusading in a matter of this thought, but in discussion that the truth may be revealed.

I believe in an international court with machinery of conference and the organization of some conciliation body. We must try to develop a court of international law and not leave it in the haphazard way it has been for many years past.

The development of intense love of country through the war was beautiful, and not since the Civil War have men felt the love of country as they do at the present time.

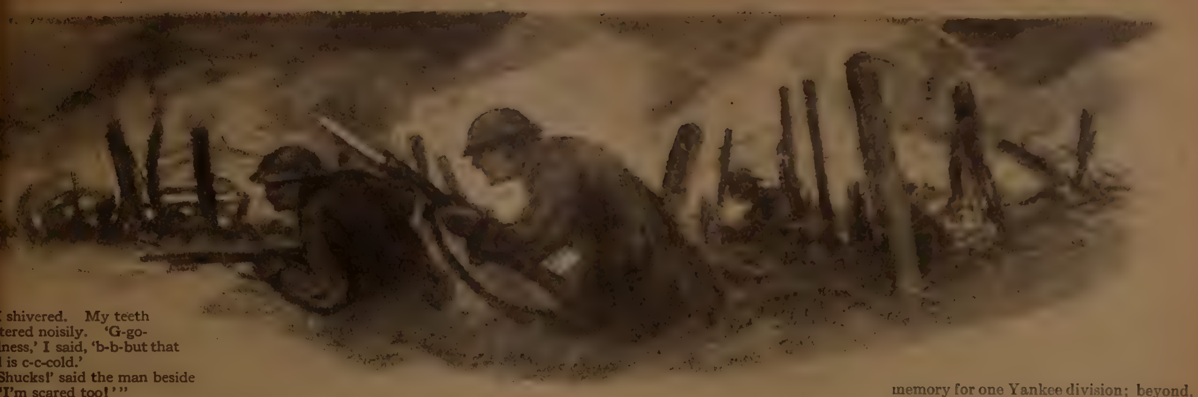
Let us never sink into a vague internationalism.

Meets Needs of World

By ROMAN DMOWSKI
Head of Polish Delegation at Peace Conference

I FIND in the League of Nations, as conceived by President Wilson, an instrument which meets with absolute logic the needs of the modern world. War has been the negative expression of a community of world interests; so a positive expression of that same community of interests must be found. I believe that positive expression has been found in the Wilson League of Nations.

THE TAKING OF A SALIENT



"I shivered. My teeth attered noisily. 'G-go-odness,' I said, 'b-b-but that ind is c-c-cold.'
"'Shucks!' said the man beside e, 'I'm scared too!'"

By HENRY RUSSELL MILLER

Illustration by Ann Brockman

A GRAPHIC and thrilling personal account of the brilliant dash of our boys on that great day at St. Mihiel when the American forces proved their mettle, routed the foe from his four-year stronghold and turned the tide of the war

SUPPER was over. In the little lean-to which was the battalion P. C. we smoked and chatted by fits and starts, nervously anxious r the hour to move. It was raining, the me steady downpour that for four days d been turning field and road into avy, sticky mire. In the gathering dusk r fire sent shadows dancing through the oods. A little way up the narrow-gauge ilroad a group was receiving absolution m the Catholic chaplain. Platoons and mpanies stood in loose formation along e roadside, awaiting the command to ll in.

The major puffed hard on his cigar, rubbing his hands restlessly. Occasionally he st a quick appraising glance in the direction of Germany," then around the grove in which we were amped. I noticed we all did that often. The same neasy thought was in all our minds. The adjutant nally gave it voice.

"This is going to be a pas bon place when the ball pens. The Boche'll just soak it to these woods. lope they don't open up before we start."

"If only," mused the Lieutenant Doctor, "if only hey haven't laid a trap for us! There's something hony about this quiet. Of course, they know what's p."

"It ought to be worse than Soissons," was the Supply Officer's cheerful contribution.

The Major sighed. "I'll feel better if we reach Nonsard tomorrow night." It was to be his first experience under fire. I think he did not mind that; but it was to be his first command in battle, and that did count.

IT WAS September 11. On the morrow was to begin the drive to wipe out the St. Mihiel salient, that famous series of ridges and hills that, despite some of the bloodiest fighting of the war, had withstood all French attempts to take it. This was to be practically n all-American affair, under our own command. As ar back as the winter before, when Our Division held the Toul sector, I had seen preparations making for it; lately I had glimpsed some of the results: railroads crisscrossing the woods, running almost to the front lines, battery after battery of heavy guns, ammunition enough—so it seemed—to blow Montsec from the face of the earth. The prophecies of last winter were about to be fulfilled. Our Division was to outflank and take the terrible Butte.

It was not, alas! the same division. The artillery had come practically intact out of the Soissons fighting, and a few of the wounded doughboys had strayed back; but during August the infantry had been recruited to full war strength with new men, fine, strapping fellows from the draft and the later officers' schools in the States. Their training had been brief, they had never been under fire; but we had no doubt of them. They had heard of the greatness of Soissons, were strong in the resolve that that standard should not be lowered. The personnel of a fighting division changes; its tradition, its soul, lives on. . . .

Nine o'clock and black as Egypt, the rain heavier than ever. We fell into line, the surgeon's group, with which I was to work, in the lead. We began to march through heavy, clinging mud knee-deep; every step an effort. Along a twisting road, across a field that was worse—"Look out for shell holes!" Too late: they dragged me out of the watery pit. A snicker ran down the line. "A man fell in. He's in the army now!"

We came to a railroad, where the going was better. A whistle blew sharply ahead, we jumped aside to let a "dinkey" and train of flat-cars pass. "What's a train doing here?" Out of the darkness a voice: "Delivering bonbons for the Boche. Going to be some barrage, believe me! See you in Metz!" Somehow our group got lost. For two hours we groped around, falling headlong into invisible trenches, crawling painfully through barbed-wire entanglements. We came out at last, in tatters and soaked to the skin, on the crest of a hill. We huddled down under a roadbank. It was five minutes to one. We counted the seconds.

AT ONE o'clock came the deep-throated "boom" we awaited. We followed up the sound of the shell, saw the flash as it fell on the flank of the Butte. The night was suddenly alight, and quivering with sound. All the great cannon that for months had lain hidden and silent for this hour, were vomiting fire and steel upon Montsec. The wet sky grew red with the blaze of it. Fountains of white flame outlined the ridges. The towering Butte was a cataract of fire.

But, strange, there was no answer from the German guns. It seemed, to be sure, that nothing could live and move through that inferno across the valley, and yet—! Montsec was a fortress perfected through four years of German occupation; when the French attacked, they had been greeted by a very fury of artillery. The enemy must know we were lying there in waiting, and he had our range to a nicety; our ridge was pitted and furrowed, its villages shapeless ruins, from his fire of other days. The silence, as the hours dragged on, seemed ominous: he was holding back, that the storm, when it burst, might be the more terrible. We almost wished he would open up and get it over.

The rain ceased. Dawn came, gray and cold, a keen wind blowing. We could make out our battalion lying a little behind us on the slope. "Now," we said, "the Boche will begin." But he did not.

A whistle cut faintly through the din of guns. The scattered groups on the slope stiffened into line, the open formation our Americans know and use so well. Down on the plains the first wave jumped from the trenches and began to move forward. "Now!" And I mentally braced myself. Nothing happened. The second wave topped the crest and began the descent; we swung in behind it; and still that ominous silence from the enemy guns. Then the whole malicious German plan dawned on me. They would wait until we were all over and well down the hill, then put a box barrage around us and cut us to pieces. And they could do it. We had at least three kilometers to go, all in full view from those frowning heights. Not a man of us could reach them alive. The third and last wave came over. . . . It is very hard to be brave in the cold gray of dawn. I became acutely conscious that I was very wet and very cold. I shivered. My teeth chattered noisily.

"G-go-goodness!" I said, "b-b-but—that wind is c-c-cold!"

"Shucks!" said the man beside me, "I'm scared too!"

BEFORE us lay the Montsec panorama we Americans had been wistfully viewing for nearly a year. The wide valley-plain dotted with groves and ruined villages, Boucainville, Richecourt, Seichprey of bloody memory for one Yankee division; beyond, rising steeply, the wooded ridges, and in their van, flying streamers of smoke, the grim Butte. Over the plain rolled the barrage, the tanks, the first wave, pigmy-like under the shadow of the hills. Down our slope moved the second and third waves. All the infantry of the division was in sight at once, bayonets fixed; three parallel hedges of bristling steel moving steadily toward the heights. Overhead airplanes darted and circled. The man beside me, forgetting that he was scared, caught his breath. "I want to live to remember this."

A few shells burst over the first wave. That was all until the wood at the right of Butte was entered. The Germans were there, and a few machine gunners—as ever, the enemy's best soldiers—tried to put up a fight. A little later we passed over their dead bodies. The rest had but one thought—to surrender before it was too late. The astounding truth burst upon us. The enemy, overcome by the strength of our preparations, was running away! This formidable fastness, four years impregnable, was being given up with only such fighting as rearguards could make.

Our spirits bounded sky-high. Expecting shambles, another Soissons or worse, we had found only a maneuver. The wind and exercise dried out our wet clothes. We grew warm; we were boys out on a holiday; we liked this war. Even the few wounded who trickled back from the first wave took their hard luck as a joke.

WE COMBED the woods. Then our regiment swung to the right, up the valley. All day we marched and maneuvered, moving with beautiful precision from objective to objective. Everywhere we found the same thing; for the most part a frightened, docile enemy, here and there a fanatic machine-gunner. When such an obstreperous one was encountered, the doughboys in front of him would flatten out, creep around to flanking positions, then pick him off with the rifle or dash in upon him from the sides. Or a tank would lumber casually toward him, spitting fire. Usually he saw the light; if he didn't—so much the worse for him! There was one who, having cried "Kamerad!" suddenly tried to turn his gun upon his advancing captors. It was very bad for him. The roar of our guns died down; there was no need to waste ammunition on an enemy who would not stand. Cavalry went around us and dashed ahead to cut off the fleeing Germans.

Nonsard, I think, had been set as a second day's objective for our regiment. Late in the afternoon of the first day the three waves reformed in the fields before the town—another picture to remember. The sun had come out and was setting in a sky of rose. Bayonets caught and flung back the gleam of it. At Vigueulles, to our left, great pillars of violet smoke rose from ammunition dumps the Germans had not had time to save; there was the merry crackle of thousands of harmlessly exploding shells. Jauntily we marched up to the town, just as our cavalry was disappearing at its other end; through it, and on into the woods beyond. There, cold and blanketless, hungry and supperless, but happier than kings may be, we halted.

That evening came the news: the left of our division had touched hands with an American division that had smashed through from the other side of the salient. Nearly fifteen thousand prisoners had been taken, more than one hundred guns. The St. Mihiel salient was a thing of the past.

Shortly after midnight I awoke from a doze, to find an old Frenchman replenishing my fire. He was weeping, and saying over and over to himself, "La grande liberation! La grande liberation!" The truth was beginning to dawn upon him.

OUR EDITORIAL PAGE

The Impulse Toward Christian Unity

ONE of the leading conservative ecclesiastics in America, Bishop Francis J. McConnell, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has just issued a message such as is needed for these times. His book, entitled "Democratic Christianity," is a call to all the denominations. Man's duty to God and to his fellowman, he explains, are the two parallels of democracy. They represent the double doctrine back of the democratic movement in the world today, the compelling power of which is now making itself felt in and out of the Church. "No institution will come out of this war," he writes, "in the same form in which it went in, and the changes will almost certainly be away from everything suggestive of autocracy. . . . The marks of the control of the people will be upon every social institution henceforth, . . . and the people who have passed through the fires of the battle will never turn back to the former days." Those "rising tides," he declares, are already playing round about the Church, and he asks: "Is autocracy or aristocracy or paternalism any more lovely in an ecclesiastical organization than in a political or industrial system? Is a belief which misses the great human values likely to be tolerated in a church after such creeds are cast out of secular circles?" Bishop McConnell frankly concedes that the theologian may not always be the best guide to those who are searching to find the living God. God must be brought nearer to men. We must feel that "a man battling for the right is battling for God's cause."

As to the Church itself, he asks: "Who owns it? Does it belong to the people? In the very beginning it came out of the heart of the people." Its leaders were farmers, fishermen, tentmakers. In every great forward step, the Church has advanced in response to popular opinion. Today, its critics assert, it is owned and controlled by capitalism, privilege, the upper class, for it takes its stamp from the character of the times. A still larger number, however, believe the Church in America thoroughly democratic. Nevertheless, the question is one to set every churchman to heart-searching. "The Church does not belong to men until they feel that its program is their program, and that they have some part in shaping it."

The Bishop, however, is no alarmist. He believes in church leadership, yet he is ever mindful of the fact that the Church exists for the people. Its democratization is vital to the nation. This does not imply the absence of authority, for that, too, is vital if Church Unity is to be realized. Those features of administration which have been a stumbling-block to many in the past must be simplified and harmonized, in order that "a more excellent way" may be adopted, leading to a closer union of the churches, by which all the great issues of the time, and especially those that conduce to the increase of moral and spiritual values, may be effectively dealt with.

Now, there is a question of leadership. "Are we ready for the coming of a new Moses, or a new Joshua, to lead the churches of America?" asks Dr. George Heber Jones, another outspoken churchman, commenting on the situation. Outside of distinctively church circles, the popular attitude before the war was one of religious neutrality. But all this has passed away. The war has not only made both religious and political neutrality impossible, but it has given evidence that the great military leaders, Foch, Haig and Pershing among them, are men of profound religious convictions, very far from being neutral or indifferent to the conditions of those around them. And now the nation is looking for leaders in the Church who have the courage as well as the capacity to deal with the religious and social needs of the new era.

The Pokebonnet and the Tambourine

MANY will learn with regret that the Salvation Army lasses whom we have grown accustomed to associate with the distinctive dress, the pokebonnet and the tambourine, are hereafter to wear costumes which are described as "more in accordance with dignity and strict business methods." This sacrifice, which we are told that up-to-date efficiency demands, will take away what has come to be regarded everywhere as the distinguishing marks of the Salvation Army. Both red bonnet-band and instrument have served their purpose well in helping the Salvationist to win universal welcome. They have helped to draw listening crowds to hear the Gospel message on street corners; they have been no insignificant factors in hushing the clamor of the dance hall, while winning a way to the hearts of those who could hardly be reached otherwise. Nothing like them has been devised for drawing the interest of street crowds in New York. In a thousand ways they have been helpful in making the Salvationist welcome.

When the Salvationists came to New York some thirty years ago, as a little company of men and women under a captain, they found it difficult at first to obtain a hearing. One night, to everybody's surprise, the doors of one of the most notorious dives on the East Side were flung open to them. When they entered, the singing, dancing, boxing and drinking instantly ceased. For the next half-hour or more the place echoed for the first time with the songs of salvation. The message of divine grace was given to the gamblers and drinkers and criminals. There were among those who went home that night some who never forgot throughout their lives these radiant-faced men and women, with their songs and their straight-from-the-shoulder appeals to the souls before them; nor the wonderful "experiences" they related in language so direct and simple that all could understand. How much of their welcome was due to the tambourine, the pokebonnet, the quaint dresses, the red hat-band, as well as the smiles and the stirring music, may be gathered from the fact that the original costume and its accompaniments have been retained during all the years that have passed since then. Miss Evangeline Booth, now Commander, did not disdain to use them at the beginning of her public career.

Audiences are of many kinds, and a dignified church meeting is widely different in its tastes from the promiscuous gathering of the street. Nor should it be forgotten that some of the most brilliant workers in the Salvation Army began by shaking the tambourine.

Ingratitude to the Soldiers

WHEN our brave boys went away to the war by hundreds of thousands, service flags were proudly displayed in every busy center of population. Many of these are still flying. The troops marched away with the best wishes of all Americans, and in very many cases with the assurance that their employers would welcome them back to their old places when the war ended. In many instances that pledge has been honorably kept; in others it has been shamelessly neglected, and the soldiers have been driven to hunt employment elsewhere. The sacrifices they made, the dangers and discomforts they endured, seemed to count for nothing to some minds. How any employer could claim to be regarded as a loyal American citizen and yet assume such an attitude of indifference it is hard to understand. How would such a man feel if the war had gone the wrong way, and if the announcements in the daily papers had been those of defeat? But we have come victoriously out of the war. Business is confident and trade prospects are bright in all directions. Yet, had it not been for the splendid courage of our troops and the matchless skill of their leaders—who declare that our American boys made "the best soldiers in the world"—the other thing might have happened, and the business men who are now turning down the soldiers' applications would have been confronting a totally different situation. Let them think it over, revise their attitude and be just to the men who won the war. Give our returning heroes a chance to get back to work! They saved the whole situation for America as well as for Europe, and they are deserving of all the consideration we can bestow. The business man owes to the soldiers a debt he can never repay. They fought his battles and won them for him, and now he must help them to fight their own.

During the war the government encouraged a movement to discourage the buying of goods other than necessaries, in order that factories might be released for war work and money saved for Liberty bonds and War Saving stamps. Now with the war ended, the factories have no war orders and cannot employ men unless they have work to do. There is setting in an official movement to encourage thriftful buying of things needed or desired, and thus to create a demand for goods which will result in orders to factories and jobs for idle men. A great many people are still deferring purchases, anticipating a return to pre-war prices, but students of economics and of the present situation say that wage levels reached during the war will largely remain and that there may be no radical slump in prices, at least not soon. Prices will come down slowly. You won't save much by postponing intended purchases, and the money you spend today may help some man to get a job tomorrow. The states are planning to spend millions in good roads and public works, but these projects, too, move slowly. An immediate revival of American business would c with a return to normal traffic across the retail coun

The Church and the World

THERE seems to be an opinion prevalent in tain quarters that influences are at work w may impede the movement for Church Un and possibly postpone it indefinitely. Discus this aspect of the subject, a metropolitan religi weekly takes the view that in the progress alre made, much that is helpful at this time has alre been accomplished. As for the millions of men have fought at the front, a large proportion of th seem indifferent. It then says, very bluntly, that property, trust funds, offices and traditions that st in the way of unity among the churches everywh and not great religious convictions. This implies substance, that the business end of our religious ganizations is of such vast and overshadowing imp tance that they are not likely to do anything that jeopardize it.

There is unquestionably an element of truth these statements, and also a reminder of the striki message that was addressed to the ancient churc mentioned in Revelation. Some of the churches our day are wedded to wealth and tied to traditi They are rich in this world's goods, however p they may be in spiritual things, and they are bou to stick together in defense of what they now ho Under such conditions, unity in the largest sense ca not enter seriously into their thoughts.

If this were absolutely true that the churches we bound up with the world and its gifts, it would for one of the saddest situations imaginable. Fort nately, it is not true of the Church as a whole, wh ever it may be of some of its individual branches. W have faith in the Christian churches of America. W believe that they place their devotion to the religi of Jesus Christ and their love of souls above ever thing else. It would be a spiritual disaster if th Church failed, as a whole, to recognize what is goi on in the world today. And as long as God giv inspiration and courage to strong souls to stand fort with a message, that message will not pass unheede

Religious Freedom

ONE of the significant signs of the times is foun in the request which has been made to th Peace Congress to incorporate in the constitu tion of the League of Nations a provision guaranteein religious liberty to all the peoples. A representativ organization in England was the first to urge th incorporation of a clause assuring full religious libert and freedom of worship for all creeds that are no antagonistic to public morals. In our own land w have enjoyed the fullest religious liberty ever sinc the foundation of this government. In the Britis empire and its colonies persecution for religion's sak has long been a thing of the past. Many of the conti nental countries, however, have had a bitter experi ence, through the malevolent oppression of weak an defenseless religionists who differ from the religion o the state. Jews, Armenians and Greeks have suffere spoliation, deportation and death by thousands be cause of hostility among the so-called religions. With the new freedom, old antagonisms would die out The Christians of Persia, Asia Minor and the Caucasus, the Jews of Russia and Turkey, would be no longer in peril of pogroms and massacres. Christianity, especially in those countries where it has been under the ban, would develop rapidly under toleration, and in the Far East—in those lands where it has encountered the greatest opposition—it would make amazing headway. We trust to see a declaration on the subject inserted in the League constitution before it is finally adopted.

Religious Statistics Next Week

IN THE next issue of the Christian Herald we will publish the Religious Statistics of the United States, showing the standing of all the religious bodies of the country in the last twelve months. Dr. H. K. Carroll, who has done this work for nearly thirty years, and who prepared for the government the first complete religious census ever taken here, is the compiler. For several years past this important task has been undertaken by him for the Christian Herald. In the present instance, certain new features arising out of the war will appear, which have a special value in view of the movement for Church Unity. We would suggest that our readers inform their friends of the coming publication, as they may desire to secure copies for themselves.

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted By FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D. D.

John Barleycorn's Funeral

THE Anti-Saloon League held a burial service for John Barleycorn at the New Auditorium, Newark, N. J. Women dressed in white represented the states that had already ratified the amendment. New Jersey, represented by a woman in black, was the only mourner at John's bier. Samuel Wilson was the undertaker and Fillmore Condit delivered the oration, which follows: "Death always seems sudden, startling. Even when we watch weeks or months by the bedside of the dying, though we note the failing strength, the increasing pallor, the fading vitality, when the end comes, the last twitch of the eyelid, the last gasp, the last low gurgle, always startles us. It was so when John Barleycorn passed away. Looking back at his long sickness, we now know that he had been dying twenty-five years. We did not realize it. He did not know it. His nearest and dearest friends had no thought that the end was coming. When the Anti-Saloon League was organized, when the ten million children learned about him at school, when the United States Supreme Court declared against him, when the great business interests turned away from him, when the doctors forsook him, we should have known that his grave was being dug, but we did not. Hope springs eternal. John thought he would get well, even after he was half dead, after he had been driven away by over half our population and from over eighty per cent. of our national area. Although his life was fast ebbing away, he still hoped and his friends still hoped, after Congress submitted the Prohibition amendment in 1917, after fifteen states had ratified last year, and even when he was dead up to his neck twenty days ago. It is over. John is gone, and there are no flowers for the funeral." We have only given the introductory to Mr. Condit's eloquent funeral oration over John. The whole address is of genuine humor, such humor as is part of a glorious national jubilee. We do not know what text Mr. Condit took for his quaint sermon, but this would have been an appropriate one: "Weep not for the dead, neither bemoan him." (Jer. 22 : 10.)

Bible Saved Soldier's Life

THE men's Bible class of the First Methodist Church of Annapolis, Maryland, presented 240 copies of the New Testament to the soldier boys going out from that city for France. In the battle of the Argonne a piece of shrapnel struck Corporal James V. Abbott in the left breast, and would certainly have killed him if the Testament which he had in his coat pocket had not stopped it. Every page and both the covers were shattered, but the soldier's life was saved. What a symbol this is of the protection which the Gospel provides against the missiles hurled by Satan against the soul! And what a blessed protection it has been to the spiritual life and morals of our dear soldier boys, in the midst of their terrible temptations! The Bible stopping the bullet calls to mind a part of the armor of the soldier of the Cross: "Stand, therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness." (Eph. 6 : 14.)

Echidna in Zoo

IN THE Bronx Zoological Park there is a rare animal, an echidna, which they call Nellie. She is what is called in Australia a porcupine anteater. She is about seventeen inches long and is armed with spines, which protect her against enemies, enable her to fasten herself strongly against the ground and with her claws to dig in the earth with marvelous rapidity. Her keeper, Charles Snyder, demonstrated her digging capacity by catching her by the tail with her head down and dropping her into a box full of hard dirt. He put her down in one end of this box. She got into action at once, and with spines as well as claws tackled the soil. In an amazingly short space of time she was half buried, and had made a hole big enough for a respectable living-room. "Here, Nellie! here, Nellie!" called Snyder, accompanying his words with a chirping sound. The echidna promptly emerged from the hole and looked inquiringly up at Snyder. "You see she comes when I call," he said proudly, and, as though she understood, Nellie came forward and snuggled against his hand. The head keeper said: "It is wrong to think these animals have no intelligence. They have, and here is the best test of it." He carefully put her down on the floor of the cage. She remained motionless and looked at her friend with her bright little eyes. "Now, Nellie," said Snyder slowly, "I want you to roll up." Nellie looked inquiringly, and the keeper repeated his request. Then she rolled up into a formidable bundle with her spines bristling outward. "Unroll!" commanded Snyder, and Nellie obeyed. The echidna lays a soft-shelled egg about half an inch long, which is placed in her pouch. The young echidna leaves the pouch as soon as its spines begin to appear. Like the kangaroo, it is very rarely that two young are born at one time. The animals are more or less nocturnal. This creature has been equipped by the Creator with the means of securing food, making its home in the ground, and defending itself with its sharp quills, and with an instinct which points to the intelligence of man appointed by the Almighty as the ruler of the earth to "have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth." (Gen. 1 : 28.)

R

2315

51918

Editor "The Christian Herald"

323

Bible House

New York City

U. S. America

arrived at CH Office Mch 1-1919

Post Haste in War Time

DURING the war complaints of slow mail deliveries were universal. This envelope contained a letter written and mailed by Rev. Alexander Robertson, D.D., the celebrated Bible scholar, author and teacher, in Venice on August 24, 1916. This was just at the beginning of the time of Venice's greatest peril, when Austrian bombs were falling thickly upon the city, doing great damage. The letter which was received on March 1, 1919, at the Christian Herald offices in New York, took two years and six months on the way! The usual time under normal conditions would be about six weeks. It must have had some strange experiences, for the envelope is covered back and front with the marks of censorship, with the stampings of the different post offices through which it passed since 1914–1915. Our foreign mail from many countries has been subjected to long delays, but this letter from Venice makes a record which probably is unequaled. We will publish extracts from the letter in an early issue of the Christian Herald. In olden times mails were carried by men on foot, and afterward by men riding an ox, donkey or horse. Royal mail was sometimes carried by chariot, rowboat, or sailing ship, but no mail of history has such a slow record as the letter just received by this paper. Letters of ancient times were written on tablets of wood or metal, but oftener on the skins of animals and on papyrus, the writing-paper of the most enlightened nations of old. Some of the best literature of the Bible and some of the most important events of sacred history have been conveyed by means of letters. Some of these in the Old Testament from one king to another, and those in the New Testament full of faith, truth, love and wholesome doctrine are included in God's written volume and are counted by his children as a part of his revealed will to them. The attempt of a destructive criticism to cut these letters out of the Sacred Book or discount their importance is not looked upon with favor by the devout student of the Scriptures. It would be a very different Bible without the epistles of the apostles preserved to us in the sacred canon. The apostle Paul thus refers to one of his letters: "Ye see how large a letter I have written unto you with mine own hand." (Gal. 6 : 11.)

Such a Pity!

SUCH a pity! Not that so many people were killed or families rendered destitute or individually oppressed, but that a mother and her two children are unable to live on an income of $18,000 a year and have to get official application for more, for current expenses! A rich man died suddenly and left an income of $10,000 a year to his wife and $4,000 a year each to his sons, sixteen and eighteen. After raking and scraping and economizing they find it impossible to get along, and they have asked for $9,000 additional to their allowance. Two items of expense in the schedule filed, were $1,000 to each of the boys for automobile expense, and other items were in keeping with these. Such extravagance is demoralizing to the boys and to American life. It is too bad to tempt the boys, as so many of the sons of the rich are tempted, with those habits of luxury and indolence that will make them smaller and less valuable members of society. There is this story of a spendthrift which Christ tells in the parable of a rich man who gave his son his patrimony, which was a very bad thing for him to do, and whose spendthrift habits are thus mentioned: "And there wasted his substance with riotous living." (Luke 15 : 13.)

Coal Tar Befouls Water

THE citizens of Milwaukee put up a serious protest against its water commissioner on account of the foul-smelling and bad-tasting city water. It was thought at first that the pollution was produced by chemicals used by the Water Board for disinfecting the water, but a careful examination revealed the fact that the cause of the trouble was two plants, one three and the other nine miles away, which manufactured coal tar products. The nuisance has been abated. How often have diseases and death been scattered through the water supply, and how careful each city should be that our supply be pure! Fortunately, the finest expert chemists are employed by our cities. Water is so necessary to life that the Bible refers to it as a type of life. Christ thus refers to himself as the fountain of spiritual life: "But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." (John 4 : 14.)

Hens Kept Up Late

PROF. JAMES E. RICE of the department of poultry husbandry at Cornell University has just announced that hens will lay more eggs when they are kept up late at night; that tests carried on at Cornell during a period of forty-eight weeks have proved that lights in chicken coops increase egg production. The coops were kept lighted until nine o'clock every night during the test, and the egg totals showed that one hundred hens and pullets in the lighted chicken house produced one hundred and twenty-five dozens more eggs than the chickens in the unlighted coops that went to bed early. The reason he gives for this increased laying capacity was that they had more time to eat. It was claimed that this lighting system would prolong the laying in the autumn and winter at a time when eggs would be higher in price. Christ thus refers to the care of the mother hen for her chickens to illustrate the tender shelter of his love: "How often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!" (Matt. 23 : 37.)

Problems of Industrial Readjustment

The Governors of Leading States Present Their Views

New York Seeks Solution in a Reconstruction Commission

By ALFRED E. SMITH

Governor of New York

THERE is no problem to which I have given more thought and attention than to the important question of industrial readjustment.

My first message to the Legislature indicated my interest in the subject, and I had in mind the creation of a Reconstruction Commission which would make a thorough investigation into all matters with reference to the industrial problem. At a later date I transmitted to the Legislature a message in which I announced the appointment of the Commission, the personnel of which gave every assurance of a most thorough investigation into the vital problems affecting the industries.

I was most desirous of seeing that all public improvements, in so far as they were governed by the State, should be expedited, and on February 21 I issued a proclamation urging the civil divisions of the state to proceed as rapidly with their public works as their funds will permit, to the end that labor may be employed and business stimulated.

Alfred E. Smith.

Never a More Conscious Thought of Fellow-Man Service

By JAMES M. COX

Governor of Ohio

WITH every ounce of our energy given to the production of material and the supply of man power for a speedy winning of the war, it became manifest to us in responsible place that there would be needed close application to industrial readjustment when the war had been won.

The period of readjustment is now here. The soldiers are coming back to civilian life. Work must be found for them. New and proper activities are to be found to replace the feverish war work preparation. This can largely be provided, for the time being, in the work of public improvements, which has been sadly neglected for the major task.

Our country was never in more prosperous condition. There never was a more conscious thought of fellow-man service. Application of directing energy will provide the easy means of readjustment.

James M Cox

Cost of Living Must Go Down With Wages

By SIMON BAMBERGER

Governor of Utah

IT IS my opinion that one of the items most vital to readjustment is that of revision of the cost of living on a downward scale in keeping with the reduction of wages. It is exceedingly difficult to offer a satisfactory explanation for the reduction in wages while food prices remain firm or advance. At the same time it is too big a proposition to be attempted by any one state.

In Utah we are attempting to aid in the industrial readjustment through public work to furnish buffer employment. In Salt Lake City and Salt Lake County bond issues aggregrating three and a half million have been authorized to carry on public work. The state itself contemplates the expenditure of about five million on road work during the next biennium. Besides the five million which the state plans to expend on road work, it is expected that approximately two and a half millions will be furnished for similar purposes by the Federal Government. We expect also that a bond issue of one million dollars will be authorized to cooperate with the Federal Government in reclamation and soldiers' settlement work.

Simon Bamberger

Hope Lies in Preservation of Equality of Opportunity

By SAMUEL R. McKELVIE

Governor of Nebraska

I CAN see but one question involved in industrial readjustment: viz., the preservation of equality of opportunity among all of the citizens of our Country.

It was upon this principle that our nation grew to its present strength, and it is upon that principle that it will be enabled to survive.

Samuel R McKelvie

Vast Production Required to Supply Our Home Markets

By W. L. HARDING

Governor of Iowa

IT IS difficult to see hard times when the stupendous yield of the country is selling at practically double prices.

Almost all the talk of readjustment refers to the labor situation. The government took the lead during the war in putting the wages of its four million laborers up to heights undreamed of heretofore. Manufacturers of government supplies followed the government lead. They kept a little in the rear but they moved up, and all other employers moved their wage scale up in proportion.

There is no real labor question in the United States between right-minded employers and right-minded employees. There is no real occasion for alarm or anxiety over the labor employment situation in this country at this time.

Factories are opening up all over the country and preparing not for ordinary production but for extraordinary production. In a very few weeks now the production of building material will commence to catch up for the three slack years, and shortly farming operations will begin.

The real labor question looming up ahead is that of shortage of labor.

Immigration is now over four million under normal in this country, and at the present time there is a strong movement throughout the country of emigration back to the lands from which many of the people came.

The question of wages must be left to natural laws, the law of supply and demand. If there are those in this country who think so great a question as wages can be propped up by artificial laws, they have something to learn.

Fortunately, wages follow the general trend of farm products and raw materials, and these must descend gradually to the normal plane.

We are fortunate in this, that wages will seek their own level. The thirty million workers in the United States are the greatest and best buyers of manufactured products, and they must have the cash to buy with.

One splendid thing in the readjustment period is the insistence by organized labor that wrong-headed employers treat their help humanely. Indications are plenty that great progress along this line is being made.

The workmen make a mistake by trying to make wrong-headed employers humane by law. It cannot be done. You can prevent some men from doing inhumane things by law, but you cannot make them humane that way. You can make them seem humane by making inhumanity repugnant to public policy and community sentiment.

The war disrupted our markets for manufactured goods in many ways. It stopped the people from buying certain things. It took the people's money to finance the war. It prohibited building and cut off foreign trade.

The vast majority of American manufacturers find their best market right here in the United States. We have here one hundred and ten million good Americans, all good earners and all good spenders. We know what they want. Give us peace and normal times and the American manufacturer need not worry about his market.

Volumes upon volumes are being written these days about foreign markets. There are two kinds of foreign markets; those that take our goods just as we usually make them, and those that want us to fashion some queer thing in some foreign way to suit some foreign demand.

The foreign trade that takes our goods as we make them is all right, except that it means costly packing, slow returns, and hard financing. If a Russian, a Chinaman, or a South American wants our machines, our shoes, or something of our manufacture, and is willing to pay for all the trouble, we should deal with him, but when it comes to making some special machine or special shoe for this hard, slow, and far-away custom, why worry, when we have all we can do at home?

We are constantly being informed of the marvelous way Germany, Japan, and England cater to Uruguay and Siam and their needs. The inference is that we should be ashamed of our sloth and get into the game.

W L Harding

Individual Initiative and Ambition Must Reassert Themselves

By JOHN H. BARTLETT

Governor of New Hampshire

WE ARE making too much of the question of readjustment of industries and not enough of the question of the readjustment of the American mind and American sentiments.

To be sure they go somewhat hand in hand. We will never get back to the pre-war conditions. When we sober off, however, there will be an industrial period of great prosperity.

If we ever become anything like America before the war in respect to industrial prosperity, it will be because our Governmental functions have divorced themselves from business and allowed individual initiative and ambition to assert themselves again.

John H. Bartlett

We All Must Recognize Our Interests Are in Common

By FRANK O. LOWDEN

Governor of Illinois

THE work of reconstruction will be quite as difficult as the work of the war period. It will require infinite patience, for we shall not have the stimulus to effort and sacrifice which the war furnished.

We saw in the darkest days of the war that our dangers were common to us all and therefore stood solidly together. We must now recognize that in reconstruction our interests are common interests and we must refuse to be drawn apart.

No reconstruction will last unless founded upon the principles which gave victory to our arms. Justice, righteousness, human brotherhood and dependence upon the God of our fathers were our strength. Reconstruction must be shaped by these same ideas if we are to have an abiding peace.

A democracy resting upon anything else is no more secure than a throne. A majority can no more be cruel or unjust, and escape punishment, than can a king.

Frank O Lowden

Conditions Will Adjust Themselves in Return of Private Enterprise

By CALVIN COOLIDGE

Governor of Massachusetts

THE question of industrial readjustment is how to get the government out of, and private enterprise into, business. They cannot co-exist.

Industrial conditions cannot be half natural and half artificial.

We must choose between self-government and socialism.

All that is needed is the application of the principle that the people of America are able to warm, feed, clothe and govern themselves.

Let the business of the people be done by the people.

Calvin Coolidge

General Pershing—A Personal Glimpse

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

"THE General doesn't give any interviews," they told me in the outside office. "He couldn't! For everybody in the world, almost, wants to interview him. issues a news bulletin to the press ery so often. That's all he can do. hy, if he gave an exclusive interview to e newspaper, every other newspaper uld expect—"

I looked wistfully at the great tight-it mahogany door that divided the tside office from the inner one. Some-ere behind those solid panels sat Gen-l Pershing—the general who has iled for the last two years at all Amer- from magazine page and moving-cture screen—smiled though he was ding an army in the crisis of a world-uggle.

"Of course he's right," I said slowly. And, if he gave one paper an interview, e others would be quite justified in pecting something too. He's quite ht. But oh," I added with a rush, I could only see him, I'd have a real essage to give to the mothers who read y page—the mothers who have sons the army."

The aide who was a major looked at e aide who was a lieutenant. Then ey both looked at me. And I, with y eyes upon the great door, tried to ok pathetic. Finally the aide who as a major spoke.

"Well," he said slowly, "if that's all u want—"

"Perhaps"—it was the lieutenant—if you come back in an hour—"

"Of course," the major interrupted, we're not promising anything. But—ell, come back."

CAME back in an hour. I tried to come back casually—quite as if I dn't been waiting very near the door the headquarters for some fifty-nine inutes. I hadn't wanted to be late, nd it is ever so easy, in Paris, to be te. I came back to the door of the uter office and knocked with a half ervous hand. The lieutenant was sitting at a desk busily writing. He looked p and smiled at me as I stood in the oorway.

"Come in," he called. "And if you on't mind waiting about ten minutes, he General will see you!"

I couldn't think of anything in par-icular to say. For I hadn't, up to that moment, really expected to see the Gen-ral. It was only by a wild chance that had learned of his stopping in Paris or a few hours; a wilder chance that had ent me in a taxi, without even putting n my best frock or hat, to his city head-uarters. And now—I was going to see im in ten minutes!

"Mind waiting!" I gasped, and aughed shakily.

The lieutenant laid down his pen.

"You'll like the General," he told me; 'he's real. We, who are near to him, re devoted to him. And being devoted means a good bit more than being loyal! He's so splendid—"

"Is he as wonderful," I questioned, "as he looks—in the movies?"

The lieutenant laughed.

"More wonderful," he told me—"much more wonderful!"

"He's a very great man," I said, looking down at the finger-tips of my brown gloves, and wishing that they were white.

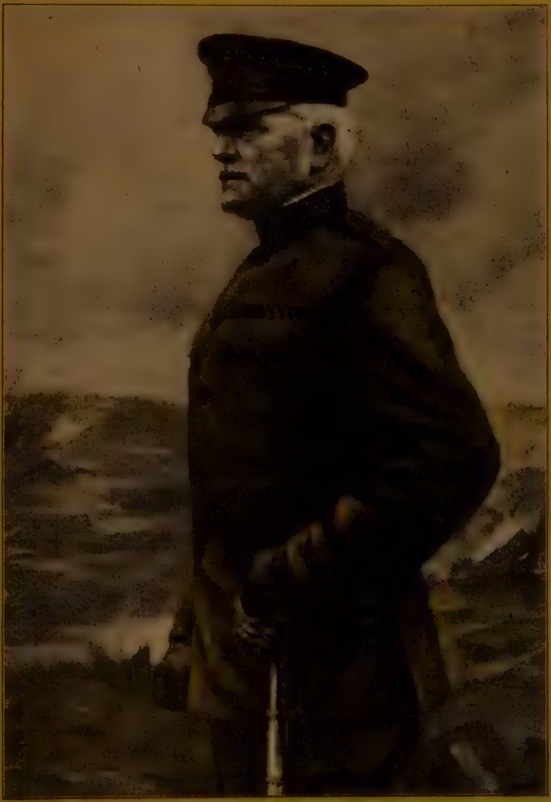
"Yes," agreed the lieutenant, "he is a great man. He's great enough to be just as kind to folk who aren't a bit important as to folk who are. Why, once when we were going through the street in the car, a very new soldier who didn't know anything about military discipline jumped up on the running-board and said:

"General, I want to shake hands with you!" And the General shook hands with him just as cordially as he would have shaken hands with the President.

The lieutenant stopped for a minute. And then, as I made no comment, he went on.

"The General was having his portrait painted when you were here before," he told me. "It seems as if all of the well-known sculptors and painters are doing pictures and busts of the General! You'd think that it would make a man feel sort of"—the lieutenant hesitated and laughed—"But he's just as pleased and interested in every bit of work that's done as you or I would be. We don't any of us think that the portraits do him justice—but that's because we're so fond of him. We don't feel as if anything can do him justice—"

"It's almost strange to hear you talk that way," I said. "I always thought that folk were very much in awe of a man who held such a high position. I thought that no one ever got near enough to a general to feel really fond of him!"



John J. Pershing.

"That's the wonderful thing about our General," the lieutenant answered, and I wish that you could have heard him say "our." "You can't help feeling near to him! There's something about him that makes you want to tell him your troubles, that makes you know that he'll understand—and sympathize. There's a certain simplicity about him that, mixed with his calm assurance and efficiency, makes a rather wonderful combination—and a decidedly unusual combination. Very few people are big enough to feel and inspire such a personal—"

There was an interruption.

The major had come into the room—by way of the great mahogany door.

"General Pershing will see you in a minute, now," he told me. And then. "Yes, he's big enough to feel a personal interest in every one of his men. He gives them little informal religious talks, sometimes. And he wants to know about how they're getting on. He's—"

A THIRD man came into the room. I think he was a colonel.

"The General will see you, Miss Sangster," he told me, "if you'll come this way—"

I rose hurriedly and followed him. And the big door swung to behind me. And I crossed a still anteroom to another smaller door. The third man, who was at least a colonel, opened it softly, and mumbled something, and went out—closing it just as softly behind him.

General Pershing was standing with his hand outstretched in friendly greeting. As I laid mine in it, I was conscious that he was taller and broader than I had supposed. He gave the impression, in that conventional office, of one who has lived much in the open; who has known long plains and mist-hung mountain heights, and the glow of the sunset sky in far places. And then, all at once, he smiled, and I forgot quite suddenly and completely that he was a great man and a general.

"I'm not scared of you at all," I said, and I didn't in the least mean to say it. "I thought I would be!"

General Pershing's smile grew deeper until it seemed like some silent sort of laughter.

"Of course you're not," he answered. "Why should you be?" And then, "You wanted to see me?" he questioned.

"It was so that I could write a message for the mothers back home," I told him hurriedly; "the mothers who have sons in your army."

"You know, of course, that I'm not giving interviews," General Pershing asked, "and so of course there's not a great deal that I can say. And I don't," he added after a minute, "like to talk much anyway!"

"I know that," I agreed. "I know that. That's why folk want to hear everything you do talk about. But I can say something to those mothers, can't I? I can say that you think their sons are regular men!"

ENTHUSIASM swept over the General's face, and I all at once knew why he was such a splendid leader.

"They're the best men in the world!" he told me—"the best in the world!" Then he laughed. "But don't get me talking about them or I'll be giving you an interview—and I can't!"

"'And you can't,'" I echoed.

"I wish"—there was a note of very real pride in the General's voice—"that you could walk down the line one day and see them snap up to salute—as I see them. Then you'd know!"

I didn't make any answer. For I was looking at the General—forming a mental picture of him to carry away with me. I was wondering how power and strength and vivid intellect and personal charm could be so distinctly allied to each other in one face.

"Then you'd know!" repeated the General again. "You'd know how I feel every time I see one of them on the street, or in any public place, or on parade. They're splendid soldiers—and they're splendid boys—and you can tell their mothers that they've made a splendid showing!"

"I do know," I answered. For I have more than once felt that thrill of gladness that is almost a feeling of ownership as I have seen our soldiers, bronzed, strong, sure of themselves, swinging along through the streets of a foreign city. I have felt the wonderful pride of race that an American feels—the pride in just being an American—as I have watched them come back, laughingly, from a vision of horror and death.

"How long have you been writing?" It was an abrupt question, the General's, and I started. "And do you like your work—this going off across the world, for instance?"

"It's work that I love," I told him. "And I've been writing for about seven years. I've never been away from home before. I—I miss my mother—"

"And she misses you, too, I guess!" General Pershing told me. He didn't seem the least bit like my erstwhile stereotyped idea of a general as he said it. "I guess she misses you!"

My time was up. I knew it. But somehow I didn't want to go.

"I don't know—" I began, and faltered—"how to thank you," I finished.

THE General took my fingers into a man-sized handshake.

"Don't thank me," he said. "Why, I'm interested in you. I like to meet people who are doing things!"

I went out through the first small door and the second larger door in a half-daze. The lieutenant came toward me, around the side of his desk.

"Well, what did you think of him?" asked the lieutenant.

I groped, a moment, for the right word. When one has met a really great man and has discovered that he is even greater than one imagined, words are hard to find. I resorted, finally, to the lieutenant's own description.

"Why, he's real!" I said.

SONG-MAKER

WRITTEN AND ILLUSTRATED BY REMINGTON SCHUYLER
(Ta-Tank-a Lut-a)

REMINGTON SCHUYLER, the author and illustrator of this story, is a celebrated painter of the American Indian. He has lived with several tribes and is intimately familiar with their customs and traditions. He is known by two names among the Oglalla and Loafer Sioux—Ta-tank'a Lut'a (Red Buffalo), on account of his red hair, and Peest-u-la (Slim Legs, i. e. a runner), because he could outrun most of the Indian boys of his own age

MOST of the tribesmen thought it great fun. Some of the jokers even secretly encouraged Song-Maker. A few said that either Song-Maker's flute or the wolf dog's howling wouldn't have been so bad. But together they were a great affliction. It was too much. Big Mouth more than any other objected to Song-Maker, his flute and his wolf cub.

"Something was wrong with a boy," he said, "who stayed up 'most all night and played badly on a broken flute."

So the talk sputtered and ran about the camp fires of the kinsmen of the Bear.

Big Mouth, chief of the Omahas, was not a lucky leader. Two winters before he had allowed his people to be caught in a long running fight. Scarcely half the kindred had escaped.

Yet somehow Big Mouth bewitched his followers. They followed him, although only ill fortune followed them.

Their buffalo drives the past fall had been failures. Now was grim winter upon them. There was no great supply of food for any one. Day by day the tireless hunters journeyed far in search of game. They returned empty-handed.

At this time Song-Maker was just fourteen winters old. He lived with his grandmother, Starlight, in a little tipi on the very outskirts of the camp.

The roots and berries Starlight had been able to gather the previous summer scarce supplied their scanty needs. Hunt as he might all day long, Song-Maker's kill of small game was hardly enough.

Song-Maker's dog, Singer, always went with him. The winter before he had caught him out among the broken hills. Singer had thrived under the care of Song-Maker. Many a time the boy had gone hungry that the puppy might eat. So this wild dog and lonely boy became inseparable.

Now the half-grown wolf could forage for himself. At times he even brought a rabbit into camp for Song-Maker to see. There were times this winter when Singer had pulled his master out of smothering drifts and led him safely home at night.

Early each morning Song-Maker visited his traps. He trudged manfully up among the windy buttes in hope of sighting a chance herd of buffalo.

The winter was not half done. Yet the tribesmen were drawing in their belts to keep their empty stomachs from protesting too much. Many grumbled inwardly. A few, more outspoken, said Big Mouth's medicine was no longer to be trusted. It had failed too often. Something had to be done. It was so bad, the storms and the hunger, that all talk of Song-Maker's flute was long since forgotten. They talked much of their empty stomachs and the "bad medicine."

Then one night Big Mouth dreamed again that Song-Maker was chief of the Omahas.

The very next day he called a council. It was agreed that the tribe must break camp or perish. In spite of the great drifts they would push southward. Big Mouth said there would have to be some sacrifice.

Starlight, Song-Maker's grandmother, would be a drag on the camp, and they needed all their strength to survive. It was better that one should die than that many should perish. They would leave her behind with a small store of broken wood and a bit of marrow fat and pemmican. Song-Maker could either stay or come along with the tribe. Thus Big Mouth spoke in council.

Pretty Hair, wife of one of the head men, when she heard of Big Mouth's judgment was mightily stirred. She talked with her husband far into the night. She was willing, she said, to adopt Song-Maker and Starlight.

Her husband, Strikes-a-Plenty, a kind man, after much meditation, thought they could arrange this. There was one condition, however. Song-Maker must not play his flute all the time. He liked songs, he said. Some day he hoped to have a boy like Song-Maker. But as a matter of discipline he thought there should be a limit to the piping.

So it was agreed. Early next morning Pretty Hair went in search of Starlight. She told her what Big Mouth had ruled and what her husband, Strikes-a-Plenty, had offered to do. Starlight sat thinking for a while. Then in a steady voice she said quietly, "It is of little moment to me, an old woman, whether I stay here or go on this new trail. More than a hundred winters have passed by my head. I am not afraid. My old heart goes out in gladness to you, sweet Pretty Hair, for offering to take Song-Maker. Some day he will brighten your days with his greatness as a wise chief and his goodness and gentleness as a man."

But after much talk Starlight agreed to go with Pretty Hair. When the young woman had left her she set about tying up her few possessions. She gathered her store of stone knives and arrow points. She made a bundle of the Buffalo spoons and gourd dishes. Toward midday all was ready.

Digging below the ashes of the little altar, she brought out two sacred shells. She carefully wrapped these in a piece of otter's skin along with several arrow points of curious manufacture. These shells and arrows her ancestors had brought from the land of the Great Water.

Often, to tease Starlight, Song-Maker had said, "When I become a man I shall take the trail to the rising sun and conquer the Iroquois and lead my people back to their ancient homes in the woods and mountains by the Great Water."

These ancient legends had made Song-Maker very anxious to grow up. Though but a boy he had toughened himself to withstand hardship. Often he practiced going hungry for a day at a time, even denying himself water. In this way he hoped to gain added prowess. He had developed into rather a scraggly boy with eyes larger than most. They were very keen. He had a way of seeming to look beyond and through things. With his flute he had learned to charm certain wild birds. Once he had coaxed an antelo within a few paces of him. He was a curio fellow.

So Starlight was thinking, as she careful bound up the sacred shells and arrows gether with a great sinew-backed bow call "Good Prey."

She sat gazing into the fire and smilin as she thought happily of Song-Mak The smoke curled gently up through t half light of the tipi and drifted out into t glad sunshine. Her life was near an en but in Song-Maker would live all the noble qualiti of his mother's ancestors.

Farther up the valley, Big Mouth went stealthil to work to discredit Song-Maker. He needed an adde excuse for leaving Starlight and her grandson behin Three times now he had dreamed the evil visio This last time it was worse than before.

His womenfolk were busy packing and gettin ready for the early morning start. In the secrecy o his medicine lodge he worked feverishly.

He gashed two large parfleches of marrow fat an buried some in the dust and litter of the floor. Th tattered remains he sprinkled with dirt and dragge around the small lodge. Then taking his second bes knife of black obsidian he broke it. He splintere three sacred medicine arrows.

Secreting them under his buffalo robe, he sauntere out and down the valley. In the bustle of packing h passed almost unnoticed. Only Pretty Hair saw hin slip by, and she questioned Strikes-a-Plenty.

"Why should the Medicine Chief be idling whe all are so busy? He ought to be in his lodge prayin for the welfare of this venture," she said.

As he approached Starlight's tattered lodge his keen ear caught the shrilling of a flute from far across the stillness of the snow-hushed prairie. Then a wolfish whine joined in.

Soon he would be free from that noisy boy and dog. So Big Mouth thought.

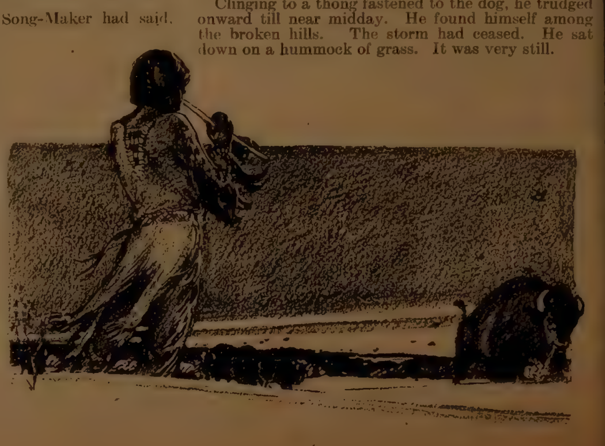
Just outside the lodge he paused. There was no movement inside. That was well. He silently lifted the skin covering and stepped in through the round doorway. Beside the dying fire sat Starlight. He halted sheepishly. Then he perceived that she was asleep. Her kindly wrinkled face was gently smiling. In her lap lay the sacred bundles.

Big Mouth furtively slid the ransacked parfleches behind the ragged side walls. He cast the broken knife and arrows on the dirt floor. He hurried out. Starlight still smiled and slept on, sitting there by the fire.

That morning Song-Maker had learned of Big Mouth's ruling. He was but a boy, and he loved his grandmother. His fingers clenched his little bow and arrows fiercely. He decided to march straight up to Big Mouth and fight him. His anger was so great that Singer slunk away and up onto the bleak prairie and howled.

Then an old saying of Starlight's came to mind. "A great chief is one who thinks many times before doing a great deed." So he plowed up the bluff and followed Singer.

Clinging to a thong fastened to the dog, he trudged onward till near midday. He found himself among the broken hills. The storm had ceased. He sat down on a hummock of grass. It was very still.



He began to play a little song. Soon he found himself playing something better. It was the buffalo song of his kinsfolk. As he sat playing he suddenly realized he was piping the song of the buffalo feast. The tribe were starving, and here he was playing so happy a tune. It was funny.

He looked around. Singer had cease howling and was watching something intently, the while sniffing the sparkling air. Far over the white desolation Song-Maker thought he saw dark specks moving to windward.

Singer began to quiver and growl in a curious manner, tugging at his leash.

Through the deep drifts boy and dog crept silently, slipping unseen from cover to cover. In the exposed places they burrowed through the snow. Singer's jaws were tightly bound so as to prevent his startling the game should they prove to be a herd of antelope.

From the crest of the last hill he got a clear view. In spite of the snow glare he saw them fairly. His heart leaped and sang as he made them out to be countless buffalo drifting along slowly. Mighty bulls trampled a trail. Little yellow calves plunged dizzily through the drifts after their mothers.

How it gladdened his heart! What a mighty hunter he would be when he slipped back to camp and warned the hunters! How his old grandmother would praise him as her mighty chief! The tribe wouldn't have to break camp. Starlight was saved.

He almost shouted in his happiness. But restraining his overflowing joy, he dragged Singer along behind him and wriggled quietly away till it was safe to stand upright and run.

With head down and feet flying they came bounding down the trail into the camp. Near the bottom they ran smack into a man. Dog and boy and man were one whirling heap of legs and arms and snow.

As they disentangled themselves Song-Maker tried to gasp out the good news. His voice froze as he saw Big Mouth towering above him. With war club raised, he called Song-Maker a thief and swung viciously at Singer with his weapon. Only the twisting backward leap of the wolf saved him from the club. This jerked Big Mouth off his feet again, for the leash was entangled in his legs. As he rose, spluttering, he struck blindly at the boy, roaring out a tumult of abuse.

Again Song-Maker tried to blurt out the good news, but found it necessary to seek safety in flight. Up the trail, down which they had come so gaily but a moment before, boy and dog dashed. An arrow whizzed by as they broke over the crest.

There he halted. Better to die, so that the tribe might hear the good news, than to run away like a craven coward. He peered over the edge of the cut bank. Big Mouth had not attempted to follow.

In the clear sunshine they saw him striding down through the camp. His voice came up distinctly. He shouted that Song-Maker had broken his medicine arrows. Singer had stolen his parfleches of marrow fat. And now when he had gone to reason with the boy, he, Big Mouth, had been attacked. He, chief of the tribe, had been outraged. He would have justice. Big Mouth had spoken!

For a while Song-Maker was overwhelmed with the injustice of it all. Here he was driven out when he had good tidings that would change all that unhappy village into rejoicing.

He was not a thief. He was not bad medicine. Nor was Singer.

He knew not what to do. Singer licked at his hand and nuzzled into his hunting-shirt, growling softly. Here at least was a faithful friend who did not think him a thief. It heartened him greatly.

A great thought came to him. He had seen the holy men the previous years go out with their pipes to lead the buffalo to the driving chutes. He knew from many old legends, and from having seen, what was necessary to be done.

Singer would spoil all his scheming if he were at large. Much as he regretted it, he lashed the dog to a wild plum tree and hurried away. He slipped across the prairie to where he had built a small lodge in a little cave among the buttes. He made fire with his bow drill and threw on handfuls of sweet grass. He choked and his eyes watered as the air grew dense with the pungent spicy smoke.

Through this smoke he moved his shirt and leggins and his flute. He rubbed his hair and body with handfuls of the dense smudge. He lay for a while close to the ground, breathing with difficulty. He prayed to Wa-kan, his god, to give him strength to do what was needful. Strength to lead the buffalo. Courage to be fearless when the last moments of the race were run. He hoped he might be holy enough to lead them and that his flute might prove good medicine. Then in a quick vision he saw the herd at the cliff's edge and pouring downward into the pens. He knew his prayer was answered.

He arose swiftly and slipped out. After the damp heat of the lodge he shivered in the slight wind. He hurried into the hills.

The buffalo were nearer the camp than when he had left them. This was good. They were feeding on a bit of prairie which the wind had drifted free of snow.

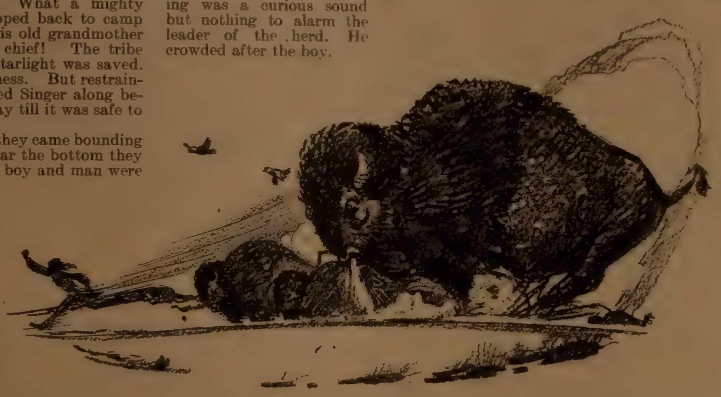
With his flute piping merrily he walked slowly over the crest toward the feeding herd. For a time he was not noticed. The wind was against him.

Then an old bull lifted his head and snorted. A few of the young bulls and cows drew together and waited. More of the herd saw him and sniffed uneasily. Their quivering nostrils could gain no strange scent in the keen air.

The flute quavered and murmured in a queer little tune that Song-Maker thought sounded like the noise of hurrying waters under the snow. The largest bull separated himself from the herd and came puffing up.

How the boy prayed to keep from being afraid! How bravely he tried to keep playing steadily! Gradually he swung his course toward the river's gorge.

The old bull swung also and sniffed deeply. Only the scent of burnt grass and sweet hay was on the air. Nothing in that to alarm a grown bull. No strange animal scent to this dust-like pillar that moved before. A sudden rush and his great horms could tear to shreds this weird thing that slipped so silently over the snow. That squealing was a curious sound but nothing to alarm the leader of the herd. He crowded after the boy.



Three more young bulls came along to see what it was all about. Then singly and in groups of five or a dozen the herd got slowly into motion and followed after the leaders.

Song-Maker's heart almost stopped beating once or twice when the animals' hot breaths seemed almost at his heels. He dared not look back. He dared not hurry too much, for that might scare them. He feared to stop blowing his pipe. So by turns he prayed Wa-kan and by turns he almost fell from sheer weakness.

He kept doggedly onward toward the prairie's edge, where was built the sturdy V-shaped stockade. His pace had imperceptibly quickened. The buffalo crowded after in a denser mass. Once the fringe on his leggins blew violently forward as an old bull snorted not a pace behind him.

With a fearlessness of utter despair he started to run slowly. The buffalo quickened to a trot and shuffled faster. Bit by bit the ponderous beasts gathered momentum. The clacking of their hoofs over the snowy places changed to a dull drumming on the bare spots. They were now not far from the wide-flung arms of the V-shaped stockade on the bluff's edge.

Song-Maker regretted that he had not called older and wiser heads to help him. Even if he was brave enough to lead them to the edge of the valley, still they might turn at the very brink and rush away on the back trail, and so be lost. These thoughts flashed through his mind as he speeded toward the jaws of the narrow chute.

The noise of the running buffalo grew mighty on the barren places and sank into a vast swishing sound, like wind in the trees, as they trampled the snow patches.

The air trembled in the fierce onrush.

Before the thundering oncoming herd, like a flash of pure spirit, sped Song-Maker. His flute was gone. His scraggly hair had come unbraided and streamed behind him. The sharp wind whistled past. His chest heaved with the terrific exertion.

Often in that last spurt he thought he would be ground under foot as he slipped and scudded before the close-pressing horns. He stumbled and went down. Over and over he rolled. Then miraculously he found himself on his feet and close to the cliff.

The pounding tumult behind him was fearful. Above it, like a soul in torment, came a long crescendo howling. It rose above the thunder of the herd and startled Song-Maker to a last effort.

He stumbled blindly to the left; jumped at the stockade and caught the top with one hand. By a superhuman effort he dragged himself up to safety as the stampeding herd rushed to the edge of the cliff.

There on the brink, high above the valley floor, the leaders tried to check their course. They reared, twisting grotesquely in the air, and plunged down, full one hundred feet.

Below, in the pen, Song-Maker saw a figure of a man running. It looked like Big Mouth. The first buffalo struck near him. Then he was lost in the smother of falling bodies. Clouds of snow and dirt and animals poured like a cataract onto the valley's bottom.

The air was filled with fierce bellowing and wild snorts and the squealings of the ill-fated herd. Jammed between the narrowing walls of the palisades, pushed irresistibly forward by the pressure from behind, they went over in countless numbers.

Over and above this awful confusion and staggering noise came from time to time the joyful barking of Singer. He snapped and bit at the hindmost of the herd, driving them implacably toward the cliff, and pressed them over. His timely arrival had given the added push from behind that had made the drive a marvelous success.

A few scattered bands broke away and fled back along the trampled trail to freedom.

As Song-Maker hung limply on the palisades, which creaked and splintered with the mighty pressure, he had seen the tipis belch forth men and women and dogs. The trails along the valley floor were littered with running figures gazing skyward as they ran. It was a miracle. Buffalo from out of the sky. Countless numbers. At last Big Mouth's medicine was good. Perhaps Song-Maker had been bad medicine. Now that he was driven away, the tribe had had a wonderful fortune showered on them.

Pretty Hair hastened down the valley to tell Starlight the glad news of the mighty kill. Starlight sat by the fire. It had burned out. She smiled happily. She seemed to be asleep. But her soul had passed to that Happy Hunting-Ground where there is no hunger or meanness and where the year is always in its youth. That land where the women are as bright as stars and never scold.

When some of the hunters climbed to the top of the trail to examine the splintered chute they found Song-Maker lying at the foot of the palisade. His face was streaked with grime and sweat. His clothing hung limply about his drooping figure.

Singer was nuzzling in his shirt and trying to tell him how glad he was that he had found Song-Maker. From his collar hung the tattered ends of the rawhide leash.

In Song-Maker's mouth was the broken remnant of the flute. It was now clear how the drive had come about.

Then those brave hunters picked up the little lad tenderly. They intended to face Big Mouth and force him to make peace with this little boy who had proved so mighty a leader of the buffalo.

But Big Mouth was nowhere to be found. Under the dust of his medicine lodge a vagrant dog had uncovered the remnants of the hidden marrow fat. Now they understood.

All that night they feasted and praised the bravery and holiness of the boy who had saved the tribe. Song-Maker lay sleeping in Pretty Hair's tipi, all unknowing the great honor that had come to him.

Next day they held a council. One old man took from out his sacred bundle a curiously carved flute. He said it had come from beyond the Great Water. It had been brought by men with hair that shone like the sun. It was older than any legend. He gave it to Song-Maker. He made a great speech and said that since this boy had done more than any man among them he should be given a warrior's name.

As Song-Maker sat there in the council lodge, among those mighty hunters and warriors, he fondled the beautiful ancient flute. He longed to get away, so that he might try this new treasure of his.

Singer, now become a dog of parts, had been stuffed with the choicest bits of meat and lay snuggled against his young master, gazing sleepily at the fire.

Even after Song-Maker had made his long journey to the Great Water and become a mighty chief with a warrior's name, some old men affectionately spoke of him still as Song-Maker. For often at the oddest times, and especially in moments of great danger, his flute could be heard trilling valiantly.

"Hey-mul-la." It is finished.

Concrete Roads
and your Coal Pile

WHETHER or not you have roast beef and lettuce salad for dinner, and other good things when you want them, may depend on roads—in fact, beef isn't roast beef without your coal pile—and your coal pile may depend upon roads.

C. H. Colby, President of the West Side Coal Co., Des Moines, Iowa. proves it. He also proves that the price of your coal may depend on a concrete road.

But Read What Mr. Colby Says:

"An 18-foot reinforced concrete road 8 inches thick has just been completed connecting our mines with the Des Moines city pavement on University Avenue.

"We have already contracted for the delivery of coal to the city for $1 per ton as against the present price of $1.25 per ton, which, with our present output of 200 tons, will mean a saving of $50 per day on delivery charges alone. This new price will go into effect as soon as the road is opened for traffic.

"I have been a strong advocate for the construction of this concrete road, and have paid approximately $2,500 of adjoining property owners' assessments, besides being the owner of eighty rods of said road, in order to have the work done at this time.

"With 15 years experience in concrete construction, I feel satisfied that we have an excellent piece of road. Our delivery problem has been solved for all time."

Any man who, like Mr. Colby, believes in assuming a great deal of the cost necessary to have a concrete road, must be convinced that

Concrete Roads Pay

PORTLAND CEMENT ASSOCIATION

ATLANTA
CHICAGO
DALLAS
DENVER
DES MOINES
DETROIT
HELENA
INDIANAPOLIS
KANSAS CITY
MILWAUKEE
MINNEAPOLIS
NEW YORK
PARKERSBURG
ST. LOUIS
PITTSBURGH
SALT LAKE CITY
SEATTLE
WASHINGTON

CONCRETE FOR PERMANENCE

PILLARS IN THE TEMPLE

A SERMON

By

*REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

TEXT—Rev. 3:12. "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God."

HERE are some of the characteristics of the victorious life, the life that is inspired and fashioned by the Lord. Here is the primary sign: "I will make him a pillar in the temple of my God." He who is endowed by the conquering Spirit is to become a pillar, in contrast to "a reed shaken with the wind." How easily some men are swayed! The wind of fashion blows upon them, and they go with the drift! The wind of persecution storms upon them, and they bend and yield before the blast.

But he who lives in communion with the triumphant Lord is rendered "unmovable"; he receives the capacity "to stand, and having done all, to stand."

But now mark the character of this strength. He is to be "a pillar in the temple." It is to be sanctified strength. Strength may be immoral. Mammon himself is gigantic, terrific and overwhelming. There is nothing so destructive as unhallowed might. Men who have combativeness without conscientiousness, energy without reverence, engine power without a far-seeing wisdom, are fraught with infinite destruction.

But the character which the Lord creates is as a pillar of the temple. Its obstinacy is enlightened, its resistance is reverent. And so this gracious promise has reference to the making of a character possessed by powers of holy resistance; it describes men and women who are the homes of moral energy which stand against all encroachments of evil.

We have, in the immediate context, suggestive hints which are descriptive of the pillar-like character of the saints. "Thou didst keep my word." Note the figure. It is that of a custodian defending treasure. It is that of a sentinel treading the prescribed beat; it is that of a soldier wrapping the treasured flag around him and refusing to be beaten. "Thou didst keep my word!" Thou didst defend my teaching; thou didst abide by my conception and my ideals. When the policies of the world came in like a ravenous horde, or when expediencies sought to allure thee, or when subtle devices and comfortable subterfuges opened at thy very feet, thou didst remain true to my Word.

This is the pillar-like character, retaining the ideal in the midst of armies of indolent compromise. "And thou didst not deny my name." The pillar-like character is not won by bribes, nor softened by jeers, nor dismayed by threats. Oh, how easily we are tempted to deny and betray the Lord! The world offers us a bit of gold lace and we are undone. "They covenanted with him for so much." That is a suggestion before which the saints of God are invincible.

THERE is a grand pillar-man described in the opening chapter of the book of Jeremiah. See the strength of the pillar. "As an iron pillar against the kings of Judah, against the princes thereof, against the priests thereof, against the people thereof." Truly this was an iron pillar, no painted lath made to look like iron! God made Jeremiah a pillar against governmental wickedness, "against the kings of Judah"; a pillar against ecclesiastical corruption, "against the priests thereof"; a pillar against popular madness, "against the people thereof." Jeremiah stood against them all, and resisted even unto blood!

It is marvelous what some men do in the way of pillar-like resistance. Luther was a pillar resisting the onrush of ecclesiastical wickedness which threatened to cover Europe like a flood. Cromwell was a pillar, resisting the destruction of popular liberties and sacred rights. There is nothing grander in the history of our race than the spectacle of men standing like iron pillars, and refusing to be moved by the serried mass of peoples and priests and kings.

It may not be ours to share this particular kind of contention, but it is ours to resist the devil in whatever guise and manner his subtle ministry may appear. This pillar-like character is the creation of our conquering Lord. He can convert reeds into pillars, and transform poor watery sentiment into granite resolution.

And mark! This kind of strength is not spasmodic, appearing only now and then, and then relapsing into general weakness. "He shall go out thence no more." A pillar which shall remain! His strength shall be habitual! The transient impulse shall be confirmed into a permanent disposition. "I will make him a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go out thence no more."

"And I will write upon him the name of my God." That is not a man-affixed label; it is the mystic signature of God. We have our ecclesiastical labels, our denominational labels, and they are often so ill-adapted even at the best. "I will write upon him the name of my God." They shall not be known by their ecclesiastical labels, but by some mystical writing in the very character of their life. "His name shall be in their foreheads."

Do you see?

There shall be something about them not made with hands. There shall be evident signs of heavenly fellowship. We know those people, the gracious souls who when they come near us breathe out a spiritual fragrance. We cannot help knowing when they are about!

It is said that when Frances Ridley Havergal passed across a room it was like the transit of a rose. Ian MacLaren said that to write the life of Henry Drummond was like writing the biography of a perfume. We do not ask these people for their ecclesiastical kinships; we are contented with the name on their foreheads. "They took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus." They are the genuine thing, heaven-born, heaven-made! They are artist-signed! "I will write upon him the name of my God."

"AND the name of the city of my God, the new Jerusalem which cometh down out of heaven from my God." They are not only distinguished by their spiritual lineage, but by their lofty citizenship. And what is the great characteristic of the heavenly city? "It cometh down out of heaven from God."

As is the city so are the citizens. The citizen created of God, bearing the name of God's city, comes down to everything from God. What is this but to say that he approaches every problem from a spiritual standpoint? Is not this what the Saviour meant when he said concerning himself, "I am from above"?

So it is with those who share the citizenship. They come to everything out of heaven from God.

Now see the issue of this. The man who comes from God can lift things up. And do we not say of some men that they lift up everything they touch? If they are on a committee their suggestions are always elevating. If they are on a town council, their contributions have the savor of the lofty place. If they are in Congress they bring the heavenly atmosphere round about the earthly problem.

There is nothing we more greatly need than the elevated souls who bear the name of the city of God, and whose citizenship is in heaven. We need them in our social intercourse. We need them in our public controversies.

The lifting ministry ought to be the great characteristic of a follower of the Lord. If by touching a thing we degrade it, it is a clear proof that we are not of the city that is from above.

---

*Dr. Jowett's sermons appear in the Christian Herald in the first issue of each month.

A Minister's Idea of Church Unity

I HAVE read with a good deal of interest and sympathy the articles on Church Union appearing in the Christian Herald. It is a subject which should arrest the sympathetic interest of every one who loves the Lord. In fact, it is enforcing its claim on God's people with irrepressible energy, as the articles referred to above and many in the Church papers evidently prove. The Rev. Mr. Black's article in your excellent paper, "A Plea for a League of Churches," is clear and to the point. Moreover, it is written in a lowly spirit and style, and in harmony with the spirit of the Master.

Again, Dr. H. K. Carroll's "The Church After the War" is written with the force and authority of an expert in matters pertaining to the Church. His reference to the League of Nations is particularly pertinent, and I believe it furnishes a model after which the churches or denominational units may well arrange a union or league, in which all may conscientiously join, without sacrifice or compromise.

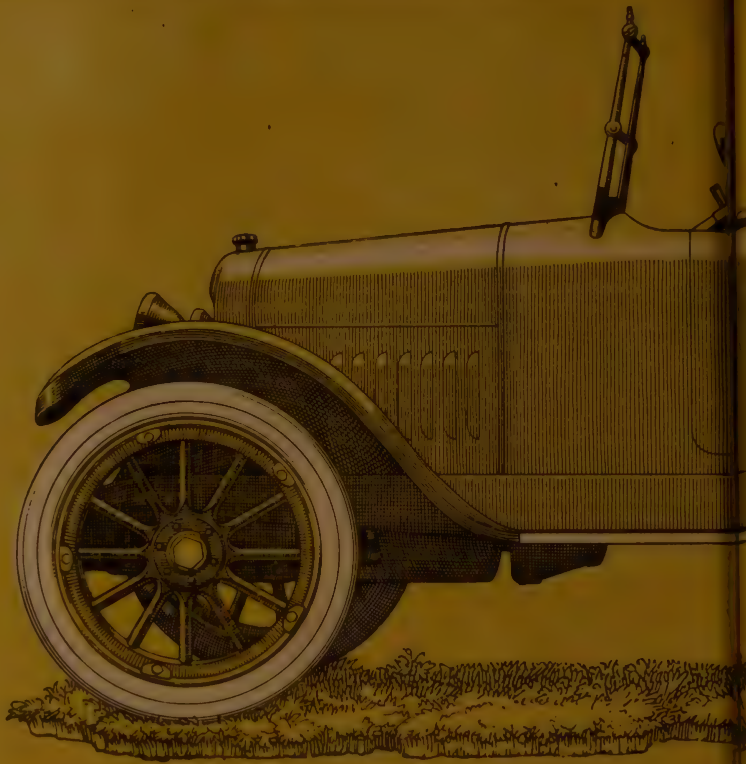
Organic union, however desirable, is hardly practical at present. Our Christian consciousness has not reached that higher state of development where we can ignore our prejudices. As individuals we are temperamentally different. A great many in all denominations would be able to overcome this difficulty; but on the other hand a large number cannot. Even Christianity cannot radically change our inborn temperament, though in the course of time it may modify it. But a denominational unit may join such a League and work with harmony in it.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America is a movement in the right direction. The units in it are beginning to know each other, and are working in harmony, because we are finding as good Christians in other denominations as we have in our own. What we need, therefore, is union of action; and there is no legitimate reason why all evangelical churches should not become integral parts in this League or Council. Then, in the course of time, when we have all come to know and love each other, we may coalesce into one body. I believe, therefore, that the organization of a General Council or League, with accredited representatives from all the denominational units, should be formed; that all the units should report to this council, and that its advice and counsel should be received and heeded by all; "giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, till we all attain unto the unity of the faith."

These words of St. Paul furnish the goal for which all the units should work together.

Tiffin, Ohio. SAMUEL Z. BEANE, D.D.

More miles per gallon
More miles on tires



300,000

They Tell a Mi

A MAN that has acquired wealth is usually a man with a story worth listening to. And a motor car that has acquired a manufacturing run of 300,000 has a mighty and endless story.

Maxwell is that car.

More than 5 years ago a chassis was designed that was absolutely featureless, simple to a point that was striking, planned so that it was easy to build, and planned so that it would deliver endless mileage.

This chassis was not designed by laboratory engineers. It was designed by road engineers.

These engineers were men who understood more about manufacturing cars than they did about design. "Of what use," said they, "is a 'beautifully' designed chassis if no factory on earth can produce it consistently."

So they said good-bye to all the little
"fine engineering" and stood pat on comm and micrometers. Not calipers, but micr
There's a wide difference.

Their vision was clear. They wanted the highest efficiency ever put into an aut
So they went immediately to simplicity.

They made it simple so that there wou overweight, and consequent "drag." The it simple so that it would be easy to bu therefore better built. They made it si that it wouldn't get out of order. (Com things always do.)

They made it simple so that any man co care of his own car without calling in the every second Saturday.

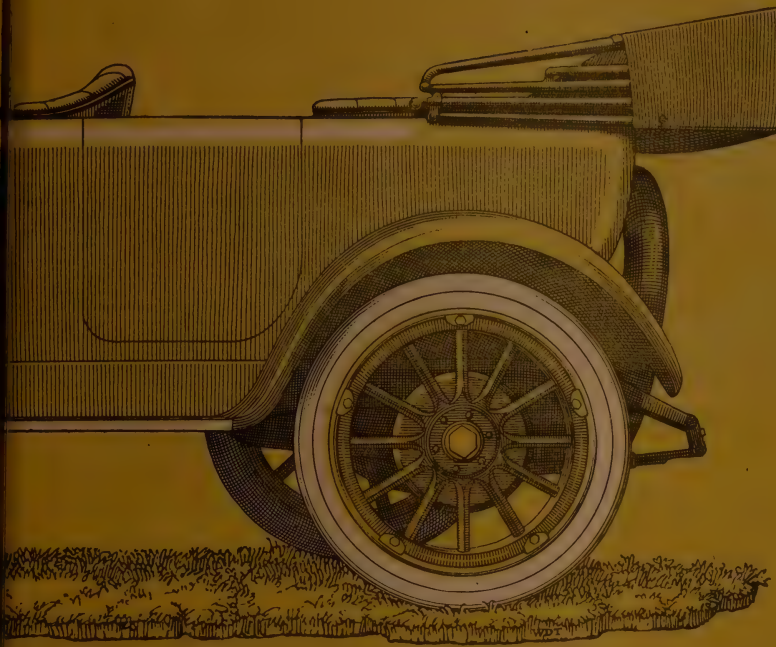
They made it simple so that it would

MAXWELL MOTOR C
MAXWELL MOTOR COMP



axwells!

nd Endless Story

and opera moods," as some possibly more sen-e cars on occasions seem to possess.

hey made it simple so that it would be everingly reliable.

hey began making this car five years ago. They e never shifted from the original program laid wn.

hey have never made a single radical change lesign.

hey have made more than 1000 improvements.
y have made each new Maxwell better than the . "Yesterday's Maxwell a good car—tomor-
's Maxwell a better one!"

ow well an old-fashioned policy like this suc-ds is registered in numbers. Today more than ,000 Maxwells have run endless millions of miles. Today there are 8 great Maxwell plants and a manufacturing inventory that runs into many, many millions of dollars.

There are 4000 merchants in America selling the Maxwell and making a satisfactory profit.

There are Maxwells in almost every spot on earth. And the demand, as this is being written, has shown a bound forward that no previous day in Maxwell history has recorded.

When they got through making this car simple they found they could save the buyer a handsome sum on the price, and many a thrifty dollar afterwards, by making the car good to begin with.

You pay $895 f. o. b. Detroit for a Maxwell. Were it not so simple you might easily pay $200 more.

Inc. - DETROIT, MICH.
. LTD., WINDSOR, ONTARIO

THE TRAIL OF THE DEAD YEAR

By LOUIS E. ORCUTT

WE ALL admire the man who conquers difficulties. We acclaim the man who triumphs over sure defeat. We choose the best stories of achievement in the face of danger or disaster, to tell to our children, that they, too, may have the will to achieve. But it is not often that we have a chance to share in a great achievement. For over five years now the Christian Herald Family has been sharing in the work of Letha Watts and Dr. Earl E. Dudding for released prisoners. Dudding's story gripped our hearts and the indomitable energy and determination, the great heart of helpfulness, of the slight, frail little Letha won our love. A year ago last December she gave up the fight, after seeing thousands of her prison boys safely landed in good jobs in which they proved their right to freedom. Feeling that her sacrifice had to a degree consecrated this work, it was almost immediately decided to continue the work as a memorial to her.

The office and the officers of the Prisoners' Relief Society. Left to right: J. W. Koontz, Vice-President; Dr. E. E. Dudding, President; Miss Avalyn Abbott, Secretary and Assistant Treasurer

But the year 1918 was a bad year for charitable enterprises. The eyes of the nation were rightly centered on the big business of war, as were its resources. Liberty Bonds, War Savings Stamps, Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., Syrian and Armenian Relief, funds of many names, but all necessary and all effectual, took the ready money and the savings of the people, and the smaller charities at home suffered especially from this preoccupation of the nation in the one great and necessary work. Dudding's work was not an exception.

Many a morning when Dudding opened the front door of his office he would find one or more men waiting, expecting jobs. "You talked in our prison last winter and told us to drop in on you when we got out, and we dropped," was the usual greeting. Dudding didn't always know where there were jobs, but he knew men who were directing portions of the government's greatly augmented office force, men who were crying for help to push the government's building projects, and he and his callers would start out. Before night Dudding would come back alone; every man had been slipped into a job. Letters also placed men who could not "drop in." In spite of lack of financial support adequate to the opportunities of the society, the Prisoners' Relief Society in 1918 made a creditable record. The writer, who represents the Christian Herald Family on the board of directors of the society, went to Washington in December, went over the books carefully, and found them O. K. in every respect.

With a little over $5,000, $1,000 of it borrowed by Mr. Dudding to cover deficits that could not be avoided, the society was able to place 881 men and women in positions and to aid 152 families; thus 1,033 cases were relieved at an average cost of a little under $5. Such a record of accomplishment at low cost could not have been made had the society paid large salaries to its executives. Every member of the active staff is sacrificing earning power to serve the men in prison. Dr. Dudding has given his life unreservedly, asking only a place to sleep and food and clothes (the by-laws forbid a salary above $1,200 a year), and the large majority of the correspondence of the society is written free of cost by young women who do its work while learning stenography.

But in addition to helping these 1,033 cases in 1918 the society was successful in interesting many school boards in the children of convicts. It widened the opportunities of its wards by interesting large employers of labor, formerly apathetic in the business value of former prisoners; it set many energetic Sunday school teachers on the trail of former prisoners to insure that those men should know that somebody near at hand cared for their success; it started a movement in which several hundred convicts wrote to their congressmen urging favorable action on the Prohibition amendment, and it lived through the hardest year in its history without spending, from the gifts it received, a cent for raising money. Several friends of the work stood behind it, and the Christian Herald and some other religious papers, as well as newspapers, published stories of the work which helped. There is a more or less constant income from former prisoners, but the society makes no charge for its services. Although often faced with opportunities which make increased income imperative, the society has never appealed to its beneficiaries.

Now we come to 1919. The society entered the year with the new office in Washington well equipped, with the staff reorganized, ready to handle as many of the 100,000 men to be released from prison this year as might appeal to it. But the of the war at once made the extremely difficult. Every who put on khaki or olive dra navy blue is going back on the roll. America would have to be ashamed of herself if thing else were the case. So inst of government offices and cont tors hungry for help, and fact crying for hands, we now h forces being reduced, emerg employees being discharged general unemployment increas What sort of a chance does offer to the man whom society branded, rightly or wrongly, criminal? The prison gates before him, and the very crea their hinges cries, "You'll be ba He goes out determined to m good and give the lie to that ru iron-hearted insinuation. The ciety means that he shall hav opportunity. There are still in spite of unemployment; where ten letters used to la man, a hundred may now be ne sary. That means extra expe extra postage, extra station extra traveling, extra hours st from an already too short night; Dudding and his helpers keep working until every case is hand

It is of supreme importance th men, once, twice, perhaps ofte convicted, should be enabled avoid another arrest and a return to the old keep. is of vital importance to the men themselves. It vital to the nation which loses their productive pow in large part, when they are locked away; it is vital the men who must suffer through the breaches of law which will return these others to the keeping the creaking old gate. Over sixty per cent. of crimes are committed in the heat of liquor. T great accomplice will soon be largely under dure The community can avoid a large part of the ot forty per cent. by assuring the man from prison th the doors to the future also open outward to him.

In order, therefore, that this work may go on, th society may be protected from the return to crime the men who have fully expiated their previous de lictions, Dudding and his helpers must receive t year largely increased gifts from all who have hithe supported the work, and new gifts from hundreds others. Last year a large number of members of Christian Herald Family gave $10 each in answer an appeal for patrons wishing to give that sum ea year. We urge all of them to duplicate these gif and we urge every other reader to give anxio thought to the question, to place himself or herself nearly as possible in the position of that recently fre man, with two, three, or possibly ten dead years b hind him, and in his heart a firm determination forget the past and to earn his way in the futur Shall we not make certain that he has a future? Du ding can do it, but he must have your support a mine.

Send your gifts for the Prisoners' Relief Society care of the Christian Herald, Room 93, Bible Hous New York City.

The Bishop of All-Out-Doors

MR. FRED LOCKLEY tells in the Oregon Journal, Portland, Ore., the remarkable story of a man whose life in the Far North is one continuous performance. Just a few weeks before the world went wild about the Klondyke he camped right on top of that great bonanza and didn't know it. He probably wouldn't have cared much about it if he had known it. For this man is more concerned with finding the gold of character. Mr. Lockley writes:

"Bishop Rowe of Alaska is in Portland, a guest of Bishop W. T. Sumner. Being the Bishop of Alaska comes pretty near to being Bishop of All-Out-Doors." He was born in Toronto and served his apprenticeship among the Chippewas on the shore of Lake Huron. He followed his charges in the summer by canoe and in the winter by dog team.

"I learned as much as I taught," said Bishop Rowe. "I learned woodcraft of the Chippewas and I learned to make the best of circumstances. I also learned to respect the Indian's code of honor. Few white men have the integrity possessed by most Indians. I have known Indians to be starving while camped where a white man had cached abundant food supplies. I doubt if the thought of stealing the white man's supplies even occurred to them.

"I was elected Bishop of Alaska in October, 1895. I spent the winter of 1895–96 in Juneau. In March, 1896, I chartered a boat at Juneau to go to Dyea. We had to break the ice to get ashore. I hired a 'Stick,' as the Stickeen Indians are termed, as my helper. We packed our camp dunnage on a sled to the foot of Chilcoot Pass, but getting it over the pass was a matter of more difficulty. We carried it over on our backs. This was before the gold discovery, so there was no trail.

"On our first trip we were captured by the natives and were held for three days. I understood Chinook and I found they were debating whether to kill us or not. I told the Indians that if they killed us the Supreme Being would avenge our deaths. They released us but would not allow us to leave. I told my 'Stick' helper to make a rush for the boat. While I held the Indians back he cut the rope and shoved off into the current. I made a run for it, jumped in, and we bent to our work. They had no firearms, so we escaped. We made our way to Fort Selkirk on short rations, for the Indians had seized our supplies. At Fort Selkirk we found a white trader and secured additional supplies, including potatoes raised under a blanket in lieu of a greenhouse.

"Two hundred miles below Selkirk we landed at Klondyke Creek, a little stream coming into the Yukon from the right. We camped here and found no sign of life. That same year, a few months later, in August, Skookum Jim and his brother-in-law, a 'Stick' Indian, found color where we camped. They filled some empty cartridge shells with coarse gold dust. They were on their way to Forty Mile when they discovered gold and as they were out of food they stayed there but one night, staking claims and then going on to Forty Mile for their grub. This was in August, 1896. The big stampede to Klondyke Creek didn't take place till that winter. Where we had camped in the summ of 1896 the town of Dawson was bu two years later.

"The natives of Alaska are unmoral not immoral. They do not know ou standards, but live up to their own cod of honor. I have traveled by dog tea all over Alaska. Many a time I hav broken trail on my snowshoes for my dog team when the spirit thermomete registered 75 below zero. Up north on travels to keep from freezing. I hav often traveled afoot fifty miles in a day of ten hours. One can go for hours a a swinging trot.

"For more than twenty years it has been my habit to travel by boat till the weather made boat travel impossible. When everything was nicely frozen, I would get out my sled, hitch up my huskies and start on my travels.

"The people of Alaska are a virile and splendid race. Manhood is the test of character. You must be able to stand the gaff. They possess the elemental virtues of courage, hardihood and helpfulness. They have the true pioneer spirit."

The New Industry—Motor-Truck Express

"Ship by Truck" Is a Live Issue for Every Shipper

By Harvey S. Firestone, President, Firestone Tire & Rubber Co.

THERE are today in active operation several thousand truck-transportation companies. From every large distributing center and many small ones, these arteries of express trucking reach out, relieving—even revolutionizing—the older methods of moving freight.

Already the tendency is toward organizations of financial stability and high efficiency of operation.

When you entrust a shipment to one of these forwarders by truck, you have ample assurance of punctual delivery.

These companies are dispatching their trucks on regular schedules over carefully planned routes. In addition to prompt shipment they afford you extra precautions and special care in the handling of your goods.

The transport company's truck backs up to your shipping platform. Your consignment is loaded and receipt given. The truck rolls out; is shortly moving on its sure, rapid, uninterrupted course to its destination.

Upon its arrival, the truck goes directly to the receiving platform of the consignee.

Your goods are handled only two or three times. Breakage is reduced to the minimum.

By way of contrast, ask your traffic man to outline to you the course of an ordinary freight shipment from your plant to a customer.

Learn from him the delays and rehandling of such a shipment. Look into the complications of transfer and re-distribution in belt road collections, freight houses, junction points. The ordinary freight shipment undergoes from six to eight handlings, with consequent delay and damage and labor expense.

You probably know these conditions. Correct them. The remedy is at hand. "Ship by Truck."

Get in touch with your local Chamber of Commerce or Return Loads Bureau. Obtain at once the complete schedules of the truck-transportation companies serving your city.

You'll discover that short and medium distance freight transportation is being revolutionized through the idea "Ship by Truck."

You'll see how the railroads are being freed from the complications of short-haul freight and less than carload-lot shipments. You'll see that rail channels are being cleared for their heavy responsibility of through freights.

"Ship by Truck."

Every box and case loaded on a truck is not only a matter of better service for you and for your customer but a contribution to our national welfare.

"Ship by Truck."

Half the truck tonnage of America is carried on

Firestone Tires

DISCUSSING CHURCH UNITY PLAN

By H. K. CARROLL, LL.D.

THERE was no note of doubt or discouragement at the second meeting of the Ad Interim Committee in Philadelphia, March 7, charged with the task of arranging for an Interdenominational Council to unite the Evangelical denominations. An exchange of views by a score or more of the members present did not indicate that their contact with their own denominational constituents had discovered any decided opposition to the proposition.

The reports and the discussions were interesting as showing the scope of the plans being made and the estimate of the ground to be covered in preparation for the Council. The Committee on Publicity, which has the very important function of making known to the Christian public and to the denominations in particular the purpose and character of the movement, reported by its chairman, Dr. Peter Ainslie, several important recommendations:

1. The holding of a series of conferences in the leading cities of the country, including New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, Washington, Atlanta, New Orleans, Chicago, St. Louis and San Francisco. These conferences will consist of from twenty-five to one hundred ministers and laymen, the purpose being to consider the main features of the movement and to adopt resolutions for the information and guidance of the Ad Interim Committee. These conferences are also to arrange for mass meetings to make the religious public acquainted with the general proposition and the great things involved in its acceptance for evangelical Christianity in the United States. Separate conferences are to be held for women, that they may be free to discuss among themselves the important questions which so large a plan of union raises. Committees of nine to fifteen laymen are to arrange for the conferences, or, where more convenient, ministerial meetings may take the matter up.

2. It is further recommended that special prayers be offered and sermons preached on Pentecostal Sunday in the interest of Christian Unity. At the suggestion of the Committee on Publicity, a series of brief studies in Christian Unity, is to be prepared.

THE Committee on Invitations reported that letters had been sent out inviting all evangelical denominations not at present participating in the movement to appoint representatives on the Ad Interim Committee.

The report of the Committee on Survey was quite voluminous. It embraced under three headings all recent and pending movements: 1. For organic union. 2. For promotion of Christian unity. 3. For comity and cooperation. The brief accounts of things accomplished in reducing the number of denominations and in removing unnecessary denominational barriers were pronounced "encouraging" and "inspiring." In many cases the report made reference to articles printed in the Christian Herald for fuller information. A recapitulation of the committee's report of work accomplished follows:

I. Organic Union

1. Of three Norwegian Lutheran bodies—accomplished in 1917.
2. Of three general bodies of Lutherans—accomplished in 1918.
3. Of Presbyterian, Methodist and Congregational bodies in Canada—agreed to.
4. Of Methodist Episcopal and Methodist Episcopal, South—pending.
5. Of African, African Zion and Colored Methodist Episcopal—pending.
6. Of Free Methodist and Wesleyan Methodist Churches—pending.
7. Of Free Baptist and Northern Baptist Churches—nearly complete.
8. Of General Baptist and Northern Baptist Churches—pending.
9. Of the two National Baptist Conventions—agreed to.
10. Of Evangelical Association and United Evangelical Church—pending.
11. Of seven Presbyterian and Reformed Churches—federal union—pending.
12. Of several Methodist bodies in Great Britain—pending. Three united in 1907.
13. Of Reformed Episcopal Churches in England—accomplished.
14. Of Disciples of Christ and Churches of Christ in England—accomplished. United native churches created or creating in foreign mission countries.
15. Church of Christ in Japan—of Presbyterian and Reformed bodies—accomplished.
16. Methodist Church of Japan—of Methodist Episcopal, Southern Methodist Episcopal and Methodist Church of Canada—accomplished.
17. Holy Catholic Church of Japan—of Anglican bodies—accomplished.
18. Holy Catholic Church of China—of Anglican bodies—accomplished.
19. Church of Christ in China—of English, Australian, Canadian and American Presbyterian and Reformed bodies—now forming.
20. South India United Church—of Scottish and American Presbyterian and Reformed and English and American Congregationalists—accomplished.
21. Presbyterian Church of (North) India—of Scottish, Irish, Canadian, and American Presbyterian bodies—accomplished.
22. Presbyterian Church of Brazil—of Northern and Southern Presbyterian bodies—accomplished.

II. Promotion of Christian Unity

Initiation by the Protestant Episcopal Church, in 1910, of the Faith and Order Movement for a Conference to consider the union of the Christian bodies of the world.

III. Comity and Cooperation

1. As agreed to in home mission fields.
2. As agreed to in foreign mission fields.
3. In Interchurch World Movement for home and foreign missions, in United States and Canada.
4. In joint campaign for After-the-War Work.
5. In National Lutheran Council, representing eight or more Lutheran bodies.

THE number of movements in comity and cooperation and federation is legion. In the foregoing list only a few of the general sort are mentioned. There are interchurch organizations for the promotion of almost every conceivable Christian enterprise.

The basis of representation in the proposed Interdenominational Council was again considered and was fixed at four delegates, clerical and lay, for 100,000 communicants, and two for each additional 100,000 or major fraction thereof. This would make a body of 300 or more delegates, the denominational representation ranging from four up to eighty-six.

The Committee on Plan made a report of progress, through Dr. H. C. Herring, its secretary, and it proved to be the most interesting of all the reports. It was intended to elicit an expression of views and it did. The Committee considered fully the question of possible plans and came to the conclusion that there are two main types to choose between—(1) that of a complete merging of the denominations, and (2) that of a federal union, similar to our union of states in the Federal government. They were convinced that the Spirit of God is leading the churches toward an early union.

As to the first-named plan, it would cause the denominations to disappear and their names, creeds, politics and practices would become matters of history. The second type of union would unite existing ecclesiastical structures in a firm bond involving (1) a common name to which the denominational name might be a sub-title; (2) a common basis for all ministers and intercommunion for all members; (3) the creation of a super-ecclesiastical body, with strictly defined powers for common administrative tasks. It was a question which plan the Committee should work out for presentation to the Council, or whether both should be prepared and presented as alternative plans.

SEVERAL questions were propounded for discussion:

1. Should the plan of union embrace articles of common faith held by all, or should explicit recognition be given to existing statements embodied in historic creeds?

2. How should full intercommunion and unrestricted interchange of members be established?

3. How should the present differences between episcopal and non-episcopal ordination be removed?

4. What powers should be delegated to the supreme judicatory of the United Church, and by what method should they be exercised?

5. Should supervision in evangelism, social service, Christian education, etc., be given to the supreme judicatory, as well as control of mission and church extension agencies?

6. What name would be most s able for the United Church?

Here is a series of questions on wh ecclesiastical and doctrinal experts r exercise their minds and send the sults to the Committee on Plan, wh will welcome them, if not too volumin

The discussion which followed presentation of the report cente chiefly on the questions of plan and statement of faith. It was made ab dantly clear in the speeches that th are some who have strong faith in ultimate amalgamation of the deno inations. One of these, Dr. Peach, I formed Episcopal, of Newark, N. read a carefully prepared paper, sett forth the weakness and wastefulness the present state of division and extreme difficulty of getting over nominational barriers. He believed remedy was to merge the churches one.

BISHOP TALBOT, chairman of Committee on Plan, and an ard friend of a complete Christian Un saw no reason why, if federal union the only practicable plan under exist circumstances, one should not indu the "larger hope" for the larger uni Dr. Bagnell, of Harrisburg, Method held substantially the same view. T more closely the denominations d toward one another, the better will their understanding and the stron their attachment. Mr. Henry Jessup, of New York, the well kno Presbyterian layman, would begin the best terms possible, and exp greater things in the future.

Dr. Anderson, moderator of United Presbyterian General Assemb gave some reasons for the belief that laymen are not always in advance of ministers in favoring Christian Unity

Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin, New Yo speaking as a Baptist, called attenti to the fact that there was no Bapt body competent to speak for the Ba tist denomination. He did not think t denomination was ready for either ki of union, but believed that twenty p cent. of their ministers and church would come into a United body.

Dr. Raymond Calkins, Congreg tional pastor in Cambridge, Mas would accept the plan recognizing t denominational unit as practicable a as a decided step forward. The churche he believed, would grow into a mo complete and effective union.

The first general body to me since the Philadelphia movement w launched, is the General Synod of t Reformed Church in the United State At a special meeting at Altoona, th General Synod, representing a body 330,000 members, adopted a resolutio expressing its hearty sympathy wi the movement and its "profound con viction that the leadership of the Grea Head of the Church is manifest in th movements of the day to unite this pe ple (the Evangelical Churches) in th bonds of unity, peace, good-will an united Christian service." It approve of the proposed Council to form a union and authorizes full representation o the Reformed Church in it.

Flood and Robbers in South China

TUESDAY I returned from a visit to my field, writes A. A. Fulton of Canton. We held a meeting of presbytery for three days, with a large representation of preachers and elders. In some respects we have thus far had one of the most trying seasons that I have had to do with in thirty years—rain and more rain, and no sunshine for weeks. Up to this time we have had twenty-two inches of rain, or more than fell last year in the three hundred and sixty-five days. Great destruction of crops and property has resulted. I saw thousands of acres of rice crops under water and the crops a perfect loss. Many houses (those made of sundried bricks) have dissolved and disappeared. The loss is almost equal to that of the great flood three years ago. For weeks the streets in the western suburbs of Canton have been under water, and Lafayette compound has had nearly two feet of water, the floors of the lower part of the hospital are partly under water, and the kitchens and servants' quarters are flooded.

In addition to this, there have been serious losses by the disorganized state of the country, and hundreds of robbers have improved the opportunity to burn shops and destroy and loot.

Despite all troubles, my preachers and Bible women have reached this year 572 villages and 24,550 persons in those villages. I receive a monthly report from every worker, and we shall reach 1,000 villages before the year ends. We have baptized exactly 100 adults and 37 children.

At the meeting of presbytery it was announced that one man had given $1,000 toward a large church building at Sancheung. Other subscriptions were made, and $2,800 cash given for purchase of property, the property to be turned over to us next Monday. It was announced that a combine of all Christians had been perfected, each Christian to give at least one dollar a year for three years toward a fund of $10,000 to be used in support of work now undertaken by the mission. To that fund $3,600 cash has been paid into the treasury this year. The $10,000 will b surely reached before the end of thre years.

◆

He who hates work hates a friend.

The blindest love of all is the love for vice.

The narrow way is the best way in every way.

When a man has lost his faith he has lost abou everything.

Those who serve the Devil will surely have the devil to pay.

Optimism keeps the man of fifty from feelin it and looking it.

"Tions" to shun—prevarication, dissipation, desecration, and procrastination.

Character may be formed in the youth much easier than it can be reformed in the man.

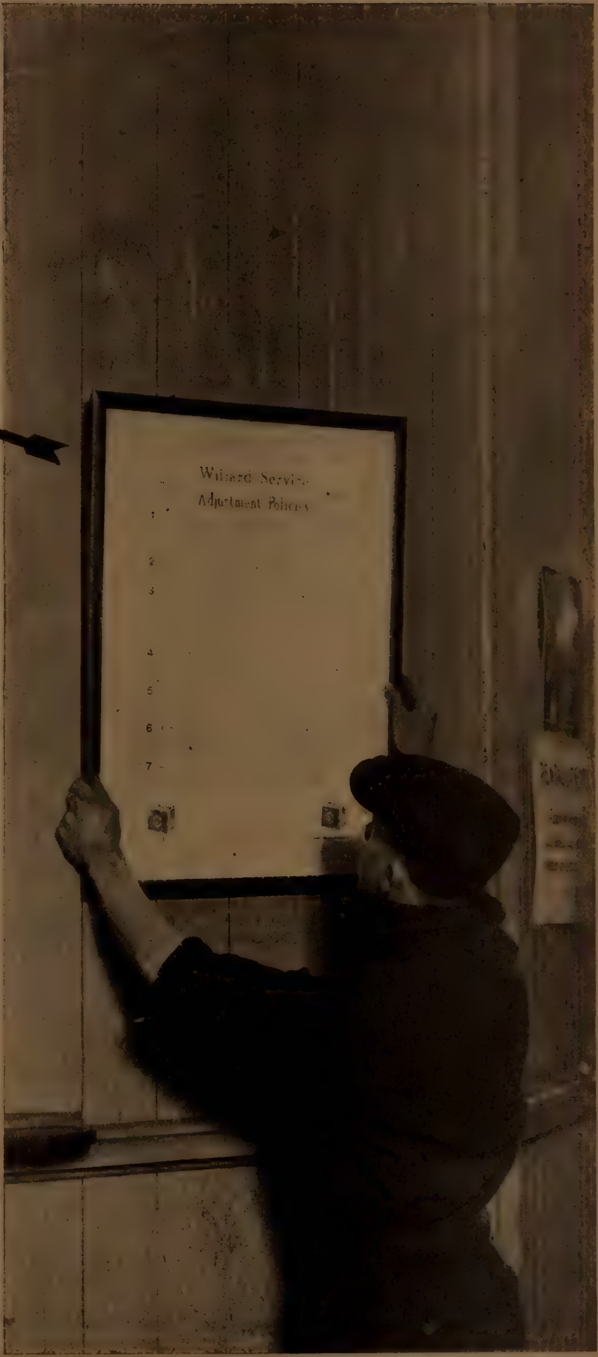
Willard STORAGE BATTERY

Willard Threaded Rubber Insulation

Your Interests First

To give still more definite assurance of reliable d efficient battery service to car-owners, every thorized Willard Service Station has subscribed the following

Willard Service and Adjustment Policies



We insure every new Willard Battery for 90 days from the date of purchase, provided the battery is registered immediately at the nearest Willard Service Station. If any repairs are necessary ring this period, the same will be made without charge to the owner. charging is not considered repairs and the owner is expected to pay any recharging that may be necessary.

During the fourth, fifth and sixth months of ownership, if a battery needs any repairs the same will be made on a basis satisfactory to the customer.

During the seventh, eighth, ninth, tenth, eleventh and twelfth months of ownership, if repairs are necessary the owner will be given the option of paying the regular charge for the same or may exchange the old battery for a new one by paying a fractional rt of the retail price, based on the number of months of service eived from the old battery. For example: If the battery has given ht months service, the adjustment price for the new battery uld be eight-twelfths (8-12) of the retail price.

Willard Service Stations will keep dealers' stock batteries fully charged at a minimum cost to the dealer, and will register and accept responsibility for them under our service policy, provided y are not over six months old at the end of the storage period.

All questions concerning batteries which have not been registered or which may have attained some age at the time the car is delivered, are to be settled in the customer's interest between car dealer and the Willard Service Station dealer.

Batteries shipped bone dry with cars and prepared by the Willard Service Station at destination, will be registered by them at the same time. Bone dry batteries prepared by the dealer himself to be registered at the nearest Willard Service Station in the gular way.

With motor car dealers located in places where there is no Willard Service Station, the nearest service station will make arrangements with the dealer whereby all Willard Service and Adjustnt Policies will be handled through the dealer.

You will find these policies conspicuously dislayed by each authorized Willard Service Station.

Willard Service.

A PAGE for LITTLE ONES

Patty and Holly

By Ellen Eddy Shaw, Curator Brooklyn Botanic Garden

TWO new children are ready to join the Garden Family. One little boy belongs in the country, and the other little boy belongs in the city. If you look at the names of those two children you will know right straight off that Patty is the country boy and Holly, with his fancy name, must be a city lad.

If you are a country boy or girl, go out some fine spring day to a sunny little hillside, or slope in the woods, and there you will find little Patty. Patty's whole name is Hepatica.

When you are poking among the dead leaves, what you must look for first is a little plant with large, old, tough leaves, reddish in color. Push these aside, and down underneath are some tender, new little green leaves and Patty's head bent over and protected.

Take up one or two hepatica plants carefully, also some of the wood soil, and when you get home plant them in a fish bowl or some other glass vessel, with the wood soil about them. Put the bowl in a sunny window, with perhaps a piece of glass over the top, and as the days go on you will see little Patty's head pick up, you will see the new leaves start, you will see one of the loveliest blossoms a little plant ever had, and, lo and behold, there is Patty, your country boy!

Now, if you are a city child it would not be at all easy for you to add Patty to your garden, would it? So some night ask father for ten cents, and, with your ten cents shut up tightly in your hand, go to a flower shop and ask for Holly. Holly is a fern with bright leaves that look like Christmas holly leaves. It is the best little fern for indoors, and will last better than almost any other fern.

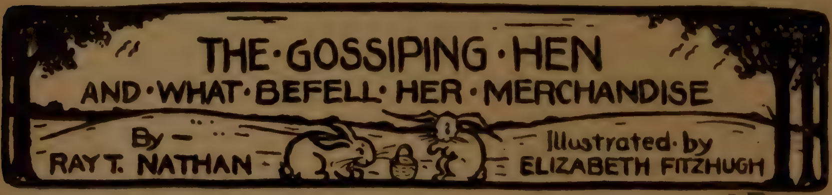
Be sure you keep Holly very clean and nice. You must wash his face, washing both the front and back of the leaves, just as mother washes your face and behind your ears. Keep the soil in which Holly is planted moist, but not wet and soggy. Give him a nice sunning every once and a while, and if there is a gentle spring rain, put little Holly boy out-doors and let the rain wash his face.

To the mother: These are two very satisfactory little plants for small boys and girls to work with. Hepatica is interesting because the children can watch the plant open up as the spring days advance, just as it would open in the woods; and while holly fern is not as interesting as hepatica, still it is a fern one can use at home or plant in the window-box at school, and feel sure it is going to last for a while.

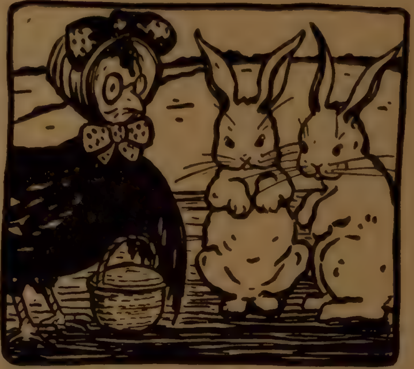
THE·GOSSIPING·HEN
AND·WHAT·BEFELL·HER·MERCHANDISE

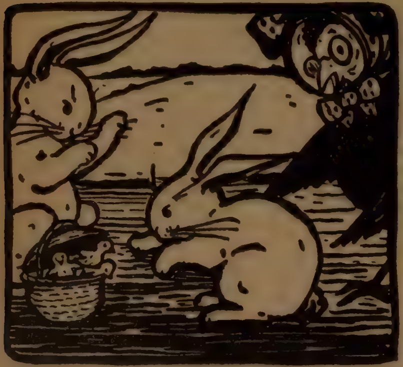
By—RAY T. NATHAN

Illustrated·by ELIZABETH FITZHUGH



MOTHER Hen set out one fine spring day
To sell some eggs, but on the way
She met two Bunnies not far from home,
Who wanted to purchase some smooth round stone,
To build them a house both warm and strong,
To keep their little ones safe from harm.
Then Mother Hen said she had eggs to sell,
Which in place of the stones would do very well;
But she gossiped and dickered and talked, ah, well,
Of things she had done and done very well,





Till the Bunnies grew tired and started to go,
Which frightened Ma Hen so she clucked, "No, no!"
And she sold them the basket so pretty and round.
They peeped within, and what they found
Delighted them so they chuckled with glee,
For within there nestled chickadees three!
Ma Hen grew vexed, and with anger said she,
"I sold you eggs, not chickens three."
"Quite right," said the Bunnies, but you gossiped too long,
And now the chickies to us belong!"

Finger Games for Mother and Ba

By Mrs. Margaret Wilson Heald

BABY is instinctively active from the time he born. Little feet kick about, little hands re all around. And mother instinctively attempts guide and develop this activity. From time im morial mothers have played with their babies' t and sung to their babies' fingers, and so we have ever new-old baby classics: Pat-a-cake; Bye, Ba Bunting; Sleep, Baby, Sleep; Rock-a-bye, Ba This Little Pig Went to Market; and Ride a Co horse to Banbury Cross.

There are many other little plays or games of t kind, not so well known, but which the trained mot makes use of to catch first sense perceptions, th the awakened emotions and hold fast the affectio They minister to baby's growing activities in ri ways, before wrong ones can assert themselves.

The following plays, with music, are to be found "The Songs and Music of Froebel's Mother Play"

Naming the Fingers

Baby points to each finger as described. In t game he becomes acquainted with his hands, fingers, himself.

This is little Tommy Thumb,
Round and smooth as any plum.
This is busy Peter Pointer;
Surely he's a double-jointer.
This is mighty Toby Tall;
He's the biggest one of all.
This is dainty Reuben Ring;
He's too fine for anything.
And this little wee one, maybe,
Is the pretty Finger-baby.
All the five we've counted now,
Busy fingers in a row;
Every finger knows the way
How to work and how to play;
Yet together work they best,
Each one helping all the rest.
LAURA E. RICHARDS.

The Greeting

Baby's hands are held up, facing each other, a do as bidden. In this little game, Baby advanc from knowing to willing, and his fingers are his too to be used for a definite purpose.

Thumbs and fingers say, "Good morning,
'Tis a very pleasant day";
Little pointers bow politely,
Tall men nod and smile so brightly;
While the rest with joyful greeting,
All their little friends are meeting.
ELEANOR SMITH.

The Family

Played with the baby hands held up, first one a then the other, and beginning with the thumb. this game, Baby becomes acquainted with the wor just immediately outside himself.

This is the loving mother,
  Always good and dear;
This is the busy father,
  Brave and full of cheer;
This is the merry brother,
  Grown so strong and tall;
This is the gentle sister,
  This is the baby small;
And here they all together meet,
This whole glad family complete.

Here's grandpapa and grandmama,
  And father, too, and mother,
With baby wee, one family;
  Oh, how they love each other.

The aunt and uncle now we see,
And little cousins, one-two-three:
And this good family is found
  In happy love together bound.
EMILIE POULSSON.

Tracing the Dead and Missing in War

Task of the Central Records Office of the A. E. F. in France

NOT many months ago, that noted correspondent, Frederick Palmer, dropping in at the quaint town of Bourges for a few hours' stay, called upon the commanding officer of the Central Records Office for a friendly chat. He met a young man of grave but genial mien, directing the colossal and unique work of this department—one of the most vitally important and efficient bureaus of the Adjutant-General's Office. Being told that the officer had formerly been an actor, the correspondent burst into a laugh, for an organization devoted to research and dry-as-dust data concerning service records, which range from the soldier's entrance into the army until his final discharge with consequent casualty lists, apparently carried only an appeal to the seasoned advocate. When the reply came from this commanding officer that the requisites for success in certain sections of this office implied the attribute "imagination," then the veteran correspondent visualized the scope of the C. R. O.

Major Earl Booth, under whose efficient leadership the Central Records Office has become one of the greatest institutions in the world, is surrounded by a staff of specialists, including Major Keene, Major Smith, Captain Miller, Captain Wilson, Captain Jackson, Captain Shearer, Lieutenant Butterfield and Lieutenant Rilea. Primarily, this department is engaged in an investigation of casualties, to enable the Adjutant-General's Department to answer inquiries concerning members of the A. E. F. and to definitely determine the status of men concerning whom there háve been conflicting reports. Every member of the A. E. F., however humble and lowly, has somewhere a woman—mother, wife, sister or sweetheart—who worries about him, hopes and prays that he may come home safely, and dreads the day that may bring word that he has made the supreme sacrifice.

That men may be reported dead who are alive, wounded and cannot be found in hospitals, missing and cannot be located dead or alive, is a phenomenon not easily understood by those not familiar with the conditions that have obtained in this war. Our units have fought with the Allies under conditions which have resulted in an intermingling of men during time of action, rendering our Central Records Office dependent in some degree upon the records of another country for information concerning our own men. Many of our men have been buried by the French and English, and many of our wounded cared for in their hospitals. Many of those who have passed through the hands of the French have caused considerable trouble, because they cannot understand our language and we cannot understand theirs. Names have been confused, causing considerable difficulty. Men wounded and in French hospitals have been lost because of this. Their names are reported by the French as they sound phonetically. In other words, "John Gwynn" becomes "Jean Gowen," for instance. This department has, through analysis of records and by a process of elimination, ascertained the correct name of hundreds.

Another source of trouble has been the identification tag. Each man in the service is given a serial number and this, with his name and rank, is stamped on a metal disc. Army regulations provide that each soldier must wear two of these around his neck at all times. In nearly every case, this serves as the only means of identification. Numerous cases have been found in the course of investigation where identification tags have been exchanged.

Numerous inquiries are received regarding the present condition of men reported wounded. In most cases, this information can be given; but there are many that have never reached the hospital. It has been found in many instances where soldiers reported wounded in action have been so reported correctly. The man may be traced on a stretcher to an ambulance back of the lines, and there disappear. It is found, in many cases, that the ambulance driver and the wounded passengers have been hit by a shell that leaves only a hole in the ground. In many cases this has happened with no witness to record the fact. Often the wounded are taken prisoner and are found through the aid of the International Red Cross, a patient in a German hospital, a prisoner in some camp, or the grave is found in a German cemetery. Some reports of casualties never reach their destination.

The Casualty Section—the chief of which is a former infantry officer—is a department within the Central Records Office, which records all information pertaining to casualties and reports them to Washington. The department of investigation is a part of the Casualty Section. There are at this time 165 men and six officers on duty in this department stationed at the Central Records Office. This department also has a number of branch offices in various parts of France and Germany.

A large part of the investigation is made in the field. Many men are interviewed to get at certain facts that are obtained at the last moment on which a soldier in question was seen. Search is made through many channels in which men move throughout the A. E. F. Personal effects found at the Effects Depot in St. Nazaire are examined in search of information. Cemeteries are examined, and French and English War Department records are examined at their own headquarters.

There are four long-distance cables to this office and it has from 200 to 400 long-distance calls each twenty-four hours. From 700 to 1,200 telegrams are sent each day. A daily courier enables them to send matter to all points in France, England and Germany with great dispatch. With this system, they are able to reach quickly every point at which American troops are located.

It will readily be perceived that the work of this office necessarily makes a point of contact with the man at the desk, and with every mother, father, brother or family in America whose son or relative is a member of the A. E. F. and is returning to the States, or who has died in honor upon the scarred battlefields of France. Necessarily, a visualization of this work carries an especial appeal to the man at the desk. It also comprehends insurance, suits for damages and the aftermath of this colossal war, for upon this research work depends not only the financial but the sentimental side attached to every member of the A. E. F., and the sums which may be expended in claims for damages, insurance and pensions.

F. P. WEADON.

A. E. F., Nevers, France, Feb. 9.

◆

The States and the War. A total of 3,575,624 soldiers were furnished by the states and territories for the American Expeditionary Forces; this includes men in training when the war ended:

New York	367,864	Nebraska	47,805
Pennsylvania	297,891	Maryland	47,054
Illinois	251,074	Washington	45,154
Ohio	200,293	Montana	36,293
Texas	161,065	Colorado	34,393
Michigan	135,485	Florida	33,331
Massachus'ts	132,610	Oregon	30,116
Missouri	128,544	S. Dakota	29,686
California	112,514	N. Dakota	25,803
Indiana	106,581	Maine	24,252
New Jersey	105,207	Idaho	19,016
Minnesota	99,116	Utah	17,361
Iowa	98,781	Rhode Island	16,861
Wisconsin	98,211	Porto Rico	16,538
Georgia	85,506	Dist. of Col.	15,930
Oklahoma	80,169	N. Hampshire	14,374
Tennessee	75,825	New Mexico	12,439
Kentucky	75,043	Wyoming	11,393
Alabama	74,678	Arizona	10,492
Virginia	73,062	Vermont	9,338
N. Carolina	73,003	Delaware	7,484
Louisiana	65,988	Nevada	5,105
Kansas	63,428	Hawaii	2,102
Arkansas	61,027	Alaska	2,012
W. Virginia	55,777	Joined in France	1,499
Mississippi	54,295	Not Located	1,318
S. Carolina	53,482	Philippines]	255
Connecticut	50,069

ENTERPRISE FENCING All-Iron or Chain-Link

Protects and Beautifies

omes Churches Cemeteries ospitals Parks Estates
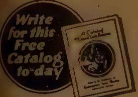
chools Colleges Asylums
actories Public Bldgs. Etc., Etc.

and enhances their value

Enterprise Fences, once properly erected, retain their original beauty and strength for generations. They are a permanent asset on any property—enhancing its value, adding beauty, and giving protection.

All war-time restrictions have been removed and we now have ample stocks, ready to ship without delay. Prices are again moderate, and seem to have reached a point at which they will stay. Choose your fence now and get the advantages of its beauty and protection this summer.



Write for this Free Catalog to-day

Our free catalog illustrates and describes all our styles of fencing and gates. Write for it today. Tell us your needs.

ENTERPRISE IRON WORKS
2467 Yandes St. INDIANAPOLIS

MAULE'S SEEDS

Maule SEED BOOK for 1919

LEARN MORE ABOUT SEEDS, CROPS, AND GARDENS

Have bumper crops and beautiful flower gardens all season. Make your garden count strongly in cutting down expenses. Our 1919 seed book tells what, when, how to plant and cultivate to get the best results.

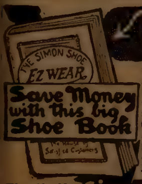
MAULE'S SEED BOOK

176 Pages of Practical Information FREE

Seed experts, market gardeners, farmers have contributed to this great issue of our Seed Book. Full of helpful hints. Owing to paper scarcity, the edition is limited. Write today for your copy.

WM. HENRY MAULE, INC.
2132 Arch Street Philadelphia

ONCE GROWN—ALWAYS GROWN



THE SIMON SHOE
EZ WEAR
Save Money with this big Shoe Book

This FREE Shoe Book is crowded with photographs and descriptions of Ez Wear Shoes for Men, Women and Children. Ez Wear shoes are sent postpaid, guaranteed to combine comfort, style and quality, to fit perfectly or money back. Amazingly low prices. Send for your copy today

The H. V. Simon Shoe 1589 BROADWAY BROOKLYN, N.Y.

NO-LUSTRE FINISH

Keeping your home beautiful

START the spring season with a cheery determination to put the sunshine of fresh Acme Quality Paints and Finishes into every shady corner in your house, on every wear-weary spot! How you will be repaid! Every brush stroke will prove a delight!

With the friendly aid of

ACME QUALITY PAINTS & FINISHES

pleasing results are assured. Your decorator knows and approves them. Acme Quality Paints and Finishes are what you need—an Acme kind for every purpose! They give to floors, furniture, walls—to every surface that can be painted—a finish that is as lasting as it is beautiful.

Acme Quality Paints and Finishes are particularly for home service. And, to aid home beautifiers we have published two booklets—"Acme Quality Painting Guide" and "Home Decorating." If you would get every joy out of your home, by all means get these books. They're free for the asking. If your dealer's supply is out, write us.

ACME WHITE LEAD AND COLOR WORKS
Dept. O, DETROIT, MICH.

Boston Spokane St. Louis Dallas
Toledo Minneapolis Fort Worth Los Angeles
Lincoln Birmingham Salt Lake City Cincinnati
Chicago Portland Pittsburgh Topeka
Nashville

VARNOTILE
Neal's Enamel
HAVE AN ACME QUALITY SHELF

For the many "touching-up" jobs about the house, keep always on hand at least a can each of Acme Quality Varnotile, a varnish for floors, woodwork and furniture; Acme Quality White Enamel for iron bedsteads, furniture, woodwork and similar surfaces, and a quart of Acme Quality Floor Paint of the right color.

BRISCOE

Touring and Roadster Types

Even the inexpert driver obtains wonderful mileage records—they are an essential result of the design of the car.

The women of the family especially appreciate Briscoe beauty of line.

BRISCOE MOTOR CORPORATION
JACKSON MICHIGAN

99% BRISCOE BUILT

PLAY BALL!

Play the Great American Game with America's best baseball equipment—WILSON'S—used by the big leagues and famous all over the world. Insist on the Wilson trade-mark when you buy bats, balls, gloves, masks, mitts, etc.

The Chicago Cubs and White Sox, American Association, Texas League, Western League and many others too numerous to mention, use Wilson Baseball Goods.

In every line of athletic activity, the leading players recognize the superiority of Wilson Sporting and Athletic Goods.

WILSON'S
Sporting Goods Catalog

Shows the complete Wilson line—everything for every sport—baseball, football, basket ball, tennis, soccer, fishing, swimming, etc.

Every lover of outdoor sports will want this wonderful book—FREE on request. Use the Coupon.

THOS. E. WILSON & CO.

25 East 26th Street, New York City, N. Y.
701-735 North Sangamon Street, Chicago

Date__________
Thos. E. Wilson & Co.
701-735 N. Sangamon St., Chicago
Please send Sporting Goods Catalog—Free.
Name__________
Address__________

THE DAIL

J. H. Jowett, D.D., Rev. Richard Braunstein, C. C. Albertson, D.D., Rober

Aching of Unsatisfied Capacity

SUNDAY. Ps. 42:5. "Why art thou cast down, O my soul?" Isa. 55 : 2. "Wherefore do ye spend . . . labor for that which satisfieth not?" Here are two lives, and in each of them there is a gnawing consciousness of unrealized needs. They are very busy, but they have no final satisfaction. They go from one feast to another. But they do not find the vital bread. The soul remains cast down and disquieted. It labors for that which satisfieth not.

Now, if we had been created on smaller design we should be more easily satisfied. If the house of our being were a one-roomed house, and that room a sort of dining-room, we could eat and drink and the feast would bring contentment. Or if the one room were a sort of workshop, and all our faculties were instruments of business, our work would satisfy our meager cravings. Or if the single room were a sort of clubhouse, and our instincts were entirely social, we should find all we need in fraternal communion. Or again, if the one room were a sort of study, we should discover the ministries of satisfaction in science and art and music and literature.

But our life is not a one-roomed house. We are created for certain august relationships, and if these relationships are not perfected, or if they are broken, or if they are only formally recognized, our being aches and is disquieted in the sense of unsatisfied capacity.

It is the plan of our life that we should walk and talk with God. We are endowed with profound instincts and yearnings and capacities which are fitted to receive and entertain the divine presence. And these eternal powers are feeling for the eternal as for their vital bread. Offer them the world's feast, and they are hungry still. It is like offering stones for bread. These things are not big enough. The soul thirsts for God, for the living God.

And so the real trouble with multitudes of people is that they think too little of themselves rather than too much. They measure themselves on the scale of the inch, and they were created on the scale of the infinite. And for such people to seek God is like coming out of some small, ill-ventilated, stifling room into the open air. It is like coming out of a closed cabin onto the open deck with the immeasurable above and around us on every side. We can stretch ourselves. We can breathe our native air. "In Him we live and move and have our being." We are at home in the Lord. J. H. J.

The Thought of the Heart

MONDAY. Prov. 23 : 7. "As he thinketh in his heart, so is he." As we think, we are. Our thought is our measure. Therefore it is our duty to think what W. L. Watkinson calls "imperially." This is the recognition of self as being part of the divine plan. The thought of our hearts should be the kingdom and government of God. This is becoming identified with the greatest of all causes. It is the sum of all great causes. The thought can go no deeper than God, Christ, the Kingdom. Nothing mean, small, petty, can dwell in the soul dominated by the majesty and rule of God, his plan and purpose and intention for the world. When we think in such terms we crowd out insignificant things. The size of a fish is determined by the bigness or smallness of the lake in which it swims. Living in a small world, hemmed in by narrow horizons, man becomes a mental dwarf, he dwindles and withers. But as knowledge and imagination, faith and hope, love and redemption occupy his thought he becomes a world citizen, local barriers crumble, and the sky line recedes. John Wesley gave evidence of his giant mind and viewpoint when he said, "The world is my parish"; and David Livingst was eloquent indeed when he s
"Every land is my fatherland."
of these thoughts were but echoes f
Galilee when the Master Thinker
"Go ye into all the world."

A class of theological students w asked to write a twenty minute pa on God and the devil. One took al the twenty minutes and wrote ab God, adding at the close, "I have time for the devil." Thinking ab the things that matter most leaves room in the mind for the things t matter least. Let us crowd out mediocre and the non-essential. R. B

How to Deal With the Worl

TUESDAY. I Cor. 7 : 31. "A they that use this world, as not ab ing it." There are three great fact in the problem of every life; self, world, and God. How shall we thi of the world? That is to say, how, the light of God's revelation, sh Christians think of the planet which their earthly habitation, the sphere which they have their stewardshi Shall we dispense with it? There is philosophy which denies the reality matter. It says, "There is no objecti world; the only world there is is th which thought itself creates." Th were an easy way to get rid of the wo were it not for such stubborn facts hunger and thirst, disease and deat

What did Jesus think of this worl
Did he not, by inference, call this wor
one of the "abiding-places" in h Father's house? The opening words the fourteenth chapter of John ma thus be paraphrased: "The earth only one of many mansions. I go prepare another mansion for you, larg and better than this." If then the wor be even the least of God's many ma sions, it becomes us to use it wisel and this we can never do until we ap praise it rightly. Are not the old schoo houses in which we first learned to rea and write dear to us? Shall we despi the ship on which we take passage, sin ply because we are not to live on it fo ever? Have we not heard of "the goo ship Earth"? It is indeed a good shi in spite of storms and mutinous crew and irritable passengers, and all of th discomforts of the voyage. At times sails over calm seas, and under blu skies. We are bidden to conquer th world, but that does not mean to de spise it. How does a successful ride conquer a mettlesome horse? He learn to compel it to do his bidding. He keep it under him. Too many of us are ridde by the world. God meant us to ride i triumphantly. C. C. A.

The Thought of God

WEDNESDAY. Job 34 : 13. "Wh hath given him a charge over t earth? or who hath disposed the whol world?" This world was once th thought of God, as the engine was onc
the thought of its inventor. This worl is still the thought of God. It is no God's thought materialized, incarnated translated. The mountains are God's brilliant thoughts; the flowers are God's majestic thoughts; the stars are God's beautiful thoughts. Creation is voice-ful of God's wisdom, power and love.
We ought to study creation with this thought in mind, as our dominant motive and our lofty inspiration.

Some men speak of law as if it had somehow a personality and potency of its own. What is law in this connection? May I attempt a definition? Law is the name which we give to the manner in which we have observed some forces to act. If that force be material, we have a physical law; if it be mental,
we have an intellectual law; if it be moral, we have a spiritual law. Law is not a force; law is a form. Law is not a power; law is a process. Law is

MEDITATION

acArthur, D.D., Prof. W. H. T. Dau, Hugh T. Kerr, D.D., Rev. Edwin W. Caswell

t a motor; law is a motion. Law is t an agent; law is an agency. Back the agency is the agent; there stands od. Back of the motion is the motor; ere stands God. Back of the process the power; there stands God. Back the form is the force; there stands od. The laws of nature have been ll called "the habits of God." These ws reveal God, glorify God and exalt s presence, power, wisdom and love. od has charge over the earth; he is e disposer of the whole world.

R. S. M.

Making the Yoke Heavy

HURSDAY. Luke 11:46. "Woe unto you also, ye lawyers! for ye de men with burdens grievous to be rne, and ye yourselves touch not the rdens with one of your fingers." A arned Jew who had been listening to at the Lord had said about the Pharies had remarked that the Lord's denciations might seem to apply to the ost distinguished doctors of the law. e meant to warn Jesus that he was awing down upon himself the wrath the greatest men in their nation. t he misses his object; for the Lord w tells him directly that he and his ass are included in his censure. They ere the called expounders of God's w to the people—of that law of which ter at the apostles' council said that ither their fathers nor they had been le to bear it. They multiplied duties their minute interpretations and eir casuistry. They acted as if they d sounded the law of God to its proundest depths and as if their teaching as the true guide to the mind and art of God. If they had really underood the law, what compassion should ey have shown to their fellowmen who ere hopelessly struggling with the task fulfilling the law! How eager should ey have been to point men from the w of works to the Gospel of grace! t they seemed content with the inllectual feats which they had performed by interpreting the Thorah and plying it in a thousand different ways. he difficult tasks which they evolved om the law they never thought of suming themselves. They delighted loading down the people with ever eater moral and spiritual burdens d claimed honor and distinction for eir deep research of the law. It had en through their teaching, faithless the real intent of God, that the peoe in Christ's day had become like eep without a shepherd. With divine y he had called the people to him: Come unto me, all ye that labor and e heavy laden, and I will give you t." Here he is telling the teachers hat he thinks of them: they had spirually ruined the people whom they ould have raised up for joyous and ateful service of God. W. H. T. D.

Christ's Cross and Mine

RIDAY. Gal. 2:20. "I am crucified with Christ." It is Christ's oss, but I must make it mine. I must ke my place beside him. I must identy myself with him. By faith I must y hold of him and enter into his death, s suffering, his life. I must make his oss my cross. The devotional books the middle ages speak frequently of a w-forgotten word in theology which ey call "the process of Christ." By is they mean that all that happened Christ happens to his followers, and at all that took place in Jesus, in his ffering sacrifice, must take place in ose that are his. They must drink e cup that he drank. They must bear e cross. They, too, must climb the ll with him to Calvary. They must ter into his Spirit and identify themlves with him in all his atoning work. his is the work of faith. The faith hich unites us to Christ can alone justify. I must take my place beside Christ, identifying myself with him in thought, in feeling, in life and in death, and live my life in him. I can do this. It is not the impossible which God demands. It is said that Hiram Powers, the sculptor, who produced the "Liberty" which surmounts the Capitol at Washington, when asked how he could keep so closely in touch with American life though for years his home had been in Italy, replied, "I have never been out of touch with America. I have eaten and slept in Italy for thirty-odd years, but I have never lived anywhere but in the United States." That is identification by faith and by imagination with the spirit of a great nation. In this same way I can enter into union with Christ's life so that the spirit that is in him may be in me, and the life which I live in the body of this flesh I may live in the faith of the Son of God.

H. T. K.

"Abide"

SATURDAY. John 15:5. "He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit." There can be no separate spiritual life apart from Christ, the Vine. In Christ we are accepted of the beloved Father and able to do all things. We are members of the body of Christ, of which he is the head. We eat of his flesh, drink of his blood, that we may be made partakers of the divine nature. As it takes all the blood of the body to keep one finger alive, so it takes all the life of the vine to keep one twig in fruit-bearing condition. It takes all the blood of Jesus in vital union with the soul to keep the most humble believer a perfect fruit-bearer.

"My life in thee, thy life in me, Makes fruitage forever mine."

How sacrilegious it would be to say, "It is no more I that live, but the beloved apostle John who liveth in me." But when our Lord says, "Abide in me," we do not wonder, for he is God over all and blessed forever more. He is our Preserver and Saviour, supplying all human needs for time and eternity.

The word "abide" would not be written ten times in seven verses of this chapter if it were not the dearest, sweetest, sublimest expression of our most intimate oneness with the being of our Lord. It is also one of the richest words in hymnology.

"When other helpers fail and comforts flee, Help of the helpless, oh, abide with me!"

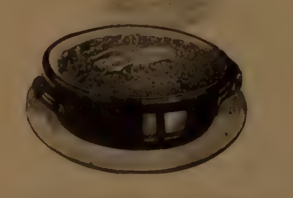
E. W. C.

◆

A COMMITTEE of thirty-one prominent American citizens of the Jewish faith recently presented to President Wilson a petition protesting against the organization of a Jewish state in Palestine as proposed by the Zionist societies. They based their protest on the double allegiance of Jewish citizens of other countries which such a segregation would imply; on the fact that the condition of Jews in other countries would be made much more precarious; on the fact that there is no agreement as to the boundaries of Palestine, the attempt to fix which would evoke bitter controversies; and on the tendency of modern times against establishing nations on the bases of race and religion. "A Jewish state involves fundamental limitations as to race and religion, else the term 'Jewish' means nothing. To unite church and state in any form, as under the old Jewish hierarchy, would be a leap backward of two thousand years. . . . We ask that Palestine be constituted as a free and independent state, to be governed under a democratic form of government, recognizing no distinctions of race or ethnic descent."

"You've Solved the Baked Bean Problem"

At the Van Camp laboratories we serve Baked Beans to countless interested people. Among them are doctors, who come to congratulate our scientists on solving the Baked Bean problem.



Crisped and Broken—Hard to Digest

Every doctor knows that old-style baked beans were unfit. So do most other people.

They were not one-fourth baked. Digestion was difficult. Yet the beans were crisped and broken by the heat.

Some years ago the Van Camp scientific cooks took up this baked bean problem. They found what beans were best for baking, and they select them by analysis.

Hard water makes the skins tough. So they free the boiling water from minerals.

And they devised steam ovens, where beans could be baked for hours at high heat without either crisping or bursting.

A Four-Year Dish

Then came the sauce problem. These culinary experts compared 856 recipes. Step by step they thus attained the utmost in tang and zest. Now they bake that sauce with the beans.

It took four years to perfect this dish. But the result is beans four times better baked, yet mealy and whole and nutty. And a zest which gives them multiplied delights.

If you don't know Van Camp's you should find it out. You owe that to yourself. It will change your every idea of Baked Beans.

Whole and Mellow—Easy to Digest

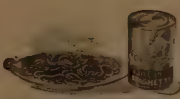
VAN CAMP'S

Pork and Beans

Baked With the Van Camp Sauce—Also Baked Without the Sauce

Other Van Camp Products Include
Soups Evaporated Milk Spaghetti Peanut Butter
Chili Con Carne Catsup Chili Sauce, etc.
Prepared in the Van Camp Kitchens at Indianapolis

Van Camp's Soups 18 Kinds



Van Camp's Spaghetti

Van Camp's Peanut Butter

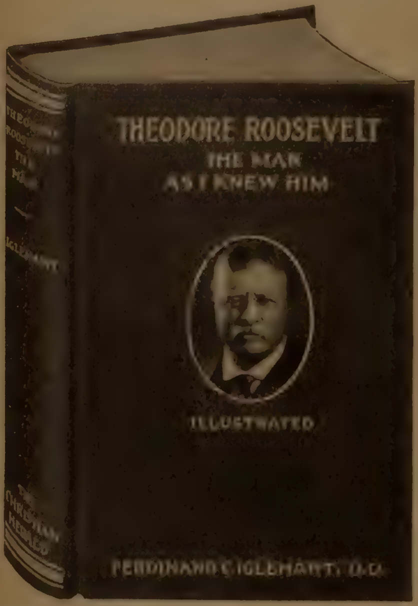
(526)

THEODORE ROOSEVELT

THE MAN AS I KNEW HIM

By FERDINAND COWLE IGLEHART, D.D.
of the Editorial Staff of the Christian Herald

DOCTOR IGLEHART is now writing for the Christian Herald (to publish in book form) his appreciation of Theodore Roosevelt, from an intimate friendship of many years. The Author cooperated with the Colonel back in the strenuous days when Colonel Roosevelt, as Police Commissioner of New York City, made the saloons obey the law on Sunday closing. For over 20 years, the two have been intimate friends. Dr. Iglehart will honor in this appreciation the memory of a great personality who has left a warm spot in the hearts of all Americans.



THE BOOK will be printed on fine book paper and will include 16 pages of illustrations on plate paper. There will be nearly 350 pages, in 31 chapters. The binding will be fine cloth embossed in gold. Size 5x7¼ in.

AGENTS WANTED

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be very glad to appoint agents to represent this timely book. Many members of the Christian Herald family will know of some worthy persons who could act as agents (men or women). Tell them to write for liberal terms and handsome agents' outfit and start taking orders right away.

The author says in his preface that he counts the intimate and personal friendship of Col. Roosevelt for the last twenty-four years as one of the highest honors, joys and blessings of his life. In this book he tells a fascinating story of the career of Col. Roosevelt

FROM EARLY BOYHOOD TO HIS DEATH

Many of the Colonel's lifelong friends have gladly furnished the Author with valuable material for the work on Theodore Roosevelt, among whom may be mentioned:

Dr. Albert Shaw, Editor of the Review of Reviews.
Hon. Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy.
Judge Charles E. Hughes, late U. S. Supreme Court.
Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, late U. S. Senator.
Bishop Luther B. Wilson of New York City.
Dr. Lyman Abbott, Editor of the Outlook.
Will H. Hays, Chairman of the Republican National Committee and others.

SEND NO MONEY NOW—We do not want any money now. This splendid book will be ready for delivery in a few weeks. We would, however, like to have a post card from as many Christian Herald Readers as possible stating that they will take a copy when ready at the price of $1.50 a copy, postpaid. This will give us a good idea of how many copies to make for the first edition. We will notify all who order when the edition will be ready.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Christ Our Saviour

International Sunday School Lesson for April 13
John 1 : 35-51

Four Views of the Lord Jesus

By Rev. George D. Allison, Ph.D.

HERE is a unique topic for a Sunday school lesson—just Jesus Christ our Lord! Not an incident from his life, nor a chapter of his wondrous teaching, nor even some other man's statements about him. Just what think ye of Christ? I trust that in innumerable groups of boys and girls, and of men and women, this appointed theme will give occasion for a varied series of testimonies as to what Christ is to those who are his disciples today. In so doing we shall find ourselves using many a word of Scripture, and we shall find different peoples taking different angles of the immortal theme, just as Paul and John and the rest reflect the Light of the World from the angles of individual temperament and experience and need.

The topic is inexhaustible. We may well agree with the closing verse of the Gospel of John that the world itself could not contain the books that might be written. How can we express all that Jesus means to us when we see in him made manifest the very heart of the Almighty and Infinite Father? Without him God may be very real, and everywhere present, but so vague, so incomprehensible. In him we learn what God is like, and knowing him we know the Father also. The Christian world, striving to realize who God is and what he wants, is saved by thinking of the personality of Jesus and his requirements of his followers.

Let us however take from the reading lesson assigned four typical views of Jesus which are clearly seen in the New Testament, and which are apt to be emphasized in any Christian testimony meeting among our own churches.

The Lamb of God

According to our text John the Baptist thought of Jesus as the great Sacrifice, the Lamb of God. Back of this thought lies all the ancient ceremonial of sacrificial religion so unfamiliar to boys and girls of our time unless explained from the Old Testament. You may judge of the difficulty of interpreting this phrase to the Eskimos who had never seen a lamb, and had no conception of sacrificial worship. The ancients had a keen sense of sin whose defiling effects made them unworthy to come before the Holy One of Israel. The notion of an atoning victim was early developed, a moving symbol of guilt and penalty. Lambs in all their innocence and purity were offered as a propitiation to the wrath of God, while spiritually minded men knew that they were after all only symbols of penitence and contrition (Ps. 51:17).

John says that God also strives to reconcile his erring children, while they are reaching out toward him. He has his lambs, his suffering servants, his prophets despised and rejected of men. In Jesus he offered his best, rebuking sin as it never had been rebuked before, and pledging forgiveness with all the divine fervor of his love for the world. "God so loved the world that he gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." The Lamb of God was not slain in vain. In all generations wicked men have caught a glimpse of that Cross and have fallen upon their knees in penitence and have been redeemed by his grace. His blood avails to wipe out stains and to transform with a new purpose the vilest of wretched sinners. The Crucified One not only saves but keeps.

The Messiah of Israel

To Andrew his experience with Jesus found expression in another term of deep spiritual significance. To his brother he said, "We have found the Messiah." Now the Messiah means literally "the anointed one," and "Christ" is its equivalent in the Greek tongue. But into that phrase the hopes and long of generations of pious Jews had poured, and it has a mighty meanin us all. Jesus fulfilled the propheci the coming of a mighty leader of m perfect ruler and king of the spir captain of salvation. He was to e lish justice between man and man to build the social life of the natio righteous foundations. In Isaial was pictured as the deliverer of the and of the ends of the earth, as we of his people Israel.

We ought not to let the underl thought of Christ's Messiahship die
Indeed, we do not, for we still are r ing to his standard to be his helpe
the building on earth of his kingdo righteousness and peace. As Mes his watchword is, "Follow me!" a rings out anew in this wonderful er
Christian effort, as his new crusa gather round his banner to delive the earth from sin and woe. The trine of his Messiahship is divested o narrow and nationalistic Jewish acter, and he becomes the mighty queror of the spiritual enemies o men and the King of a world-wide k dom of the soul. He is our hero, ing us onward in the Holy War.

The Character-Builder

Perhaps there is no word which q sums up what Jesus promised to b
Peter in this text. But the idea ca clearly stated, and glad witness has borne in every age that he can do fo disciples evermore what he did for Pe
That is, he transformed his charac
from a changeable, rather bluste
Simon to a stalwart invincible Pete Rock of personality. Jesus is Strengthener, who rebuilds the indi ual soul upon rock foundations, so t
"if any man be in Christ Jesus he new creature; old things are pa away." Of course, to men who s
Peter's experience he is the Lamb
God and the Messiah of the world ( it not Peter who first fully realized reality of his Messiahship?), but he in the individual life, one who can model the whole self, making the w strong, and the impure holy, and timid as brave as a lion. How we n Jesus as the Strength-giver, the in haustible Source of power. Do we know those who tower like mountain spiritual character because Jesus dwelling them has infused into t souls the power of his own wondr life? He will do something very that for us, if we give ourselves wh into his hands.

The Ministering Comforter

To Nathanael Jesus first came quite a different light. We cannot p cisely state what Nathanael's deep n was, but all Bible readers have g straight to the real meaning of t memorable colloquy. Under the tree Nathanael had come to a crisis his inner life: he may have been agon ing for the coming of the Lord, or may have been overborne by a terri disappointment or grief, or he may ha been suffering keenly under injusti
Jesus came at once to his heart as t ministering Comforter, the Bestower appreciation, the One who cares for c souls when no man careth.

How many saints will testify to t phase of the love of Jesus? Are th not a great multitude? He speaks word in season to him that is weary, binds up the broken-hearted, he vis the prisoner in the prison house. " restoreth my soul." He is the Minist of the merciful lovingkindness of Father. How sweet is the experien of the Christian who has found him be all that he was to Nathanael of o and the cheering Companion of o daily walk!

If we think over this lesson careful and refresh our minds with the readi of some of Jesus' words, for example t
Sermon on the Mount, we shall fi that the familiar titles of our Lord ta on new and deeper meaning.

HELPS IN HOME-MAKING

uring the Spring House Cleaning

By Laura A. Kirkman

BEFORE starting her spring house cleaning, the wise housekeeper stocks up her larder with pre- usly prepared foods, in order that she y devote herself chiefly to the clean- work. Her family is willing to eat ld roast for a day or two, and have the tatoes always baked, because that is e quickest way of cooking them.

But in spite of this willing spirit of co- eration on the part of her family, no od housekeeper can feel comfortable less she "pieces out" the makeshift ast with hot dishes—even though y take some of her precious time d halt the cleaning considerably fore mealtime.

"But I can have the hot dishes which quire the minimum of time to pre- re!" realizes the housekeeper in this uation. She then falls to work select- dishes which fulfil this qualification. Let us help her. Inasmuch as she will ve baked potatoes for dinner, she will d it a saving of both time and money choose hot dishes which can also be ked. Cheese dishes should perhaps her first choice, because of their nour- ing qualities; at such a strenuous ne she herself, if not her family, needs bstantial nourishment.

Baked dishes containing eggs, too, uld be an excellent choice, or baked acaroni dishes. The following recipes hot baked dishes are particularly se- ted because of their adaptability to e emergency in question:

Cheese Custard. Butter a baking- . Put in layer of bread cut in thin ces and then into cubes an inch square crusts). Sprinkle cheese, sliced fer-thin, over the bread, and dust th salt and paprika. Add more lay- , using one-half loaf of bread, and e-half pound of cheese. Beat two eggs ghtly, add one pint of milk to eggs, d pour over cheese and bread. Bake out half an hour in moderate oven. It ould look delicate and wavy between ft and spongy bread.

Corn and Cheese Soufflé. Cook one blespoon chopped green pepper in one blespoon of melted butter. Add one- arter cup flour and two cups milk. ir and cook smooth. Then add one p grated cheese. Remove from fire, d one cup corn, one-half teaspoon lt, yolks of three eggs, and fold in iffly beaten whites. Bake in buttered king-dish in moderate oven thirty inutes. Serve at once.

Tomato Soufflé. One pint can tomato, e ounce butter, two ounces grated eese, one and one-half ounces pre- ously boiled macaroni, one ounce stale ead crumbs, one teaspoon mustard. ix all together in saucepan and stir er fire until boiling. Take from the e and cool, then stir in the yolks of o eggs and the whites of three, salt d pepper to taste. Turn into a dish d bake quickly.

Plan the Vegetable Garden

MISTAKES of last year may be largely avoided by the careful anning of this year's garden. To get e largest returns from a small area quires a system and intensive planting; d to insure these, it is necessary to ake a plan of the garden. The plan ould show the crops to be grown, eir location in the garden, the approxi- ate time for planting, and the distance etween the rows. Such a plan must made in advance so that the gardener ay know what kinds of seeds to buy, d how much of each kind.

Measure the plot of ground to be ed for the garden and map it on paper ith dimensions. Place the early plant- gs and quick-maturing vegetables on e south, if the rows run east and west, d number the rows. The earliest antings should be made on one side d the later plantings should follow order. The arrangement of crops is etermined by the time of maturity; y grouping the early crops, such as ttuce, radishes, and bunch onions, one n again use this ground for late beets, eans, or cabbage; bush beans may be followed by turnips, or beets; and early cabbage may be followed by spinach. Show the distance between rows and the vegetable that is to occupy the row. Crops that are to follow early vegetables also should be shown.

The selection of the crops to be grown will depend on the likes of the family and on the size of the garden. Large-growing, low-yielding crops cannot be planted profitably on small areas.

How to Set Your Table

UP-TO-DATE factories and business houses engage efficiency experts to show their employees how to work with the minimum of time and labor. This economy of energy is called "motion study."

The modern housekeeper eagerly grasps this hint and asks herself how she can apply motion study to her daily task of setting the table—how she can set it with the fewest steps and movements of the arms.

Let us imagine Mrs. A. setting her table according to this idea. She first covers the table with the white cloth. Then she goes into her pantry and takes down from the shelves four dinner plates (she has four in family), four teacups and saucers, four butter plates and four glasses. The silver she takes from the silver basket which stands under the pantry shelves.

Mrs. A. next places on a small tray one dinner plate, one cup and saucer, one glass, one butter plate and silver for one person. Why does she do this? Because by setting only one person's place at once, she will have to go around the table only once. If she were to carry in all four plates at once, all four cups at once, etc., she would find herself circling the table many times. But by doing it in this manner she can set her table in four trips.

In unsetting the table, Mrs. A. employs the same methods; she puts on her little tray only one person's soiled plate, cup, saucer, butter plate, glass and silver. In this way she can unset her table in five journeys to the sink—one journey with each person's dishes and one extra trip with the dishes which contained the food.

The up-to-date housekeeper makes a habit of her efficiency method of table-setting, going through the motions with the precision of clockwork and thus saving both time and energy. L. A. K.

Marion Harland's Corner

Warning Against "Vinegar Bees"

I MUST write a word of warning from what I have learned of "Vinegar Bees," of which a Cornerite writes. Some eight years ago my husband brought home from a neighboring village a cup of "bees" with directions somewhat the same as in your No. 3. They were to make "a tonic," "a wonderful cure for rheumatism," "fine to clear the blood," "not intoxicating," "no alcohol in it, etc." "Take a wineglass at meal time." The dried "bees" had much the appearance of crumbs of (marine) sponge and I understood can be laid away indefinitely and kept, retaining their multiplying properties when set to work.

We found the prepared "tonic"—even half a wineglass full—had the intoxicating effect of wine or any other spirituous liquor, and never experienced any benefit from the use of it. When we called at homes, jars in various stages of preparation were very often seen. Then we noticed it given as a beverage. The men who like cider or strong drink tossed off big glasses with gusto. Then little and big children were drinking it freely as a summer drink, as country children learn to drink hard cider by first drinking sweet cider.

We saw in it a menace. It seemed to us nothing less than teaching the use of alcohol, and I threw away my "bees." It is called by different names, but I think that "vinegar bees," "cider bees," "tonic bees," and "rheumatic bees," are one and the same. Perhaps a warning may serve to make known the cider possibilities of the "bees" to its lovers.
MRS. E. T. G., New Hampshire.

"STAMPING THE PRICE ON EVERY PAIR OF SHOES AS A PROTECTION AGAINST HIGH PRICES AND UNREASONABLE PROFITS"
W. L. DOUGLAS PEGGING SHOES AT SEVEN YEARS OF AGE

W. L. Douglas
"THE SHOE THAT HOLDS ITS SHAPE"

FOR MEN
FOR WOMEN
W.L.DOUGLAS $5.00 SHOE
BOYS' SHOES
Best in the World
$3 $3.50 $4

$4.00 $4.50 $5.00 $6.00 $7.00 & $8.00

IF you have been paying $10.00 to $12.00 for fine shoes, a trial will convince you that for style, comfort and service W. L. Douglas $7.00 and $8.00 shoes are equally as good and will give excellent satisfaction. The actual value is determined and the retail price fixed at the factory before W. L. Douglas name and the retail price is stamped on the bottom. The stamped price is W. L. Douglas personal guarantee that the shoes are always worth the price paid for them. The retail prices are the same everywhere. They cost no more in San Francisco than they do in New York.

Stamping the price on every pair of shoes as a protection against high prices and unreasonable profits is only one example of the constant endeavor of W. L. Douglas to protect his customers. The quality of W. L. Douglas product is guaranteed by more than 40 years experience in making fine shoes. The smart styles are the leaders in the fashion centers of America. They are made in a well-equipped factory at Brockton, Mass., by the highest paid, skilled shoemakers under the direction and supervision of experienced men, all working with an honest determination to make the best shoes for the price that money can buy.

CAUTION—Before you buy be sure W. L. Douglas name and the retail price is stamped on the bottom and the inside top facing. If the stamped price has been mutilated, BEWARE OF FRAUD.

For sale by 106 W. L. Douglas stores and over 9000 W. L. Douglas dealers, or can be ordered direct from factory by mail. Parcel Post charges prepaid. Write for Illustrated Catalog showing how to order by mail.

W. L. Douglas

President W. L. DOUGLAS SHOE COMPANY,
165 SPARK STREET,
BROCKTON - - MASS.

SAVE YOUR BODY Conserve Your Health and Efficiency First

"I Would Not Part With It For $10,000"

So writes an enthusiastic, grateful customer. "Worth more than a farm" says another. In like manner testify over 100,000 people who have worn it.

The Natural Body Brace

Overcomes WEAKNESS and ORGANIC AILMENTS of WOMEN and MEN. Develops erect, graceful figure. Brings restful relief, comfort, ability to do things, health and strength.

Wear It 30 Days Free at Our Expense Does away with the strain and pain of standing and walking, replaces and supports misplaced internal organs; reduces enlarged abdomen; straightens and strengthens the back; corrects stooping shoulders; develops lungs, chest and bust; relieves backache, curvatures, nervousness, ruptures, constipation. Comfortable and easy to wear. KEEP YOURSELF FIT. Write today for illustrated booklet, measurement blank, etc., and read our very liberal proposition.
HOWARD C. RASH, Pres. Natural Body Brace Co., 171 Rash Bldg., Salina, Kansas

For Boys and Girls Also

GUNN Sectional Bookcases

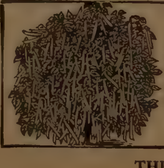
are described in our handsome Style Book, mailed free. Made in oak and mahogany in Colonial, Mission, Queen Anne, Clawfoot and Standard Styles at very attractive prices and in widths to fit various spaces. They have features that others do not have.

Other Uses Than for Books

Instead of thinking of them as only cabinets for books, think of them also as units of convenient arrangements of one to four drawers (always needed), roomy storage compartments, record cabinets, writing desks with pigeon holes, &c., &c. You will be surprised to know of the various uses that can be made of "Gunn" sections.

THE GUNN FURNITURE CO. 1820 Broadway, Grand Rapids, Mich.

GUNN OFFICE DESKS
WRITE FOR CATALOG



1200 TO 1 BEAN. A Gigantic Wonder—over 200 pods have been grown on a single plant—all well filled, producing over 1200 beans from 1 bean planted. Plants grow strong and erect, branching out in all directions, bearing pods up well from the ground, which literally load the plants; beans being pure white and of best quality.

Plant in your garden or any good soil, after danger of frost, any time up to June 15 only 1 Bean in a hill, and it will mature a crop in about 80 days, ripening very evenly, and the growth and yield will simply surprise you. My supply is limited and I can offer only in sealed packets, each containing over 60 Beans with growing directions. Order early to be sure of them.

Sealed packets 10c each; 3 pkts. 25c; 7 pkts. 50c; 15 pkts. $1 postpaid.

My New Seed Book is filled with High Grade Garden Seeds at lowest prices. It's mailed free. F. B. MILLS, Seed Grower, Dept. 31. ROSE HILL, N.Y.

OILY SKIN
DRY SKIN
NORMAL SKIN

Which is Yours

There's a woman in your town trained to help you determine which your skin is, and the care to give it.

Your skin should be soft and velvety and it can be made so.

If it is oily, special Franco-American soap, creams and powder are needed to dissipate the oil.

If it is dry, special cleansers, powder and creams will nourish it and correct its condition.

If it is normal, special Franco-American treatment will prevent it from becoming oily or dry.

Let us send our book "How to Look Your Best," and the name of our retailer who can call at your convenience. Write today.

FRANCO-AMERICAN HYGIENIC CO.
104 Franco-American Bldg.
CHICAGO

The Franco-American Hygienic Co., seeks capable intelligent, energetic women to retail its preparations. Special training given. It is pleasant, profitable work and offers opportunity for advancement and a permanent business connection.

How to Look Your Best
The Franco-American Way

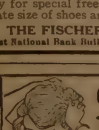
KEEPS SHOES SHAPELY
HIDES LARGE JOINTS

FOR MEN OR WOMEN
10 DAYS FREE TRIAL

Fischer PROTECTOR

Affords instant relief for bunions and large joints; hides irregularities of foot form. Worn in any shoe, no larger size required. Over one half million in use. Ask your shoe dealer or druggist. Write today for special free trial offer. No pay if no relief. State size of shoes and if for right or left foot.

THE FISCHER MANUFACTURING CO.
First National Bank Building. Dept. 50. Milwaukee, Wis.



Cuticura Promotes Hair Health

All druggists: Soap 25, Ointment 25 & 50, Talcum 25. Sample each free of "Cuticura, Dept. M, Boston."

WE PAY CASH FOR OLD FALSE TEETH

Don't matter if broken. Also cash for old gold, silver, platinum, dental gold and old gold jewelry. Will send cash by return mail and will hold goods 10 days for sender's approval of our price. Mail to Mazer's Tooth Specialty,
Dept. 37, 2007 So. 5th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Individual Cups

Every church should use. Clean and sanitary. Trial free.
Thomas Communion Service Co. Box 150 Lima, Ohio

KIDDER'S PASTILLES Standard relief for ASTHMA (Inhalation.) All Druggists, 50 cts., or trial size for 2c. stamp.
STOWELL & CO., 50 D Main St., Charlestown, Mass.

The Week in the World's News

Continued from page 370

reases in wages. It recommended also that the workers in the collieries should have an effective voice in the direction of the mines and that the system of private ownership be replaced either by internationalization or by purchase or joint control. The profits of owners are to be limited to 14 pence per ton. The mine owners on the commission dissented from the majority, but recommended an increase in wages of 18 pence a day and a seven-hour day. The miners on the commission also dissented recommending granting in full of the miner's original claim. The triple alliance of British labor, railway, transport and mine workers, after several hours deliberation, on March 21, voted against a general strike pending negotiations with the government on the railway situation. It was said that the agricultural laborers, the cotton workers and every other element of British labor were feeling the unrest and waiting to demand more pay and shorter hours. The railway workers, on March 22, voted to adhere completely to their original demands. The railway management had offered them increases representing an additional annual cost of £90,000,000. The full demands would mean an additional cost of £120,000,000.

Working Toward Peace. A difficult situation created by the demands of Italy and the new state of Jugo-Slavia came to a head in Paris, on March 21, when the Italian delegation to the Peace Conference voted unanimously to withdraw from the Conference unless the city of Fiume was assigned to Italy. The Jugo-Slavs were demanding the city as a necessary seaport for the country back of it, their claim to which is not disputed. The city, however, is Italian, and Premier Orlando, as late as March 1, declared that Italy would not expose this Italian city to the loss of both its nationality and its independence. It was expected that President Wilson would be forced to umpire this dispute.

The French are said to insist that the Rhine must be the political and military boundary of Germany. They do not seek to add the Rhineland to France, but propose that it become a buffer state.

President Wilson, Lloyd George and Premier Clemenceau of France were reported in daily conference over the questions of reparation, the left bank of the Rhine, economic agreement and territorial settlements. These leaders and the various commissions of the Conference were, on March 24, exerting every effort toward a quick conclusion of peace, the necessity of which was becoming daily more evident.

Herr Erzberger, head of the German armistice commission, was reported to have declared that Germany was under no obligations to pay compensation for acts committed after her first offer of peace in December, 1916.

The Victory Loan. It was reported on March 24 that the Victory Liberty Loan would probably be for $6,000,000,000. The Treasury Department was then perfecting a nation-wide organization for the sale of bonds, building on the former Liberty Loan committees and anticipating as wide a personal distribution as marked the Fourth Loan. During the week preceding April 21 the loan will be advertised throughout the country by flying circuses in which American airmen will reproduce battle conditions in evolutions over the principal American cities, bombarding them with loan literature.

Revolt in Egypt. It was announced in London, on March 18, that in November a deputation of Egyptian Nationalists had called at the British residency to present to Great Britain an appeal for Egyptian independence. The leaders asked to be allowed to proceed to London. At the beginning of the year the British High Commissioner was summoned to London and asked two of the Egyptian ministers in sympathy with the movement to go with him, but they refused unless the leaders were included in the party. This condition the government refused, and the ministers resigned. The Nationalists attempted to prevent the formation of a new ministry by the coercion of all persons asked to accept office. The Sultan appealed to the British High Commissioner for protection. Five of the Nationalist leaders were arrested and deported to Malta and there had been rioting in Cairo, and one or two other centers. A collision had occurred between the rioters and the Egyptian police and British troops. Order was reported to have been restored on March 13, after 6 persons had been killed in Cairo and 11 at Tanta, while a total of 82 were wounded.

A Billion From Incomes. It was announced on March 22 that 63 of the 64 Internal Revenue collection districts had received from the income tax payments $1,001,244,575. Inasmuch as the larger incomes were represented only by the payments of the first fourth of the taxes, it was estimated that these payments foreshadowed a collection during the year in excess of $4,000,000,000. Congress had estimated income tax receipts at $4,700,000,000.

State Department Warns Against Land Sale to Japanese. The State Department on March 21 issued a warning to the Mexican-American Land Company, calling their attention to the action of the Senate in the Magdalena Bay affair, in which a sale of land to Japanese was prevented. The company was reported to be negotiating with a Japanese corporation for the sale of 800,000 acres of land adjoining the California boundary.

Talk Across the Sea. The success of wireless telephony between Ireland and Canada was announced on March 19, the Irish station being at Bally Bunion and the Canadian in Nova Scotia, the distance being 2900 miles. It was announced on the next day that the naval radio station at New Brunswick, N. J., had conversed by wireless telephone with the transport George Washington during her voyage from New York to Brest, the distance from New Brunswick to Brest being 3200 miles.

Bolshevists Seek Trade. According to New York papers, on March 22, Lenine and Trotzky were anxious to begin trade relations with the United States and were ready to deposit $200,000,000 in gold as a guarantee of credit. They had appointed a commercial agent in this country through whom they made application in the State Department for commercial recognition, and it was reported that they were ready to spend large sums in propaganda. The head of the propaganda organization declared that they were merely telling the truth about Russia, and that they realized that Americans were able to run their own affairs.

Ireland to Welcome President. On March 22 the Sinn Fein Executive Committee announced in Dublin that President De Valera would arrive in Ireland on the next Wednesday evening (March 26) and would be offered a national welcome. De Valera recently escaped from an English prison.

Churches to Aid Soldiers. The General War Time Commission of the Churches, announced on March 22, it had undertaken to organize 150,000 churches connected with its organization to cooperate in the obtaining of jobs for returning soldiers, sailors, marines, and civilian war workers. Members of the churches will be asked to report vacancies to the agents of the employment service. In addition to a shortage of jobs some plants and shops in the east have found it necessary to operate only a five-day week.

A Million for the White Ribbon. It was announced, on March 19, that the National W. C. T. U. was about to begin a 5-year jubilee celebration by a campaign for a million members at $1.00 apiece, the money to be used for the spreading of its work in more than 40 foreign countries in which it is or ized. The jubilee will end with the birthday of the organization in 192

West Virginia Pays. The standing controversy between Virg and West Virginia over the West ginia share of Virginia's public debt sent on the last lap of the way to se ment when the West Virginia Senate March 17, passed the Virginia settlement bill, providing for the pa of the judgment entered by the U States Supreme Court in favor of ginia. A sinking fund will be cre by taxes to retire the bonds in 20 y Railway Construction Stop Because of the failure of Congress appropriate the $750,000,000 needed the railroads, orders were sent out March 19 stopping all work which c be held up on advanced repairs and lines. There was still on hand $3 000,000 to be expended for this w but an additional $325,000,000 been included in the appropriat which failed of passage. This ac forced by failure of Congress resulte a measurable increase in unemploym A hopeful sign of early building op tions was seen in the lowering on Ma 20 of prices of structural steel.

Border Routine. The War Dep ment at Washington, on March 23, scribed as merely a matter of border r tine a clash between American caval men and Mexican bandits on Mexi territory, following a raid on a ranch Texas. The American cavalryn brought back the stolen cattle and behind 5 dead bandits.

New York's Own. As a prelimin to the grand parade of New York Cit 27th Division, on March 25, Gene O'Ryan, assisted by other officers March 23 presented to 28 heroes of t division the Distinguished Service Cro while a French officer presented to th the Croix de Guerre, the ceremony t ing place on the sheep meadow in C tral Park, while 50,000 people cheer Government Ownership. The ficit experienced by the United Sta Railroad Administration in the ope tion of American railroads is paralle by the British Railways Administratio It was announced, on March 17, th while before the war British capital h returned a profit of 4 2/10 per cent., t railways were now being operated at loss of from 2 to 3 per cent.

Soldiers' Allowances Threa ened. Secretary of the Treasury, Gla on March 17 advised President Wils by cable that the Bureau of War Ri Insurance faced a grave situation b cause of the failure of the Sundry Ci and General Deficiency Appropriati Bills in the last Congress, and asked $3,000,000 from the War Emergen Fund. The Bureau has charge of t payments of soldiers' insurance, compe sation, and allowances for their famili Missionary Bishop Dies. Bishop W. Bashford of the Methodist-Episcop Church died in California on March after a long illness. He was ordained the ministry in 1878, elected Preside of Ohio Wesley University in 188 elected Bishop in 1904, and put in char of the work in China in 1906, where did a notable work both for his o church and in unifying Protestant m sion work in the Chinese nation. was born in 1849.

What is Intoxicating. The Easte brewers, acting under legal opinions Elihu Root and William Guthrie, we reported on March 17 to be planning resume the brewing of beer containi not more than 2.75 per cent. of alcoh On March 20 a suit was filed in t Federal Courts seeking to restrain t collector of Internal Revenue from i terfering with such manufacture. T Internal Revenue Collector had alread issued an order forbidding the selling beer containing more than ½ of 1 p cent. alcohol. It was expected that t litigation initiated on the 20th would carried through to the United Stat Supreme Court as rapidly as possibl both wets and drys desiring the earlie possible decision.

Big Forward Step in Church Unity

Federal Union of Reformed and Presbyterian Churches Representing 2,600,000 Communicants

EDERAL union as a measure of Christian unity among denominations is a new thing in religion, as eague of Nations is new in internanalism. It is obviously something re than cooperation and federation, though it stops short of merging consolidation, it is not improbable t it has the potency of a real Chrisn unity. It allows such a coordinan of denominations as will reduce ominational barriers, denominanal rivalries and the consequent ste of energy, resources and agencies needless duplication and overlapping. he movement in question affects at seven Presbyterian and Reformed ominations in the United States. plan was formulated in May last at eeting of the Council of these bodies, the first General body to consider it adopted it unanimously. This was General Synod of the Reformed rch in the United States, at a spesession in Altoona, Pa., the first week March. It has, therefore, an auspicious inning, and this large and influential omination has placed itself enthustically at the front of the movement. he plan is the outgrowth and engement of articles of agreement, upon ch the Council of the "Reformed rches holding the Presbyterian sys" was organized some years ago. enlargement creates a Federal on, with a General Council, repretative of all the bodies uniting, ch has certain powers of supervision administration. The Plan of deral Union consists of a preamble, a is of union, and articles of agreement. preamble states that the Presbyten and Reformed Churches of the ited States "represent the same type evangelical Protestantism commonly own as Reformed or Calvinistic." e basis of union for doctrine is the ble and the symbols; for government, forms of government and constitus and doctrinal subscriptions of the rious bodies; and for worship, the ectories of the several churches.

The Articles of Agreement provide for General Council, with power to prote the work of the constituent bodies home and foreign missions, evangeln, church erection, Sabbath schools, blications, education, ministerial re and comity. It is also to establish and appoint administrative agencies, looking to unifying the administration of missionary and benevolent boards. This means a long step forward.

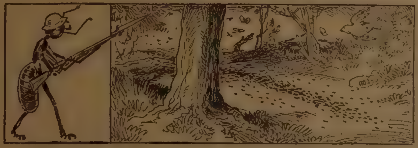
The General Council will also have power to deal with questions arising between the constituent bodies and referred to it. It may also initiate movements for union and cooperation, subject to the approval of the Churches.

The General Synod of the Reformed Church in the United States has adopted the whole plan; the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. has adopted the articles of agreement and is to pass upon the preamble, basis and amendments; the United Presbyterian General Assembly had adopted the amendments and in May will consider the preamble and basis. The Southern Presbyterian Church and the Reformed Church in America are to hear and consider reports on the subject from special committees. The whole matter will probably be decided in May and June.

Among the churches concerned are these: 1. Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A.; 2. Presbyterian Church in the U. S.; 3. United Presbyterian Church; 4. Reformed Church in America; 5. Reformed Church in the United States; 6. Associate Reformed Presbyterian Synod; 7. Cumberland Presbyterian Church, Colored. These churches together represent more than 2,600,000 communicants.

A forward step in church federation was heralded by the assembly on March 11 and 12 at Pittsburg, Pa., of leaders of the United Presbyterian churches to plan for their organic union with the Presbyterians. These churches number over 1,000 with nearly 200,000 communicants in various parts of the country. In addition there is a splendid Sunday school organization numbering over 150,000 pupils and 15,000 teachers and officers in over 1,000 Sunday schools. The United Presbyterians bring into the Presbyterian fold active Young People's Christian Unions and Missionary Societies, and is a church body similar in its forms of organization, government, and statements of doctrine to the great Presbyterian denomination with which it plans to unite in order that even greater work for the Master may be accomplished.

Soldier Ants



F ALL the animals found in South America none is more interesting an the soldier ant.

The soldier ant gets its name because travels in soldierly columns; sends out outs; has a commissary department at is officered like a regular army; heels and changes front with military ecision, and fights with ferocity.

The soldier ant is about a third of an h long, small, and dark. The ants me out from the hollow places under cks, or in the roots of trees, where ey live, at certain intervals for one of eir expeditions. When every ant is t they form into a solid mass compris countless thousands of ants, and vering three or four yards. When ey have been closely marshaled, a cloud flankers is thrown out on either side d a body of scouts in front.

When all is ready, they start their arch. Their advance sounds like a avy pattering of rain. Attracted by is sound, the birds from the nearby ees hover over the army. Why the rds are so interested in the ants you ll presently read. Warned by the ttering of the birds, and the rustling the leaves as the ants advance, moths, lizards, scorpions, centipedes, butterflies, hurry away in terror.

Suddenly the ants strike them with their cruel, hooked jaws, tearing to pieces any insect they catch, and those insects that have the power and the sense to fly immediately do so. But not many of them get far. No sooner are they off the ground than the waiting birds catch them.

When the main body has passed the ground is strewn with remains of insects. But they do not lie there long. A smaller body of ants issues from the leaves. Here is the commissary department! These ants pick up the fragments and bear them off to the ant-nests. If a man were to disturb these soldier ants, they would attack him. They climb above the shoetops and sink their jaws into the skin. And the unfortunate man, when he has run far enough, will have to stoop down and pick them off.

These ants have been known to enter a house. They separate their forces so that they enter from every door and window, and only the winged insect dwellers get out. As these ants will kill rats, the invasion is sometimes a blessing.

For Churches and Schools
It Saves Coal by the Ton

KELSEY HEALTH
HEAT

SAVES coal two ways.

Saves, because the fires do not have to be started up as soon.

Saves, because the coal that is burned actually does more heating.

Does more, because less goes up the chimney. The less that goes up chimney, the more goes into the rooms.

To insure the required number of complete changes of air as prescribed by law, a noiseless fan is used. It then combines an efficient heating and ventilating system in one.

Kelsey Health Heated Church at Williamstown, Mass. Chas. C. Grant, Architect

We will even go so far as to guarantee the Kelsey will work when others fail.

It will work, because it has worked.

We have the proofs and want you to have them. Write us. Send for booklet, Some Saving Sense on Heating.

NEW YORK
103-S Park Ave.

THE KELSEY
WARM AIR GENERATOR
307 James St., Syracuse, N. Y.

BOSTON
405-S P. O. Sq. Bldg.

DETROIT
Space 95-S Builders' Exch.

FREE BOOK

Auto Owners
and Garage Men
Get This Big New FREE Book

AUTO SUPPLIES BARGAIN BOOK
1919
Handy Index
Montgomery Ward
CHICAGO

Over 2000 selections are offered in this book. Supplies that will improve all cars. There are Riverside Tires with a 5000-Mile Guarantee. Tools of all kinds to make repairing easy—gas savers for getting more miles out of each gallon—tourists' supplies needed on a trip—shock absorbers for smooth riding—painting outfits to make your car better looking and worth more—supplies for giving your engine more power. In fact, there is probably not a single thing you will need but what you will find it in this FREE BOOK—and the price will be reasonable.

100 PAGES

RIVERSIDE TRADE MARK 5000-MILE TIRES At Greatly Reduced Prices

Every year Riverside Tire Sales have shown a remarkable growth. It is our aim to give autoists the best tire value obtainable. Increased sales and manufacturing facilities have made possible a big reduction in prices—the lowest price in months. This new FREE book tells all about Riverside Tires—the prices prove that Riversides give you "Most for the Money."

Many brand new supplies are shown in this book—necessities you may never have seen or heard of. Prices have been lowered on many important articles: 25 pages out of the 100 in this book are exclusively for Ford owners. Every car owner and garage man should always keep this book handy, as it will prove a valuable guide to low prices.

Write Now for Your FREE Copy

Address Department C169

Montgomery Ward & Co.
Satisfaction Guaranteed or Your Money Back

Write to the House Nearest You

CHICAGO KANSAS CITY FORT WORTH PORTLAND, ORE.

AUTO TOP COVERS
$8.00 and up.
Parcels Post Paid.
30 x 3½ tires $15.00
Other sizes in proportion
Easy to Apply
Liberty Tops Tailored to Fit
The best is none too good if your top is worth recovering at all. The top is always the first part to wear out. Don't buy any old makeshift. Get our new catalog with samples and prices of NEW TOPS, TOP COVERS—SEAT COVERS, TIRES and TUBES.
LIBERTY TOP & TIRE CO., Dept. K CINCINNATI, O.

ORNAMENTAL FENCE
6 Cents per Foot and up. Costs less than wood. 40 designs. All steel. For Lawns, Churches and Cemeteries. Write for free Catalog and Special Prices.
Kokomo Fence Machine Co. 499 North St., Kokomo, Ind.

Worthington Quality
Chairs and Tricycles
The Colson Co.
914 Cedar St., Elyria, O.

YARN AT A SAVING. Superior Quality Germantown Zephyr and Knitting Worsted, direct from the mill at lowest prices. All the popular colors. Send for free samples. Agents wanted.
AMERICAN SPINNING CO., 34 N. 4th St., Philadelphia

Primary and Junior Songs For EASTER—TULLAR-MEREDITH CO.. 249 W. 36th St., New York
Don't bother with the scattered, incidental music for these Depts found in the usual services, but get a few copies of this book and have something from which to make up such programs for the future. Send 25c for complete copy and our new Easter Services entitled "Morn of Light" and "Victory Divine". Moneybackifyouwantit.

Weigh What You Should!

I positively build you up—or I reduce you to normal. I have done it for 87,000 women. I improve your figure; strengthen your nerves; increase your vitality, make you happier; help you to think aright. And you can

Be Well Without Drugs

I show you how to free yourself from nagging ailments. You follow my easy directions in your home.

Sixteen years experience. Approved by leading physicians. Your correspondence will be held in strictest confidence.

Write me your difficulties in health or figure. I'll also send you FREE my illustrated Health Book telling you how to stand and walk correctly.

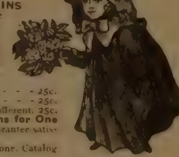
Susanna Cocroft
624 S. Mich. Ave., Dept. 18, Chicago, Ill.

Miss Cocroft is nationally recognized as authority on conditioning women as training camps have conditioned our men.

A WOMAN FLORIST

4 Hardy Everblooming Roses 25c
On their own roots
ALL WILL BLOOM THIS SUMMER

Sent to any address post-paid; guaranteed to reach you in good growing condition.



GEM ROSE COLLECTION
Melody, Pure Yellow.
Warrior, Blood Red.
Ophelia, Salmon Flesh.
Aurora, Bright Pink.

SPECIAL BARGAINS
4 Carnations, the "Divine Flower," all colors, 25c.
3 Choice Ferns, - - 25c.
5 Chrysanthemums, 25c.
5 Beautiful Coleus, - 25c.
3 Flowering Cannas, 25c.
3 Choice Dahlias, - 25c.
3 Choice Hardy Iris, 25c.
8 Lovely Gladioli, - - - - - 25c.
8 Superb Pansy Plants, - - - - 25c.
10 Pkts. Flower Seeds, all different, 25c.

Any Five Collections for One Dollar, Post-Paid. Guarantee satisfaction.

Once a customer, always one. Catalog Free.

Miss ELLA V. BAINES, Box 10, Springfield, Ohio

Changes One Socket Into Two

—ready for appliance as well as light. The BENJAMIN TWO-WAY PLUG makes electrical conveniences easier to use.

At your dealer's

3 for $3.50 OR $1.25 EACH

BENJAMIN ELECTRIC MFG. CO.
Chicago New York San Francisco

Bring Out the Hidden Beauty

Beneath the soiled, discolored, faded or aged complexion is one fair to look upon. Mercolized Wax gradually, gently absorbs the devitalized surface skin, revealing the young, fresh, beautiful skin underneath. Used by refined women who prefer complexions of true naturalness. Have you tried it?

Mercolized Wax in one ounce package, with directions for use, sold by all druggists.

MARVEL FREE TRIAL

COMPLETE BATH OUTFIT

BIG BATH TUB

HOT WATER

No Sewer or Plumbing—Move Anywhere

The Thermotub, combined bathtub and water heater. Gives all comforts of modern bathroom. Full length tub. Plenty hot water quick. Write today. Ask also about our Odorless Indoor Closet and Washstand. Make any room complete bathroom.

HOM-EQUIP NAT'L HOME EQUIPMENT CO.
104 Nat'l Building, Detroit, Mich.

Tells Why Chicks Die

E. J. Reefer, the poultry expert, 2494 Poultry Bldg., Kansas City, Mo. is giving away free his valuable chick book entitled "White Diarrhea and How to Cure It." The book tells how to prepare a simple home solution that cures this terrible disease over night and actually raises 98% of every batch. It is absolutely free. Every poultry raiser should have one. Write Mr. Reefer today for your copy.

Our Mail-Bag

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

MRS. W. B. H., Forest City, Ark., sends us a letter which has such a breath of springtime and goodfellowship in it that we cannot withhold it from the readers of the Mail-Bag. Here it is: "So many times I think of the wonderful work you are doing, until the Herald seems to be the head of a large Family in the world, instead of a mere publication. It has occurred to me that, if I had the power, I would like to take your subscription list and write a letter—a personal letter—to each one and then enclose a name for each Herald subscriber to write to, or perhaps with whom they might exchange gifts and friendly greetings on an appointed day, to be the Herald Reunion Day. This would bring pleasure and fellowship to many whose lives are narrow and perhaps lonely. So, since I have not the power to really bring about this Day of Reunion for Herald readers, I tell my story to you, thinking it may result in some good. I was once out on a trip with my husband and we failed to reach a certain little mountain village by dark. We drove and drove, and were overjoyed finally to catch the gleam from lighted windows as we came in sight of the town itself. The Christian Herald to me is a light in the window of every home which receives it, and I like to think of it going here and there, giving as much joy to the wayfarer as those lights did when we saw them that night, as we found our way into the little mountain village. I was pleased to read the announcement of your new management, and this is my way of saying that I am with you in all your new plans."

We receive many letters of encouragement, but this stands out as especially cordial and we pass it along to our friends. May they enjoy reading it as much as we ourselves have done.

Mrs. S. D., Oregon. We do not find any facts to show that Robert Treat Paine, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, was related to Thomas Paine, the freethinker, or that either of them was related to Jonathan Swift, the author of "Gulliver's Travels."

Henry M., Petersburg, Ill. The Atlantic Ocean derives its name from Atlantis, a mythological island of vast proportions which, according to tradition, was located between the western coast of Africa and the eastern coast of America. According to the tradition, it had a population of many millions and its people enjoyed a high state of civilization. Bacon wrote of this island continent and some of the Roman writers are also said to have referred to it. It disappeared suddenly, having been sunk, as was supposed, through subterranean volcanic upheavals.

Anxious, Winnebago, Wis. David was called a man after God's own heart, despite the fact that he at times lapsed into sin. Samuel in one age and Paul in another used the words and implied that God authorized them. It does not imply that David was a perfect man. But God did not condone his crimes. He was sharply reproved and punished. His repentant spirit and his general conscientious desire to serve God proved that his heart was right, though, like many other great and good men, he fell before temptation. Read his Psalm numbered 51 in our Bibles, and see how bitterly he grieved over his sin. If you compare that with Luke 15 : 7, you may find the key. Besides this, one must remember that the age was not a moral or cultured one. Compared with the kings of his own day, David's character was almost blameless.

(The following replies are by Dr. Gray, to whom these three letters were submitted:

I. M. S., Rahway, N. J. We know of no prophecy distinctively fulfilled in General Allenby's entering Jerusalem afoot.

G. A. B., Peoria, Ill. 1. "The abomination of desolation" refers to the Antichrist. 2. We must wait for the peace terms to know how much ground Germany has given up. 3. The fate of Edom, Moab and Ammon is yet to be finally sealed. 4. It is the Antichrist who is to plant his tabernacle in the "Holy Mount."

A. W. C., Alexandria, Va. Your question as to the condition of the people upon the earth during the millennium is not sufficiently definite. As to your second question, while there is life there is hope. As we understand the Scriptures, there is no opportunity for repentance after death, but there is always opportunity this side of the grave. Nevertheless, because of the danger of procrastination, today is "the accepted time."

Mrs. B. D. M., Granville, N. Y. "I cannot refrain from telling you how very much I value your good paper. Although I have given you my order for your 'History of the War,' when published, I feel I have a most valuable and unique history in the parts saved from the Herald since the very commencement of the war. These I bind myself, and I hope to complete them with the accepted League of Nations. It would be most deplorable if our own country, through its Senate, defeated the success of the League. I hope you will continue to give us as much as possible of the wonderful utterances of our President. They seem to contain the gist of the whole matter, and are well worth preserving. Not only for its deep religious truths, but for authentic news as to all current events, is the paper very valuable. The reason I take two copies all the time is because there is so much I want to keep, and what is left I never throw away, but give the papers where they are appreciated."

P. W. F., Detroit, Mich. Some authorities have questioned the interpretation of the statement made in the Authorized Version that Paul was at Athens when he wrote the Epistle to the Thessalonians. Referring to Acts 17, Paul seems to have made but a brief stay at Athens, and when he visited that city, soon after leaving Thessalonica, his remark (I Thess. 2 : 18) "that he had tried to visit the Thessalonians again but had been hindered" seems to imply a longer absence. Then, too, his words (I Thess. 3) about being left in Athens alone do not read like those of one writing from that city. It seems more probable that when Paul left Athens he sent Timothy to Thessalonica, while he himself went to Corinth, where Timothy took his report, on receiving which Paul wrote to the Thessalonians. Acts 18 : 5 shows that it was to Corinth that Timothy went, and as he was with Paul when the Epistles were prepared (as we may see from the opening words of each), there is no logical reason for doubting that it was from Corinth that both epistles were written.

Reader, Tampa, Fla. Ex-President Eliot, of Harvard, some time ago compiled a table showing the immense sums that are spent by Americans every year for things more or less non-essential. One of the items was $2,220,000,000 for intoxicating liquor. Now that the nation has gone dry, it is suggested that this immense expenditure for drink should be turned into War Savings Stamps. It would purchase $22 worth of stamps for every man, woman and child in the country.

Mary E. W., Seattle, Wash. 1. The number 666 of Rev. 13 : 18 is the inspired designation of the "beast," or the Antichrist of the last days of this age. Some think the clue is found in the statement that "it is the number of a man." Three is the divine number, seven the number of the Holy Spirit, etc., but six, with its multiples, is peculiarly man's number, "stamping everything which it is used in connection with as pertaining to man." Its great significance is seen when we learn that the number was the secret symbol of the ancient pagan mysteries. When the despot to whom this number applies appears, divine honors will be paid him; but his number is prophetically revealed that the saints may have no fear in that day, being assured that notwithstanding his pretensions, this power, whoever he may be, is only a man. 2. The 144,000 of Rev. 14 : 1–3 symbolizes the complete number of redeemed Israel, when the Lord sets up his kingdom among them.

M., Wakefield, R. I. There is no discrepancy between the fourth and fifth verses of Proverbs 26. The writer appears to mean that there are two ways of answering a fool according to his folly, one of which is good and the other bad. If a man answers a fool in the same spirit as his own, lightly and flippantly, he is himself like the fool; but if he meets him on his own ground of folly and shows him the absurdity of the conclusions of his talk on the same line that mathematicians called the "reduction to the absurd," the fool may be brought to see his folly and no longer to think himself wise.

L. M., Barnet, Va. Christ in relating the parable of the Prodigal Son, was showing the readiness of God to forgive and welcome repentant sinners. That was the main purpose of the parable. We are in a sense God's children, but only those who are brought by conversion into reconciliation with him enter into that new and closer relation which is described as "sons of God."

L. Y., Deshler, O. 1. In the millennial age, although the Jewish nation will be converted, it will not constitute part of the body of Christ, which is a privilege reserved to present-age believers. 2. The passages of Scripture inquire about are so many prophecies of purpose to save Israel and bless her in that

From a Girl. We have sent your let our Prayer Circle, which will remember y its petitions, that you may become more more one of God's dear children, and re the value of a Christian life in its influ on the lives of those around you.

Reader, Wilsey, Kan. At this time, there is so much discussion of the Church the methods which it should adopt in reac Unity for the sake of advancing the Go it is well for us not to criticize too har The spirit of Unity needs to be fostered, sides, we are not to judge others. Let us conditions as they exist, and try to spre harmonious and united spirit, so that all get together. We cannot agree with the which some people take that they can flably ignore the Church. We are told peatedly by the great Founder that he w his people to meet together, and Paul u us to "forsake not the assembling." Th the only spirit which will bring order ou the present chaos.

J. M., Detroit, Mich. "Hades" is the G for the unseen world. This expression fo its place in the Apostles' Creed about the fou century. It did not appear in the earlier fo of the creed, but since then it has been in the creed by the Catholics and the Angli Episcopal churches. Some churches omit sentence. Hades is the world of spirits, unseen world.

W. McG., Harrison, Ohio, writes: "Chu Union and efficiency are much debated th days. There are some things which I should be more considered if the church wo be more in union with the good, more effici for the good. One great cause of the failur young people to pass through high schoo the foolish fashions predominating there— stockings, etc. They cannot afford the st and they feel that they cannot afford to ridiculed, or snubbed because of plainness; they absent themselves and debar themsel from great privileges. It is much so in chu life. Many times have I felt that I would h helpful preaching, but was deterred by exp ence telling me I should be gazed at beca purse and inclination made me for plainn I saved clothes-money for good works. I encouraged to enter a famous metropoli mission by the standing sign over its d "Come as you are"; I heard others test likewise. Can there not be some effort "plain living and high thinking?" May people be referred more to the fact that look on the outward appearance, but the L looks on the heart? Should not church dress be exemplars for the world? May not money wasted on finery be now spent to h man and glorify God?"

A Jewish Rabbi

Ex-Rabbi Leopold Cohn

Is preaching the Lor Jesus Christ among th 400,000 Jews of Brook lyn. He edits a monthly paper, "The Chosen People," which tells not only of the work that he and his staff are doing, bu contains also able and illuminating Bible expositions on the Jews, Zionism and Prophecy. Coming from the pen of this former Jewish Rabbi, they are of great value to every one seeking light on these important questions. Sample copy sent you for 10c. Price, 50c a year. Address,

"THE CHOSEN PEOPLE"
27 Throop Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Three Old Organs For Sale

Two Manual and Pedal Organ—PRICE $400 Boxed on Cars at Factory
One Manual and Pedal Organ—PRICE $350 Boxed on Cars at Factory
One Manual Organ—PRICE $200 Boxed on Cars at Factory

DESCRIPTION ON APPLICATION
HOOK & HASTINGS CO. KENDAL GREEN, MASS.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS

Bring people to church. Their clear, beautiful, sustained, far-reaching tones are a power for good. Your church should have one. Durability guaranteed. Inexpensive. Art catalog & buying plans free.
The Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co. Dept. B51 Cincinnati, O.

All Help Suffering India

HEAR the crying of suffering ones across the sea and I must respond. I have not much to give but I want do my share, as God directs."

"I have four children of my own h I hope to never be hungry and n to divide what I can."

"Our hearts are touched for those so in need of food. How thankful our on ought to be that our God in his dness has given enough and to spare help succor those in want."

Thus our friends write us as they send e pennies, the dollars, the bills and checks to help the starving in India. cry of the suffering resounds across ntain and river and prairie, and ywhere hearts are impelled to mercy, the money comes that hunger may se.

ne little Pennsylvania girl, kept from day school, sent her collection money for the hungry children in India. A class of Junior boys in an Ohio Sunday school sent a collection of $1.27, and a Junior Epworth League in the mining district of Colorado raised $1.62.

Nor are all the givers new friends of India. In one week two of the givers to the last famine fund gave generously to the need of today. One who had supported an orphan before, could not quite do that now, but gave all she could. The other has continued the interest then awakened, and is still helping orphans in the school at Baroda, having the joy of knowing that one of the orphans helped to an education has become a preacher and a minister to his people.

Keep the gifts coming. The need is greater than we can picture or realize; it is great and urgent. Send your gifts to the India Famine Fund, Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City.

s Sarah M Chatterton	$5.00
abeth Hynes	5.00
nds X X Bowling reen, Ohio	5.00
Miller & wife	5.00
s S N, Philadelphia, a	5.00
y Nylund	5.00
s Rosalie S. Brown	5.00
s W Madsen	5.00
s L J Trace	5.00
Whitaker	5.00
a I Glenn	5.00
s Agnes G Hurd	5.00
eader, Barnes, Kans	5.00
& Mrs C F Nicholson	5.00
s J K Groff	5.00
Garrison	5.00
mett E Seymour	5.00
& Mrs J K Zook	5.00
es Runny	5.00
a Wigney	5.00
s M A A, Mulberry, nd	5.00
s Amanda V Tevis	5.00
s Mary Eckles	5.00
er Peterson	5.00
H Moffett	5.00
M Stevens	5.00
riend, Goodrich, Mich	5.00
ager	5.00
zabeth Feneley	5.00
Fahlen	5.00
s J D Holden	5.00
ss P A Todd	5.00
s A W Schuck	5.00
riend, Brownes Valey, Minn	5.00
G Hunt	5.00
ward Timley	5.00
s C Finkel	5.00
n Rounds	5.00
& Mrs Geo H Hart	5.00
s Anna C Sturgeon	5.00
ss Genevieve Woodman	5.00
ura S Curtiss	5.00
B Strehl	5.00
E Shelton	5.00
X, Montgomery, O	5.00
G Kurrley	5.00
bert L Taylor	5.00
s D A Bevis	5.00
s Lavina Johnston	5.00
llie W Marshall	5.00
alter Holmes	5.00
s John Elderdick	5.00
s F W, Mapleton Depot, Pa	5.00
as S Anders	5.00
ry E Wilson	5.00
s E M Carey	5.00
G Klose	5.00
s Eddie B Slaughter	5.00
C Hurvy	5.00
r & Mrs J M Stiff	5.00
s Wm Brooks	5.00
s M A McBride	5.00
n G Penhallegon	5.00
o A Getz	5.00
C Sherman	5.00
s E L Butler	5.00
s C E Bowman	5.00
na Bengstrom	5.00
Meyer	5.00
ederick C Frese	5.00
s L W Fisher	5.00
A C Vandiner	5.00
W Browning	5.00
H Adams	5.00
s Benj Carter	5.00
s J E Sims	5.00
nma L Bukson	5.00
H Limerman	5.00
s G P Wheeler	5.00
ard W Dean	5.00
Van Soest	5.00
s J C M, West Lafayette, Ohio	5.00
s Maria Schmitt	5.00
s C W Treverton	5.00
s Geo Wurster	5.00
—, "Bellefonte," Pa	5.00
win W Mager	5.00
H McGowan	5.00
s Anne Maclyvgor	5.00
s C A Wentsch	5.00
A Emerson	5.00
iram Griffith	5.00
nnie Kellogg	5.00
W H, Unionville, Conn	5.00
s Wm B Senims	5.00
fie B Davis	5.00
r & Mrs W W Fairbanks	5.00
s A Lucas	5.00
P Merrice	5.00
ora Vanderweep	5.00
rs & Mrs G Browmer	5.00
rs C Close	5.00
E Erickson	5.00
rs Clara Garrison	5.00
M S Johnston	$5.00
Mrs Blanche Andrews	5.00
G K Young	5.00
Mrs Edmund Crosby	5.00
C A Thatcher	5.00
Frances H Shields	5.00
James Middlemurt	5.00
May A D Gardner	5.00
H L Carpenter	5.00
Mr & Mrs H A Lash	5.00
T C Gennison	5.00
Mrs J L Walker	5.00
Miss Ellin Robertson	5.00
Mrs I C Smallwood	5.00
Mrs G Dilgard	5.00
Miss Jennie Scott	3.00
Mrs Carsten Christenson	3.00
Cornelia Smith	3.00
Mrs Wm Emde	3.00
Mrs Olive E Wood	3.00
Miss Gertie Johnson	3.00
Friend, Decatur, Ill	3.00
——, Amenians, Kans	3.00
Elmer C Burgess	3.00
Inga Herigstad	3.00
Mrs A L Perry	3.00
Herbert Paose	3.00
H M Torrey	3.00
——, Cedarville, N J	3.00
J Franklin Keefer	3.00
Mrs A C Smith	3.00
Mrs E A Forester	3.00
Ruth M Pierce, Vestal, N Y	3.00
Mrs Wm C Avery, New Haven, Conn	3.00
Mrs I F Grove, Augusta, Ill	3.00
Miss Ella Tibbets, Niles, Mich	3.00
Mrs N W Neely	3.00
Ed J Solt	3.00
Mrs M G Barker	3.00
C E Towne	3.00
Mrs J Kostelyk	3.00
Miss J Dekker	3.00
Lulu Pearce	3.00
Miss M E Gilchrist	3.00
Mrs J N Bennie	3.00
H G N, Mt Vernon, O	3.00
Jeremiah K Schultz	3.00
Mrs Sophie Hamsen	3.00
Mrs W T Lagenby	3.00
Mrs J C Clarkson	3.00
Mrs T J Thomason	3.00
Flora H Cahoon	3.00
Matilda Margstein	3.00
Julia A Covert	3.00
Mrs C A Barnett	3.00
Mrs J J Wurreschke	3.00
C E L, Old Orchard, Me	3.00
A Friend, Brownsville, Tenn	3.00
H A Spencer	3.00
A & L B Clunn	3.00
Mrs J I Sedar	3.00
Mrs Geo Gustarson	3.00
Mrs Annie Davis	3.00
Mary A Osven	3.00
M C P, Sheldon, N. Dak	3.00
Mrs John H Norton	3.00
Mrs D A Oldham	3.00
Laura B Murray	3.00
May E Rhule	3.00
Rev Charles H Miller	3.00
Mrs Celia K. Winborough	3.00
Mrs Harold J Beih	3.00
Walter J Swan	3.00
Clara M Swan	3.00
Frank H Grove	3.00
Ada & Nettie Warner	3.00
Mrs Helen McRelsey	3.00
John Mitchell	3.00
Baby Nadine Nelson	3.00
Mrs H A Crowe	3.00
Mrs M Side	3.00
A Wentz	3.00
Mr & Mrs Wm H Mininger	3.00
Mrs J W Moore	3.00
Mrs J F Marsden	3.00
Mrs F E Smith	3.00
Mrs M O Hednick	3.00
——, No. Adams, Mass	2.50
Frank Lawrence	2.50
Maud Beighly	2.50
W Olsen	2.50
Mr & Mrs Carl F Keppler	2.50
C E Barglebaugh	2.50
H F B, Pepperell, Mass	2.50
J J Parker	2.50
McAslau Bro	2.50
A Christian, Garberville, Cal	2.50
——, Aberdeen, Wash	2.50
A E & Nettie Smoots	2.50
R C Donwell	2.50
Mr & Mrs R Lonas	2.50
Elias Monday	2.00
Ettie & Nettie Vinyard	2.00
Mrs M Highel	$2.00
Mrs S Ballard	2.00
N M Smock	2.00
Mrs L E Thompson	2.00
Chas H Moore	2.00
Mrs P L Hill	2.00
Mary E Terry	2.00
Mr & Mrs O J Rathburn	2.00
Mary L Halls	2.00
A Friend, Coatesville	2.00
Miss E R Morton	2.00
A Friend, Galveston, Texas	2.00
M E Beckwith	2.00
Mrs G H Haynet	2.00
Daisey Stacey	2.00
T A Allen	2.00
A Sympathizer, Coneyville, Ky	2.00
A Reader, Mt. Vernon, N Y	2.00
Mrs H N Bournan	2.00
Olive T Kizer	2.00
Cynthia I Laycock	2.00
C J Handorf	2.00
A Reader, Warsaw, Ind	2.00
E R Ringenberg	2.00
Phina Bower	2.00
Louise F Kluck	2.00
Susan Langtue	2.00
Mary M Green	2.00
H N Schenck	2.00
Mrs H R G, Scranton, Pa	2.00
A J Hanksin	2.00
Miss Lola Keister	2.00
A Friend, Salem, N Y	2.00
A Friend, Farmington, Me	2.00
Wm H Best	2.00
J H Klepper	2.00
Mrs J Lawrence	2.00
Mrs James Robinson	2.00
Mrs L K Watkins	2.00
Emma G James	2.00
Gale Forest Runertser	2.00
Mrs S B Smith	2.00
Anna C Abbott	2.00
Mrs C E Lawrence	2.00
Gertrude Phebe Doer	2.00
Mrs E E Scher	2.00
Mary E Childs	2.00
A Friend, Diwagiac, Mich	2.00
Mr & Mrs E N Conant	2.00
Virginia Wales	2.00
Mrs Gabriel Schueiser	2.00
Mary H Groat	2.00
Wm Yost	2.00
E Hill	2.00
J Morrison	2.00
M L Wise & Wife	2.00
Mrs Nannie R Glass	2.00
Mrs S C Durand	2.00
Mrs Dan G Lee	2.00
Mrs Kate M Van Horne	2.00
Mrs J C Talman	2.00
Reader, Morgan, Mich	2.00
Mrs F M Barnhart	2.00
Mrs M D Edwards	2.00
——, Westport, Mass	2.00
F S H, Switz City, Ind	2.00
Mrs S Beattie	2.00
Mrs W R Swan	2.00
C E Moon	2.00
——, Panama City, Fla	2.00
L E Sherwood	2.00
Mrs Gertrude Roberts	2.00
Mrs David Kuhns	2.00
Friend, Axtell, Kans	2.00
Mrs A A Bristol	2.00
Mrs J B Hartest	2.00
Mrs Walter J Williams	2.00
Susie Shumaker	2.00
Mrs Merilla N Shaler	2.00
Mrs Geo Dornblazer	2.00
Sarah E Stafford	2.00
Rev S C Davis	2.00
Mr & MrsJas H MacCoy	2.00
Mr & Mrs J W Rankin	2.00
Effie K Burgess	2.00
Mr John E Boyd	2.00
G D, Philadelphia, Pa	2.00
Wm Viergeuer	2.00
Mary Jane Stevenson	2.00
Mrs M R Babcock	2.00
Mrs D C Whitehill	2.00
Ella L Wartt	2.00
John Grant	2.00
Samuel Watts	2.00
A Christian Helper, Patoka, Ill	2.00
Miss Hazel Heller	2.00
Mr & Mrs J S, Cameron, Wisc	2.00
——, Clemons, N Y	2.00
Mrs N Peterson	2.00
Mrs W H Standley	2.00
Wm & Louise Dailey	2.00
Hattie Evans	2.00
C F & A S Brand	2.00
Mrs Elizabeth J Sawyer	2.00
Rose L Warner	2.00
Mrs Adam Miller	$2.00
Miss Alice Ashworth	2.00
Miss Emerill M Davis	2.00
Miss J M Newland	2.00
Perry Brown	2.00
D H Campbell	2.00
Mrs F L Horan	2.00
M O Willard	2.00
Michael Shipe	2.00
Friend, Atwater, Calif	2.00
Wm Hedrick	2.00
Mrs D J Duke	2.00
Mr & Mrs E S Hoff	2.00
Mrs L L Hough	2.00
Mrs E Morris	2.00
Mrs H D Smith	2.00
H R Wegener	2.00
Mrs Ella J Congdon	2.00
——, Marion, N Y	2.00
Miss Edith Grosner	2.00
Mrs Louise Arthur	2.00
Miss Emma Foster	2.00
Mrs B L Peacock	2.00
Mrs M E Blake	2.00
David M Ross	2.00
Mrs Hockstrae	2.00
Mrs Eunice Sheff	2.00
Rosamund Espach	2.00
Ellen Suickin	2.00
Iver Iverson	2.00
C H King	2.00
W T Johnstone	2.00
John R Marshall	2.00
Mrs Eben Chase	2.00
Mr John Nulickscher	2.00
Miss Mabel Rockstraw	2.00
A Friend, Brookline, N Y	2.00
Mrs Mary G Goss	2.00
Eve Hathaway	2.00
E D Howell	2.00
Mrs L J Herron	2.00
Thos J Howard	2.00
T B Devor	2.00
Mrs E Lindquest	2.00
Anna Kurtz	2.00
Mary W Watson	2.00
Ida B Gray	2.00
Lena Wallis	2.00
——, Murfreesboro, Tenn	2.00
Mr & Mrs G M Knox	2.00
C R Woolwine	2.00
A Friend, Timber Ridge, Va.	2.00
Mrs M S Gorgarsen	2.00
——, Pence Springs, W Va	2.00
Mrs Wm Richardsen	2.00
Mrs Josiah Smith	2.00
Mrs A S Harris	2.00
Mrs Rachel Bates	2.00
S D Webster	2.00
Mrs J W Williams	2.00
L B S, Union Spgs, N Y	2.00
Mrs F T Johnson	2.00
Mrs M Bowers	2.00
Mrs Viola J H Thorne	2.00
B K Atkins	2.00
Mr & Mrs N A Anderson	2.00
Mrs N J Esrochs	2.00
E B Clark	$2.00
Miss Clara E Hammaker	2.00
——, Pittsburg Pa	2.00
H M Blodgett	2.00
A Friend, Fredericksburg, Va	2.00
Mrs Emma T Frost	2.00
Mrs W B Cain	2.00
Hurbert A Vis	2.00
A Friend, Parma, Mich	2.00
Mrs F, A Derby	2.00
Mrs J L Hunt	2.00
R S H, Detroit, Mich	2.00
"Ebenzer," Laconia, N H	2.00
L G Fisher	2.00
E Conklin	2.00
I E M, Centerburg, Ohio	2.00
——, Mentor, Ohio	2.00
A K D, Sumbury, Ohio	2.00
C E Royer	2.00
A Friend, Slippery Rock, Pa	2.00
J H Spoolman	2.00
J C Weigand	2.00
Mrs H P Bilyen	1.50
F M Mossford	1.50
Mrs J C Miller	1.50
Mrs Karen, Petersen	1.50
——, Ansley, Nebr	1.50
Mrs Ed Reeve	1.50
N N Davis, St Petersburg, Fla	1.50
T R Kittle	1.50
Mrs Ella F Brown	1.50
Lena S Morlan	1.50
Bertha M W Lulin	1.50
A Friend, Eugene, Ore	1.50
A Sister in Christ	1.00
"Friend Rex" of Va	1.00
A J Clever	1.00
Mrs Z C Patch	1.00
Reader	1.00
——, Waterville, Iowa	1.00
Mrs W M McNeel	1.00
——, Magnetic Springs, Ohio	1.00
Mrs Frank Bender	1.00
Walter C Sherwood	1.00
Friend, Dowager, Mich	1.00
Joshua M Crouse	1.00
Mrs A M Miller	1.00
Emma McCaslin	1.00
Mrs Sarah C Hills	1.00
Miss B Henrikson	1.00
John I Guptill	1.00
Cara Marshall	1.00
Emma G James	1.00
Friend, Iron Mountain	1.00
Mrs Wm E Jones	1.00
Mrs Geo N Moffatt	1.00
Miss Lena Walters	1.00
A Christian Herald Member, Brownton, Mich	1.00
Mrs Dorothea Horn	1.00
Mrs P O Sneller	1.00
Miss Emelia Sneller	1.00

Additional acknowledgments will appear in later issues of the Christian Herald.

Lift Corns out with Fingers

A few drops of Freezone applied directly upon a tender, aching corn stops the soreness at once and soon the entire corn or callus loosens and can be lifted off with the fingers without even a twinge of pain.

Freezone

Removes hard corns, soft corns, also corns between the toes and hardened calluses. Does not irritate or inflame the surrounding skin or tissue. You feel no pain when applying it or afterward.

Women! Keep a small bottle of Freezone on your dresser and never let a corn ache twice.

Small bottles can be had at any drug store in the U.S. or Canada

THE EDWARD WESLEY CO., Cincinnati, Ohio

Put Your Boy Right

WHEN your boy was learning to read, his early steps were in carefully selected, long approved pages. It is when he branches out for himself that the critical period in his reading habits arises. Parents of more than 500,000 American boys chose the right road by giving their sons The American Boy, a sane, constructive magazine, and a safe outlet for the natural reading enthusiasm of normal healthy boys. Give it to your boy!

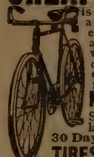
$2 a year—20c a copy at newsstands

THE SPRAGUE PUB. CO.
6 American Building Detroit, Mich.

THE AMERICAN BOY

"The Biggest, Brightest, Best Magazine for Boys in all the World"

CHEAPEST WAY TO GO



is on a bicycle — a dozen miles for a cent. That's why in Europe one in every six persons rides a bicycle. All armies use them by thousands. It is the workman's street car, with the cost of the rides saved. A complete outdoor gymnasium that keeps you fit in mind and muscle.

Mead's Factory to Rider

Sales Plan Saves you $10 to $20 on all latest war approved Ranger models.

30 Days Free Trial and Free Delivery.

TIRES Parts, Repairs at half usual prices. Don't buy until you get our Big Free Catalog describing all the wonderful new offers, liberal terms and low prices. Write a postal now.

MEAD CYCLE COMPANY
Department G-71 CHICAGO

Black Cat

Reinforced Silk Hosiery

ONLY certain parts of hosiery wear out. And the secret of the long, extra service offered by the

Reinforced Heels, Toes and Soles

of all Black Cat Hosiery is that these parts are specially constructed assuring double hosiery value. Black Cat is made for all the family—in silk, silk lisle, wool, cotton or merino in every style, color and at prices no higher than for ordinary kinds.

COOPER'S ORIGINAL Spring Needle UNDERWEAR BENNINGTON

BLACK CAT TEXTILES COMPANY
Home Office. Kenosha, Wisconsin
Makers Also of Cooper's-Bennington Spring Needle Underwear for Men

Better than a mustard plaster

Once when grandma's joints commenced to ache and twinge, she used to go to the mustard pot and make a mustard plaster. Now she goes to Musterole and gets relief, but does without the blister and the plaster, too!

My, how good that Musterole feels when you rub it in gently over that lame back and those sore muscles. First you feel the gentle tingle, then the delightful, soothing coolness that reaches in the twinging joints or stiff, sore muscles.

It penetrates to the heart of the congestion. This is because it is made of oil of Mustard and other home simples. And the heat generated by Musterole will not blister.

On the contrary the peculiarity of Musterole lies in the fact that shortly it gives you such a cool, relieved feeling all about the twingey part.

And Musterole usually brings the relief while you are rubbing it on. Always keep a jar handy.

Many doctors and nurses recommend Musterole.

30c and 60c jars—$2.50 hospital size.

The Musterole Co., Cleveland, Ohio

BETTER THAN A MUSTARD PLASTER

MUSTEROLE

WILL NOT BLISTER

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

How Can I Earn Some Money?

In These Days of Readjustment

How can I, a woman absolutely without previous experience, earn the money so necessary to the welfare and happiness of myself and those dependent upon me?

We are answering this question most satisfactorily to thousands of women. They are now engaged in a pleasant, dignified and profitable business, as our representatives selling

World's Star Hosiery and Klean-Knit Underwear

to their friends and neighbors. As we have shown them, we can show you, the fine independent way to have more money to spend—to meet the increased cost of living—to help support the family—to educate the children, etc.

More Than 17,000 Women Helped

They are now enjoying constant increasing sales. Their incomes are growing larger every day. You can do the same as they have done.

Write today. We will send you our beautifully Illustrated Catalogue—shows how easy it is to become a World's Star Money Maker.

WORLD'S STAR KNITTING CO.
DEPT. 112 BAY CITY, MICH
Over 24 Years in Business

Young People's Topics for April 13

Making Friends of Books

Epworth League Topic. Prov. 2 : 1-9

A CASUAL acquaintance seldom becomes a friend. Friends are those in whose fellowship we love to be. A book has become our friend when frequent reading and rereading has thumb-marked its corners and roughened its edges. There are many books that are worth while. Emerson's Essays, Dickens's Stories, the poets, Bacon, Shakespeare, Thackeray, and a host of others, with each successive reading reveal new depths of mental stimulation and of interest. Emerson says: "Books are the best things, well used; abused, among the worst." Books are constant friends. We can forget them for a time and return to find them still ready to give us of their best. They hold no grudges, they do not talk behind our backs. Fuller says, "Books, like friends, should be few and well chosen." They are the best of friends, for they seek always to do good, and never fail us. Paxton Hood says: "Be as careful of the books you read as of the company you keep; for your habits and character will be as much influenced by the former as by the latter." Andrew Lang says, "A book is a friend whose face is constantly changing . . . with the changes of yourself." Milton says: "A good book is the precious life-blood of a master-spirit, embalmed and treasured up on purpose to a life beyond life." But one Book above all books is fitted for the highest friendship, and that is the Book of books. Bartholin says: "Without books God is silent, justice dormant, natural science at a standstill, philosophy lame, letters dumb, and all things involved in Cimmerian darkness." Many have studied the Bible, millions have loved it, in every land it has been the constant friend of thousands; but no man has yet found all of its truths or penetrated the hidden mystery of all of its messages. It brings us life, peace, joy, strength, and vision. It is the best friend of all friends, except the one Friend, our Elder Brother, the Lord Christ, and it is his Book.

How to Give God's Day to God-Like Deeds

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic. Ex. 20 : 8-11

SUNDAY combines the Jewish Sabbath of rest and worship and the Christian Sunday of praise and service. Some of us thought perhaps that Sunday was our day. We remember that Christ said the Sabbath was made for man, and so we took it to be ours for ourselves. But he meant that it was for man to use for God's service, and that it is to be used for him first and for ourselves only incidentally. What shall we do that we may be God-like on his day? This is a question perhaps too large for the amount of space here available. There are certain things we may do. We may do deeds of mercy. We may sit quietly in meditation, letting God speak to us through his Word and through the influence of his Spirit upon our minds. We may teach others the story of God's love and grace; of Christ's sacrifice and salvation; and we may spend the day in public worship in the gathering of ourselves together, which was the first impulse of the early Christians, as it marks today the earnest follower of the Christ. Then again there is rest—rest of body and mind. This includes recreation. But recreation for the Christian Sabbath can hardly be said to include spo or things that we would do purely the pleasure in them. We can make a day of pleasure and have it still a d of service, for there is much of serv that brings pleasure, and there is mu of recreation that brings real bodily and spiritual restoration to our min We are to remember the day to keep holy, that is to set it apart for the things in which we serve God, for kin ness, worship, teaching, and for t reading of good books and the doing good deeds.

◆

From the Central Province

THE Central Provinces Conferen which recently opened in Jubbu pore, seemed more like a family aff than a conference because of the sm number of missionaries and the swe fellowship among them. Inspiration sermons were delivered by Bishops J. Robinson, J. E. Robinson and others.

The school at Nursingpur is not ab to do the missionary work it should b cause of lack of funds. A grip wh might be had on the wealthy people lost because accommodations cannot furnished to which the students a accustomed.

Boys are coming into Raipur sch faster than they can be cared for. A not only Christians but Hindus co seeking admittance. One boy, Steph Bucku, was shortly converted, th proved his conversion by bringing brother and friend that they might h the good news too.

Muttra Training School is the on Bible training school in India wh Methodism possesses. The work of th school is divided into two parts, En lish and Hindustani. An attempt being made to furnish accommodatio for the Indian girls who do not want live European style and yet wish to p sue the same course of study as t Anglo-Indians.

It was strongly advocated at this co ference that Indian workers should steadily advanced and that a great fort should be made to bring out th latent powers. In accord with th Indian representatives were put on t board of governors for the Johnson Gir School at Jabbulpore for the first tim

Reports of sickness and death ca from all stations because of the drea disease, influenza. But although se eral strong workers were lost, yet seemed that God in his infinite wisdo was ready to fill in the gap, for sev young Indians were ordained deaco and three elders.

For relief work in schools where sic ness and death had played havoc t thousand dollars was asked by the W man's Foreign Missionary Society.

One Saturday afternoon, the you people gave an outdoor program and was interesting to note how capably t whole was managed, and how aptly t Prodigal Son was dramatized.

◆

A Welcome Box of Books

I WANT to thank The Christian Hera for the help rendered Mr. John Good recently in securing the beautiful b of books that came to us. It was a fi collection and, with very few exception all the books can be used to real adva tage in our work. We are greatly i debted to you for this kindly assistanc and want to assure you that you ha rendered us a real service. Everythi has to have a beginning and up here our work among the Kentucky Mou tains we have to be satisfied often wi very small beginnings. We felt ve keenly, however, that if we could pla the right kind of books before the peop and persuade them to read, it would d so much toward their developmen The interest in books and reading w of necessity be limited for some tim but the goal is a worthy one and wort striving for.

With sincere wishes for the continue success of your good work,

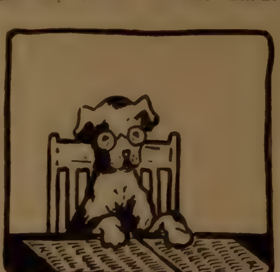
ELMER E. GABBARD.
Harvey Murdoch School,
Bowlingtown, Ky.

An Easily Learned Dog Trick

ONE rainy day Will and his younger brother Dave decided to amuse themselves by teaching their dog a trick—to "read the newspaper."

The boys found an old pair of empty spectacle rims, and these they tied on Rover's head. Then they drew an old chair up to a table and coaxed the dog to jump up.

Of course it was not hard to get Rover to jump on the seat of the chair, but it was hard to make him sit on his two hind legs and keep his front paws on the table (upon which was spread a newspaper). And that was where the teaching came in.



Again and again Rover would jerk his front paws down from the table and at last the boys decided that the only way to get him to hold this "reading" position was to reward him with little pieces of meat when he obeyed them.

This method was successful. It did not take long to make Rover understand that if he kept his paws on the table until Dave said "All right!" he would receive a piece of meat.

That evening, after supper, the boys surprised their father and mother by making Rover do the funny trick in the living-room.

L. A. KIRKMAN.

A Martyr of Missions

THE Chicago Council of the Nyasaland Mission has recently received word from Dr. A. C. Murray, secretary of the Home Board, of the sudden death of Miss Alma Elizabeth Hultman, a trained nurse who was sent to Africa from Chicago nearly five years ago. Miss Hultman was on her way home for a furlough, but was taken sick at Cape Town with the Spanish influenza, which took the form of paralysis. Cape Town alone paid the terrible toll of 7,400 lives as a result of the epidemic. On the first Sunday after reaching Cape Town, on her way home, Miss Hultman spoke to twenty-five girls on the work in Nyasaland. Afterward, in meeting these girls, she would invariably press the claims of Nyasaland upon them. During the epidemic that raged in Cape Town, she gave herself in untiring efforts to help the sick until she herself fell ill.

The missions of the Dutch Reformed Church in Mashonaland, Nyasaland, Portuguese East Africa, Northern Rhodesia, and the Sudan are wholly without a doctor. There is a great lack of nurses also. It is imperative that at least four doctors be speedily found. Are there any in America at this time who will respond to this urgent need? Further information can be secured by writing Rev. Norman H. Camp, Secretary, 153 Institute Place, Chicago, Ill.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Graham C. Patterson, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Edward S. Babcox, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.50 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Overland

TRADE MARK REG.

For Him

The confidence purchasers have in the performance of the Overland Motor Car is the direct result of the pride of Overland owners. For ten years public appreciation has been our sole aim and guide. The Overland Motor Car today reflects the best of our great engineering experience and production facilities. The car's reputation grows steadily as owners tell their friends of their satisfaction in driving it. Thus the friends of owners form an ever larger proportion of our customers. The constantly increasing sales of the Model 90 shown here now number more than one hundred and fifteen thousand cars. The price this season is $985, f. o. b. Toledo.

WILLYS-OVERLAND, INC., TOLEDO, OHIO

Willys-Knight Touring Cars, Coupes, Limousines, Overland Motor Cars and Light Commercial Cars

Canadian Factory, West Toronto, Canada

O-Cedar Polish
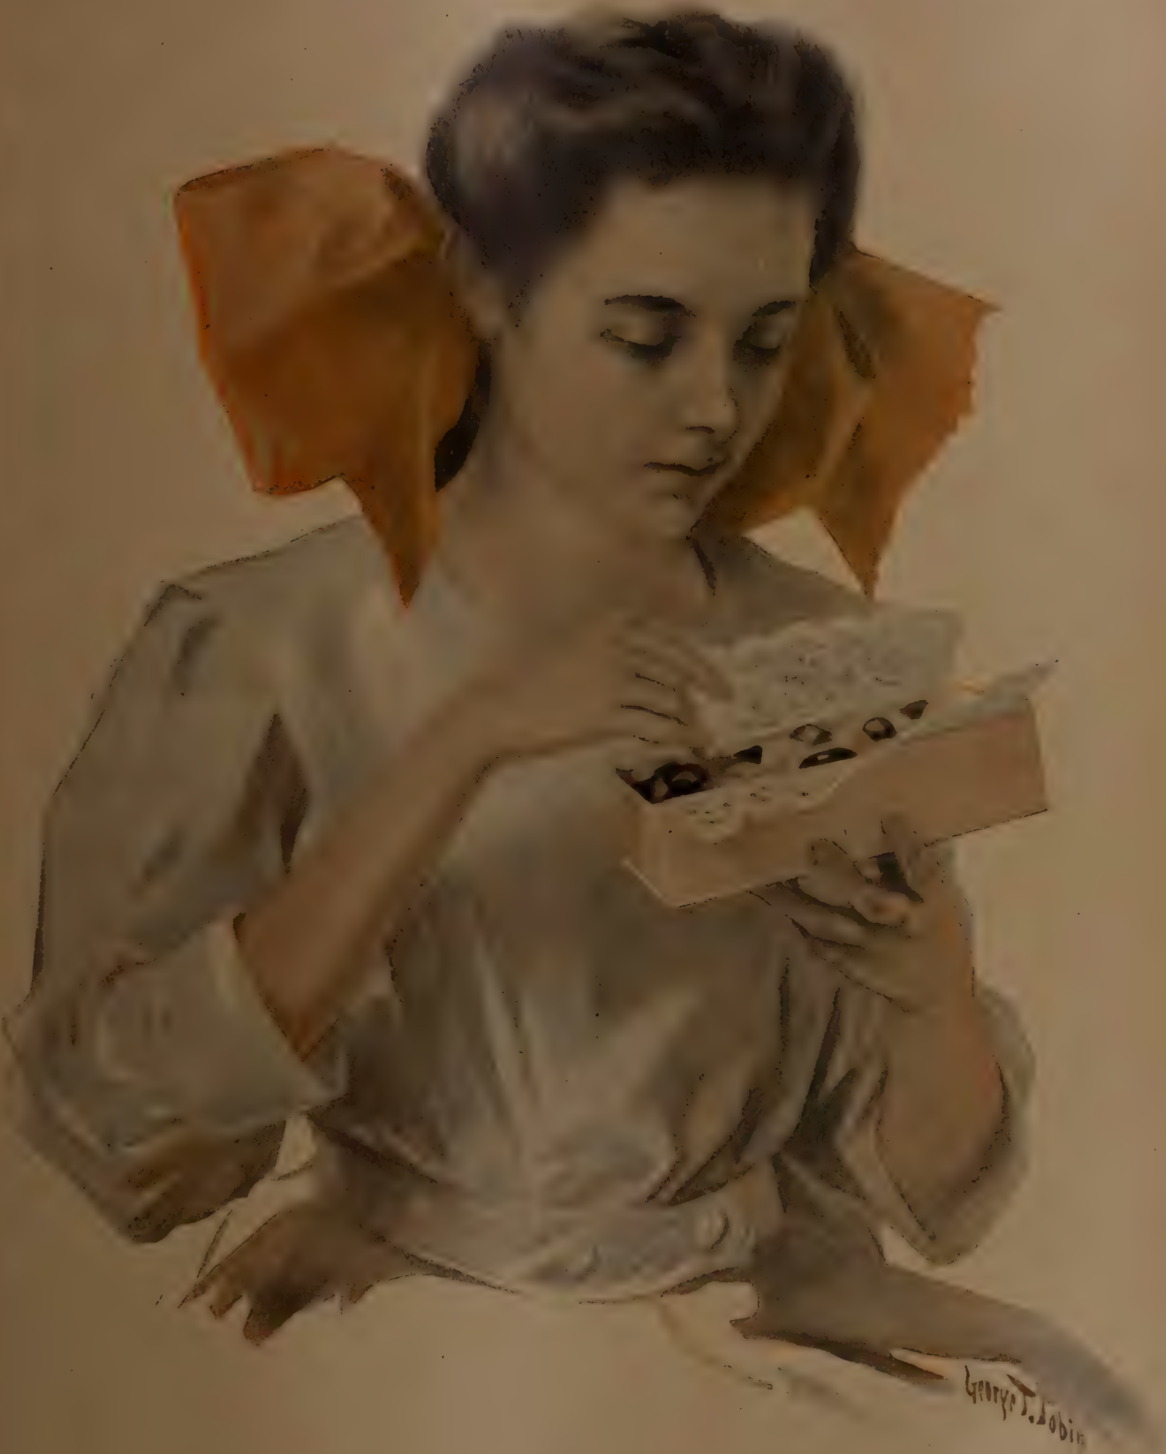
Cleans as it Polishes
Channell Chemical Company, Chicago – Toronto – London
© CCCo. 1919

Christian Herald

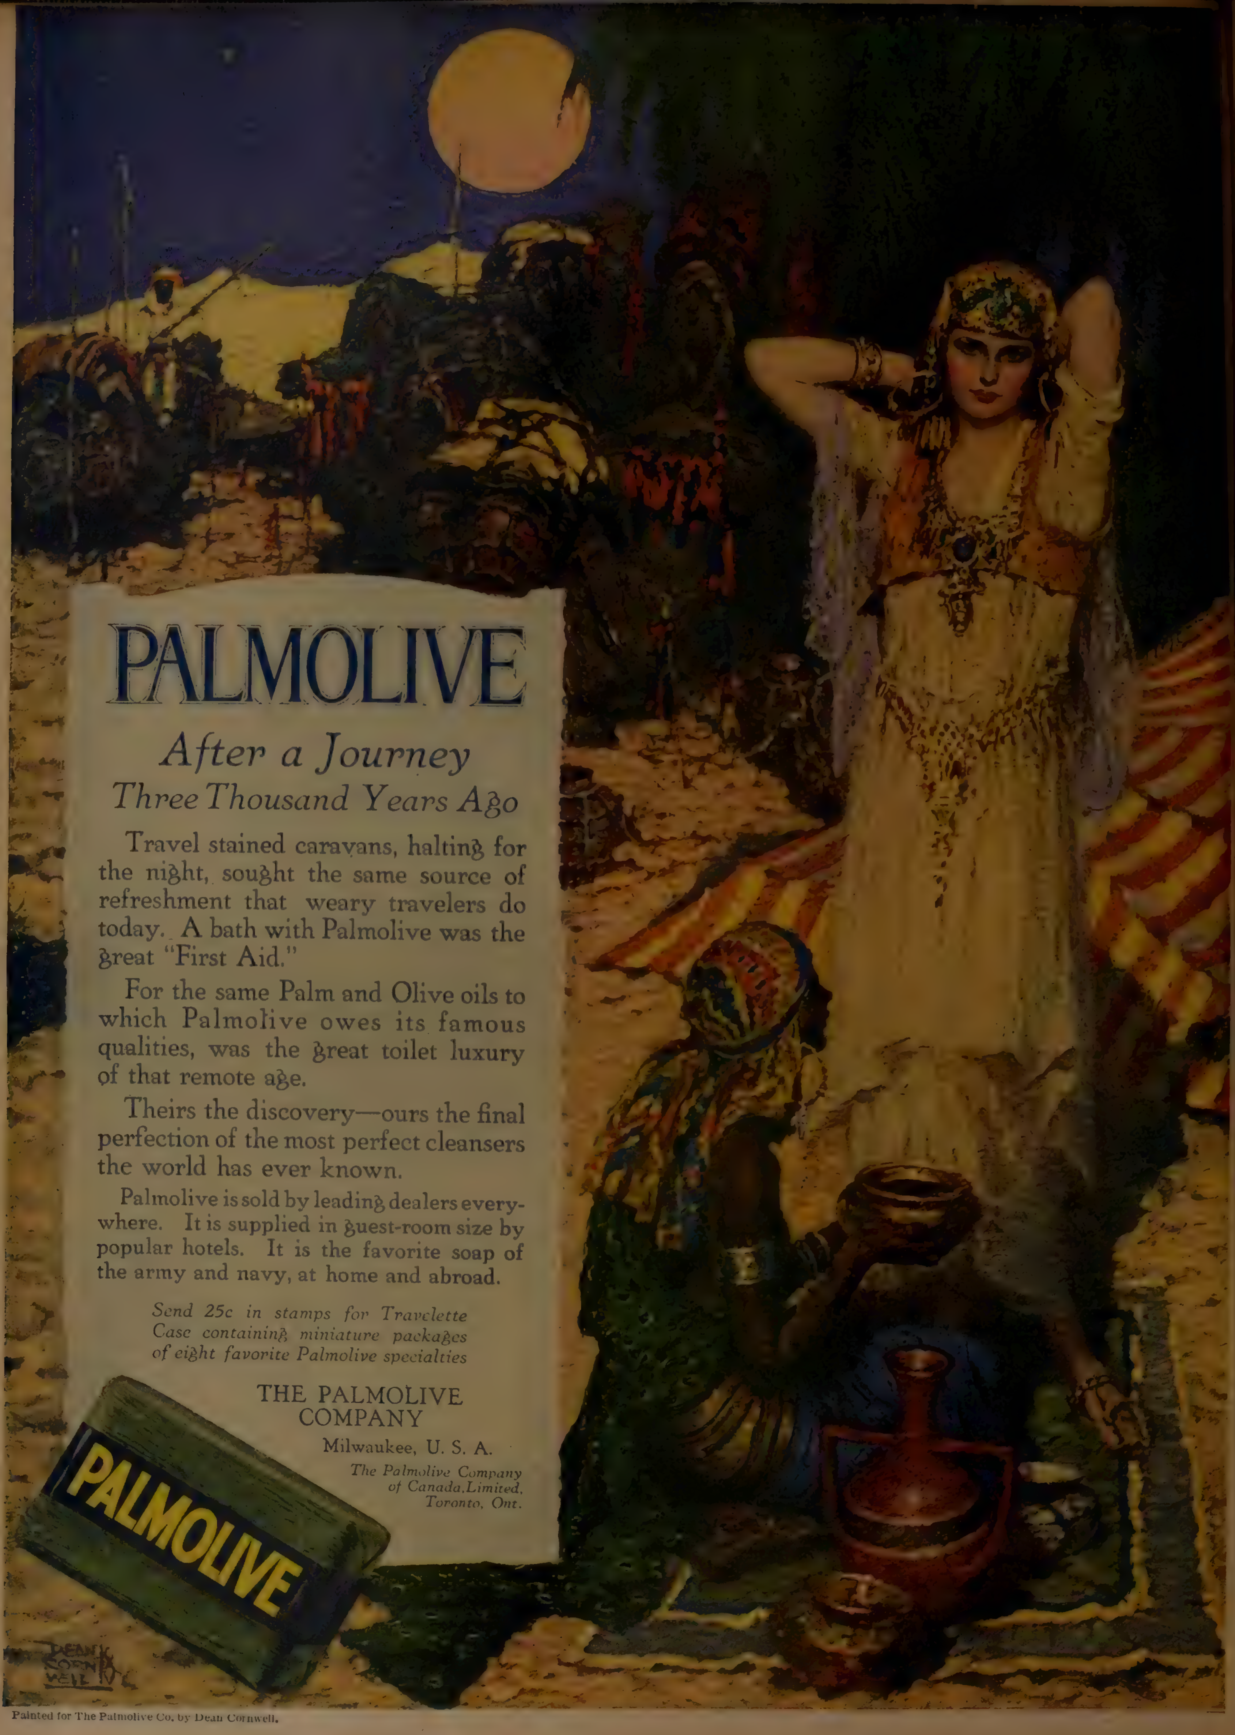
$2.50 a Year NEW YORK, APRIL 12, 1919 Ten Cents a Copy



George T. Tobin

From original by George T. Tobin

HER FIRST BOX



PALMOLIVE

After a Journey Three Thousand Years Ago

Travel stained caravans, halting for the night, sought the same source of refreshment that weary travelers do today. A bath with Palmolive was the great "First Aid."

For the same Palm and Olive oils to which Palmolive owes its famous qualities, was the great toilet luxury of that remote age.

Theirs the discovery—ours the final perfection of the most perfect cleansers the world has ever known.

Palmolive is sold by leading dealers everywhere. It is supplied in guest-room size by popular hotels. It is the favorite soap of the army and navy, at home and abroad.

Send 25c in stamps for Travelette Case containing miniature packages of eight favorite Palmolive specialties

THE PALMOLIVE COMPANY
Milwaukee, U. S. A.

The Palmolive Company of Canada, Limited, Toronto, Ont.

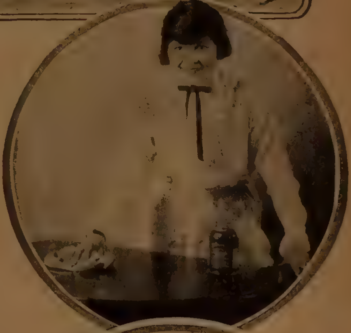
Painted for The Palmolive Co. by Dean Cornwell.

The Simple Way~

The easy, practical way to polish and preserve finished surfaces is with Johnson's Prepared Wax and a cloth—you don't need brushes, sprays or mops of any kind. Simply apply the wax with a cloth and then polish with a dry cloth—very little rubbing is required to produce an exquisite, lustrous polish of great beauty and durability.

Johnson's Prepared Wax is not only a polish but a wonderful preservative—it forms a thin, protecting film over the finish, similar to the service rendered by a piece of glass over a desk, table or dresser-top.

Johnson's Prepared Wax contains no oil, consequently it never becomes soft and sticky in the hottest weather or from the heat of the body—it does not gather dust and dirt or show finger prints.



JOHNSON'S
Liquid and Paste
PREPARED WAX

JOHNSON'S PREPARED WAX
LIQUID
S.C. JOHNSON & SON
RACINE WIS.
JOHNSON'S
PREPARED WAX
PASTE
JOHNSON & SON

Johnson's Prepared Wax is made in paste, liquid and powdered form. We recommend the Liquid Wax for polishing furniture, woodwork and automobiles. Use the Paste Wax for polishing floors of all kinds—wood, linoleum and tile. Johnson's Powdered Wax puts any floor in perfect condition for dancing.

A Dust-Proof Auto Polish

Auto owners will find Johnson's Liquid Wax the most satisfactory polish for their cars. It sheds water and dust and makes a "wash" last twice as long. It adds years to the life of automobile varnish. Write for booklet on "Keeping Cars Young"—it's free.

S. C. JOHNSON & SON, Racine, Wis.

The BRUNSWICK
Method of Reproduction

The Ultona

Tones Hitherto Rare
Now Ever-Present

HERE are the secrets of The Brunswick Method of Reproduction. Learn how we gained that wonderfully pure tone which has given The Brunswick Phonograph such prestige.

Experts in acoustics have long agreed that superior reproduction depends chiefly upon the reproducer and the way in which tone is amplified.

Until the coming of The Brunswick, many experts thought it impossible to overcome "spotty" reproduction, that is, alternate good and bad tones. Yet all were striving to increase the good tones and decrease the bad.

What We Found

The fault, we found, after hundreds of tests, was largely due to the use of metal in the amplifier or sound chamber. Metal, having no elasticity, prevented the sound waves from expanding properly. Strident noises resulted.

So we chose wood, developing the now famous Brunswick Amplifier, built entirely of wood. We tested dozens of different woods, arranging them in numerous shapes. Finally we attained the proper acoustic values.

Brunswick tone is infinitely better, for tones considered rare a few years ago are ever-present in this super-instrument. No one can remain unappreciative of its fullness, richness and clarity. And all appreciate the banishment of metallic sounds. Once you hear The Brunswick, your own ear will confirm these statements.

Plays All Records

Another great feature of The Brunswick Method of Reproduction is the Ultona, our all-record reproducer. At a turn of the hand, it presents to each type of record the proper needle and diaphragm. Each make of record can now be heard at its best, played exactly as it should be. Thus you are not limited in your selection of records to one make.

Before you buy, or even if you already have a phonograph, hear The Brunswick. Put it to any tone test you wish. Ask that the most difficult records be played. Make comparisons. Then let sheer merit decide.

The Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company
General Offices: CHICAGO and NEW YORK

Branch Houses in Principal Cities of United States, Mexico and Canada

Canadian Distributors: Musical Merchandise Sales Co. Excelsior Life Bldg., Toronto

The Brunswick

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

SUBSCRIPTION $2.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

GRAHAM PATTERSON
Publisher

GEORGE H. SANDISON
Editor

VOL. 42—NO. 15. PRICE 10 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

ENTERED AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER JANUARY 25, 1909, AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW YORK, UNDER THE ACT OF MARCH 3, 1879. COPYRIGHT, 1919, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

New York Welcomes Her Heroes

Photo by Paul Thompson

The head of New York's Battle Tried Division entering the Arch of Victory.

THREE times in a little over fifty years New York has welcomed home the victorious sons of America. In 1865 she acclaimed the troops from New York and New England returning from the great review in Washington. In 1898 she was the first commonwealth to welcome Admiral Dewey and the victors from Manila Bay.

On March 25 New York, who had previously welcomed her Negro regiment, closed up her business and made a gala day in honor of her National Guard division, the 27th, the only National Guard organization to go through the war unchanged, with its original commander. This division had been held in this country until long after the National Army divisions had begun to sail for France, but it sailed at last fully trained and ready for its historic task. After a series of notable battles in Flanders, in which the retreating Germans had been pushed back faster than they intended, and the heights of Mount Kemmel had been retaken, the division was transferred to the neighborhood of St. Quentin, where the Allies had fought their way to the final position of the Germans in the last entrenchments of the Hindenburg Line. The St. Quentin Canal here ran through a tunnel, from which the Germans had built other tunnels connecting their works in such a way that they could throw one or two divisions into any threatened sector on short notice, without exposing any of their men to enemy fire, while acres of barbed wire, cunningly enmeshed, protected the forefield.

On September 27 the 106th regiment was sent in to straighten the line, and took from the Germans some very important knolls upon which they had depended for cross fire. The regiment suffered terribly but went forward to its objectives through a withering machine-gun fire and barrage. On the 28th and 29th the division was sent against the main positions. The first line that passed the forward German trenches soon found itself under fire from the rear, German soldiers coming up from the underground tunnels by companies and battalions. These in turn were overwhelmed by the troops in support and in reserve, and at last the St. Quentin tunnel was reached and entered from both ends. The Germans fled and the Hindenburg Line was definitely breached.

All during March officers and men of the division were landing in New York from every transport, and by the 20th every unit of the Division was home again, New York had built an Arch of Victory on Fifth Avenue at Madison Square. The Avenue was decorated from Washington Square to One Hundred and Tenth Street. March 25 was set for the parade. The people came from New York State, New Jersey, Connecticut and all the boroughs of the metropolis to welcome the boys who had so well represented the spirit of America in the terrible struggle for the saving of democracy. It was estimated that more than 2,000,000 people lined the route of the march. As the parade started, a sergeant wearing the Congressional medal of honor cut a silken cord, suspended from pylons on either side across the Avenue. General O'Ryan, commander of the division, rode at the head of his troops, acknowledging the acclaim of the people and happy to be the leader of such men. He declared after the parade: "We expected a friendly greeting, but nothing like this." A sergeant was heard to say: "Flanders was hell, sure enough, but this certainly pays us for it."

From the moment the General rode in sight until the last glittering bayonet disappeared up the avenue, the buildings echoed continuous cheering and applause and the whole route was a mass of flying flags and rippling bunting, while dropping confetti was thrown by the bushels from parapets of buildings. Nor did New York show its pleasure in enthusiasm only. The Y. M. C. A. and the Red Cross were ready with sandwiches and coffee and chocolate bars, and boxes of other comforts rained on the troops at every halt.

Following behind the General's staff in the parade came a gun carriage loaded with flowers in memory of the men who would not come back. As it passed heads bowed, hats came off, cheers and applause were silenced, flags dipped, and many an eye was wet. Standard-bearers followed, carrying a great service flag bearing nearly 2,000 gold stars. Then came the living heroes of the world war, fully equipped with their tin helmets, their bayonets fixed, marching with firm and even tread in perfect lines, soldiers all!

